

Water Damage
June 1993

Factory Prices, <sup>30</sup> Days' Trial

"Eli" Road Wagon.

$16.40

Imitation leather trimmed; Carpet, wrench and shafts—just as illustrated. Our Vehicle Catalogue 250 gives complete particulars. Send for it before you order. Other Road Wagons $21.50 and $23.90.

"Defiance" Buggy.

$23.00

Cloth trimmed; 3-bow top, back and side curtains; carpet and shafts just as shown in cut. Before you order write for Catalogue 250 with complete details. We have Buggies in better grades at $30.00, $35.95, $39.50, $43.50, $45.00 and up to $85.00.

"Climax" Surrey.

$39.50

With canopy top; imitation leather trimmed; good, strong springs, carpet and shafts. Before ordering send for our Vehicle Catalogue, which explains fully. We have better Surreys at $46.50, $59.95, $72.50, $87.50, $110.00, $125.00, etc.

Shipments Chicago, Montgomery Ward & Co.
Cincinnati or St. Louis. 32 years World's Headquarters for Everything. 69 Michigan Ave., Madison & Washington Sts., Chicago.

Greatest of all Book Offers

Is the only way to adequately describe

THIS SUPERB LIBRARY OF FIFTEEN MASTERPIECES

SELECTED AND ARRANGED BY THE CENTURY CO.
IN TWELVE VOLUMES

FOR AMERICAN READERS

which answers the twofold purpose of bringing to the attention of 20th Century readers these representative examples of one phase of that noble literature which is the pride and boast of the English-speaking people, and of furnishing at first-hand those intimate details of English and Irish life—high life and low life—seen and described by the great writers whose master productions are included in the series. Where else can you find so sympathetic a study of the best type of English country gentlemen of his day as in the pages of "Sir Roger de Coverley." What other book affords so keen an insight into the Irish national character as "Castle Rackrent," characterized by an eminent critic as a "page torn from the national history of Ireland." In no other collection of books can be found so fascinating a record of the manners, foibles and follies of that sturdy race that played so large a part in shaping the tendencies of modern life.

As is well known, the great Frenchman, Balzac, in his "Comédie Humaine," was the first to attempt a minute analysis and description of every passion actuating his contemporaries in every walk of life. In English literature this has been accomplished in a larger sense, though unconsciously perhaps, by a number of writers whose works taken together form "The English Comédie Humaine." It is this unique arrangement, first brought about by The Century Co., that makes one look at the books from an entirely new point of view, and in their way the set as a whole becomes as important to the home as an encyclopedia or history of the English people.

The English Comédie Humaine

Sir Roger de Coverley. By ADDISON AND STEELE.
The Vicar of Wakefield. By OLIVER GOLDSMITH.
The Man of Feeling. By HENRY MACKENZIE.
Three well-known classics depicting English life in the first half of the 18th century.—the three forming Volume I.
Pamela. By SAMUEL JOHNSON. Created an epoch in the history of English fiction.
Joseph Andrews. By HENRY FIELDING. Here Fielding sets before us English society as he found it.
Humphrey Clinker. By THOMAS SMOLLETT. Thick-erly considered this the most laughable story ever written.
Castle Rackrent and The Absentee. By MARIA EDGEMOUTH. Abounding in wit and graphic narration.
Pride and Prejudice. By JANE AUSTEN. Universally considered Miss Austen's greatest book.
Harry Lorrequer. By CHARLES LEVER. Exhibits Lever's rollicking humor at its best.
Coningsby. By BENJAMIN DISRAELI. A marvelous picture of aristocratic life in England.
Jane Eyre. By CHARLOTTE BRONTë. A powerful love-story and a picture of English provincial life.
The Moonstone. By WILKIN COLLINS. The most popular of Collins' novels.
It is Never Too Late to Mend. By CHARLES READE. A novel which stimulated the social regeneration of England.
Barchester Towers. By ANTHONY TROLLOPE. A book that is one of the delights of English fiction.

THE FORM OF ISSUE

Twelve handsome volumes, 8vo size (5½x8 in.) containing about 6000 pages. A large clear type, good paper, a silk-finished ribbed cloth binding, with title on leather label stamped in gold, combine to make this one of the handsomest sets of books ever published for general circulation.
The illustrations—a notable feature of the series—sometimes reproduce old pictures by famous illustrators and sometimes have been made especially for this series by the best modern artists,—which ever seemed best for that particular book.

OUR SPECIAL OFFER

The twelve volumes are offered for $12.00, and will be delivered, charges paid, on receipt of ONE DOLLAR—the balance payable ONE DOLLAR monthly. We will also send THE CENTURY MAGAZINE or ST. NICHOLAS MAGAZINE for one year to each subscriber. These books would ordinarily sell in the stores at $2.00 each,—$24.00 for the set, and with THE CENTURY MAGAZINE, $25.00.

The Century Co., Union Square, New York

The Century Co.
Union Square, New York

For enclosed $1.00 send me by express, paid, the 12 books forming the "English Comédie Humaine" and
[The Century*] for One Year
[St. Nicholas*] for One Year

I agree to pay $1.00 a month for 12 months, in addition.

Name.....
Address.....

*Cost not over.....

PROOFS OF Gibson Drawings

Copyright 1903 by
Collier's Weekly

THE continued demand for proofs of the full-page and double-page drawings by famous artists that appear in COLLIER'S has led us to strike off from the original plates a number of proofs on heavy plate paper. These are printed with the greatest care, and when framed present a very handsome appearance. Mailed securely in heavy tubes for Two Dollars each. Address

PROOF DEPARTMENT, Collier's Weekly

416 West 13th Street

New York

WARNING!

The following Manufacturers and Importers are Licensed under the pioneer patent on

Gasolene Automobiles

Number 549,160, granted to George B. Selden, dated November 5th, 1895.

MANUFACTURERS:

Electric Vehicle Co.
Winton Motor Carriage Co.
Packard Motor Car Co.
Olds Motor Works
Knox Automobile Co.
The Haynes-Apperson Co.
The Autocar Co.
The George H. Pierce Co.
Apperson Bros. Automobile Co.
Locomobile Co. of America

The Peerless Motor Car Co.
Standard Motor Construction Co.
Walham Manufacturing Co.
Pope Motor Car Co.
J. Stevens Arms & Tool Co.
H. H. Franklin Mfg. Co.
Smith & Mabley, Inc.
The Commercial Motor Co.
Berg Automobile Co.
Cadillac Automobile Co.

Northern Manufacturing Co.
Pope-Robinson Co.
The Kirk Manufacturing Co.
Elmore Manufacturing Co.
E. R. Thomas Motor Co.
Buffalo Gasolene Motor Co.
The F. B. Stearns Co.
Pope Manufacturing Co.
Sandusky Automobile Co.
Crest Manufacturing Co.

IMPORTERS:

Smith & Mabley, Inc.
Central Automobile Co.
Alexander Fischer

Hollander & Tangeman
Standard Automobile Co.
E. B. Gallaher

Auto Import Co.
F. A. LaRoche Co.
Sidney B. Bowman Automobile Co.

Both the basic Selden patent and all other patents owned by members of this Association will be enforced against infringers. Manufacturers, Importers, Dealers and Agents, also Users of unlicensed machines are liable.

ASSOCIATION OF LICENSED AUTOMOBILE MANUFACTURERS
No. 7 EAST 42d STREET, NEW YORK

HOUSECLEANING

-With Soap

Old fashioned Way—Hard Work—Back-Ache—tired women cross men—an odor of moving dirt rather than approaching cleanliness.

with Pearline

-Intelligent Way

easy quick—thorough work—no dread—no temper an odor of Perfect Cleanliness.

Pearline is Modern Soap

WOMEN DREAD MEN HATE
HOUSECLEANING

I. W. Harper Rye.

"On Every Tongue."

For gentlemen who appreciate quality; for the weak who need to be strengthened; for the careful physician who requires purity; for everybody who knows a good thing. Sold by leading dealers everywhere.

BERNHEIM DISTILLING CO., Louisville, Ky.

New York to Chicago—In 24 Hours of Lix-urious Railway Travel—By New York Central

How to Converse

The Art
OF TALKING WELL

LINKS YOU TO

Business and Social Success

There is no relation in life, either Social, Commercial, or Professional, in which our Course in Conversation does not repay annually a hundred times its nominal cost.

Talking for Business

Our course imparts the ability to meet men, and all types of men—to win their attention—to please their fancy—to meet their arguments—to hold them to the point—to convince their understanding—to obtain results!

Thousands of good propositions are to-day unproductive simply and wholly because their story is not properly told.

Good Agents, good Canvassers, good Salesmen are scarce. Why? Because men and women who can talk Business successfully are scarce. Large incomes are waiting in every county for those who can talk—to the purpose.

Talking in Society

Our course imparts Self-confidence, Poise, Charm, Tact—in brief, it is the Art of Making One's Self Agreeable.

Many men and women have been through college, and know half a dozen languages—and yet never have learned to converse.

They do not know how to approach a stranger in conversation—often do not even get an audience—if they do, fail to interest.

Do you ever wish that you could better express your own ideas; do you sometimes "know what you want to say, but do not know how to say it"?

The Open Door to Success

We teach by mail—the Art of Putting Things. It is not so difficult to acquire as possibly you imagine. It depends on certain general principles as old as language itself, but not taught in books, and never before so practically and definitely formulated.

We apply these general principles to the individual student—meet his personal requirements—cheerfully answer all questions—whenever necessary make special explanations, and direct applications to each particular case.

The course is simple, short, inexpensive. Already it has proved for hundreds of our graduates who were no better talkers than the average, the Open Door to positive Success. Send for information and blanks.

A. P. GARDINER, Pres't

Box 31, 20th Century Instruction Co.

Central Bank Building, New York

LEARN TO WRITE ADVERTISEMENTS

"This is the School you hear so much about!"

Edward T. Page was the first man in the world to prove that advertising could be successfully taught, which he did in 1897.

He founded the Page-Davis Company, the first institution in the world to teach advertisement writing, in 1899.

He chose Chicago, the advertising center, for the home of this institution.

He is the first and only man ever recognized by a United States Court, as an expert in advertising. This occurred in 1903.

Students and graduates the world over maintain this high honor. They say with one accord, "The Page-Davis School is the only school."

There is no profession to-day that pays so well as advertisement writing, and there is no experimenting, when you enroll with the Page-Davis Company.

Do you realize the full significance of these facts to you?

We are glad to have you ask us what the Page-Davis Company has done, what our students are doing, and what we can do for you.

We will answer you promptly and completely, if you write us for our beautiful prospectus, mailed free.

PAGE-DAVIS COMPANY
Address either office:
Suite 319-90 Wabash Avenue, - Chicago, or Suite 319-150 Nassau Street, - New York City

$50

Round trip for strictly first-class tickets Chicago to San Francisco and Los Angeles daily, April 23 to May 1. Correspondingly low rates from all points. Choice of routes going and returning. Two fast trains daily via the

Chicago, Union Pacific and North-Western Line

Over the only double-track railway between Chicago and the Missouri River, the route of the electric-lighted solid through train, less than three days to the Pacific Coast.

Overland Limited

The Best of Everything.

All agents sell tickets via this line. Send 4-cent stamp for booklet on California or 3-cent stamp for itinerary of special train for Los Angeles which leaves Chicago, April 26.

W. B. KNISKERN,
P. T. M., C. & N.-W. Ry.,
CHICAGO, ILL.

CALIFORNIA

The Strand Magazine

EASTER NUMBER

Dialstone Lane

By W. W. JACOBS

HIS BEST STORY

Illustrated by WILL OWEN

Old Capt. Bowers finds, in Mr. Chalk, a deeply interested listener to his story about the treasure which he buried with his expedition. "Mr. Chalk, with his mind full of the story, walked homeward like a man in a dream. The scent of lilac revived memories of his childhood and showed him as a boy treading the same road, passing the same houses."

Why couldn't he, Mr. Chalk, organize a Company to go in search of the treasure, go shares—if the money were found. Of course the old Captain must put the expedition. Just see what good he could do with his share. "You could build a hospital! Think of the orphans you could be a father to!" said Mr. Stobell, "and widows," he added. But, no; Capt. Bowers says he can't go. "Before he died he made me promise that the bag should be buried with him and never disturbed. It was full of precious stones—diamonds, rubies and the like; some of them as large as birds' eggs. They blazed like stars. Half a million he put them at or more."

Of course there was no reason why Mr. Chalk and his party should not go in search of the treasure. Pointing to the map he said: "It's buried here. All you have to do is to find the island," and a mischievous smile crossed his beard. "Could the treasure be found now?" asked Mr. Chalk. "Why not?" said the Captain, with a laugh. "The island hasn't run away."

This great serial story will excite even keener interest than the author's previous works, inasmuch as it will display both sides of his genius—not only the humorous, by which he is best known, but the sensational, of which he is quite as great a master. The illustrations, by WILL OWEN, are capital and add much interest to this splendid story.

This story began in the February number. Copies of the February and March numbers can be obtained through your newsdealer or from the publishers.

Some Other Interesting Features:

A Nursery for Airships. By WILLIAM WRIGHT. Illustrations from Photographs.

"Slaves of the Lamp." By F. G. GODWIN. Illustrations by ALFRED PEARSE.

Venerable Babies. By MARIE CORRIE. Illustrations by GORDON BROWN, R.B.A.

Echo. A story by MAX PERMERTON. Illustrations by W. H. WOLLEN, R.I.

Artists' Types of Beauty. Illustrations from Paintings and Sketches.

Old Ballads. Illustrations from Old Prints.

Eugene Hunt. By Mrs. ESKRTON EASTWICK. Illustrations by J. FENIMORE, R.I.

Battles with Bergs. By P. T. McGRATH. Illustrations from Photographs.

A Hermit Priest and his Sculptured Rocks. By A. FITZGERALD-KNOWLES. Illustrations from Photographs.

Wizards of Horticulture. By MARTIN PIERCE. Illustrations from Photographs.

Wonders of the World.—A VINERY OF MELONS.—THE ROMANCE OF A RUG. A BURNING SHIP.—A BUTTERFLY BOAT. Illustrations from Photographs.

A Picture-Puzzle Train. By EMORY JAMES. Illustrations from Sketches.

Important Announcement!

In the May Number will begin the first of a series of intensely interesting articles contributed by

MME. SARAH BERNHARDT

The story of her life, and Recollections of Places and People she has Seen and Known.

10 CENTS PER COPY

$1.20 PER YEAR

For Sale by all Newsdealers and

THE INTERNATIONAL NEWS COMPANY - - NEW YORK

A Special Train for You California

The Santa Fe will run two special trains to Los Angeles, leaving Chicago, April 27 and 28, 1904.

Stops will be made at Albuquerque and Laguna in New Mexico, the Grand Canyon of Arizona, affording opportunity to see unique Indian pueblos and earth's greatest scenic wonder.

You will travel on the cleanest railway in the West—oil-sprinkled tracks and oil-burning engines in Arizona and California. Shortest line, finest scenery, most comforts. The rate is low; why don't you go?

WRITE TO-DAY FOR SPECIAL FOLDER. Tells all about this enjoyable trip. Berth space on these trains is limited; apply early.

W. J. BLACK
Gen. Pass. Agt. A. T. & S. F. Ry.
CHICAGO

RADWAY'S PILLS For over 50 years a Household Remedy

Of Purely Vegetable Ingredients
They purify the blood, regulate the liver, and purge from the system all disorders. For all troubles of the stomach, liver, bowels, kidneys. For Headache, Constipation, Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Rheumatism, Biliousness, Pimples, Inflammation of the Bowels, Very heavy on you. One to six boxes warranted to effect a positive cure. Purely vegetable, containing no mercury, minerals, or deleterious drugs.
For sale at all druggists. Accept no substitutes.
RADWAY & CO., 55 Elm Street, New York

YOUTH
HEALTH
BEAUTY

is the name of a little volume with illustrations of beautiful children, misses, and handsomely gowned women, which we will send you free upon receipt of your name and address. A postal card will do.

Radway & Co., 55 Elm St., New York

A FREE
BOOK

Try an IDEAL

J. W. Miller's Incubator—made by the man who knows. It is really self-regulating.

30 DAYS' FREE TRIAL

We get no money until you are perfectly satisfied. Postage Free.

J. W. MILLER CO.

Box 88 Freeport, Ill.

(Daily supplies and thoroughbred fowls.)

Agents Earn
$75 to $250
a Month
Selling "NOVELTY KNIVES"

Your name, address, photo underneath handles; also emblems, lodge, societies, etc. Finely tempered razor steel blades. Big Profits. Good commission paid. Send 2c stamp for great special offer to agents.

NOVELTY CUTLERY CO., 40, Bar St., CANTON, O.

LEARN SUCCESS SHORTHAND

Taught by mail under the direction of the most successful firm of shorthand reporters in the world. They teach you by mail the same system they use. Write to-day for our book, "Success Shorthand System."

WALTON, JAMES & FORD
Suite 26, 77-79 Clark St., Chicago, Ill.

No Fun Like Collecting! Start Today! Booklet and different Foreign STAMPS sent for 10c.
Russia, Korea, Peru, Panama, China, India, Haiti, Japan, Egypt; many others. Approval Sheets. 50% commission. Big List Free! New England Stamp Co., 63 Bromfield Street, Boston

GOV'T AUCTION SALE CATALOG GUNS
Pistols, Military Goods (Illustrated), 15c, mailed 6c. stamps. F. Hanzerman, 519 Broadway, N. Y.

COLLIER'S EASTER NUMBER CONTENTS

Cover Design	Drawn by Jessie Wilcox Smith	Page
Easter in Jerusalem	Photograph	7
Editorials		8-9
A New Industry of the Gulf States	C. Arthur Williams	10
	Illustrated with Photographs
Away to the Wars!	Drawn by Frederic Remington	11
The Opening of the Japanese Diet	Frederick Palmer	12
	Special Cable Despatch from Tokio
Signs of Spring	Double-Page Drawing by C. D. Gibson	16-17
The Children of the Childless. Poem	James Whitcomb Riley	18
	Decorated by C. A. Winter
Young Briggs' Sister. Story	Owen Oliver	19
	Illustrated by E. M. Ashe
The Mechanical Jonah. Story	Charles H. Day	20
	Illustrated by B. Cory Kilvert
Daughters of Desperation. Story. Part IV.	Hildegard Brooks	21
	Illustrated by Charlotte Harding
A Million-Power Sun	Garrett P. Serviss	26
Lost Hopes. Poem	E. Nesbit	27
True Stories of To-day		27
Behind the Scenes in Washington	F. A. Emery	29
Notes of Progress in Science and Invention		30
$5,000 for a Short Story		31

Collier's War Staff in the East

SINCE the beginning of actual hostilities between Russia and Japan there has been considerable shifting about of war correspondents and photographers, and this map will serve to give an accurate idea of how COLLIER'S is now covering the entire field of action. When it was found impossible for V. Gribayedoff to go to the front on the Russian side, he despatched in his place M. L. Noudeau, a French photographer, who managed to get into Port Arthur several days before the first battle. J. F. J. Archibald is now also in Port Arthur, having reached there shortly after the beginning of hostilities. With the Russian army, whose Manchurian headquarters are established at Harbin, is Victor Bulla, a Russian photographer, sent by COLLIER'S from St. Petersburg, whose pictures will appear exclusively in COLLIER'S. Edwin Emerson, Jr., and H. J. Whigham will both cover the news from the Russian side. With the first Japanese army to advance into Manchuria, COLLIER'S will be represented by Frederick Palmer, correspondent, and James H. Hare, photographer, both of whom were included by the Japanese Government when permits were granted to five American correspondents to accompany the first expedition. With this advance, therefore, COLLIER'S will have two representatives, exclusively, while the "New York Herald," the Chicago "News-Record," and the New York "World" will each have one man. Richard Harding Davis, who has just reached Japan, will go to the front with the second expedition, and will be accompanied by Horace Ashton, photographer. At Seoul, COLLIER'S is represented by R. L. Dunn, whose wonderful pictures of the Japanese occupation of Chemulpo were published last week. By the next mail we should receive photographs of the advance on Seoul and Ping-yang, at both of which places Mr. Dunn has advised us by cable that he was present, although he has been compelled by the Japanese military authorities to return to Seoul. At Tokio COLLIER'S is represented by A. M. Knapp, correspondent, and Genjiro Yeto, the Japanese artist. J. C. O'Loughlin is at St. Petersburg, subject to orders as the situation develops. Gribayedoff, in Paris, gathers from the English and European illustrated papers the originals of their best war material, by special arrangement, for the exclusive use of COLLIER'S in this country. Thus COLLIER'S service includes not only the exclusive letters and photographs of its own large staff at the front, of the drawings of Remington and Reuter, and the articles of Captain A. T. Mahan, U. S. N., at home, but it is assured of the cream of the material sent by a small army of European correspondents to the papers of London, Paris, Rome, and Berlin.

Next week we shall make a most interesting and important announcement of forthcoming features entirely disconnected with the war.

KODAK Progress.

Whatever is new and desirable in picture taking is found in the Kodak System—Non-Curling film, daylight development—absolute simplicity.

Ask your dealer, or write us for the 1904 Kodak Catalogue. It's an illustrated photographic news letter from Rochester, the home of the Kodak.

EASTMAN KODAK CO.
Rochester, N. Y.

Kodak
$5.00 to $20.00

Remington

Every Remington
Typewriter Lasts.

Therefore Remington
Supremacy
Lasts.

Remington Typewriter Co.
327 Broadway, New York.

MOVING PICTURE MACHINES

Stereopticons You can make BIG MONEY Entertaining the Public. Nothing affords better opportunities for men with small capital. We start you, furnishing complete outfit and explicit instructions at a surprisingly low cost. The Field is Large comprising the regular theatre and lecture circuit, also local fields in Churches, Public Schools, Lodges and General Public Gatherings. Our Entertainment Supply Catalogue and special offer fully explains everything. Sent Free CHICAGO PROJECTING CO., 288 Dearborn Street, Dept. 166, CHICAGO, ILL.

ASTHMA Cured to stay CURED. Health restored. BOOK & Free. F. HAROLD HAYES, Buffalo, N. Y.

POPE MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

The renaissance of bicycling brings with it one of the finest mechanical devices invented since the beginning of this industry.

THE TWO-SPEED GEAR CHAINLESS BICYCLE

Enables the rider, by a slight pressure of foot on pedal, to change from high to low gear for hill climbing and difficult roads.

Eastern Department, Hartford, Conn.

"Columbia" "Cleveland" "Tribune"
"Crawford" "Fay Juveniles"

Western Department, Chicago, Ill.

"Crescent" "Rambler" "Monarch"
"Imperial" "Crescent Juveniles"

Catalogues free at our 10,000 dealers' stores, or any one Catalogue mailed on receipt of a two-cent stamp.

COLLIER'S

SATURDAY, APRIL 2, 1904

P. F. COLLIER & SON, PUBLISHERS, 415-424 WEST THIRTEENTH ST., NEW YORK; 10 NORFOLK ST., STRAND, LONDON, W. C. : COPYRIGHT 1904 BY P. F. COLLIER & SON. ENTERED AT THE NEW YORK POST-OFFICE AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER

CEREMONY OF THE WASHING OF FEET ON MAUNDY-THURSDAY IN JERUSALEM

Among the many ceremonies performed during the celebration of Holy Week in Jerusalem, perhaps the most characteristic—certainly the most interesting and unusual—occurs on the Thursday before Easter. On this day is commemorated the washing of the Disciples' feet by Jesus. For this ceremony a platform is erected in the court of the Church of the Holy Sepulchre. The Patriarch of the Greek Church, in company with several priests of lower order, mounts to the high platform, and, laying aside his splendid raiment, performs the office. The rapidity of the ceremony apparently makes the washing of the feet a merely formal imitation; but the office is performed with the greatest solemnity, amid the profound silence of the multitude, and is impressive in the highest degree.

MR. ROOSEVELT'S CHARACTER is one that puzzles, partly through its simplicity. The human mind likes to see prominent individuals as heroes or as villains, as weak or strong, selfish or disinterested. To think of a politician as ardently wishing to do right, and with equal ardor wishing to remain himself at the head of the procession, is not so easy; yet that state of mind is natural and frequent, and it is the state of Mr. ROOSEVELT. He is a good man and a good President, but his concern about himself is vast. He divides mankind into his supporters and his opponents, and he can not help seeing measures partly as those which help and those which injure him. He is not a hero, except in the ordinary boyish sense, but he is an exceptionally valuable individual to have installed at Washington. He is frequently called the shrewdest politician in the country—a description which does him gross injustice. He is an enthusiastic politician of enough astuteness to be almost invincible when it is combined with so popular a personality and such unflagging energy. His latest performance, in the pension matter, has brought him nothing but opprobrium, even from his friends, and yet we do not think it was unmixed politics. Of course, Mr. ROOSEVELT would not fight the G. A. R., as Mr. CLEVELAND did. Mr. ROOSEVELT does not take instinctively to losing combats. And he is very glad to have the soldier vote in doubtful States. But this is not all. He admires a soldier, any soldier, every soldier, as he did when he was ten, and he probably believed that taking millions every year away from toiling civilians, to give it to men who were at one time soldiers, quite apart from any injuries received, was a noble and large-hearted act. He seldom does what he himself knows is wrong, and undoubtedly he thought that, if the people would stand for such a deed, his own conscience would be clear.

THE PRESIDENT
AS POLITICIAN

THE USEFULNESS OF STATESMEN is not measured by their personal attractiveness. Mr. ROOSEVELT's eagerness does not charm a taste that is squeamish, and we defy anybody to surpass us in fastidiousness. A delicately nurtured friend of ours showed such virulent hostility to the ROOSEVELT family that we sought the cause, and she honestly confessed that she saw the ROOSEVELT names too often in the papers. There is nothing aloof and polished, retiring and serene, about our President. He does not, like GEORGE WASHINGTON, long for the privacy of his own vine and fig-tree. He would doubtless agree with VOLTAIRE about the unpleasantness of being hanged in private. There is a story of HENRY JAMES about a man who, when he had no audience, ceased to exist. Mr. ROOSEVELT is not like that, but he certainly exists much more for the public than for solitude. He is no poet and no philosopher. He is merely a strenuous hustler, but as he usually hustles for betterment, he has our hearty approval as a

WHY WE SUP-PORT HIM

President. We do not admire his manoeuvre on the pension question, but when his errors and compromises are set against his achievements, the account is very favorable. What is supposed to be his private platform for re-election is a bold and sound one. Two of the four planks may be ignored, as composing what is technically called a cinch; for no living issue can be made against the canal or the "imperialism" of sane and humane methods. The two active planks, defending the Northern Securities decision, or freedom from the tyranny of capital, and the MULLER case, or freedom from the tyranny of labor, are a clear and acceptable explanation of where the President stands upon a sensitive issue. His work in the Post-Office Department has shown him as an effective remover of corruption, and in this regard he has shown an inspiring independence of party lines. His attitude toward the Philippines and Cuba has been just. In face of these large credits, we do not feel like laying emphatic stress on every item on the debit side, much as we may deplore such frailty as the pension order exhibited.

THE TRUST PROBLEM is the most vital now before the public, running as it does into the tariff question, reciprocity, constitutional interpretation, individualism versus paternalism, and purely business arguments. It is a fundamental and imminent problem, but it can be turned at present into a party issue only by gross exaggeration on the Democratic side, or else by more intelligence than, it is to be feared, the Democratic party is likely to exhibit. To agitate for imprisonment in such a matter as the Northern Securities, where the conditions offered for legal decision were publicly known, and the point involved was very abstract, is forced and unreasonable. Something which produced immediate injury, like the Beef Trust, or the Standard Oil Company, might be attacked criminally with some support from public opinion. Any mere playing upon ignorant passion will, we believe, be doomed to failure in a civilization which is leavened with Anglo-Saxon sense. Cases against the Beef Trust, the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railway, and BAIRD and others are now before the United States Supreme Court, and there are twenty-three suits in one stage or another—not a promising record for those who would make an issue against the Administration's handling of the trusts, especially as it is the only Administration that has done much of anything in that direction, and some amount of feeling of the way is only reason. Even business men, on the whole, rejoice over the outcome in the Northern Securities case. They would probably support criminal action against the oppressive monopolies of the necessities of life, but they would swing their powerful influence against any wild-cat agitation. If the Democrats are to use the trust issue with any hope of strengthening their party, it must be along the lines of tariff and reciprocity, where the present Administration has departed so far from the latest policy of MCKINLEY.

USEFUL ISSUES

COTTON KINGS make assignments, continue to live in fine houses and drink champagne, and in all their modes of life remain about the same. It is their little followers who suffer, and that is why gambling in stocks is so much worse than roulette, and why forcing the market artificially up and down injures so much larger a number of people than marking a pack of cards. When Mr. SULLY "failed," it was to the interest of many creditors and fellow speculators to put him at once upon his feet. When a small gambler in the street is once sold out, it is often the end of comfort for his family, and not infrequently the end of life for him. From them that have least most is taken away. Nor is it only the little speculator, his wife, and children, who are injured, but many, the world over, who have never gambled at all, but suffer because the businesses in which they are engaged are thrown out of gear by the sudden ups and downs of such a staple as cotton. Security in values is necessary to true prosperity. Stock speculators can not entirely "corner the market," but they can do enough to produce misery for thousands of the innocent poor, and they furnish a lurid picture of man's inhumanity to man.

THE REAL FAILURES

IMPERIALISM IS ANOTHER ISSUE which can be made effective by the Democrats only if they have the intelligence to keep within the bounds of reasonable public sentiment. Let them show, by all means, the degradation of the Congressional treatment of the Philippines, in using the tariff to take money away from the natives and put it into the pockets of the plutocrats. If, however, they go further and make an assault, all along the line, upon our foreign policy, they will merely add to their losses. There is in the South, in a small part of New England, and in the generation that is passing away, a certain volume of genuine anti-imperialistic feeling; but it is as nothing compared to the opposite spirit, which, without going deeply into arguments, accepts our expanding rôle not only as inevitable, but as rather interesting. Mr. TAFT has done nobly by the Filipinos. Mr. Root has spoken for their independence, and he has boldly said on the general topic of imperialism, in connection with the Isthmus, that "the things done by our officers might not have been permissible in the territory of a strong and orderly government"; but that they were, "according to the universal rules obtaining among civilized nations, not only permissible, but a duty of the highest obligation, in countries whose feeble governments exercise imperfect control." The general position taken by men like TAFT and Root and HAY it would be mere folly for the Democrats to attack, and we are interested in seeing them take the very strongest strategic position that is open to them, because it happens also to be the position of greatest truth and justice.

IMPERIALISM

LOVE OF OFFICE is an absurd weakness with which to charge the Prime Minister of England. The world is impatient when the curtain is too long down. We chaff about the time it takes the armies of Japan and Russia to get together, as if we were paying for our seats, and both in England and America there is, to a less extent, a similar objection to Mr. BALFOUR's continuing in office instead of entertaining us by getting out of the way and allowing us to see some new actors, episodes, and situations on the British stage. This impatience lies under charges that the ministry clings to power because it loves "the sweets of office." To any careful mind such a charge must seem absurd. Mr. BALFOUR's character is poorly understood by all who think of holding office as his only entertainment. He remains in power because that course of action seems to make more probable the triumph of policies which he approves. Speaking once in answer to the argument that separate government for Ireland was inevitable, he said, in substance, that if he knew it were to come in fifty years he would fight just as hard against it, as fifty years' postponement was so much to the good. Moreover, he does not believe as much in "the inevitable" as dissatisfied editors do. He probably accepts

MR. BALFOUR'S
HOLDING ON

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN's surmise that the Liberals will come in at the next election and be speedily defeated, after which a change in tariff policy may have a better chance, but he knows for how large a part the unforeseen is cast in politics, and he sees no reason why he should resign at an unfavorable moment unless it becomes compulsory. To think of him as loving politics and office with the intensity that they are loved, for instance, by Mr. ROOSEVELT, Mr. BRYAN, the Emperor WILLIAM, or General MILES, is wholly to miss the environment in which he lives and the kind of man he is. There are many other things in life to charm him, and he would step out, with little melancholy, if the prospect made the step a clever one.

JAPANESE VICTORY OVER RUSSIA is frequently regarded as paving the way for enforcing the doctrine of Asia for the Asiatics. Such an outcome is not impossible, but there are difficulties, which we do not always remember, in the vast differences of Asiatic peoples. China and Japan speak a different language, and each is a foreign race and nation to the other. Even China herself is composed of elements more diverse than the inhabitants of a country like ours can readily comprehend. Northern, Central, and Southern China are like separate nations. For Japan and all the elements included under the general term of China to work together as one force would be a good deal as if the Continent of Europe should be able to unite in a common policy against the United States or Asia. Some of the most progressive viceroys in China to-day are favorable to Japan, regarding her as pointing the way to save the East from Western spiritual barbarism, by borrowing weapons from the enemy. In others, however, memories of the war are bitter still. The most enlightened citizens of China and Japan differ among themselves about the future relations of their country. The Chinese, who are very proud, look upon the Japanese as fundamentally an inferior race, which has followed their religion and their art, and the Japanese, while admitting their vast debt to China, think that they have been awake during the two or three centuries that their huge neighbor has been asleep. If Japan should emerge a brilliant victor from the present war, her influence in the East would be increased, but in calculating to what extent Asia can act as one it should be remembered that in race composition, language, temper, and religious spirit, Japan and China are more unlike than Germany and Great Britain.

IF JAPAN
SHOULD WIN

SOCIAL EMINENCE is to be celebrated at St. Louis by a collection of women "prominent in society," carefully selected by the "Board of Lady Managers," or females in control of the woman's department. Shall the men be left behind in so important a branch of the results flowing from the Louisiana Purchase? It seems to us self-evident that there ought to be a Hall of Fame for men prominent in society also, and the male display should be the more exclusive, and therefore the grander, because the number of men socially conspicuous is so much smaller. A few leaders of cotillions, a few young millionaires, and a few old butterflies compose a circle rendered by its smallness more select than the women can possibly claim to be. The female leaders are willing to furnish photographs of themselves for this exquisite idea, and if the proper men were chosen they would be equally ready to oblige. The list could in every city be chosen by an expert, as there are specialists in every boarding-house who follow with exactitude the doings and the personnel of the group under consideration. It is all very well for us Americans to sympathize with women in their expanding sphere, but there is no reason why they should have the exclusive right to be portrayed for their attendance at social functions. As the day for the opening of the Fair is drawing nigh, this subject should be handled immediately by the proper Board of Gents.

AN OPPORTU-NITY FOR MEN

MISSOURI IS ONLY ONE STATE, but it deserves the attention politically which it is just now receiving, because it is the place where the hardest and most promising fight is being waged against a corrupt machine. The reports from St. Louis seem incredible, and yet they are indisputably true. Mr. FOLK's chances for the Governorship are at least strong enough to drive his corrupt opponents to measures of desperation. In the New Madrid County Convention, where FOLK had 229 delegates, and the machine 23, the chairman of the committee of the county declared himself elected chairman of the convention, against the protests of the 229, then immediately declared a motion carried instructing for a machine candidate, and declared the convention adjourned. In St. Louis County, at Clayton, about 500 ruffians sent out from the city of St. Louis smashed furniture and dragged the chairman from his seat. In St. Louis several thousand "Indians," as the desperadoes are called, went about from one polling place to another, voting repeatedly and preventing the upholders of FOLK from getting to the polls, sometimes dragging them from the line and beating them in plain sight of the police. Hundreds of thousands of dollars have naturally been subscribed to defeat the Circuit-Attorney. Some of the men most nearly concerned in the transactions which he has exposed are on the Board of Directors of the Fair, and among the more respectable opponents of Mr. FOLK is a very conspicuous individual who might conceivably be the Democratic nominee in 1908, if Missouri were then a doubtful State, as it might be if the Democratic machine were to win the present fight. We read with regret the milk-and-water editorial in Mr. BRYAN's newspaper about the contest in Missouri. It was evidently written to squint either way, and is quite unworthy of a man who makes the claims to moral principles that Mr. BRYAN does. Indeed, we are unable to escape the feeling that Mr. BRYAN, since his return from Europe, has been rapidly losing respect, in his desperate effort to hold his personal power. His use of HEARST is his most notorious bit of demagoguery, but the whole attitude looks more and more like that of a man in whom frightened ambition is producing moral weakness.

THE FIGHT
IN MISSOURI

GRAFT IS AN ILL WORD. It has no legitimate ancestry, and it lacks the picturesqueness, the naturalness, of good slang. It is used too much, and its very poorness as a word helps to tire the public of the issue which it represents. The issue itself, however, presented by official corruption, by making money out of politics, is of pre-eminent importance in our life. Mr. LINCOLN STEFFENS, in his new book called "The Shame of the Cities," makes the evil distinctively American. His facts we do not doubt, but his conclusions are sometimes exaggerated. "American achievement," he says, "in science, art, and business means sound abilities at bottom. . . . Even in government we have given proof of potential greatness, and our political failures are not complete; they are simply ridiculous." In such sentences proportion is distorted. We have done nothing in art, little in science, and in government, with all our flaws, we have taught the world great lessons, and for the first time proved the possibility and the stable adequacy of thorough-going democracy. "The misgovernment of the American people is misgovernment by the American people." True, but the country is not fundamentally misgoverned. Misgovernment is to the whole conduct of affairs as a couple of boils are to a strong man. It would be unfair to call him sick, although he doubtless needs a tonic or a change of diet. Mr. STEFFENS, speaking of the lady at the Custom House, the lyncher with his rope, and the captain of industry with his bribe and rebate, says that we break our own laws and rob our own Government, and that "the spirit of graft and of lawlessness is the American spirit." There is no essential difference, he thinks, between pulls, whether they get a wife into society, a book into favorable notice, a heeler into office, a thief out of jail, or a rich man's son on the board of directors of a corporation. If not, why appropriate this human evil to America? What of the social pull in England? What of newspaper corruption in France? What of the constant bribery of every petty Government official in Italy? What of corruption as a livelihood in official Russia? Mr. STEFFENS's facts are true, and his exposure is valuable, because it will help to render them less true. Many of his views also are stimulating and just. A crusade against graft, however, sometimes leads to over-statement, like the preacher's eloquence against sin. Democracy has not failed, even if some degree of corruption seems universal. Whatever may be said of the machinery by which the end is reached, the average citizen enjoys those goods which the leaders wished for him when they made the Constitution. The friendly dedication, therefore, of the little volume is deserved,—and it "is dedicated, in all good faith, to the accused—to all the citizens of all the cities in the United States."

A TREATISE ON GRAFT

THE THRESHING MACHINE AT WORK ON A LOUISIANA RICE PLANTATION

A NEW INDUSTRY OF THE GULF STATES

By C. ARTHUR WILLIAMS

Rice-growing, which was started as a means of fighting the boll weevil by diversifying the cotton crop, has spread over nearly a million acres in Texas and Louisiana. Of particular interest at the present moment is the part Japanese farmers are taking in teaching Americans improved methods of rice culture and the utilization of lands heretofore uncultivated

THE boll weevil crossed the Rio Grande from Mexico and started on the journey which has since cost the cotton industry millions of dollars. The farmers brought all their practical knowledge to bear against it without avail. Legislation, national and State, was directed at it to no purpose. The weevil went steadily onward.

After a season or two, during which the cotton farmers of a large area of Texas lost their entire crops, the cry went up, "What shall we do to be saved?"

"Diversify," answered the press, which at once appreciated the seriousness of the situation. "Grow crops the weevil can not harm."

"Diversify," echoed the experts of the Federal Department of Agriculture, when the appeal reached them. "Do this and that in attempting to rid yourselves of the pest, but, above all else, diversify!"

So, gradually and not without many protests on the part of the planters, the diversification movement commenced. For generations these planters, who were trying to get the better of the most destructive insect pest known to the history of this country, had depended on cotton as their principal, and in many cases their only, source of revenue. Even in the dark days which came in the last years of the century just past, when cotton went as low as five cents, they were able to get cash for their product. Many of them knew nothing of any scheme of agriculture which did not contemplate the raising of cotton to the practical or total exclusion of every other crop. But the advent of the weevil and the consequent necessity for finding something to take the place of cotton made them active. They tried corn and other grains, fruits of all kinds, alfalfa and various vegetables, all of which were satisfactory on a small scale, but were not susceptible to broader treatment.

Then some one suggested rice.

The weevil-ridden planters could see nothing in the suggestion at first. Another crop year came, with its swarms of insects and its despoiled cotton fields. Then they looked further into the possibilities of rice-growing. It seemed more favorable. Those who had decided to pull up stakes and move to other parts, reconsidered and decided to experiment with rice on the lands they had heretofore devoted to cotton. The railroads interested themselves and began bringing in immigrants and homeseekers and selling to them, to be devoted to the culture of rice, other lands which had been held to be practically valueless. The movement gained headway with remarkable rapidity. Soon the time came when the rice industry was no longer confined to a restricted area in Louisiana where, because the land was especially adapted to it, the culacreage will be larger by at least twenty-five per cent, and by the end of the decade a large portion of the seven or eight million acres which are still available will probably be under cultivation. A few years ago all the rice raised in the United States came mainly from the Carolinas, with a small production in Georgia, Florida, Alabama, and Mississippi. Now the centre of production has moved far to the west, and last year the Texas-Louisiana fields produced approximately 5,000,000 sacks, of 162 pounds each, as against only 470,000 sacks for all the other States named. A fair idea of the development of the industry in the new lands may be gained when it is stated that the production has increased from 171,000 sacks to the present figures since 1895, when the total acreage in the United States was only 18,000. The value of the crop raised in Texas and Louisiana last year was approximately $25,000,000, and the Federal Department of Agriculture estimates that by reason of the increase in the value of the lands heretofore thought to be practically worthless, at least $15,000,000 has been added to the wealth of the planters.

Lands fit for nothing else will grow rice if properly handled. In some cases splendid results have been attained on tracts which were formerly swamps, but which, when drained, made ideal rice lands. It is necessary to have plenty of water during the growing season and comparatively dry ground during the harvest. Therefore arrangements for both irrigation and drainage must be perfect. Some of the rice planters irrigate from shallow wells, getting the water up by horsepower or windmills. Others have deep artesian wells. Those who operate along more extensive lines have canals of their own radiating from convenient streams, while in still other cases the planters get their supplies from big canal companies, which make a specialty of the rental business, although many of them are also extensive growers of rice on their own account. The thing has been reduced to a science, and only in the rarest of cases has a planter who knew his business failed of a bountiful harvest. In the early days more or less damage was caused by the salt water which backed up from the bays and the

JAPANESE LABORERS IN TEXAS RICE FIELDS

ture of the cereal had been carried on in a small way ever since the Civil War, and where the boll weevil was then regarded as a most remote danger. Everybody talked rice, and soon rice-growing spread all over the great stretch of country along the Gulf of Mexico, between Bayou Teche, in Louisiana, on the east, and a point not far from the mouth of the Rio Grande on the west.

It is still spreading, and unless all indications are at fault, it will continue to spread for many years to come. There are now about 340,000 acres of rice lands under cultivation in Louisiana, and something like 250,000 in the coast country of Texas. Next year the

A BATTERY OF MOWING MACHINES, EACH DRAWN BY SIX MULES, HARVESTING THE GRAIN

Frederic Remington

AWAY TO THE WARS!

COSSACK CAVALRYMEN LEAVING THEIR NATIVE VILLAGE FOR ACTIVE SERVICE ALONG THE YALU

DRAWN BY FREDERIC REMINGTON. COPYRIGHT 1904 BY COLLIER'S WEEKLY

The Cossacks are a mixed race, forming a small proportion—about 2,500,000—of the population of the Czar's domains. They are indigenous especially to the basins of the Dnieper and the Don, the Caucasus, and the Ural province, but owing to their nomadic character are also to be found in Southern Siberia as far east as the Amur. Being essentially a fighting people with warlike traditions, the Cossacks contribute formidably to the offensive strength of the Russian Empire. In themselves, the Cossack soldiers are regarded as irregular troops. They are, however, incorporated, by military units, in the various branches of the regular army, supplying battalions of infantry, squadrons of cavalry, and batteries of artillery.

A TYPICAL SUPPLY CANAL IN THE RICE-GROWING REGION OF THE SOUTH

gulf through the coast streams, but that trouble has been obviated by the construction of locks and dams.

One of the most interesting features of the situation just now is the presence in the rice country of several colonies of Japanese rice farmers. These men are not coolies, but intelligent men of means, several of whom own rice farms and employ many hands. The Southern Pacific has been subjected to considerable criticism for bringing them in, but since they have taught the Americans numerous new and successful methods of rice culture and have shown how various by-products may be profitably handled, the general impression is that they have earned a welcome. And, in any event, a sufficient number of them to cause any race complications will never be brought in. There are perhaps less than a hundred of the Japs in the rice belt now, while one railroad alone has brought in 1,088 families, comprising 4,046 persons, from the "old States" during the past twelve months, and the other roads have done their share. Fully 100,000 homeseekers have been attracted to the rice fields since their development commenced.

There is no danger of an overproduction of rice. This year's crop will supply only about two-thirds of the home consumption. The rest will have to be imported. The foreign market is good, but it may be many a year before we begin to export on anything like a large scale, since the demand for the cereal here is increasing by leaps and bounds as a result of a campaign of education set on foot by some of the Southern railroads and business organizations. We imported 154,000,000 pounds in 1899 and only 70,000,000 in 1902. In 1900 the consumption per capita was three pounds. It is five pounds now, and the Department of Agriculture estimates that it will eventually go to forty.

But, leaving everything else out of the equation, the rice industry has proved the salvation of the planters who formerly depended on cotton and could depend on it no longer when the boll weevil came. In addition to the dozens of rice mills scattered through the belt, some of the more important towns and cities have bonded warehouses where the producer may store his grain, and, using his warehouse receipts as collateral, get as good a line of credit at the banks as he enjoyed in the days when cotton was not only king, but the whole royal family. There are by no means a sufficient number of these warehouses, however, and the problem of securing sufficient cash to move the crop is still the biggest problem with which the rice belt will have to contend.

VERMONT GOES DRY

"No treating" clause too much for Green Mountain Falstaffs

AFTER a year of local option Vermont seems to be ready to return to prohibition, if not in theory, at least in practice. Over a year ago the State Legislature passed a law making the question of license or no license one to be settled by each local community. Ninety-two towns, released from a fifty years' reign of prohibition, voted to license saloons; and nine counties out of the fourteen in the State decided to permit liquor selling within their borders.

At the March election last year, however, forty-four of the license towns voted to return to prohibition, while a solitary town changed from "dry" to "wet." Out of the nine license counties only three chose to retain their privilege of licensing liquor selling. On the face of the returns, therefore, Vermont appears to be of a mind to abandon local option in favor of the old-time State law.

But the defenders of the local option experiment have their theories to explain this reversal of opinion. In some respects the law was unsatisfactory. For one thing, it prohibited treating, and, besides its implied encouragement of blackmail, this clause destroyed the most cherished of the convivial drinker's traditions. "A cup o' sack for the company, landlord!" under the special dispensation granted to Vermont Falstaffs, was an invitation that could not be shouted from one end of the room to the other, and "Have one on me!" was a tabooed phrase. Another unsatisfactory provision of the law was that which forbade the selling of liquor to a "blacklisted" man. Whenever the town authorities decided that a citizen was imbibing too freely his name was sent to the saloons and drug stores, and thereafter none would serve him. In his zeal for the cause of temperance, Governor Goodell once blacklisted a whole town! Such unfortunates join with the orthodox anti-saloon advocates in preferring prohibition, for under the old régime they could get all they wanted to drink in the "blind tigers." Still another class are ready to decry local option, because they could not get licenses, and have been arrested for selling without authority.

NEW ROAD FROM OCEAN TO OCEAN

The Grand Trunk Pacific Railway will open a wilderness and "roll back the map of Canada 500 miles"

TO "roll back the map of Canada 500 miles"—that is the way one enthusiast expressed the purpose for which the Canadian Parliament recently assembled. More definitely, the session was called to give effect to one of the greatest railroad projects ever under-eventually to build a branch to Dawson. That project is as yet indefinite.

The Grand Trunk Pacific is a definite enterprise, not a dream of the future. The organization necessary to undertake it has been perfected and the financial backing has been pledged. At a recent meeting in London of the stockholders of the Grand Trunk Railway Company, the terms offered by the Canadian Government were accepted. A guarantee fund of $5,000,000 was deposited in the Bank of Montreal the next day. The terms of the contract provide that the western section, from Winnipeg to the coast, must be completed by December 1, 1911.

The Canadian Government wanted to open new territory in the east as well as in the west. Above all, it wanted a complete transcontinental line which would keep Canadian commerce in Canada, and not seek an outlet through the United States. The result of its stand was the agreement which the Grand Trunk stockholders have finally accepted, though not without some bitter opposition from the more timid. The Grand Trunk Pacific Company is to be financed by the Grand Trunk road, and the Canadian Government will guarantee its bonds up to 75 per cent. The Government also will guarantee 75 per cent of the cost of building the mountain section. From Winnipeg eastward to Quebec, and thence to Moncton, New Brunswick, the road will be built by the Government itself. From Moncton the Intercolonial Railroad will furnish a line to St. John, New Brunswick, and Halifax, Nova Scotia. This Government road will be leased to the Grand Trunk Pacific for fifty years. For the first seven years it will pay no rental, for the next three it will give the Government the net surplus of its receipts over its expenditures, and after that it is to pay three per cent on the cost of construction.

The territory thus opened to development is looked upon by most people outside of Canada as a frozen wilderness. In reality the eastern portion is rich in timber and mineral lands, while in the west it is possible that an area of 500,000,000 acres will be opened to agricultural settlement. The cost of the entire line is put by friends of the project at $100,000,000, and by its opponents at $150,000,000. 500,000,000 acres seems an incredibly large area. However, the northwestern Province of Mackenzie alone is nearly twice the size of the State of Texas.

THE OPENING OF THE JAPANESE DIET

AN IMPRESSIVE SCENE, AT WHICH NOT A SOUND WAS HEARD BUT THAT OF THE EMPEROR'S VOICE

Special Cable Despatch from FREDERICK PALMER, Collier's War Correspondent
COPYRIGHT 1904 BY COLLIERS WEEKLY

TOKIO, March 20.—The striking feature of the opening of the Diet was that the ceremony progressed both within and without the Houses of Parliament in unbroken silence. But for the words of the Emperor himself, this national event, at the time of a great historic crisis, was a performance in pantomime. There were no other speaking parts, no chorus. Both princes and populace expressed their veneration for their sovereign by dumb respect, infinitely more impressive than processional music, cheers, or booming cannon. It was silence so eloquent that it clothed each movement of the Mikado with mystery. The public progress of other monarchs would have been the excuse for noisy demonstrations. Especially is this true of the time when a nation is at war. At the approach of other monarchs there would have been roars of cheers, warning words of command, the rattle of muskets presented in salute, the strains of the national anthem,—but to-day the entrance of the Emperor into the chamber was announced only by a silence so solemn that it could be felt. In silence a parchment roll was handed to him, and only broken by his voice, at which sound each head bowed as though in prayer. This stillness continued. In silence still the parchment was returned with a bow, and the Mikado glided among his attendants and disappeared without an added word. The members, the nobles, generals, admirals, and diplomats separated at the departure of the Emperor. It was the only signal given for their dismissal. Outside, the Mikado passed between long lines of subjects; and, although no officer of his escort gave a command, no policeman raised a voice, he moved through the crowded avenue surrounded by the same reverence as though he were moving down the aisle of a church. One saw in this loyalty, in the strong emotion strongly repressed, and in the power of organization exhibited by this ceremony, those same qualities of discipline, discretion, and secrecy of purpose that at Port Arthur carried the torpedo squadron in safety through the night, through snow and ice to victory.

taken on this continent or in the world—the building of a new transcontinental line, 3,025 miles long, from ocean to ocean. The greater part of this railroad is to traverse a country now almost a wilderness. Except at the Atlantic end, its route touches but two cities of any importance—Quebec and Winnipeg. These are more than 1,200 miles apart. The probable western terminus will be Port Simpson, on the Portland Canal, the inlet which figured prominently in the Alaska boundary decision last fall. This railroad project shows one reason why Canada was so anxious to retain control of that channel. The port is close to the 55th degree of north latitude, or nearly ten degrees further north than Russia's frozen harbor of Vladivostok. An alternative western terminus is Butte Inlet, about 150 miles north of Vancouver. From there it is hoped

LUXURY OF MARRIAGE

New York's women teachers must choose between their profession and matrimony

THE lot of the school ma'am in the public school has never been a bed of roses. School-teaching to most young women is, at best, a sort of bridge across the troubled waters of limited means to a haven and a husband. Now the New York School Board steps in and cruelly thickens the thorns.

New York's determination to keep married women out of the public schools as teachers is unshakable, despite a late decision of the State's Court of Appeals, that the School Board's by-law covering the point was not legal. The Board has relied upon the following paragraph of the regulations to enforce its theory that it is unjust to unmarried teachers to subject them to competition with those who are in part supported by husbands:

"Should a woman principal, a woman head of department, or any woman member of the teaching or supervising staff marry, her place shall thereupon become vacant."

A Brooklyn teacher, Mrs. Jennie L. Van de Water, refused to give up her position on marrying, and took the matter to the courts. In the final trial in the Court of Appeals a judgment was rendered in her favor, the court holding that the mere fact of marriage could not be sufficient ground for dismissal without charges being preferred. To meet this ruling, the School Board added a by-law defining marriage as an act of insubordination for which a teacher might be dismissed. In other words, charges could properly be brought against a woman who violated the Board's commandment, freely translated, "Thou shalt not marry and hold thy job."

Critics of the New York Board's action have quoted the opinion, that the average yearly salary of a woman teacher in the United States would not keep a carriage horse in Chicago, to refute the contention of the educational authorities that school-teaching plus a husband's care is unfair competition with a mere teacher. They declare that some one—father, brother, or husband—must supplement the teacher's salary to enable her to live. In New York, the first year's pay is $600; each year thereafter for sixteen years $40 is added. Now, $600 a year in New York will do no more than pay the rent of a comfortable apartment. But the Board of Education finds that there is no shortage of teachers, and for every one who marries and steps out of the class-room into a home, another unmarried woman is ready to fill the vacated place.

TOO MUCH FOR SULLY

He "sat in the game" too long, and the "rake-off" goes to the Southern planter

THE practical effect of Daniel J. Sully's unsuccessful effort to corner the cotton crop is the taking of nearly $100,000,000 from American and European cotton mill operatives, cloth makers, and dealers, and distributing it among American planters, merchants, and others at the South. Had he gotten out of the market six weeks ago and gone to Palm Beach, and then decided to keep out, he would have had three million dollars "rake-off," and the satisfaction of being the first man on record who knew enough to quit such a game when he was well ahead of it. They have all been unable to withstand the contemplation of their own good fortune, of their phenomenal success. Those who didn't go down in the early stages of an effort to corner a world's crop, have stayed too long. It was so with Ranger, with Steenstrand, and with Labouissé in cotton, with Partridge, Keene, "Deacon" White, Hutchinson, and Leiter in grain, and notably so in the case of M. Secretan, who tried to corner the world's copper supply.

There is something more than the irony of fate in the fact that Mr. Sully, the Providence coal clerk, received his first inspiration of the possibilities of cotton speculation in the mill of his New England father-in-law, for there were no tears shed by the cotton manufacturers over the disastrous failure of the young man of forty-three, who had studied cotton two years at the South and sixteen years, perhaps, in brokers' offices in Providence and Boston. It was in 1902 that he decided to come to New York to buy a seat on the Cotton Exchange and "learn the game." He was an apt student, evidently, for early last year he decided to "set in" where Price drew out, and began boosting 9-cent cotton until within two months he was worth a million. Returning, he "sat in" again. The New Orleans crowd had played his hand during his vacation, and they moved closer together round the table for him. By February this year, after having put cotton to 17½ cents, on the craze which he and his associates had stimulated, he announced he was going to Palm Beach for a rest. The story runs that some of those with him the New Orleans crowd accused of having sold out on them, of unloading. Prices ran off. The great public following were alarmed. He didn't dare take a dare, but "sat in" again, for the third time. Bravely he fought, in an effort to stem the tide. He seemed to think it incumbent on him to hold up the price to what he had predicted. But quotations fell away and away, until, as many in position to know aver, he found that "the South"—some of the New Orleans crowd, it was said—were selling the May option and shipping their spot cotton to meet the contracts, while he, poor Sully, had been practically the only buyer. That may have been a poetical Southern revenge. It was certainly a hoist from his own alleged petard. But one must not forget his point of view. He went to Wall Street to "study the game." It is safe to say,

Copyright 1904 by Collier's Weekly

THE ENEMY WITHIN THE LINES AT PORT ARTHUR

This photograph was taken early in January, before the beginning of hostilities. These thousands of cases are filled with Ochistevnaga vodka, a corn whiskey almost as strong as pure alcohol. Our correspondent reports that this stock was laid in in anticipation of a prolonged siege; he adds that there is enough liquor there to keep the garrison incapacitated for six months. A St. Petersburg despatch to a London paper says: "Corruption has been responsible for the defeats that Russia has suffered. . . . There are thousands of sacks at Port Arthur supposed to contain sugar, but which in reality are filled with brick chips" from the point of view of those able to judge, that no man who regards or indulges in option trading as if conducted at Canfield's or in the bucket-shops, is of the mold to protect the public in an economic consideration of the laws of demand and supply. That Sully's much-boasted information on those points was sadly in error was plainly shown whenever he and his friends took their hands off the market, by the way prices reacted. The cotton manufacturers, the cotton trade, and the public will be benefited by the collapse of the now famous Sully cotton corner, which just escaped being successful. Pharaoh's little deal in corn in Egypt, as told in the good book, was about the only successful venture of the kind of which we have any record. But Pharaoh didn't go about it as Sully did. He did not pyramid his profits. He did not regard it as "sitting in" the game.

HELLO! IS THIS THE POWER-HOUSE?

Trolley-car telephones connect East St. Louis electric cars with superintendent's office in case of accident

TROLLEY-CAR telephones, connecting the car with headquarters, is a new idea now being tried in East St. Louis. Each car of the service is fitted with a telephone and a generous supply of wire. At every fifteenth pole along the line connection can easily be made with a wire leading directly to the general superintendent's home or to the power-house. In case a serious accident occurs at some distance from a telephone or telegraph station, the car can be put into almost instant communication with the source of aid.

This tendency to shift responsibility from the man on the spot to "the office" is characteristic of modern street railway operation. On this same East St. Louis line, as well as on other metropolitan systems, the electric heating is controlled by officials in the central office. Flags and colored lights are hung out at power-houses to guide motormen in regulating the heat. Three grades of heat may be furnished according to the color of the flag or light, and it is not for the motorman to reason why. If the warm-weather signal should be hanging out on a zero day, about the only thing for the passenger to do is to sit tight and trust in the "government."

AN INJURY TO NEW YORK

Railroads are carrying grain at a loss to other ports in the light to deflect traffic

UNDER the old theory of transportation business, railroad rates should depend on the cost of carriage. If one road gave a lower rate than another, that should mean that it had a shorter route or a better equipment, or was satisfied with a smaller profit. As a matter of fact, competition under the present system usually means only an effort to force a change in combinations. The leading Eastern roads are now engaged in a war over grain rates between Buffalo and the seaboard. Last fall they were getting 3.8 cents a bushel. Now they are taking wheat at .6 of a cent a bushel, with still lower prices for other grains, ranging down to .4 of a cent for oats. These figures mean an actual loss on every bushel carried. The war has not been very costly as yet, for the amount of grain in Buffalo elevators on February 1 was only about 5,000,000 bushels, but the contest threatens serious consequences for New York City. It costs less to carry freight from the Eastern lake ports to New York than to any other point on the seaboard. For this reason

New York hitherto has received most of the export grain sent down the lakes. The Pennsylvania Road, a few years ago, secured a through line from Buffalo to Philadelphia, and the present rate war means that it is trying to obtain for Philadelphia a larger share of this traffic. It began the cutting. A Pennsylvania official announced: "No matter what rate the New York lines make, ours will be .4 of a cent lower." It has determined to force the New York lines to agree to such a differential.

The differential principle has been in force for years on freight originating further West. The grain rate from Chicago to New York is usually 1½ cents higher than to Baltimore, and one cent higher than to Philadelphia. Freight is carried from Chicago to Gulf ports at from 7 to 10 cents per 100 pounds less than to New York. The Chicago Board of Trade recently appealed to New York grain men to boycott roads which will not consent to reduce this differential to three cents. The argument of the railroads is that the shortest and naturally cheapest route should pay the highest rates in order that there may be a division of traffic. The effect has been a steady loss of commerce for New York City while its rivals profit. In the ten years, from 1880 to 1890, New York's registered tonnage declined 214,517 tons, while Boston gained 501,430 tons; Philadelphia, 484,017; Baltimore, 231,215; Norfolk, 243,047; Newport News, 623,477; New Orleans, 823,262. New York business men say this is unjust. Merchants

The target, 17 by 21 feet, displayed aboard the "Kearsarge" after the trial

THE BATTLESHIP "KEARSARGE" HOLDS THE WORLD'S RECORD IN GUNNERY

In recent trials held off Pensacola, Florida, a gun-crew of the battleship "Kearsarge" established a new record for naval artillery. From an eight-inch gun ten successive shots were fired, within five minutes, at a target on shore at a range of sixteen hundred yards while the ship was moving at the rate of ten knots. The result was a total of ten bull's-eyes

Officers and men of the gun-crew which made the record

American marines in front of the electric railway power-house

Japanese, American, and British non-commissioned officers at Seoul

THE UNITED STATES MARINE GUARD ON DUTY AT SEOUL, KOREA

Some four years ago an American company built in Seoul the first electric trolley line ever seen in Korea. The superstitious natives gathered near the power-house and tried by physical violence to impede the starting of the "devil cars." It is in just such emergencies that the guards allotted by the various foreign Governments to their legations at Seoul are called upon to protect life and property, both of which are especially menaced through the Korean hatred of foreigners. About one hundred marines from the "Vicksburg" are at present in Seoul, and have been on duty at the American legation and the trolley power-house there since conditions became unsettled in the Far East.

of other cities argue that without differentials New York would have a monopoly of trade which would be unjust to them.

The West is also having its rate wars. Heavy cutting has been going on between lines running from Chicago to Missouri River points and further west. The object is the same as in the East—to secure a new division of traffic. When that is accomplished rates will go up again and the public will pay the cost of the wars. Appeals have been made to the Interstate Commerce Commission. It has ample power to settle such matters, but the railroads usually come to an agreement among themselves without waiting for it.

SPONGING COATS WITH NIAGARA

If corporations had used all the privileges granted them, the Falls would now be dry

THERE is an old joke about a tailor who, upon seeing Niagara Falls for the first time, exclaimed: "What a place to sponge a coat!" The severely practical spirit of that tailor appears to have dominated the New York Legislature much of the time in its attitude toward Niagara Falls. Perish the thought that it ever contemplated sponging anything but coats! In the last twenty years no less than nine distinct corporations have been granted the privilege of taking water from the river above the Falls for the development of power. And seven of these were authorized to take it in unlimited quantities. As the flow of water over the Falls is only 123,420,000 gallons per minute, and a healthy power plant needs from 6,000,000 to 12,000,000 per minute, it can be seen that if the nine companies had all made themselves busy, not enough water would be going over the Falls now even to sponge a coat. Fortunately, none of the companies with unlimited rights utilized them, and all but one have forfeited their privileges. The last of the group will perish of innocuous desuetude this spring unless the Legislature revitalizes it. Almost everybody in the United States who has heard of the matter thinks the Legislature should do no such thing. Nevertheless, the Lower House has passed a bill extending the company's unlimited rights, to which is added the right of unlimited capital and almost unlimited condemnation of land. The Upper House has yielded to public sentiment to the extent of resolving that the President of the United States should make a treaty with Great Britain to protect the Falls, and that the State of New York should co-operate in this commendable object, but whether it will also recognize public opinion in a practical way by rejecting the pending bill is still an open question.

The two companies now operating on the American side and the three building plants on the Canadian side are restricted to 200,000 horsepower each, or 1,000,000 horsepower altogether. To produce that amount of power, they will divert more than one-fourth of the water now going over the Falls. The plants which these companies have in operation, or under construction, will have a capacity of 355,000 horsepower—205,000 on the American side, and 150,000 on the Canadian side. They will divert at least one-tenth of the river's flow within a year.

THE AMERICAN HEN DOES HER DUTY

Laying eggs overtime now that the Japanese War has raised the prices of many other foodstuffs

THE war is blamed for raising a lot of dust in the provision market. "Every time the Japanese gunners punch the Russian meal ticket," as a Western paper breezily observes, "American tea drinkers help to pay the expense." Wheat is booming, and the same day that Chicago May options sold at the record price of $1.09, the price of rolls went up in New York. Rice will also be affected by the war. The Pacific Coast uses a good deal of Oriental rice, and, if the war continues long, rice for Californians will begin to come from the Gulf rice belt. Luckily, this has been an unusually good rice season in the South, and there is plenty of John Chinaman's staple. Beef is another product that has been affected by the Eastern hostilities, and many of our smaller Western ranchmen are watching the progress of the war in the hope of disposing of cattle, which they have been keeping on the ranges for the past year or two, until they could sell them at a profit.

Main entrance of the power-house, guarded by the marines

M. ALEXANDER PAVLOV, THE RUSSIAN MINISTER TO KOREA, AND HIS WIFE

Upon their occupation of Seoul, February 12, the Japanese politely expelled M. Pavlov, his family, staff, and the legation guard of four hundred men. They were sent, with a Japanese escort, by special train to Chemulpo, where they embarked for Shanghai.

In this depressing advance of prices, eggs stand out as a shining exception. Eggs are down. The American hen, spurred by a sense of national responsibility, has been laying overtime. Her enthusiasm knows no bounds—except the one egg per day prescribed by tradition. Eggs are down in New York, in the Middle West, everywhere but in the Far West, where hens are fewer and farther between. Communication is less rapid there than in the more crowded East, however, and the news of Chemulpo and Port Arthur has possibly not penetrated to the barnyards. Certainly our fowls know that America expects every hen to do her duty.

THE SITUATION AT HONG KONG

Mysterious military activity at this neutral port, although nothing is said of war

MILITARY activity along various lines has been going forward of late at the neutral port of Hong Kong in a manner that has aroused much gossip among the civilian residents. "First of all," writes J. F. J. Archibald, one of Collier's special war correspondents in the Far East, "workmen are now busy setting up searchlights of enormous power on ten or more promontories about the entrance to the harbor. Each one of these searchlights has as an adjunct a small watch-tower with two operators, one for night and one for day. What reason may have actuated the installing of these instruments is only for conjecture, but certain it is that no steps were taken to do it before the first news of the fight off Chemulpo came officially to the ears of his Excellency F. H. May, Governor of Hong Kong."

"That part of His Majesty's fleet which up to this time has been lying peacefully in Hong Kong Harbor has received orders from home to proceed immediately to northern waters. These orders include all of those vessels which have had Hong Kong as a base, with the exception of three cruisers and the torpedo boats. The latter have, within the last few days, manifested unusual activity, and are now regularly patrolling waters in the vicinity of both entrances to the harbor night and day."

"Hong Kong has been considered as almost impregnable, by reason of the length of the entrance to the harbor, the fortifications along the passage, and the peculiarly sheltered situation of the city. Besides all natural advantages the city itself is extremely well fortified. However, within the last week, thousands of workmen have been put at work strengthening the old defences and setting up new ones, under the direction of engineer officers of the royal army. The work in hand will need, at the least, four months before nearly approaching completion."

"In the different garrisons there is considerable movement and excitement; especially is this true of the First Artillery, whose hours of practice and drill have been lengthened considerably. This is true also, in a less degree, with regard to all the British soldiers at Hong Kong, and the spectacle of soldiers marching along Queen's and Des Vaux Roads is becoming more frequent every day. This applies mostly, however, to the Sikhs, many of these having been recently enlisted and needing more training than they have been getting, so the officers say. However, in spite of all, there is no word said among officials of impending war. On the other hand, the edict of neutrality, as proclaimed through the Governor, is very strict."

KANSAS KICKS OVER THE TRACES

Farmers of the short-grass country revolt against machine and nominate country editor for Governor

"WE want Hoch!" they're saying in Kansas. Hoch is the man who has been nominated for Governor. He was made a candidate because, as editor of a little country weekly in the town of Marion, he led a revolt against machine rule which aroused

YOUNG BRIGGS' SISTER

THE STORY OF AN EASTER CARD

By OWEN OLIVER, Author of "In His Private Capacity," Etc.

ILLUSTRATED BY E. M. ASHE

SOME fellows' sisters give themselves airs, but Briggs' sister didn't. That was why Tomlin and I liked her. She was nineteen, and had golden hair done up in a knot, and a nose that turned up just enough, and not too much, and an awfully friendly way of smiling at you. She made candy for us the first time we went there to tea, and played tennis in the garden. She wasn't any good at it, but we didn't win if we could help it. I thought she was pretty. So did Tomlin. We told Briggs, and he told her. He hasn't any sense, because he is only a kid in the first year. We are in the upper classes. She didn't mind, though, and Briggs got her to ask his mother to ask us to tea again. I took her some chocolate creams. So did Tomlin. It was raining, so we played ping-pong indoors. I let her win when she played me. Tomlin said he did, too, but I don't believe he could help it. She played mighty well.

We went there a lot in the Christmas holidays. Our people were abroad, and we were boarders at the school. Briggs was a day-boy. She took us to the theatre with Briggs, and home to tea afterward. They hadn't taken the mistletoe down, and I was half a mind to kiss her under it, but I didn't know if she'd like it, as it wasn't a party. Neither did Tomlin. So we told Briggs to give her a hint and see what she said. He went and blurted it out before everybody, like a little idiot, and they all laughed at us; but she said there was nothing to laugh at, and we might if we could catch her. You bet we did!

I made up my mind then that I would marry her. So did Tomlin. Of course, we couldn't both. He offered me fifty cents and a big knife for my chance; and I said, if he thought I'd sell my half of her for that, he must take me for a mucker. He said he did. So I had to fight him. We let Briggs come to be umpire because he was her brother. We didn't tell the other fellows because we didn't want them to know. People always think other people's love affairs are foolish. I got the worst of it at first, but Tomlin fell with his head on a brick. That made him stupid. So I said we'd finish it another time. I didn't want to lick him too easy, because we'd always been good pals, and he's all right when he doesn't make a monkey of himself.

Briggs said he was umpire, and we'd got to shake hands and be friends. So we told him he wasn't umpire any more, and it was like the nerve of a first year kid to interfere, and he didn't know anything about it, and we were going to fight to the death.

He wanted to know what we were going to fight to the death for, and we told him it was his sister, and he said it wasn't any use, because Violet (that is her name) was too old, and, besides, she was in love with "Badger." He is the English professor at our school. Briggs had heard his married sister talk about it to his mother, and they said she was a silly girl, and he was thirteen years older than she, and too absorbed in his books to think of such a thing, though he seemed interested in her in a brotherly way. We didn't believe it at first, but we put Briggs on honor, and he swore it was true, so we had to. We never tell lies on honor in our school.

Tomlin said he should challenge "Badger" to a duel when he grew up, and kill him, and then we could fight for her; but I thought it wouldn't be sportsmanlike to kill him if she wanted him, and I'd rather make him marry her. Tomlin said that I was quite right, and he was sorry he called me a fool. So we decided that we would not fight any more.

We thought the best thing would be to send "Badger" an anonymous letter, saying that he'd better marry her if he didn't want to be murdered by a secret society, but that fool, Briggs, went and told her. There are some fellows that you can't trust with a thing. She made him ask us to go and see her first, because she wasn't well. So we went. She was propped up in a chair with pillows, and she called us her "dear boys," and smiled so that you might have thought there was nothing the matter.

It was all nonsense, she said, about her being in love with Mr. Ransome—that's "Badger"—though she admired him very much, as every one did. (We didn't, but we didn't say so.) It would hurt her very much if such a thing were spoken of, and she trusted to our honor not to do so. We said we wouldn't, and we'd swear to it on anything she liked, but she told us our word was good enough for her, and she would be so pleased to see us when she was a little better, but her head ached very badly now, and the doctor was afraid she was going to be ill. So we went. I felt very miserable. So did Tomlin.

She was ill. It was a fever or something, they said, but it wasn't catching, so Briggs could come to school. He was very grouchy about it. So was I. So was Tomlin. "Badger" was always in the dumps just then. So we had a dark blue time of it.

About the beginning of March she was so bad that they put straw down in their road, and after it had been down a week Briggs came to school with his eyes and nose all red, because they said she was sinking. Some of the fellows called him a cry baby, and he sailed into them. So did Tomlin and I. It was in the playground, and "Badger" was just coming across. He kicked up a row, of course, and wanted to know what it was about. We told him they'd called Briggs a cry baby, and he said that was no excuse for our disgraceful behavior, and discipline must be maintained. (We knew what that meant.) It was lucky for us that Briggs' older brother came along. He said: "We are afraid my sister is dying, sir. Violet, you know. The boys were fond of her," and "Badger" blew his nose and said: "Ah! Yes, yes. They would be. Any one would be. You may go, boys—I can't tell you how sorry I am to hear it, Briggs."

It was a half holiday and too muddy for baseball. So Tomlin and I thought we would call and ask after her. We each took her two picture post-cards, because she collected. Mrs. Briggs made a fuss over us, as if we had done something wonderful, and took them up to Violet, and then she said we might go and see her for a minute, if we liked. So we went. She had her eyes half closed and her face was all white. She didn't smile much, but you could see she was trying to. You had to lean down to hear what she said, and then you couldn't hear properly. It was something about "dear, kind boys," and "comforted me very much," and her mother told us to kiss her and took us downstairs. She was crying. She said we mustn't be too sorry because Violet would be an angel soon. Of course, we knew she would make a corking angel, but she was good enough as a girl. I sniveled. So did Tomlin. I pretended something had got in my eyes. So did he.

Then we saw a cat in a garden and threw stones at it. One of them hit a greenhouse, and a man chased us. He didn't catch us. Then we felt better, and went down to the village to get some grub. (Mr. Briggs gave us a quarter each.) We saw some Easter cards in a shop, and that reminded us that the next morning was Easter Day and we thought we'd send her one.

We had settled on a fine big thirty-five cent one, and were just going in to buy it when Tomlin caught hold of my arm.

"Look here, Taffy," he said (that is what they call me), "it won't do. There's no place to write on."

"What do you want to write?" I asked.

"Our names, of course, so as she'll know it's from us. If we don't she might think it was from anybody—from that crazy 'Badger' very likely!"

"I expect she'd like it better if it was," I told him. "Say, Tomlin. Suppose we make out it is? It—it would cheer her up. You know what Briggs said? About her being gone on him?"

"But she told us she wasn't," he objected.

"It wasn't likely she was going to give herself away," I said. "I bet she does. I know what girls are!"

Tomlin said I didn't, and I said he was a lobster, and he said he'd punch my head some time; but he wasn't going to have a row then. We hadn't agreed when young Briggs came along. So we put it up to him. He said I was right (I knew I was); because he'd

"BADGER" SUDDENLY SAT DOWN ON THE TABLE AND LAUGHED

SHE WAS PROPPED UP IN A CHAIR WITH PILLOWS

heard his mother say that she was always talking about "Badger" when she was light-headed.

So we made up our minds to pretend that the card was from "Badger," but we didn't think those in the shop were the kind he would send, because his class of victims always send verses. We went back to Briggs' shed, in their garden, and tried to make up some poetry. It is not so easy as it looks. We only pounded out two lines apiece, and we didn't agree about them. Tomlin wanted to begin:

"Dear Violet, when you are dead,
I'll scatter tears around your head."

I didn't think it was a bad poem for Tomlin, but I thought we oughtn't to let her know that she was going to die. My verses were cheerful:

"Dear Violet, I send this letter
To say I hope you'll soon be better."

Tomlin said it was not so bad, but an Easter card wasn't a letter. Briggs said it wasn't her kind at all, and she liked poetry with something about stars and love in it. So we sent him in for some of her poetry books, and found some verses that we thought would do. They went like this, if you altered "Margaret" to "Violet":

"TO VIOLET"

"Violet!"

Why have I never told you yet
Of women fair there is but one
For whom this fond heart pines?
Why do we never tell the sun
It shines?

"Violet!"

Why have I never whispered yet
The love—ah, sweet!—that burns in me?
But worshiped lone and far?
Why do we worship distant
A star?

"Violet!"

If time and fate would give me yet
One wish—I quiver at the thought—
To touch your hand and love anear;
Then all the whole wide world were nought—
My dear!"

We thought it was such awful stuff that it would just do for the purpose, and she'd believe he was in love with her all the time, and didn't like to say so. We got it typewritten and put "Badger's" name at the bottom, and we bought half a dollar's worth of flowers, and sent it with them by mail.

I thought it would be awful tough luck if she—if she was worse—before she got them. So did Tomlin. Richardson said we looked as if we'd got the colly-wobbles. So we soaked him. An instructor caught us at it, and took us both to "Badger." He was sitting with his head on his hand, and didn't hear the knock. He was fierce when he saw us.

"What were you fighting about?" he asked.

"Richardson made fun of us, sir," I explained, "because we—we didn't look cheerful."

There was a lump in my throat. I didn't see how we could be expected to be cheerful when very likely she wouldn't ever receive the flowers.

"Ah!" "Badger" said, "I see." He got up and we thought it was to chase us out, but he only put his hands on our shoulders. "You're in trouble, aren't you, my boys? Is it about—Miss Briggs?"

I nodded. So did Tomlin. "Badger" said: "Ah!" again and looked at the fire.

"Try to remember how kind she was to you," he told us, "and be kind to other people. Richardson didn't understand, I'm sure. Good-night. Here! Take a pear each. I—I'm sorry, boys."

We thought it was very decent of old "Badger," and made up our minds to get prizes just to please him. He's very particular the way you do your lessons.

The next morning we went down the road to meet Briggs, Jr. He had been running and was out of breath. He gets too much fancy grub at home, and that spoils his wind.

"She—she's taken it all in," he gasped, "and it's braced her up so, they say she's taken a turn for the better. Dad is walking about rubbing his hands, and mother's smiling, and big brother says I can have his old tennis racket, and the cook's given me two eggs for breakfast, and Susan's grinning like a Cheshire cat. I'll be darned if old Rover isn't wagging his tail. They are all standing on their head, and—and—I can't stand it. I think I'll run away!"

"You little idiot!" said Tomlin. "I believe I'll half kill you. Do you mean to say you aren't glad?"

"Glad!" he cried. "It'll kill her when she knows. She's made mother write a letter to ask 'Badger' to go and see her. They've given it to me to bring." He poked it in our faces. "If he doesn't go, she—she'll die."

He lay down on the grass and bellowed, and Tomlin and I looked at each other.

"Look here, Tomlin," I said, "we'll have to take the note to him and ask him to go. He'll give us blazes, but I don't care."

"Neither do I," said Tomlin.

So we took it. "Badger" was just starting for school when we got to his room. "What is it now?" he asked. "It's about Briggs' sister, sir," I told him.

He sat down suddenly. "You mean she—she's—"

He didn't finish; but we knew what he meant. "No, sir," I said. "She—they think she's going to get better." He looked quite pleased. "Only—it's all our fault, but we didn't mean it."

"Your fault?" He laughed such a funny laugh that I thought he was off his head.

"We sent her an Easter card, sir," I explained. "That was what did it. She thought it came from you. You see, she was stuck on you, and—"

"What?" he shouted. "What do you say?"

"Young Briggs heard his mother speaking about it," Tomlin explained. "She used to talk about you—she had the fever. We knew it before."

"We thought she was dying," I said, "and we wanted to cheer her up. We didn't think you'd mind. At least—"

"We didn't think about you at all, sir," Tomlin owned.

He held on to the arms of the chair and stared at us as if he didn't know what he was doing.

"I—I had no idea," he said, "no idea! She seemed so young and beautiful, and—"

He stopped and pulled himself together. "What do you mean by this nonsense?" he asked in a fierce voice.

We explained. He didn't look so wild as we expected, and when we gave him the note he drew several long breaths and coughed. Then he smiled a sort of smile.

"You've come to ask me not to punish you, I suppose?" he said.

"No, sir," I said. "I—we—" I looked at Tomlin.

"We—we thought—" he said. Then he looked at me.

"We knew you'd pitch into us," I told "Badger," "only we thought perhaps you wouldn't want her to die."

"Most certainly not," he said.

"And we thought—she's a brick, really she is—and if you could make out that you did send it, don't you see, sir? You could tell her that you weren't going to marry her, when she got well, and— Well, you could say Tomlin and I will when we grow up!"

"Badger" suddenly sat down on the table and laughed as if he had gone mad.

"I think I'd better marry her myself," he said. "You see, she couldn't marry both of you."

"We thought of fighting a duel," Tomlin remarked. "Ah! I see. I see. Still that would be a pity."

He laughed again and looked at the clock.

"Tell Mr. Johnson I shan't be at school this morning," he ordered. (Johnny is the assistant principal.) "You can give this to Mr. Douglas." (Dugger is our instructor.) "On the whole"—he pulled our ears gently—"you've behaved like gentlemen. Thank you, my boys."

Tomlin and I were so upset that we didn't say anything, only looked at the note. It said:

"Hughes and Tomlin are excused for being late. They have been doing me a service."

When we left "Badger" had collared his hat and overcoat. We knew that he was going to see Violet, and I bet Tomlin ten cents she would recover. She did.

"We were afraid she would get done up again when 'Badger' told her that he wasn't in love with her; but when he found out what a corking fine girl she was he was too foxy to make any breaks like that. He made out that he'd liked her all along, only he thought she was too young and nice for him (like the man that wrote the poem did) and she believed it. Girls will believe anything of a fellow if they like him. Why, she thinks Tomlin and I are the best boys in the school. She told 'Badger' so!"

"I didn't give you away to her," he said, when he told us. It was at supper, after he had taken us to the circus in the Easter vacation, and it was a supper.

"So I hope you'll give her cause to be proud of you."

She ought to be, if she isn't. I won the cup for the best batting average on the school nine, and Tomlin won the long jump in the track meet, and every one said we made bully "best men" at the wedding. There were some stunning girls there, but I liked Violet best. So did Tomlin.

"I didn't give you away to her," he said, when he told us. It was at supper, after he had taken us to the circus in the Easter vacation, and it was a supper.

"So I hope you'll give her cause to be proud of you."

She ought to be, if she isn't. I won the cup for the best batting average on the school nine, and Tomlin won the long jump in the track meet, and every one said we made bully "best men" at the wedding. There were some stunning girls there, but I liked Violet best. So did Tomlin.

"I didn't give you away to her," he said, when he told us. It was at supper, after he had taken us to the circus in the Easter vacation, and it was a supper.

"So I hope you'll give her cause to be proud of you."

THE MECHANICAL JONAH

AN ADVENTURE WHICH ACTUALLY BEFELL A TRAVELING CIRCUS IN THE EARLY TENT-SHOW DAYS

By CHARLES H. DAY, Author of "True Tales of the Sawdust Ring" : : Illustrated by B. CORY KILVERT

"I DON'T believe in Jonahs. A Jonah is a showman's superstition. I've had pretty good luck in my time, and never took any stock in any old woman's whims, number 13, evil Friday, cross-eyed men, walking under a ladder, or any of that sort of bosh."

The speaker was a tent-show writer who not only expressed his opinion, but put in his spoke to draw out the group of sawdusters who were circled about the glowing stove of their winter home, a small hotel near the show's resting and refitting quarters. The landlord overheard the remark of the language embellisher and observed: "There's no room 13 in my house. If there was I would use it for a morgue."

"Fudge on Jonahs!" remarked an equestrian who was drawing on a high-flavored cigar thrust in an ornately carved meerschaum purchased abroad; "it is a cruel thing, an outrage, to put a performer under the ban with such a millstone around the neck. Horrible!"

"Huh!" growled Crawford, the boss canvasman, pulling out a black pipe and hunting about his pockets for a match. "'Tis a horrible thing for a show to have a Jonah along. I'm no Johnny Newcomer in this business, and I know what I am talking about, I do. When a manager hires a Jonah, the cheapest thing he can do is to tie up the trick and not move the show." Crawford looked from sitter to sitter, and all except the writer and the equestrian nodded assent to the speaker's views.

"I presume that you have an excellent appetite [the landlord on the sly threw up both hands] and perfect digestion?" queried the literary listener.

"Well," returned the boss canvasman, "I never saw no man around a show except one who beat me on them qualities you have named, and he swallowed stones, nails, tacks, and such in the side-shows, an' made a business of his innards." Everybody laughed except a clown in the corner; he wouldn't crack a smile at any one's conceit—except his own. Crawford admired the white ashes on his cigar, took long-drawn and satisfying puffs at the roll of tobacco, and then settled it into a corner of his mouth, so that he could talk and still make the cigar hold fire. Every one present knew that a remarkable relation was forthcoming, for Crawford was as full of reliable reminiscences and extraordinary and exciting experiences as a popular novelist is of surprising sensations and perfidious plots. "Torkin' about Jonahs," began the boss canvasman, "I had an experience with Dan Costello when I was young in the business that's a worth a tellin' an' not a connerduive to argyfyng or discussing. Dan was one of the fust to overland to Californy, an' we had adventures enough to make a sizable book. I've been a mind to write it, but I'm handier with a sledge than I am with a pen, and I never was much of a leg-puller, if wuz I'd be writing circus bills and slinging words to beat the band. This pertickler season we were making a special feature of a Mechanical Jonah."

"Mechanical Jonah?" interrogated the circus writer, permitting his curiosity to overcome his courtesy.

"I'm not telling this yarn other end first, nor is it in Hebrew with Chapter Once in the back end of the book. As I was about to observe before the dictionary opened, Dan he—well, you all know Dan, he was a star leaper and a clown that was a clown in his time. He went to England with Howes & Cushing, and Dan made the personal acquaintance of Charles Dickens, who writ books enough to fill this room, and made enough money to have a circus of his own if he wanted one. Dickens was stuck on the circus, an' writ a book stuffed with sawdust called 'Great Expectations.' It was good. I read a book of it till I wore it out, but I didn't mind that much, for I knew it from kiver to kiver by that time and could say it backward. Well, the two men got so familiar that they called each other Charlie and Dan, and the only difference they ever had was who was to pay for the beer."

"What chapter is that?" asked the circus writer.

"I'm jest perfecting a literary style, imitating you, starting in at the middle and going both ways. What is the use of telling a story if you don't introduce your characters? If you didn't, it would be like seein' a play after the first act. It was Dan an' Bill Coup got Barnum back to tenting, as you all know. Cass, as we mostly called Dan, had allers taken ter the South. Southwest an' way out West an' the lakes an' the rivers, there was roughin' an' money in it, an' it wuz men like Cass an' Old John Robinson who used ter make lots of money in the outlandish outerways. When you show in the poperlated parts you get your competition and your comfort together. I've been a hull season with Dan without even so much as crossing the track of another trick or seein' a sheet of emboidy else's paper. That perditional spring I am relatin' to, I pumped Dan on his intentions just as a perspective father-in-law does after a feller has been chasing up a gal, running up the gas bill, an' failing to sign a contract. Cass didn't elucidate extensively, he jest dropped enough to satisfy my curiosity when he said: 'I'm goin' to make some money or lose my scalp.' I knew by that he wuz goin' West, an' sez I, 'Cass, I'm with you if I'm eat up with rattlesnakes and filled with pizened arrers. Where des yer expecter to winter?' sez I. 'Sundown,' sez he. 'Road or rail?' 'Any old way,' answered Dan, 'we'll be so hitched up as ter road it, rail it, or boat, but principally wagon.' An' then Dan bein' in a talkative mood communerated: 'I expect to see Californy before I get back, an' I'll get dust if fortune don't give me the dirty shake.' After tellin' about the company, an' the layout he had made for a good show, he sed confidentially: 'Whisper, I've got a feature,' an' held his breath for as much as a minute, an' looked aroun' keerfully before he spoke. 'Craw'—he most generally called me Craw fur short—'I've got a Steam Man.' 'Explanify,' sez I, an' Cass he went on to do it an' tell how the mechanical figur' wuz of gigantic proportions, much as eight feet high, an' wore a stovepipe hat, which anser'd for a smokestack. The thing had its eyes lit up, an' let off steam through the nostrils, an' tuk in fuel at the mouth. 'Dumbest invention you ever heard tell of,' sed Dan. 'What good is it?' sed I. 'It walks,' sez Cass. 'Rats,' sez I. 'Honest injun,' sez Mister Costello as solemnly as if he wuz under oath. An' I tuk his word for it. 'The Steam Man will draw,' sez Cass." (Continued on page 23)

"THE CONSERVED THING WOULDN'T WORK HALF THE TIME"

Daughters of Desperation

The Adventures of Three Fair Anarchists, an Obliging Young Man, and a Dog

A STORY IN FIVE PARTS—PART FOUR

By HILDEGARD BROOKS : : Illustrated by CHARLOTTE HARDING

One day Maurice Silsbee, the promised groomsmen of his friend Spoffard, who that same day is to marry Miss Ina Bushnell, comes upon three young ladies in a garden adjoining the Bushnell property. These, the Misses Dicey, Houghton, and Halliburton, avow themselves members of an anarchistic society presided over by one Stepnovo. They design, for the benefit of the Cause, to rob Miss Bushnell's wedding silver-chest, and for this purpose have hired the professional burglar Gardiner. Silsbee, appearing at the hour when Gardiner is expected, is mistaken for him and thus initiated into the secret. While impersonating the criminal, Silsbee tries to dissuade the Daughters of Desperation from their purpose. But when the real burglar arrives Silsbee is found out, overpowered, and locked in the cellar. Gardiner, however, fails the young ladies at the critical moment, so that they are obliged to appeal to their captive for aid in carrying off the heavy chest. After some parley with Miss Halliburton he consents. The party drive with the stolen box to a railway station, whence it is expressed to town subject to the order of a fictitious person

CHAPTER VII

THE horse was anxious to get home to his breakfast oats, and we lost no time on our return. This was well; for day brightened and we overtook and passed several milk and truck wagons on their morning way to Keswick. It was light enough now, had we met any persons squarely, for them to note our not very usual appearance. Miss Halliburton in her bridesmaid's gown, both of us hatless, our unusual rig for a pleasure drive, and the unusual hour for that; if these things would not have drawn upon us the suspicion of the passer-by, I say he would have been a man of little imagination.

But chance-hap favored us, and we entered Keswick's still quiet streets, crossed the park, and made our home run without serving as worm to any early bird of curiosity. Miss Halliburton, who, as far as possible, had kept herself anxiously withdrawn from view since day had surprised us, gave a very human sigh of relief as we entered the gate of the Dicey place.

For my own part, the nearer we approached headquarters the more uneasy I grew as to what might have happened there during our absence, and my own relief was great when we came in sight of the stable and saw Miss Dicey and Miss Houghton, evidently awaiting us impatiently. They were seated side by side on one of last night's hampers, just within the carriage-house door. Not that they had been there since we had left them, for they had exchanged their ceremonial costumes for fresh pretty morning dresses, and when Miss Halliburton descended from the wagon and stood between them, she looked fagged and wilted by contrast. They received their sister in desperation with enthusiasm. They showered praises upon her, and delicate little caresses for the thing she had accomplished. Evidently the three considered the adventure at an end, while to me the serious side of it was but begun. I looked momentarily for the officers of the law.

"Neither Powell nor Gardiner has turned up yet," Miss Dicey volunteered when we had finished our report—"and Josh, he is gone too."

"Josh gone!" cried Miss Halliburton, as if this were a straw too much; and that frown of pain I had seen the night before when her tears had flowed came upon her brow.

"Josh goes rat-hunting between midnight and breakfast," I hastened to reassure her. "Fixed habit; but he never fails to turn up."

They all seemed greatly relieved.

"Do you think you will need the horse again?" I inquired of Miss Dicey, just by way of reminding them that they now had their own safety to consider.

"No, indeed; and, Mr. Silsbee, could you stable him, since Powell isn't here?" she returned. "Thank you so much. So good of you to help us out. Breakfast will be ready when you come to the house."

"And we've had your things from the cellar carried up to Powell's room, over this carriage house," added Miss Houghton, pointing to the stairs, "in case you want to refresh yourself; and come right to the house, won't you?"

"Breakfast will be on the back piazza," said Miss Dicey.

Miss Halliburton's eyes were seeking the distant horizon. I should have as soon expected a marble statue to cordially second the others' invitation. But I accepted it. What could I do else? My associates in crime were in no wise alive to all our danger. We were quietly to breakfast, all together. It was my part to await developments.

Miss Dicey wore pink that morning, Miss Houghton pale green, and Miss Halliburton had changed her gown when I joined them on the piazza to one of fresh white, in which she looked severely beautiful. She sat manipulating the coffee machine as I came up the steps and had no time to give me more than a cold little bow of welcome. But Miss Houghton, who was cooking eggs in a blazer, and Miss Dicey, who was going back and forth into the house fetching things for the breakfast-table, received me in most friendly fashion. I was permitted to hulk the strawberries, and to open the box of "No-Cooking," the breakfast cereal, with my pocket-knife, and to fetch the plates from the side-board of the dining-room, just inside, and the cream from the kitchen just beyond; altogether I was useful and busy. For a few minutes the dark happenings of the night were forgotten. A cheerful party drew around the attractive table.

The piazza was to the south, but at that early hour it was cool and shady while the garden was flooded with morning sunlight. Birds sang; in the breeze the last wistaria blossoms drifted to our white cloth. Miss Halliburton's coffee was strong and fragrant. I believed I was spending the last agreeable hour of my life. I would fain have forgotten the silver. But the conversation inevitably turned to it. My companions discussed the matter of how soon it could probably be delivered at their apartment in the city, and I presently learned that their friend Stepnovo was now at their apartment, living there while he awaited the silver.

"It must reach him to-night," said Miss Dicey. "You know the apples I have sent down from here in the fall always come in one day."

"I do hope it won't be delayed," observed Miss Houghton, "because we can't go home till Stepnovo has smelted it all and carried it away, and if it takes him long we shall be dreadfully hurried in packing for the steamer."

"He can't do it very fast, working all alone," said party, Mr. Silsbee," she said quietly. "The people who are going are all anarchists. You wouldn't enjoy them, and they wouldn't enjoy you. Besides, there is no reason whatever why you should not return to your former walk of life."

"Impossible!" I exclaimed. "Please think how deadly tame it would be!"

"That's so," said Miss Dicey sympathetically. "But then you may be hunted by the police, and that would be exciting."

"But there is no chance of Mr. Silsbee's even being suspected," said Miss Halliburton. "The silver won't be missed till the Spoffards come home at the end of the summer. Then the burglary will be traced to us; but they won't be able to reach us, so that will be all."

"You little know the capacity of the detectives," I urged. "These trained men won't be long in tracing every move that each one of us made last night. As for me, I shall be the first object of suspicion, for it will soon be known that on the day of Fred Spoffard's wedding I mysteriously disappeared. Neither shall I ever be able to give an account of myself."

"No need," said Miss Halliburton; "we telegraphed."

"What did you say?"

"That, Mr. Silsbee, I would rather not tell you."

"But I ought to know," I pleaded. "It may save me from jail some day to be able to tell the same story."

"I'm sorry, but it is impossible for me to tell," said Miss Halliburton; "you'll have to trust me that I made a good and sufficient excuse."

Though she spoke firmly, yet the gathering frown on her forehead, and a shimmer in her eyes, made me dread a sudden flow of tears, and I desisted, my curiosity unappeased.

"As for your feeling yourself in danger, Mr. Silsbee, we certainly won't urge you to stay in the country in that case," she continued, her face clearing again. "I recommend Australia to you."

"Are you going to Australia?" I asked.

"No, but you really can't go with us, Mr. Silsbee," said Miss Houghton in an expostulating tone. "It would break up the whole colony to have a person like you along."

I was deeply hurt.

"What is there about me," I asked bitterly, "which makes you think I would not make a good anarchist? It is true, I have strenuously objected to your breaking the law. I may say, I have demurred all the way through, but actions speak louder than words. I am as deeply dyed in crime as any one of you."

"I think not," said the inexorable Miss Halliburton. "I remember that I gained you last night only by making a strong appeal to your instinct of chivalry. I doubt whether, accurately speaking, you have had any hand in the larceny committed last night."

"But connivance," I urged. "is also a crime."

"Connivance alone is not strong enough to qualify you for a place among us," said Miss Halliburton. "Every member of this emigrating party, except the wives of a few of our members—every one is at war with society upon one issue or another. Each one of us can claim to have struck one blow against the pernicious order that now exists, and each has either suffered martyrdom already, or has lived in hiding from the officers of tyranny."

"What is the idea," I rejoined with animation, "of drawing the line so closely about the merely disreputable? I should think that a few people like myself, who have never been in jail or in hiding, would give (I speak humbly) a rather pleasing variety to the social intercourse."

"Undoubtedly," she returned with a light rise of color, "but our aim is not to make things as pleasant as possible, but rather to base our new colony on the firmest possible foundation. We can admit only those who have so thoroughly broken with all their ties here that they can cherish no hope of return."

"And you yourselves are going with this permanent exile in view?" I asked incredulously, looking from one to the other.

"Certainly! Why not? What else could we do?" they returned in chorus.

"But won't you—ah—suffer?" I asked.

Miss Dicey laughed, Miss Halliburton looked disdainful, Miss Houghton only would answer me.

"Suffer? Of course we shall suffer. We are going with a company of untrained and many-minded people into a wild country. But all living is suffering, and we are only going to escape mental torments and face mere physical ills. We shall welcome the change. What is exposure to the weather or famine or fever or even war with savages compared to the misery of being a civilized young woman?"

"I should think—" I began, but she cut me short.

"You think, but you don't know," she said. "We know exactly how you think, but you can't remotely guess how we feel."

I was dumb. As for further urging my escort upon these would-be emigrants, that was out of the question. To turn the conversation I wondered, most unfortunately, whether Josh had yet come in.

I WAS PERMITTED TO HULK THE STRAWBERRIES

Miss Halliburton. "But I think Powell and Gardiner will turn up to help him."

"I'm afraid not," said Miss Dicey. "They were pretty badly scared. I don't believe we shall see them till we get on board the steamer, and then they'll be disguised."

"Powell loves disguises," said Miss Halliburton, and there was a lovely flicker of a smile. "I wish he wouldn't. It makes him so conspicuous."

"He is not a man of very good taste," said Miss Dicey with regret. "But he is very useful. And I must say it's been a great convenience since we've been here that he assumed the disguise of a servant. We've had all sorts of work out of him that did not strictly further the Cause."

"What steamer are we going to take?" I asked Miss Halliburton upon my first opportunity.

She looked very much taken aback.

"You're not going to take any steamer," she exclaimed.

"What, you are going to leave me behind?" I cried incredulously. "I'm to bear the whole fury of the law while you escape to a place of safety."

This impressed the other two. Miss Dicey thought it did not seem very fair, but Miss Halliburton relentlessly shook her head.

"It would be quite impossible for you to join our

They had forgotten the dog for the nonce, and were quite startled to remember him. Now they anxiously proposed to each other to make a thorough search of the premises. I was loath to see the table-round break up; the piazza was growing momentarily more pleasant as the mounting sun promised us an extra hot day, and I could have sat there sipping coffee and discoursing with the Daughters of Desperation for another hour or so.

But I diligently joined in the search for Josh.

CHAPTER VIII

FOR two mortal hours we sought that dog in garden, stable, and along neighboring streets and alleys. The air became hot; we were all languid. From time to time, as our search was still fruitless, there was that ominous gathering on Miss Halliburton's brow which bespoke her anxiety and disappointment. I watched her apprehensively. If she cried, I told myself, there would be nothing for it—I should have to confess that the dog had never been mine, that he had now disappeared to seek his own haunts, and I should have to offer to go to the street where he had joined me and find him, and find his owner and buy him at any cost.

But Miss Halliburton commanded herself. She did not cry. I once more vaunted Josh's loyalty and basely promised my companions that he would return of his own accord.

"But perhaps some horrid, unprincipled wretches have stolen him!" suggested Miss Houghton.

The burglar-maidens looked at each other, appalled at the thought of such a depredation.

"If any one has stolen him, believe me, he won't keep him long," I hastened to reassure them.

Then I urged—we were in the garden at the time—that they should all retire to the house and rest. I promised to remain under the shade-trees myself and watch for Josh, giving an occasional whistle. If he did not return of his own accord before noon, I proposed to put a notice into the evening paper.

They were so nearly fondled, with all the excitement and loss of sleep in the past night, that it was not difficult to dissuade them from longer and fiercer exertions. Even when Miss Houghton and Miss Dicey wearily agreed to go in and rest a while the invincible Miss Halliburton still refused to join them. She said she had an important matter to attend to before she could sleep. It presently appeared that her business was nothing less than to call upon Mrs. Bushnell and apologize to her for the disturbance they had caused her the night before.

"I'm sure it isn't necessary," protested Miss Dicey, "and it will be awfully embarrassing for you to face her after breaking into her house last night."

"Not in the least," returned Miss Halliburton. "I am never embarrassed. We had a perfectly good reason for breaking into her house last night, so there is nothing to be ashamed of." For a moment I felt I had solved Miss Halliburton—she was a humorist; but she continued most gravely: "I should be ashamed, however, of neglecting a simple courtesy. Mrs. Bushnell has always been very neighborly when we have come up to stay in Keswick. I am going over to see her now."

"May I go with you?" I asked, inspired by her greatness to take a greater view of the value of my own personal safety.

She seemed willing to consider me as an escort, but Miss Dicey protested it was unwise I should be seen with her, and Miss Halliburton agreed.

"The best and safest thing for you to do, Mr. Silsbee, is to go straight home," said Miss Dicey in a cordial way. "We're very, very grateful for what you've done; but now that there is nothing more, why should you run the risk of arrest, as we must? You had better say good-by."

"Yes, Mr. Silsbee, your family will be troubled about you," suggested Miss Houghton anxiously. "I'll find you a time-table. And one of us will drive you to the station."

"I couldn't think of troubling you. It's only a step," I returned, wondering wistfully whether my adventure was really to break off here and now. "I have a time-table with me, thank you, Miss Houghton."

Sadly I pulled it forth and consulted it. There was just time for me to make the next train into the city.

"That's nice," exclaimed the young ladies in congratulatory tones.

"I was hoping I had an hour's grace to wait for Josh," I said with a cheerfulness that I took care should not conceal my disappointment. "I'm a little troubled at leaving my dear old companion without a word of farewell. He has been my faithful doggie—and I think he'll feel it. I suppose you ladies intend to take him with you into the dangers of sea-travel and pioneer life?"

There were exclamations of assent from all of them.

"Certainly, we shall!"

"Nothing would induce us to be separated from Josh."

"We won't go till we find him."

And now Miss Dicey considered my case.

"It's a shame for Mr. Silsbee not to see him again," she cried.

"You ought to stay over another train," said Miss Halliburton in a tone of restrained reproach for my coldheartedness.

And now they all fell to urging me to stay over to luncheon, not to do violence to my nature by tearing myself from Josh without farewell. They assured me that I exaggerated the danger I was in, that if I left without seeing my dog again I would probably regret it all my life.

I accepted with pleasure their invitation to luncheon. Miss Halliburton was still intent upon her call at the Bushnells. I walked with her as far as the gap in the hedge, and waited for her there. She returned in a very few minutes.

"Mrs. Bushnell was at breakfast, so I didn't stay," she explained to me as we approached the house. "She meant to be pleasant, but she saw I was sleepy, and she scolded me because we were all up so late last night. I suppose—" (Miss Halliburton's tone grew bitter) "she thought we were up for our own amusement." Her head drooped wearily. "I wonder where Josh is," she sighed.

FOR TWO MORTAL HOURS WE SOUGHT THAT DOG

"Don't give him another thought," I begged her. "Pray go indoors and rest. I'll wait about the garden for him."

"There's a hammock down there," she remarked with a languid gesture toward the lower end of the garden, and we separated.

Aside from the night's exertions, the morning itself was hot and drowsy enough to dispose me to slumber. Miss Halliburton's sleepy voice acted like an added soporific. Though crime lay behind me and almost certain "trouble" lay before, I found that hammock in the cool interior of a hemlock thicket and straightway fell asleep.

I awoke reluctantly when my name was called, but when I saw before me the three Daughters of Desperation, evidently come in a body to advise me of a calamity, for deep distress was depicted on their faces, I was broad awake in an instant and sprang to my feet.

"Have they come?" I demanded.

"Have who come?" asked Miss Halliburton.

"The police, to be sure," said I.

"We don't expect the police. It's about Josh," she returned.

"Oh, Josh!" I repeated, immensely relieved, though at the same time it saddened me to think that I had to be aroused from my reviving sleep for the sake of that wretched cur. Still, it was high noon, as I saw by the sifted rays of the sun; and the ladies, so wan that morning, had their color restored by their hours of rest.

"I thought the silver had been missed—or found," I remarked to my accomplices.

"It surely has been found by this time," cried Miss Dicey, wringing her hands. "We packed up Josh with it!"

"What?"

"We shut down the lid on him! We have shipped him with the silver to Stepnovo!" cried Miss Houghton.

"The devil!" I exclaimed involuntarily.

"Yes, wasn't it fiendish, horrible, cruel carelessness?" sobbed Miss Dicey. "I did it myself. Oh, he'll die! He'll be suffocated! It's too ghastly!"

"But are you sure? I don't see how it could have happened," said I, beginning to doubt the event.

"It was this way," Miss Halliburton explained, and here was a time when her calmer demeanor shone forth with fine effect: "Miss Dicey had Josh on her lap, sitting in the wagon last night, watching you pack."

"I remember," said I.

"Then came the alarm. She said she put Josh down on top of the ready-packed silver—"

THEY ALL FELL TO URGING ME TO STAY

"Didn't you see me do that, Mr. Silsbee?" asked Miss Dicey eagerly.

"I don't remember," I confessed. "You put out the light."

"Then you both got out of the wagon," Miss Halliburton quietly continued. "Miss Dicey thinks he must have curled up in the hollow made by the punch-bowl (as she describes it it was large enough) and gone to sleep in the time that we all stood listening. Now didn't you close down the lid of the chest before you relighted the lantern, Mr. Silsbee?"

"I did," I confessed; "and this frees you from all blame in the matter, Miss Dicey," I added, for her distress was very painful.

"He was in my care," she returned inconsolably. "I should have missed him at once. I'll never forgive myself."

"But it's unlikely anyhow," I protested, "the dog would have yelped, and we should have heard him."

"Ah, you know his trustful nature, Mr. Silsbee," exclaimed Miss Houghton. "Would he have yelped? We think not. We think he quietly slept while we screwed him in and shipped him. But in the baggage car, on the train, and in the express office, when he realizes that he is betrayed, it is then that the box marked hardware will send forth howls."

I reflected on the circumstances, on Josh's predestined career of making trouble, and I had to admit that the dog was probably in the box.

"Perhaps he passed quietly away for lack of breath," I suggested hopefully, "ere ever he awoke."

They received the suggestion with every mark of grief and pity, so that I was sorry I had spoken. There was no stemming their bitter self-accusation for Josh's death until Miss Dicey remembered the large crack between the two places that made up the cleated lid of the chest. This crack, we decided after much talk, ran right across the place of the punch-bowl and should afford Josh his necessary air. The conclusion did not, of course, tend to make us easy. If Josh was safe, we ourselves were in the greater danger. As Miss Houghton had said, the box marked hardware would send forth howls. Who could doubt, in that case, but it would be opened, the silver discovered?

"And Stepnovo arrested!" said Miss Halliburton with tragic quiet.

"Stepnovo?" said I. "How about him?"

"The box was directed to Stepnovo. They'll go for him."

"But the silver was marked with Miss Bushnell's name, wasn't it?" said I. "Won't they search these premises for all traces of the thieves? Won't Josh be recognized as the dog who made himself conspicuous at the wedding by his attachment to Miss Halliburton?"

"They will come to the Bushnells", of course. Josh will be recognized as our dog, too," said Miss Halliburton calmly. "But nobody would suspect us of the hideous cruelty of packing up a small dog in a chest full of silver. The circumstance will tend to lead suspicion away from us."

"You are a little too easily reassured," I protested warmly. "I tell you that to the detectives—who are perhaps at this very moment looking over the scene of the burglary over yonder—our trail across the lawn and through the hedge and to your stable will be as plain as if we had trod in fresh-fallen snow. Ladies, the hour has come when we must face the consequences of what we did last night."

But I made very little impression on them. They could not, when it came to the point, conceive of the possibility of themselves being arrested. They thought it more likely that nothing would be done in Keswick till the police had secured the man to whom the box had been directed. The question with them was not one of their own safety at all, but of their accomplice in town.

"But he is in your apartment, you say," I still urged. "Won't that bring the guilt directly home to you?"

"Yes, it will in time," said Miss Dicey. "But I've heard time and again how slow and stupid detectives are. A good many of my best friends in the city have had dealings with them. I think we had better consider what we can do to warn Stepnovo first and afterward consider ourselves."

"Somebody must go there," said Miss Halliburton. "He does not answer the doorbell, so it is no use to telegraph. He is simply on the lookout for the express wagon that is to bring the silver."

I promptly declared that I would go, resolving to make myself as useful as possible, even in the hour of our ruin.

It was an hour before the next train left for the city, and when Miss Halliburton learned that she decided that I must have luncheon. I was not in the least hungry, but when I found that Miss Dicey, the real hostess of the premises, was too much perturbed to attend to me, and that Miss Houghton was absorbed in encouraging her and consoling her—when, in short, it appeared that Miss Halliburton herself had to attend to my wants, I confessed to some appetite. I followed her to the house. The big cool dining-room was pleasantly shaded by faded old yellow silk curtains at the windows. I stood there watching her as she walked about.

Well-Dressed Men

appreciate the good qualities of

EVERSTICK

Invisible Rubbers

Neat in appearance, covering only the sole of the shoe, affording absolute protection. Do not bind the foot or discomfort the wearer.

The EVERSTICK Cannot Come Off

It has every good feature of the ordinary rubber and no bad ones. Fits any single or double sole. Live dealers sell the EVERSTICK. If yours does not, send us his name and we will see that your wants are supplied. Write for circular.

THE ADAMS & FORD CO.
100 Bank St. Cleveland, O.

Hygienic Telephone Guard

"A Device for Clean People"

Prevents infection and the lodging of germs in telephone transmitters. It both lacks and prevents odors. Increases the transmitting efficiency of the telephone. Price, $1.00. Send 5 two-cent stamps for postage. Money refunded if not absolutely satisfactory. Extra paper 50c, box of 6 rolls.

The Telephone-Hygienic Company
CLEVELAND, O.

Rare Old Coins

Paper Money, Gems, etc. Curious Morocco cast coin, dated "1200." 12c. New Philippine copper set, 10c. Isabelle 14 dollar, as new, 75c. 10c. coin, with bust of Kruger, 60c. 5 various Japanese coins, 35c. 4 var. Russian, 15c. 5 var. West Indian and South American coins, 25c. 1K Mexican Five Opal or genuine Turquoise (auth), $1.75. Premium buying coin list, 10c. Selling lists of 35,000 coins, etc. FREE.

THOMAS L. ELDER, Pittsburg, Pa.

400 2nd-HAND TYPEWRITERS less than half price. All good as new. No. 2 Smiths No. 6 Remingtons $48. All makes from $10 up to $40. Big factory clearing sale. We Buy, Sell, Rent and Exchange. Old typewriters put in good repair. Big Discounts on Supplies. We ship on approval, free examination. Send at once for Free Catalog and big bargain list. Special offer to agents. Rockwell-Barnes Company, 265 Wabash Ave., Chicago

TO BE GIVEN AWAY

For Next 30 Days Only
We will mail out the valuable Poultry Book FREE. Tells you all about poultry, how to make big money with poultry and eggs; contains colored plate of fowls in their natural colors. Send 10c for mailing and postage.

John Bauscher, Jr., Box 32, Freeport, Ill.

IT DOESN'T WARP

or twist—Sure Hatch Incubator. Mel-low, regular heat from copper tank. No disappointment. Free Catalogue. H-17, Sure Hatch Incubator Co., Clay Center, Neb., Indianapolis, Ind.

BIG SONG BARGAIN

57 NEW SONGS—(all the latest) and 15 pieces of MUSIC—the lot, 10 cents. 30 Songs and 10 pieces of Music only 20 cts. Big Catalog—list of 2000 Songs and a 14K gold ring, FREE with either of the above lots.

HAMLIN & CO.
651 Carroll Ave., Dept. M3, CHICAGO.

fetching me bread and cheese and salad and cold meat, and I took the plates from her hands to set them on the table, but I can not say that she attended to my wants with the pretty solicitude that Miss Dicey had shown in my prison, yet her manner was distinctly more gracious toward me than it had been the night before. She really seemed anxious to fortify me for the journey. She spoke regretfully of the heat I would find in the cars; she seemed anxious that my tea should be strong enough. Then she sat opposite me, silent and pensive, her eyes on the floor. The strange golden light through the shades made a glory on her hair. I had the opportunity to look at her face and wonder.

The hour was too short. All too soon Miss Houghton and Miss Dicey came in nervously to warn me that it was time for me to depart. Miss Dicey gave me the address of the apartment and the keys that should admit me.

"You must go in softly," she warned me. "If Stepanov sees you before you see him—he is likely to jump on you."

Miss Halliburton smiled faintly and swept me with a look from head to foot.

"I think Mr. Silsbee will probably hold his own," she observed quietly.

They all shook hands with me, urgently recommending now Josh, now Stepanov, to my care. I promised to telegraph them at the earliest possible moment.

"I shall see you again," I said to my chief.

"Oh, of course," she returned in a cool little voice; but a delicate pink rose to her face and I was content to look away.

I had really more than time enough to make my train. As the day was hot, I walked very slowly to the station. There, just as I was about to step into the waiting-room I saw, by the tail of my eye, a little dog, who slipped nimbly round the nearest corner. He looked so much like Josh that I gave immediate chase; for to be assured the dog was not packed up with the silver was enough to make this very disagreeable journey into town unnecessary.

The dog turned out to be Josh's brother; not that he looked so much like him when I finally caught up with him, but I knew the blood of the fatal touch he had upon my affairs. In following him back into the street and across it, I lost about thirty seconds more than I counted on, and I dashed back to the platform to see my train move out. My mortification may be imagined.

There was nothing for it but to take the local train which left fifteen minutes later and took nearly three times as long to reach the city. The manly thing, I suppose, would have been for me to go back to the Daughters of Desperation and confess my failure, but I dared not. I meekly endured the penance of the local and spent a weary, hot, and anxious afternoon.

(TO BE CONCLUDED)

□ □

THE MECHANICAL JONAH

(Continued from Page 20)

"Well, we drew the Steam Man for many a mile, an' the consarned thing wouldn't work half the time, from gettin' out of order, an' was allers the first thing out of town and the last in. The Mechanical Jonah, as we got to calling it, weighed a heap, and when it wasn't stuck in the mud or through a bridge, it was breaking everybody's back a settin' it up, except the inventor's. All he ever did was to boss the job an' holler. Talk about your cranks! his head was so full of wheels there wasn't room for them to go round. Going West we played some of the lake towns, an' then shipped to Chicago by boat. 'Bout half-way across wan of them sudden storms come up, an' come mighty high sinkin' the whole caboodle of us. I an' Cass weren't skeered a little bit, but it was rough enough to make the Mechanical Jonah seasick. Things got so bad that the Captain would have given a month's wages to have been ashore, and the worst man in the crew was thinking up the child's prayer his mother taught him. Waves! the spray hit the sky at every lash, an' says Cass to me, 'Craw, if the gale don't 'bate, we'll have to lighten ship.' I knew that something would have to go if there wasn't a change for the better, an' suggested that the first thing to put over the side was the inventor. The manager was agreed, an' thort it would be a good idea to use the Mechanical Jonah for an anchor to keep him from coming up again. As it was, we had to let seat, plank, and up-rights go, and barely managed to swim through. For the rest of that season we kept to the road, and the sight of water even in a glass made the company qualmish. Costello wanted to do a bit of river territory, but the performers kicked so that the manager sed, sez he: 'Craw, I'd rather take them out on the prairies and use them for targets for the Indians to practice on.'

"After Chicago we made a bee line west, most as straight as you could draw a line on a map. When we did get out in the Injun regions, we had more to fear from the renegades and the black sheep that had emigrated from the East than from the reds. Cass rix the price of admission to a dollar a go when we got to the border, and there was no half price from a skercity of young uns. Wimmen folks were so skerce that the living skeleton gal and the fat woman had proposals of marriage at every town, but they couldn't be induced to hitch, because they were coining money selling their photographs. One loon told the fat woman that she was an angel. Angel! it was all that she could do to walk, and as for flying, that was an impossibility. We did lose the Circassian gal; she married a gold-miner—but the chap did the square thing with Cass and bought off her engagement. The places we struck were wide open, an' if my literary

X-Radium Heater

Biggest Little Thing on Earth
Costs Nothing to Operate Lasts a Lifetime

The necessity in every home. Keeps the coffee, soup, vegetables, puddings, pastry, etc., hot for hours. Not a cooker, nothing like a cooking-dish, but a most useful and convenient little heater.

MRS. C. A. BROWNELL, 232 Twenty-fourth St., Detroit, writes: "The X-Radium Heater is far beyond expectations and grows more useful every day."

FREE TRIAL

We will, on request, deliver an X-Radium Heater, transportation paid, to anyone east of the Missouri River. Try it for ten days; if satisfactory, send us $2.50, if not satisfactory, notify us and we will take it away. You have no risk.

NOVELTY MFG. CO., Dept. K
Jackson, Mich., U. S. A.

NOTE: The dealer is authorized to give you the X-Radium Heater on ten days' free trial, and we prefer orders to go to dealers. However, if your dealer cannot supply you with an X-Radium Heater, send direct to us as above.

NOVELTY MFG. CO., Dept. K, Jackson, Mich., U. S. A.

$8.00 OUTFIT FREE

- A Denslip black, Derby or Fedora Hat . . . $2.50
- A pair of stylish Lane Shoes, the new queen hat . . . 2.50
- A Female Shirt, detachable Collar and Cuffs . . . 1.25
- A Neat Silk Four-in-hand Necktie or Bow . . . .50
- A pair of fancy Web Elastic Suspenders . . . .50
- A Superior Silk Handkerchief . . . .50
- A pair of fancy Little Thread Socks . . . .50

Thousands of American citizens pay cash for this . . . $8.00 of cloth, underwear, black and tan for size of Hat, Shirt, Shoes and Socks. Send no money but write to-day to

GENTS' COMPLETE OUTFITTING CO.
Dept. 40, 542 Market St. CHICAGO
REFERENCE: First National Bank, Chicago.
Capital and Surplus, $12,000,000.

Skin Diseases

Eczema, Salt Rheum, Pimples, Ringworm, Itch, Acne or other skin troubles, can be promptly cured by

Hydrozone

Hydrozone is endorsed by leading physicians. It is absolutely harmless, yet most powerful healing agent. Hydrozone destroys parasites which cause these diseases. Take no substitute and see that every bottle bears my signature.

Trial Size, 25 Cents
At Druggists or by mail, from

Prof. Charles H. Burt 59 H Prince Street
New York

FREE Booklet on the rational treatment of Diseases sent free.

Learn to Be a Nurse

No other profession known to woman's calling offers as many advantages and attractive features as that of a trained nurse.

Do You Want to be Independent?
Do You Want to Better Your Condition?

If you do, then write to me to-day for my booklet which fully explains my method of positively and successfully graduating you as a thorough trained nurse. The demand for Trained Nurses is large—the work pleasant and more profitable than any other profession open to women. Start at once taking my course.

Write for my FREE booklet and personal letter of advice to-day.
Mrs. Harriet Tucker, Professional Nurse, 30 years practical experience, Box 1253, Milwaukee, Wis.

FOOTBALL POKER

The Greatest Game Out
Mimic Football Played with Cards
Easy to Learn—Easy to Play
Fun for Two—Fun for a Crowd

A real game of Football played on a paper "gridiron" and minus broken bones. Price 50 cents at book dealers, or from us post-paid. Sample chart of game free. Young and old, teachers, college students, society—everybody is playing Football-Poker.

"All Harvard plays Football-Poker—now the rage with students."
—Chicago Tribune.
"An interesting and instructive game."
—Detroit Record, Michigan.
THE REILLY & BRITTON CO., 86 Adams St., CHICAGO, ILL.

The Reginaphone speaks for itself

I am the Reginaphone. That means that I can do two things well: I can talk and I can play. I am a music box or a talking machine at will. I am ready to sing or to play. The one great advantage in buying me is that you get both machines together at a considerably lower price than either would cost separately. As a music box I am the best music box made. You know what the Regina is. As a talking machine I have the advantage of the motor which turns the discs of the Regina to turn the records for me when I talk. I will play any flat talking machine record, whether Victor, Columbia or Zonophone, from 7 to 14 inches, and the 12-inch Regina Music Box record. Ask your nearest dealer to show me to you. I am sold for cash or on the easy payment plan, as you prefer. If you want to know more about me, write to

Regina Music Box Company
40 East 22nd Street, New York
240 Wabash Avenue, Chicago

"THIS IS WOMAN'S ERA,"

says an eminent writer. Woman's advancement has added new responsibilities to the burdens Nature has already imposed upon her. The deep lines that furrow the once beautiful face cannot be rubbed out with lotions or cosmetics. The glory and strength of radiant womanhood must be restored from within. As a re-builder and revitalizer, perfectly adapted to her needs, she can find nothing that will equal

Pabst Extract

The "Best" Tonic, a most palatable combination of the liquid life of barley-malt and hops. It is a nutritive tonic, not a stimulant, a food that makes flesh and blood, bringing roses to the cheek and plumpness to the wasted form, while soothing the fretted nerves like a mother's kiss. Sold by all druggists.

Bottle Free. Pabst Extract Dept., Milwaukee, Wis.

friend over there was to write them up, he'd have to print the descriptions in red ink on yellow paper, an' perfume the sheets with sulphur. On the hull, we managed to get 'long tollerable, an' even when we couldn't get the Steam Man up an' operatin', there wasn't so much kicking as you'd naturally expect. To tell the truth, the people were just dying to see anything for a show, an' would have stood Red Schoolhouse Bell Ringers or a Panorama of Europe. It was right there that I suggested that Dan dump the Mechanical Jonah an' let the Inventor go, but he wouldn't hear to it.

"We made a Sunday drive from one mining camp to another an' got in early, and we hadn't more than got set up than the Inventor started in to put the Steam Man together, an' for a wonder, got it to workin' in good shape, an' a-walkin' aroun' to beat the dence. Cass, he come in the tent an' tuk a look at the thing an' hoped that it would go as well the next day. An' then he called me off to one side, an' says he to me, sez he, 'Craw, they are alarmin' here in the town 'bout Injuns, an' tellin' as how the Sioux are on the war trail.'"

"Sioux Indians," suggested the writer. "These weren't no Zoo Indians, they were the real Sioux's. S-i-o-u-x, Sioux, wild as they make them, and looking for blood. I an' Cass an' the boss hostler held a convention, an' we all agreed that our stock of ring and road horses would be a temptation to the reds, and that it would be advisable to keep a guard on the watch an' lay low. The town was the last that was made in that direction, and it was called Finis—a feller that got through college before serving out his sentence named it."

"Happy thought!" exclaimed the circus combiner of alliterative adjectives.

"Cass thought it would be a good idea if the Injuns did come, then they would stop killing each other and fight Injuns. Dan was comical at times when he wasn't playing clown. You fellers, who've never seen anything but caged Injuns in a Wild West Show know as little about the real article as the man does who carves a cigar-store sign. Gee whizz! Cass had just looked at

SEND NO MONEY

We want you to examine and try on our $10.00 All Wool Tailor Made Suits before paying out one cent, and know for yourself that our suits are strictly All Wool, properly tailored and perfect fitting. You will find them as good in every respect as suits you have paid $25.00 to $35.00 for.

10,000 Pair of $5.00 Tailor Made Trousers FREE with the first 10,000 orders. OUR OFFER: Providing you will agree to hand 10 envelopes containing our All Wool Suit and Trousers samples, catalogue, tape measure and Special Offer to ten men who in your judgment would be likely to buy clothing from us on our liberal offer, we will give you a pair of our regular $5 Tailor Made Trousers (our pattern you may select from our samples).

FREE

with one of our $10 ALL WOOL TAILOR MADE SUITS.

We make your suit and trousers exactly as ordered and send them to your express office for you to examine and try on. If you find them both as offered, pay the express agent $10 and the express charges, and both the All Wool Suit and the extra pair of $5 Trousers are yours.

The ten envelopes you are to distribute will be sent in the box with your suit. Read this offer over again carefully, then write today for free samples of our $10 Suits, (including Clay Wornes, Tibets, Serges, Casimeres in Black, Blue, Brown, Gray and Handsome Mixtures) also separate Trousers samples, Catalogue, instructions for taking measurements and Special Offer.

Remember we run all the risk. References: 310 Wabash Avenue State Bank, Chicago. Capital Stock $100,000.

O. T. MOSES & CO., 222 Moses Bldg., Chicago

Our catalog proves by actual results that with THE HARDIE spraying outfit you can reap dollars from your orchard where only cents were had before. We send it free for the asking.

Hook-Hardie Co., 61 Main St., Watford, Mich.

10 PACKAGES 10c.
Vegetable Seeds
Lettuce, Beet, Onion, Cucumber, Cabbage, Carrot, Squash, Melon, Radish, Turnip, enough for your garden only 10 cents. Catalogue Free.
1-4 lb. Best Mixed Sweet Peas 10c.
All the above mailed postpaid for 15 cents in silver or eight two-cent stamps to any address.
E. C. HOLMES SEED CO. Medford, Mass.

Union-Made Cigars by Mail
We have cut loose from jobbers and sell our cigars direct to smokers, giving them the advantage of all between profits. Factory is strictly a Union concern, employing highest skilled labor and using nothing but old, well cured and finely blended tobacco.
We are sure that a trial of our cigars will make you a permanent customer, and will send you a sample box of 12, charges prepaid, for 50 cents, or 25 for $1.00.
Grosvenor Cigar Co., P. O. Box 187, Dept. E, Lancaster, Pa.

Fresh Laid Eggs
WE HAVE A PLAN by which we are supplying hundreds of thousands of families with fresh laid eggs delivered at the door at little more than the cost of stale, cold storage eggs. You don't know how delicious eggs can be until you have used "Clover Brand Eggs" fresh from healthy, grain fed fowls. Booklet and Plan FREE.
CLOVER BRAND EGG CO., 21 Clover St., JONIA, MICH.

$9,000 Poultry Catalog
40 Chickens, Turkeys, Geese, Ducks, Chicks, Pheasants and eggs cheap. 100 grand pictures, 75 house plans. We make hens lay, raise ducks, etc. Send 10 cts. for mailing catalog. Incubator 30 days free trial.
J. B. Brabson Jr. & Co., Box 12 Delavan, Wis.

$3 a Day.
Send us your address and we will show you how to earn $3 a day absolutely sure; we furnish the work and teach you free, you work in the locality where you live. Send us your address and we will explain the business fully; remember we guarantee that you can earn $3 for every day's work. Write at once.
ROYAL MANUFACTURING CO., Box 1168, Detroit, Mich.

GOOD RESULTS
To be absolutely sure about it use the RELIABLE INCUBATORS & BROODERS. If the eggs are right, you can't make a mistake. Just follow instructions—the RELIABLE will do the rest. Our 20th Century Poultry Book, mailed for 10c, tells all about it and what you should know. We have 116 years of thoroughbred poultry. RELIABLE INCUBATOR & BROODER CO., Box B-128, Quincy, Ill.

PETALUMA INCUBATORS
and Brooders are the oldest and most reliable machines on the market to-day. Perfectly automatic and sure. Catalogue FREE.
PETALUMA INCUBATOR COMPANY
Box 107, Petaluma, Cal. Box 107, Indianapolis, Ind.

Be Your Own Boss!
MANY MAKE $2,000.00 A YEAR
You have the same chance. Start a Mail Order Business at home. We tell you how. Money coming in daily. Enormous profits. Everything furnished. Write at once for our "Starter" and FREE particulars.
C. W. KROGER CO., 135 Washington Street, Chicago, Ill.

WE WANT
100 names for our Starter. Every name will send you FREE. Agents wanted. We will also get 100 different magazine subscriptions. We want a million names. Send YOUR NAME and we will send you 10 reliable and useful products. Write today. Send the money or no money.
HAMIL & CO., 631 Carroll Avenue, Dept. 23, CHICAGO

All over the civilized world
THE IMPROVED BOSTON GARTER
IS KNOWN and WORN
Every Pair Warranted
The Name is stamped on every loop
The Velvet Grip CUSHION BUTTON CLASP
Lies flat to the leg—never Slips, Tears nor Unfastens
ALWAYS EASY
Lies flat to the leg—never Slips, Tears nor Unfastens
Send 50c. for Silk, 25c. for Cotton, Sample Pair.
Geo. Frost Co., Makers, Boston, Mass., U. S. A.
REFUSE ALL SUBSTITUTES

Bourse
STOCK OR EXCHANGE
"Sold!"
The Game of 'Change
A Game Without Rules
Bourse is the best new game of the year.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.
To control the market in corn, wheat, beef, stocks, or some other commodity is the object of the player—the first to effect a corner wins. Noisy and exciting. Eighty beautifully engraved cards.
Price 50 Cents
of your dealer, or sent direct on receipt of price. Your money back if you want it.
Write for sample card and instructions—Free.
FINCH CARD COMPANY
129 Bardick St., Kalamazoo, Mich.
Box 172, Toronto, Ontario.
NOTE: Bourse is the ORIGINAL GAME OF 'CHANGE. All others are infringing imitations.

50¢ for a Good MEN'S HAT by Mail
Choice of these crush hats sent postpaid on receipt of 50 Cents in cash, postal order or stamps. Money back if not satisfactory. References: Mr. Morris Bank of N. Y. City. As large manufacturers, we can offer these men's hats at 50c.—they are worth much more. We sell these at 50c. to introduce our hats in every town in this country. Send for catalog.
MEN'S HAT, Style A. In soft, rough fabric. Colors: Gray, Brown and Black.
MEN'S HAT, Style B. In smooth fabric. Colors: Black, Brown and Steel.
THE GUARANTEE CO., 3d Ave & 127th St N.Y. City
HAT MANUFACTURING DEPARTMENT

THE WORLD'S HEADQUARTERS FOR ELECTRIC NOVELTIES and SUPPLIES
If It's Electric We Have It. We Underwrite All.
33 Electric Hand Lamps
Send for free book. Agents wanted.
OHIO ELECTRIC WORKS, Cleveland, Ohio

GREGORY'S SEEDS
Our catalogue gives special instructions for the most successful cultivation of each class of vegetables.
GREGORY'S SEEDS
are always safe. They sell the purest grass and clover seed in the United States. Try it.
J. J. H. GREGORY & SON, Marblehead, Mass.

20 YEAR GUARANTEE
Goes with the old original Prairie State Incubators and Brooders. U. S. Government uses them exclusively. Have won 321 first prizes. Our free catalog interests poultry raisers. Send for it.
PRAIRIE STATE INCUBATOR CO., Homer City, Pa.

30 Days Free
Why buy a "big in a pot" when you can get the ROYAL INCUBATOR on 30 Days Free Trial. Absolutely self-regulating. Try it and keep it only if you like it. Send for catalog and free trial plan. With poultry paper one year two cents.
Royal Inc. Co., Dept. 513, Des Moines, Ia.

his ticker—real gold set in diamonds and weighed a pound—and sed 'Twelve,' when the Sioux that had surrounded the town an' us set up a yelling, an' much as a thousand of them set on to us an' the settlement, an' promised to make an end of Finis an' us, too. Oh, they weren't havin' it all their way, for the Finisers were putting up a game fight an' the circus weren't slow. We had all our horses under the big top, an' the tent kinder confounded them, but the man who did the business was the Inventor. He walked the Steam Man out of the canvas an' started the Mechanical Jonah for the reds. The machine worked to perfection and was fired up to the very limit. Smoke was steaming from its hat with sparks a-flyin', an' the eyes were a blaze of flames. We were in a sort of hollow or pitch of ground, an' all the Injuns surrounding saw the unearthly monster an' halted, stopped yellin', an' faser-nated-like, looked! an' looked! an' looked! Reckon the Finisers were about as skooked as the reds. Right then sunthin' happened to the Mechanical Jonah that settled the whole business, an' Cass an' I didn't stop laughin' on account of it for the rest of the season. The Steam Man bust his boiler, an' the explosion shook the town like an earthquake an' blowed the consarned Mechanical Jonah to fenders. The Injuns dug out for all they were worth, an' Finis was saved, an' so was the show. The Inventor married the fat woman, 'cordin'ly had no cause to mourn his loss, an' lived happy ever afterward. We all wished him joy, and the happy man said he didn't know of any one that had more of it—six hundred pounds if there was an ounce. When the Finisers heard of the marriage they expressed their grattytude an' a gold brick. The grattytudin' was done in the shape of resolutions, an' Wells Fargo did the rest."

Burnett's Vanilla Extract
Is the best. The grocers know it. Insist on having Burnett's. It is for your food. Pure and wholesome.—Ad.
Many Appetizing Dishes
can be made deliciously and nutritiously by the use of Burnett's Sterilized Brand Evaporated Cream, which is not only superior to raw cream but has the merit of being preserved and sterilized, thus keeping perfectly for an indefinite period. Burnett's Condensed Milk Co., proprietors.—Ad.

DRAWING ENGINEERING

College Preparatory

Mechanical Electrical Stationary

ARCHITECTURE

Civil Sanitary Textile

TELEPHONY

The College Preparatory course practically covers the work of the Scientific Academy of Armour Institute of Technology and is accepted as fulfilling the requirements for entrance to the College of Engineering of that institution.

Illustrated 200 page quarterly Bulletin giving full outlines of our 60 different correspondence courses in Electrical, Mechanical, Civil, Stationary, Marine, Locomotive Engineering; Architecture, Mechanical and Perspective Drawing, Pen and Ink Rendering, Structural Drafting, Telegraphy, Telephony and Textiles including Knitting, Cotton and Woolen Cloth Manufacturing, etc., will be sent free on request.

HUNDREDS of aspiring young and middle aged men in all walks of life know what the instruction of the American School of Correspondence is. Other hundreds need just such instruction to enable them to get on in life. To bring to the attention of draftsmen, engineers, architects, teachers and others interested in drawing, the standard of our instruction, we have compiled, from the regular instruction papers in our drawing courses, a practical treatise under the title of

Compendium of Drawing

in
Two Volumes—
900 Pages
1000 Illustrations including full page drawings, sections, diagrams and folding plates.

BY EXPRESS (PREPAID)

$3.00

Per Volume

both volumes $5.00; or two monthly payments of $3.00 each.

Money refunded if not satisfactory

Size of Page
7x10 in.
FULLY INDEXED

Bound in green buckram.

On receipt of this amount (Address Room 28L) and the names of two persons who would be benefited by our courses, the books will be sent express prepaid with the privilege of returning within 10 days if not satisfactory and money refunded. The regular examination questions of the School are bound into each volume to test the readers' knowledge.

PARTIAL TABLE OF CONTENTS

Part I

Mechanical Drawing by Prof. E. Kenison, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Boston.—Instruments and Materials, Geometrical Drawing, Projections, Line Shading and Lettering, Blue Printing, etc.

Shades and Shadows by Prof. H. W. Gardner, Mass. Inst. of Tech.—Principles and Notation, Coordinate Planes, Ground Line, Problems, Short Methods, Full-page Rendered Examples, etc.

Pen and Ink Rendering by D. A. Gregg, Massachusetts Institute of Technology.—Values, Accents, Faults, Rendering by Shadows Only, Pencil Work, Suggestions, Examples, etc.

Perspective Drawing by Prof. W. A. Lawrence, Mass. Inst. of Tech.—Principles, Station Point, Vanishing Points, Ground Line, Horizon, Line of Measures, Perspective Plan, One Point Perspective, Curves, Distortion, etc.

Architectural Lettering by F. C. Brown, Architect, Boston.—Study of Old Examples, Forms, Proportions, Composition, Spacing, Examples Greek, Roman, Gothic, Renaissance, and Office Lettering, etc.

Part II

Working Drawings by Prof. W. H. James, Mass. Inst. of Tech. and Prof. C. L. Griffin.—Threads, Bolts, Nuts, Scale and Assembly Drawings, Blue Printing, Pencil Layouts, Working Drawings, Cost, Dimensions, Lettering, Order Sheets, etc.

Mechanism by Prof. W. H. James, Massachusetts Institute of Technology.—Revolving Bodies: Disc and Roller, Tight and Loose Pulleys, Clutches, Screws, Levers, Cams, Link-work, Quick Return Motions, Gears: Velocity Ratios, Trains, etc.

Machine Design by Prof. C. L. Griffin, formerly Prof. of Machine Design Pa. State College.—Theoretical and Commercial Considerations, Original Design, Handbooks, Data, Calculations, Notes, Records, Forces, Friction, Lubrication, Transmission, Speed Ratio, Power, Load, Layout, etc.

Sheet Metal Pattern Drafting and Tinsmithing by Wm. Neubecker, New York Trade School.—Construction, Tools, Intersections, Developments, Irregular Shapes, Triangulation, Approximate Developments, Practical Shop Problems, etc.

A 300 Page Book on Electricity

New enlarged edition.
First edition exhausted in two weeks.

To demonstrate the standard, scope and methods of the American School of Correspondence in teaching Engineering, by mail, we have bound up four representative instruction papers in our Electrical Engineering course under the title of

Practical Lessons in Electricity

and will send one copy, express prepaid, to every reader of COLLIER'S who sends us $1.35 and the names of two persons whom he knows to be interested in the subjects we teach, designating the subject. (Address Room 28L.)

The book is invaluable to insurance men, as the chapter on wiring covers fully the requirements of the National Board of Underwriters; physicians and dentists find it full of information regarding the use of Electricity in their professional work; patent attorneys, teachers, owners of electric launches and automobiles find it a useful manual for ready reference.

THE SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN says:

"Practical Lessons in Electricity" consists essentially of four parts, all distinguished by a common-sense treatment of a subject, which, particularly in its elementary conceptions, is apt to confuse the average reader not a little. Prof. Crocker's wide experience as a teacher is apparent in the division on storage batteries. That portion of the work is characterized by a lucidity of treatment which is unfortunately not often found in books upon so recondite a subject. Mr. Cushing's division on electrical wiring may be regarded as an epitome of his well-known work on standard wiring—a simple, condensed account of what a fairly advanced student ought to know of this particular branch of applied electricity. Not the least valuable part of the book to the reader is a series of examination papers pertaining to the subjects treated."

Partial List of Subjects embraced:

STORAGE BATTERIES (by Prof. F. B. Crocker, Columbia University): Types; General Principles; Chemical Action; Data Sheets; Edison Storage Battery; Charging; Efficiency; Troubles and Remedies; Testing; Portable Batteries for Automobiles and Boats; etc.

ELECTRIC WIRING (by H. C. Cushing, Jr., author of Standard Wiring): Dynamo Installation; The Switch Board; Motor Installation; Tables; Transformers; Three-Wire System; Inside Wiring; Arc Light Wiring; Conduit Work; Arc and Incandescent Systems; etc.

ELECTRIC CURRENT (by L. K. Sager, S. B.): Volt, Ampere, Ohm; Resistance; Conductivity; Tables; Circuits; Grouping of Cells; Quantity; Energy; Power; Coulomb; Joules; Watt; etc.

ELEMENTS OF ELECTRICITY (by L. K. Sager, S. B.): Experiments with Magnets; Conductors and Insulation; Leyden Jar; Voltaic Cell; Electromagnets; Induction Coil; Electrotyping and Electroplating; The Telephone; The Telegraph; etc.

THE TECHNICAL WORLD is a monthly illustrated journal devoted to the interests of the technical worker and the practical business man and takes up the hundred and one engineering problems constantly arising. Its articles are written for the layman as well as the Engineer, and cover every branch of engineering from electricity to plumbing. During the year eminent authorities will contribute articles on Mechanical, Marine, Locomotive, Civil, Stationary and Sanitary Engineering, Architecture, Drawing, The Telephone, The Telegraph, etc. Each number contains a MONTHLY REVIEW of the leading articles in the American and English journals. These reviews are written by specialists and enable the reader to keep informed on the latest and best in science and invention. Subscribers are offered the advantages of professional advice from the instruction staff and editors of the American School of Correspondence through the Consulting Department of the Magazine.

The April Issue will include

The Present Status of the Submarine in the United States
By ROBT. G. SKERRET, Washington, D. C.

Long Distance Power Transmission
By HENRI F. CHADWICK, S. B.

The Trans-Siberian Railway—Pekin to St. Petersburg
By ALFRED S. JOHNSON, Ph. D.

The Making of a Captain of Industry
By HENRY M. HYDE
and many other articles of timely interest.

SPECIAL CLUBBING OFFER

One year's subscription to THE TECHNICAL WORLD (price $2.00 per year) and One copy of PRACTICAL LESSONS IN ELECTRICITY (price $1.35)
Both for $2.00 if ordered before June 1st. $3.35

American School of Correspondence

CHICAGO, ILL.

Mention Collier's

Note the "K. B." Shoulder and build construction of coat.

The Fine Clothes "Idea"

Does not necessarily mean the paying of a large sum to a merchant tailor. Kohn Brothers Fine Clothes for Men, Ready-to-Wear, are equal in every way to the finest merchant tailored garment, and cost about one-half the money. All Coats made with the "K. B." shoulder. Ask for clothing with THIS shoulder, be sure to look for our label.

We illustrate on this page, the West Point, a suit for Young Men, from $10.00 to $25.00. Write for illustrated booklet "The Clothes A Man Should Wear" No. 5.

KOHN BROTHERS CHICAGO

SHETLAND PONIES GIVEN AWAY

Everybody should send for my 1904 Seed Catalogue and see how Shetland Ponies can be had free. Catalogue full of seeds, plants, bulbs, flowers. Special Offers, 15 Breeds Poultry; colored plates; hundreds of illustrations and 10c cash coupon, worth 10c to all, for only $6. Send for it to-day.

F. B. MILLS, Seedman, Box 101, Roshill, N. Y.

Rider Agents Wanted

One in each town to ride and exhibit a sample bicycle. Write for special offer. Highest Grade 1904 Models $8.75 to $17. Counter Display, Reddish Brown Painted Proof Tires and best equipment. 1900 and 1901 Models Best Makes $7 to $12. 500 SECOND-HAND WHEELS All makes and Models good as new. $3 to $8. Great factory clearing sale at half factory cost. We ship on approval without a cent deposit and allow 10 DAYS FREE TRIAL on every bicycle. Any wheel not satisfactory returned at our expense.

EARN A BICYCLE taking orders from a sample wheel furnished by us. Our agents make large profits. Write for our catalogue and our special offer. MEAD CYCLE CO., Dept. 53-F, CHICAGO

THE DIFFERENT WHEEL

TO BE UP TO DATE IN THE SURVIVAL OF THE FITTEST

SEND FOR 1904 CATALOGUE

MIAMI CYCLE & MFG. CO. MIDDLETOWN, O. U.S.A.

NOW DEPOSITED IN THE BANK

$75,000.00

IN CASH GIVEN AWAY

To arouse interest in, and to advertise the GREAT ST. LOUIS WORLD'S FAIR, this enormous sum will be distributed. Full information will be sent you ABSOLUTELY FREE. Just send your name and address on a postal card and we will send you full particulars.

World's Fair Contest Co.
108 N. 8th Street
St. Louis, Mo.

HOT-WATER HEATED

$273

This Booklet, full of information (free), explains Andrews' System of Hot Water Heating (old or new houses); also Andrews' Mail-Order Method. Each system is designed by experts, all work done at the factory; shipped complete, ready to erect. No special skill required to erect. Specifications and working plans submitted before contract is made.

Plans for Piping $2.00 Estimates free; send plans or rough sketch to 22 GLOBE BUILDING, Minneapolis, Minn.

ANDREWS HEATING CO.

You Can Make $3 to $10

a day selling glasses. Our $1.00 FREE EYE BOOK tells how. We give complete instructions for testing eyes, fitting glasses, and furnish all goods. Write for our book and letters from some of our successful representatives.

JACKSONIAN OPTICAL COLLEGE, Chartered
62 College Building, Jackson, Michigan

Patents, Trade Marks, COPYRIGHTS, etc.,

MUNN & CO., Solicitors of Patents.

Office of the SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN
361 Broadway, New York.
Branch Office: 635 F St., Washington, D. C.
Hand-book sent Free on Application.

A MILLION-POWER SUN
By GARRETT P. SERVISS

THE occasional tendency of the figures used in astronomy to strain the faith, if not the imagination, of the untechnical reader almost to the breaking point, is illustrated by a recent calculation by Mr. J. E. Gore of the Royal Astronomical Society, concerning the probable mass of what, as far as we know at present, may be regarded as the greatest body in the universe—the star Canopus.

The magnitude of the conception which we are required to form in this case so far transcends the ordinary exercises of the imagination that it can only be approached step by step, as one ascends a mountain by first climbing its foothills and its lower buttresses. Even the first step here is one from which some minds recoil.

In estimating the relative magnitudes of celestial bodies, the first term of comparison is necessarily the earth. Because we dwell upon the earth we are able to get something like a realizing sense of its actual size. We can go round it in various directions, and can apply a magnified foot-rule to it, thus obtaining by direct means the data for a mental picture of a globe more than 25,000 miles in circumference. Yet all do not find it easy to form such a picture and hold it before the mind's eye. It looks more or less hazy and ill-defined in outline, because of the depth of the perspective.

But, assuming that you have in your mind a clear picture of the earth as an astronomical body hanging in space, first steady yourself by confidently grasping the hand of astronomy, and then, letting the earth go as after all an inconsiderable trifle, gaze onward into the far mightier perspective in the midst of which hangs the sun, a body more than a million times larger than the earth.

There are persons, not lacking education, who flatly refuse to believe this. They prefer to think that astronomers have made some mistake, or committed some oversight, rather than accept the statement that the sun, which does not look very large in the sky—certainly no larger than the moon—is equal in bulk to more than a million earths. Yet, of course, the fact is as incontestable as any known to science. There is no guesswork about it.

When you have succeeded, then, in forming a definite mental picture of the great globe of the sun, you are ready for the final flight of the imagination, which Mr. Gore's calculation, based upon authentic astronomical data, demands that you make if you hope to understand the scale on which this universe is built. These ten words sketch the magnitude of the conception now required of you: Canopus is a million times more massive than the sun!

As much as the sun exceeds the earth, so much Canopus exceeds the sun. In each case the multiplier is a million. A single unit stands for the earth; a million units represent the sun; a million times a million units denote Canopus. Yet Canopus is also a sun; at least we do not know what else to call it. But what a sun!

It will be observed that the comparison between the sun and the earth is based on their relative size, or volume, while for the sun and Canopus it relates to their mass, or quantity of matter. This, however, does not essentially affect the stated inequality. Another term for mass, in everyday life, is weight. We say that two bodies which weigh the same are equal in mass. It follows, then, that Canopus placed in one scale of a balance would lift a million suns piled together in the other scale. If the mean density of Canopus is greater than the mean density of the sun, the former may not be a million times larger than the latter. But the probability is that there is no great difference of density, and that we may say, indifferently, that Canopus exceeds the sun a million times in mass, or in size.

Fortunate for us that it is not near by! If the earth were as near to that tremendous star as it is to the sun—that is to say, within about 93,000,000 miles of its centre—this solid globe could not endure a minute. At that distance the blazing orb of Canopus would seem to fill a whole quarter of the heavens, and the light and heat poured upon us would be ten thousand times more intense than the present radiation of the sun. The earth would melt and vaporize like a snowflake sucked into the open door of a furnace.

The gravitative or attractive power of a globe a million times as massive as the sun puts another strain upon the imagination. That power would be sufficient to sway a great system of such bodies as our sun, holding and governing them in orbits like so many insignificant planets or satellites. Fallen, indeed, would be the glory and majesty of the sun if he should venture within the grasp of Canopus!

If a system of planets could exist as near to Canopus as the sun's planets are to him, their speed of revolution in their orbits would be truly frightful. The earth, in such a situation, would be compelled to travel almost 10,000 miles every second, and the length of the year would be reduced from 365 days to less than nine hours. Even stately Jupiter would speed round his entire course, which now occupies almost twelve years, in about four days.

SEND NO MONEY

We cut and make to your individual order, any Suit or Skirt, shown in our handsome Spring catalogue, from your choice of our large assortment of All Wool Suitings and Skirtings without your paying out one cent until after you have examined and tried them on and know for yourself that they FIT and are BARGAINS.

5000 Handsome $3.50
Pure Jap Silk Waists
FREE
with the first 5000 suit orders from this advertisement.

Our Offer:
We will give this handsome $3.50 White Waist, warranted pure Jap Silk and to wash without injuring, FREE with any one of our Tailor Made suits you order, providing you will agree to hand 10 catalogues and assortment of samples to 10 ladies who in your judgment would be likely to take a advantage of our Made-to-Order Suit and Skirt Offers.

We cut and make your suit exactly as ordered, and send it and the Extra Jap Silk Waist to your express office for you to examine and try on. If it fits and is perfectly satisfactory, pay the express agent the regular price of the suit only, and the express charges, and both the Suit and Extra Jap Silk Waist will be yours. The 10 catalogues and samples will be in the box with your suit.

Write today for full line of Free Samples and our handsome Spring Fashion Catalogue, showing Suits that we make to order for $5.00 to $35.00; Skirts we make to order for $4.00 to $15.00; Silk Skirts that we make to order for $5.75 to $15.00; and Silk Jackets that we make to order from $13.50 to $24.00. Also instructions for taking measurements and special offer.

Remember, we take all the risk.
Reference: Milwaukee Ave. State Bank, Chicago.
Capital Stock $100,000.

O. T. NOSES & CO., 222 Noses Bldg., Chicago

Vose Pianos

Established in 1837

They occupy an unassailable position among the pianos of the world because They Excel in Artistic Quality and in exclusive features that give distinctiveness and value.

By our easy payment plan, every family in moderate circumstances can own a VOSE piano. We allow a liberal price for old instruments in exchange, and deliver the piano in your house free of expense. You can deal with us at a distant point the same as in Boston.

Send for catalogue and full information.

VOSE & SONS PIANO CO.
160 Boylston Street, Boston

PATENT SECURED
Or Fee Returned

Free opinion as to patentability. Send for Guide Book and What to Invent, first publications issued for free distribution. Protected by an advertised free in Patent Record, Eastern City East.

EVANS, WILKINS & CO., 605 F St., Washington, D. C.

U. S. A. Liquid Pistol

Will stop the most vicious dog (or man) without permanent injury. Perfectly safe to carry without danger of leakage. Fires and recharges by pulling the trigger. Loads from any liquid. No cartridges required. Over 10 shots in one loading. All dealers, or by mail, 50c. Rubber covered holster 5c. extra.

PARKER, STARKS & SUTTON, 224 South St., New York, U.S.A.

Blue Grass Virginia Farms

We have for sale large and small farms, country estates, colonial mansions, timber and fruit lands. Hunting preserves, and rice lands among the Sea Islands of Georgia. Our beautiful catalogue, "Virginia and the Carolinas, Illustrated," contains complete descriptions, photographs of buildings and landscapes. 25c.

SOUTHERN FARM AGENCY, 738 Main St., Lynchburg, Va.

100 VISITING CARDS 35c
Post paid
Correct styles and sizes. Order filled daily received. Booklet "Card Style" FREE! Also business, professional and fraternal cards. We have cuts of business for all societies. Card Case 10c.

E. J. SCHUSTER PTG. & ENG. CO., Dept. 25, St. Louis, Mo.

STENOGRAPHY

Book-keeping, etc., taught. Complete Course for Home Study, $5.00. C. C. GAINES, Box 961, Poughkeepsie, N. Y., or 119 West 12th Street, New York, N. Y.

ARTISTIC BRONCHIAL TROCHES

Relieve your throat and makes a deep, fully inspired breath. Soreness, 10c each. 3 for 25c.

McDIVITT MFG. CO., Box 8, BELVIDERE, ILL.

Invaluable to elderly people, invalids, and all who suffer from difficult breathing. Prevents dryness of the throat and air passages. Avoid imitations. John Schmitt

It is little short of pathetic

To see a woman in this age sweeping with a corn broom, more particularly as it is not even an economical way of sweeping.

A "Cyco" Bearing BISSELL Sweeper

will outlast fifty corn brooms that would cost not less than $5.00, whereas the best Bissell can be bought for from $2.50 to $4.00.

Then consider all the other economies in using the Bissell; work accomplished in one-fourth of the time, with 95 per cent less effort, no dust, no weariness, no back aches, or sore hands. Saves and brightens your carpets and rugs—in fact, makes sweeping day a pleasant anticipation, instead of a day to be dreaded.

FOR SALE BY ALL FIRST CLASS DEALERS
BISSELL CARPET SWEEPER CO.
Dept. U, Grand Rapids, Mich.
(Largest Sweeper Makers in the World.)

LOST HOPES

By E. NESBIT

AND it is fair and very fair
This maze of blossom and sweet air,
This drift of orchard snows,
This radiant promise of the rose
Wherein your young eyes see
Such buds of scented joys to be.
A gay green garden, softly fanned
By the blythe breeze that blows
To speed your ship of dreams to the enchanted land.

But I—beyond the budding screen
Of green and red, and white and green,
Behind the radiant show
Of things that cling and grow and glow,
I see the plains where lie
The hopes of days gone by:
Gray breadths of melancholy, crossed
By winds that coldly blow
From that cold sea wherein my argosy is lost.

TRUE STORIES OF TO-DAY

Wire-Pulling in the Navy

JERRY, the mascot goat of the battleship Alabama, has proved by deeds that he fears no foe, and is ready to eat anything short of projectiles. But according to a painfully veracious gunner's-mate of this floating fortress, Jerry is a victim of wire-pulling; and this pernicious tendency has shocked and unnerved the victim, as it has many other fighters afloat and ashore. When electricians were equipping the Alabama with a wireless telegraphy apparatus, Jerry was one of the most interested onlookers. While the wires were being tested, a loose loop hung from a series of connections trailing down a topmast, and fell about of Jerry as he ranged the deck. It tickled his neck, and he liked the sensation. Then his universal appetite took command. With an abstracted air, Jerry nibbled, and slowly put himself outside of several feet of wire loop.

On shore experts just then began to try to make wireless connections with the Alabama. Jerry paused in wonder, and instantly became the most surprised goat on the shores of the Seven Seas. There was a rattle of dots and dashes in his throat. His beard became rigid, sparks crackled from each separate whisker. Jerry ran in agitated circles, his stump tail sparking like a trolley-pole on a sleety night. Messages came thick and fast. According to the painfully veracious gunner's-mate, the horns of Jerry gleamed like binnacles, and the hair on his back popped like so many Mausers.

Meantime, wireless information was accumulating in his hold, and he was converted into a despatch-box for Government messages. The gunner's-mate was first to spy the wire, and cut the current. He swore that smoke issued from Jerry's crackling nostrils, but explained the phenomenon by recalling that the goat had been eating hickory shavings before he became a wireless receiver. The indomitable mascot of the Alabama recovered from the shock, but since then, the slightest mention of "wire-pulling" in the service has terrified his imagination, and sent him fleeing toward the coal-bunkers for refuge.

A Cyclonic Postmistress

THE Post-Office Department recently had on hand an investigation which overshadowed in lively interest the work of Messrs. Bristow, Bonaparte, and Conrad. The document in the case came from a town of southwestern Texas, and they revealed a desperate state of affairs. The sheriff had filed charges against the postmistress in these moving protests:

"We don't set up any claim that our manners are all that they should be, but we'd like to be reasoned with and helped along. The postmistress here is a worthy woman all right, and there ain't anything against her character, but she certainly is rude and hasty. One day last week, the mayor, being somewhat flushed up and careless, refused to remove his hat and bow on asking for the official mail, whereupon his hat was shot off and plumb ruined, and he left the post-office so swift and undignified that it told against the standing of the town. There's another thing we don't think is fair. The postmistress won't let niggers and greasers come in the office under any consideration. We ain't overfond of greasers and niggers ourselves, but it is sure discommoding for the leading citizens to have to go to the post-office personally to get their mail just because this lady don't like to see anything but a gentleman. We don't like to appear fault-finding and picayunish where a lady is concerned, but this one I'm telling you about is sure arbitrary and abrupt, and we'd like to have her toned down some."

Urgent appeals for an inspector followed

If You Are a Pianist or a Singer

you are constantly buying sheet music—and paying high prices for it. It lies in ragged piles around the house and becomes scattered and torn. You lose money by buying music in that way, to say nothing of your loss of time and temper when searching for a particular selection. Why not buy your music in volumes filled with the best selections, and thoroughly indexed? The "Library of the World's Best Music" is designed for your needs. Its eight volumes—sheet music size, but light and easy to handle—are crowded with the best vocal and instrumental music, carefully selected by an experienced corps of music editors. If you were to buy the music it contains, one piece at a time, it would cost you over $200.00. Through our Musical Library Club—for a limited time—the entire set will cost you one-tenth of that amount, and you can pay it in little payments of $1.00 a month.

A Bookcase Free if you order at Once.

The World's Best Music

This is the most comprehensive collection of music in existence. It contains 2,000 pages of sheet music—which is 500 more than any other Musical Library. It is fully indexed, so that any selection can be quickly found. The volumes are specially bound so that they open flat at the piano. All the world-famous composers are represented—including such names as Wagner, Liszt, Paderewski, Sullivan, Mozart, Handel, Chopin, De Koven, Strauss and Gounod—but the selections have been so carefully made that none is too difficult for the average performer. The work contains 300 instrumental selections by the best composers, including popular and operatic melodies, dances, funeral marches, and classic and romantic piano music. There are 350 best old and new songs, duets, trios and quartets. Among the selections are 100 new and copyrighted pieces of music by American composers. As a musical encyclopedia it is unequalled, for it contains 500 biographies of musicians and 400 portraits, many of the last being handsome chromatic art plates in color. The volumes are handsomely bound in art cloth and half-leather. In number of pages of sheet music, number of biographies, and in number of illustrations, this Musical Library leads all others.

Size of Volumes, 9 x 12 inches.

The Coupon Cuts the Price in Half

Our Musical Library Club has secured an entirely new edition of the "World's Best Music" at a price slightly above the cost of paper and printing. On this account we are able to offer these sets at about half the regular subscription price—payable $1.00 a month. Through the Musical Library Club—direct from the publisher to the customer—you can secure a set for $21.00 in cloth binding and $25.00 for the half-leather. These sets were previously sold for $35.00 and $40.00. The edition is small, so to avoid possible disappointment in failing to secure a set, cut off the coupon to-day, sign it, and mail it to us. We will then send you a set (express paid by us) for examination. After five days' use, if you are not satisfied, return the books to us at our expense. But if you decide to keep the set, send us $1.00 at the expiration of five days, and $1.00 a month thereafter until the full amount is paid.

BOOKCASE FREE—We have a small number of elegant oak-wood bookcases that are made especially to hold a set of the "World's Best Music." Their retail price is $1.00 each, but we have decided to offer them as premiums to prompt subscribers. To obtain one of them free with your set it is necessary to send your order without delay or you will be too late, unless you care to pay the retail price of $4.00.

THE UNIVERSITY SOCIETY
78 Fifth Avenue, New York

Name _____
Street _____
City _____
In ordering cloth charge 24 months to 30 months.

882 WEST NORTH ST., KALAMAZOO, MICH.

Too Fat

Don't ruin your stomach with a lot of useless drugs. Our method is perfectly safe, natural and scientific. It strengthens the heart, allows you to breathe easily and takes off Double Chin, Big Stomach, Fat Hips, etc. Send your address and 4 cents to the Hall Chemical Co., 276 Hall Building, St. Louis, Mo., for Free Trial Treatment. No starving. No sickness. It reduces weight from 5 to 15 lbs. a month, and is perfectly harmless.

Yankee Power taking just $150. Special 17 foot launch $125. Gasoline motors for working and pleasure boats, 15 to 55 h.p. Labeled by stock. Send for catalog. PALMER ENGINE CO., Cos Cob, Conn.

FREE

THE MINING HERALD

Leading mining and financial paper, giving all the news from the mining districts, and containing latest and most reliable information on the mining and oil industries, principal companies, dividends, etc. Every investor should have it. We will send it free for six months upon request. A. L. WISNER & CO., 32 Broadway, New York.

Not affected by heat, cold or rot. Double galvanized wire throughout, strongly re-enforced. Try it—most artistic designs for lawns, parks, cemeteries, etc. Catalogue FREE, shows variety of styles, 10c. to 50c. a foot. Dwiggins Wire Fence Co., 52 Dwiggins Ave., Anderson, Ind.

No Cold Corners

In Iowa Round Incubators No half warmed eggs. By "round" system every egg gets same heat—bigger per cent of eggs hatched. Special regulator overcomes atmospheric changes. Free catalog tells the whole story.

SNORING

and mouth breathing
CURED INSTANTLY
NO DRUGS. Write today to SNOR-O-DONT, A3, Box 412, Long Beach, California

TELEGRAPHY

Thoroughly and quickly taught. Expenses low and can be reduced one-half by working for board. Railroaders give our graduates immediate employment and furnish free passes to destinations. We have more orders for operators than we can fill, and give students choice of different railroads in many states. Write for Catalog. We pay railroad fare to Janesville, Wis. Valentin's School, Est. 32 Years, Janesville, Wis.

GET THE BEST

WEBSTER'S INTERNATIONAL DICTIONARY

English Biography Geography
Trade Fiction, Etc.

25,000 NEW WORDS, Etc.

New Gazetteer of the World
With over 50,000 entries based on the latest census.

New Biographical Dictionary
With over 10,000 names of noted persons, birth, death, etc.

Edited by W. T. HARRIS, Ph.D., LL.D.,
United States Commissioner of Education.

New Plates. 2380 Quarto Pages.
Rich Bindings. 5000 Illustrations.

Should be in Every Home, School and Office

Also Webster's Collegiate Dictionary with 21,000 pages, 2400 illustrations. Size: 7x10x1 1/2 in.

A Special Thin Paper Edition
Just issued, printed from same plates as regular edition. It has limp covers and round corners. Size: 4 1/2 x 7 1/2 x 1 1/2 in.

FREE, "A Test in Pronunciation"
Instructive and entertaining. Also illustrated pamphlets.

G. & C. MERRIAM CO.,
Publishers, Springfield, Mass.

"University" Chair

For Comfort Lovers
For Brain Workers

This chair has an adjustable back, and arms that can be converted into wide, firm shelves for writing, holding books, etc.

It has been on the market for the past five years, and has never sold at a special price. As a special inducement we offer this chair until April 30th at less than wholesale price and guarantee same to be strictly as follows, or money refunded:

Frame of solid QUARTERED OAK, upholstered with best steel SPRINGS and HAIR, covered with GENUINE LEATHER, and superior finish throughout.

Over 30 other styles. Catalogue "C" free.

Book-Holder shown can be attached to chair or not, as desired, and with our universal clamp can be adapted to any chair. Price, $3.50 extra.

Geo. F. Sargent Co. 282 Fifth Avenue NEW YORK

The Leading Styles Originate in Brockton, the Manufacturing Center of Men's Fine Shoes in this Country. Styles Originated by My Expert Model Maker Are Copied Everywhere.

W. L. DOUGLAS

Union $3.50 SHOES, Worth Made, $5.00.

have by their excellent style, easy-fitting and superior wearing qualities, achieved the largest sale of any $3.50 shoe in the world. They are just as good as those that cost $5 to $7—the only difference is the price. If I could take you into my factory at Brockton, Mass., the largest in the world under one roof making men's fine shoes, and show you the infinite care with which every pair of Douglas shoes is made, you would realize why W. L. Douglas $3.50 shoes are the best shoes produced anywhere.

If I could show you the difference between the shoes made in my factory and those of other makes, you would understand why Douglas $3.50 shoes cost more to make, why they hold their shape, fit better, wear longer, and are of greater intrinsic value than any other $3.50 shoe on the market to-day.

W. L. Douglas High-Grade Boys' Shoes, $2.00 and $1.75. Douglas uses Corona Coltskin in his $3.50 shoes. Corona Colt is conceded everywhere to be the finest patent leather yet produced. FAST COLOR EYELETS USED EXCLUSIVELY.

W. L. Douglas has the largest men's $3.50 Shoe Mail Order Business in the world. No trouble to get a fit by mail. State size and width; narrow, medium or wide toe; with or without cap on toe; kind of leather desired; congress, lace or button. 25 cents extra prepaid delivery.

W. L. Douglas $3.50 shoes are sold through his own retail stores in the principal cities, and shoe dealers everywhere. No matter where you live, Douglas shoes are within your reach. If you desire further information before purchasing, write for illustrated catalogue.

W. L. DOUGLAS, 154 Spark Street, Brockton, Massachusetts.

*America Leads the Shoe Fashions of the World
and
Douglas Shoes
Lead America*

The above is the only Trade Mark that legally embodies the name "Cyphers." I am the sole owner of it. The machines bearing it are manufactured under my personal supervision, are my latest design and are the result of ripe experience in incubator construction. It stands for the best.

The Model Incubator

(not "Cyphers" by name) outshines my older invention, which is manufactured by another house. Do not get the two machines confused. The Model Colony Brooder is an entirely new invention. It is double walled, has diffusive ventilation under the cover and can be used as a colony house after the brooding season is over. The Double Indoor Brooder replaces the Sectional. It is cheaper, has two compartments in each end—a brooder and warm nursery—is light and cheerful, is easily cleaned and one lamp heats it. If you are interested look this one over. A simple request brings free catalogue. Don't forget the street address.

CHAS. A. CYPHERS, 39-47 HENRY STREET, BUFFALO, NEW YORK

At Factory Prices

Direct from our own Factory

Why pay your dealer from $1 to $40 more for a stove or range, when you can buy direct from our factory

KALAMAZOO

STOVES AND RANGES

saving all dealers' and middlemen's profits? We save you from 25% to 40% on every purchase and you run no risk for we give you 360 Days Approval Test and a guarantee under a $50,000 bank bond. If a Kalamazoo does not satisfy you in every way, send it back and we return every cent you paid. We pay the freight. Can we make a fairer offer? We are selling thousands of both steel and cast iron stoves and ranges in all parts of the country, and can refer you to pleased customers in your own neighborhood. New patterns, large square ovens and guaranteed fire backs. All blacked and polished ready to set up. Send postal for Approval Offer and Catalog No. 176.

Kalamazoo Stove Co., Mfrs.
Kalamazoo, Mich.

We fit all our ranges and cook stoves with our patent oven thermometer which makes baking easy.

Dr. Shoop's Rheumatic Cure

Costs Nothing if it Fails

Any honest person who suffers from Rheumatism is welcome to this offer. For years I searched everywhere to find a specific for Rheumatism. For nearly 20 years I worked to this end. At last, in Germany, my search was rewarded. I found a costly chemical that did not disappoint me as other Rheumatic prescriptions had disappointed physicians everywhere.

I do not mean that Dr. Shoop's Rheumatic Cure can turn busy joints into flesh again. That is impossible. But it will drive from the blood the poison that causes pain and swelling, and then that is the end of Rheumatism. I know this so well that I will furnish for a full month my Rheumatic Cure on trial. I cannot cure all cases within a month. It would be unreasonable to expect that. But most cases will yield within 30 days. This trial treatment will convince you that Dr. Shoop's Rheumatic Cure is a power against Rheumatism—a potent force against disease that is irresistible.

My offer is made to convince you of my faith. My faith is but the outcome of experience—of actual knowledge. I KNOW what it can do. And I know this so well that I will furnish my remedy on trial. Simply write me a postal for my book on Rheumatism. I will then arrange with a druggist in your vicinity so that you can secure six bottles of Dr. Shoop's Rheumatic Cure to make the test. You may take it a full month on trial. If it succeeds the cost to you is $5.00. If it fails the loss is mine and mine alone. It will be left entirely to you. I mean that exactly. I don't expect a penny from you. Write me and I will send you the book. Try my remedy for a month. If it fails the loss is mine.

Address: Dr. Shoop, Box 923, Racine, Wis.

Mild cases not chronic are often cured by one or two bottles. At all druggists.

MAKE MONEY

With Pen and Pencil

STORY-WRITING JOURNALISM ILLUSTRATING CARTOONING

Taught by craft. MRS. and Illustrations sold on commission to exclusive publishers and syndicates. Need for either free booklet "Writing for Profit" or "Commercial Illustrating." NATIONAL PRESS AGEN 54 The Baldwin Indianapolis

ALLIGATOR PUNCTURE-PROOF - SELF-HEALING BICYCLE TIRES

The ORIGINAL and only Puncture-proof and Self-healing Tire made. Nails, rocks, and glass will not let the air out. Positively will not become porous. Strong, durable, resistant. Greatest thickness where needed (see G. in illustration). Resistant "feel of it." Sent C.O.D. anywhere, where subject to examination—no deposit asked; but we pay express only when cash accompanies order. Some discounter of the kind and use the worded. Carriage Price. THE VIM COMPANY, Sole Manufacturers, State and Lake Streets, CHICAGO.

Now Only $4.95 Express Paid

TAKE NO SUBSTITUTE A Dated Guaranty Tag on each Tire Protects you against Old Stock

Can You Draw This?

Copy it as well as you can, send to us and we will give you an expensive art portfolio of drawings by the noted artist, Charles Lederer. A course of lessons by mail, at home, will qualify you to earn a big salary as an artist and cartoonist. Instruction individual and exactly adapted to your talent.

THE LEDERER SCHOOL OF DRAWING
3444 Ellis Ave. CHICAGO

To Owners of Gasoline Engines, Automobiles, Launches, Etc.

The Auto-Sparker

does away entirely with all starting and running batteries, their annoyance and expense. No battery—no switch—no battery. Can be attached to any engine now using batteries. Fully guaranteed; write for descriptive catalog.

Motoring Device Mfg. Co.
22 Main St., Portland, Ind.

this letter, and delay inspired this addition to the documents:

"There ain't no inspector showed up in these parts yet, and we'd like to know if one is coming. When I wrote you last week, things wasn't exactly calm and peaceful, and since then the situation has sure become acute and unsatisfactory. The lady postmaster found out in some way that the mayor and me and other leading citizens of this town was some vexed and annoyed with her, and since then the post-office hasn't done any business to speak of. If it was a man dealing out stamps and handing us over our mail, you can rest easy, we wouldn't ask for help, and bother the Postmaster-General. But we ain't making war on women, including this one, which can handle her armament quite casual and flippant, so we want you to do something.

"This town respectfully protests to you against the way in which this accredited lady postmaster is urging her views on politeness; this town respectfully protests that it ain't got time to leave its hat outside the door when getting its mail; this town respectfully protests that its duly elected mayor is important in the eyes of its citizens, and that there ain't no call for him to act humble when he's getting his mail. The mayor ain't felt right since he skipped out of the post-office last week; some undignified and frisky, owing to the fact that he forgot to take off his hat and bow, and he is going to resign if something ain't done. Please attend to it, for we are getting snipish and fretful in our tempers, and are liable to do something we might regret. Tell the inspector he'd better come to see me first. She's heard he's coming, and there ain't no use of his being rash and careless."

Seeking Buried Treasure

A LONDON police magistrate demanded in court the other day if every one in England had suddenly gone mad? The reason for making the inquiry was furnished by the presence in the dock of a number of men and women who were charged with damaging public property. Asked what they had to say for themselves, the defendants pleaded that they were "looking for buried treasure."

The magistrate's sympathy with this form of lunacy took the shape of fining the prisoners heavily and expressing the hope that certain newspaper editors would be prosecuted for inciting people to make public nuisances of themselves.

This extraordinary craze of "buried treasure seeking," which has now taken such a firm hold on the population of Great Britain that police intervention has had to be invoked, is one of the most mischievous devices ever yet adopted by periodicals for achieving a sale. Certain obscure journals have descended to the undignified practice of hiding packets of coins in public places, which their readers are invited to find. The broad lines on which this scheme is carried out are as follows: The paper in question employs members of its staff to bury in different locations sums of money, varying from a sovereign to £100. It then publishes, day by day, or week by week, a serial story describing the experiences of the hiders. They are eagerly read on account of the supposed "clews" they contain. Armed with these, subscribers take temporary leave of their senses and rush off in every direction to tear up roads, trample down flowers, and generally destroy property. Nothing, indeed, is sacred from them, and they will calmly probe among museum exhibits, or invade private gardens, in their quest. People of every degree take part in it, respectable householders mixing with the tag, rag, and bobtail crowd similarly employed.

To such a pitch has the nuisance recently arrived that the authorities are almost at their wits' end to cope with it. This is especially the case on Sundays, when the "treasure seekers," having nothing else to do, spend their whole time in digging and probing wherever they fancy the "clews" to indicate the existence of hidden money. More than once it has been found necessary to call out both the police and military to clear the parks and public gardens of the abnormal and disorderly crowds of people thus brought together.

All over the country bitter complaints are constantly being received from landowners and others as to the destruction of fences, and the disturbing of game, etc. Where the money is hidden in streets, sections of pavement are uprooted, and gaping holes dug in the roads.

Two Thumbless Veterans

TWO men with identical names living in the same section of the same State, and with a war record that bears a striking similarity, was the remarkable situation that confronted the Government in a pension case. These quasi-Siamese twins dwell in Maine, and one of them—Uncle Sam did not know which for a long time—put in a claim for pension. He claimed that his thumb had been cut off in line of duty. In one declaration he said that the thumb was cut off by an axe while he was on duty; in another, that a shell speeding across the field of Preble's Farm, down in the Old Dominion State, had separated the thumb from the rest of his anatomy, while some of his neighbors swore that he was minus the thumb before he ever shouldered a musket to go to the front. The Government sent the notice to appear before examining surgeons to the wrong person, and he went through the ordeal and was reported on and considered at Washington with all judicial solemnity. The two cases got together in the adjudicating process, and the Interior Department confessed itself up a stump. A special examiner was detailed to straighten out matters, and finally succeeded. But the pension was denied in view of the conflicting explanations of the wound.

$7.75 FOR A SUIT JUST LIKE THIS

THIS remarkably low price is possible because we are large clothing manufacturers, selling direct to you from our factory. Suits like this would cost you $15.00 in any store, but we will sell ours at the low price of $7.75, to introduce "GUARANTEE" clothing to every man in the country. They are made of pure all-wool black diagonal, absolutely fast color, and will not gloss; lined with good farmers-satin lining, and elegantly tailored. We have all sizes from 34 to 44 chest measure. In addition to the style illustrated here you can have your choice of either single-breasted or double-breasted sack style of suit at the same price. $5.00 $1.00 DEPOSIT, giving height, weight, chest, waist and crotch measure, and we will send you the suit (coat, pants and vest) C. O. D. by express, subject to examination. Balance $6.75 and expressage you can pay the express agent if suit is satisfactory. Otherwise we will instantly refund your deposit. Should you prefer different goods, write for our FREE catalog, containing many other styles and cloth samples, rules for self-measurement, etc.

Refer to: Mr. Morris Rank and Representative: A. J. Schuchman, 127th St., N. Y. City

"THE GUARANTEE" CLOTHING CO.
Dept. N, Third Ave., cor. 127th St., N. Y. City

AGATE NICKEL-STEEL WARE

We Make 1520 Kinds of Kitchen Utensils

There is a BLUE LABEL attached to every piece of AGATE NICKEL-STEEL WARE as a guaranty of Absolute Purity NO POISON has ever been found in the material IF SUBSTITUTES ARE OFFERED, WRITE US. Department & House-Furnishing Stores everywhere sell them.

LALANCE & GROSJEAN, Mfg. Co. NEW YORK CHICAGO BOSTON

RHEUMATISM CONQUERED

Here is the one physician who has really conquered Rheumatism in all its various forms. Years of study as a Specialist, devoted to this dread disease, have made sure his phenomenal success by curing the most stubborn cases. To help you realize that the above statement is true, we will forward on application, a trial box of Dr. Whitehall's Rheumatic cure absolutely free, thus assuring you immediate relief, demonstrating the fact that your Rheumatism can be cured at home, easily, simply, pleasantly, and at trifling cost. Sold by all druggists. Price 50 cents a box. Address: The Dr. WHITEHALL NEBRIGINE CO. 167 Main St., South Bend, Ind.

"Macey" TRADE MARK

Sectional Bookcases

Are the only kind that protect books properly, are made in a variety of sections, with plain and art glass doors that recede automatically over the books. The doors are fitted with our patented Non-Binding attachment, without which a satisfactory sectional book-case cannot be made. The doors are cushion closing, and it is impossible to make them hitch or bind in any climate. Additional sections may be had from time to time as your library grows.

31 in. wide, 44 in. high, two qt. glass doors, $12.75
Grand Mahogany $17.25

31 in. wide, 44 in. high, with art glass doors, $18.25
Grand Mahogany $22.75

51 1/2 in. high, 34 in. wide, with art glass doors, $25.75
Grand Mahogany $32.75

We sell our book-cases direct to the consumer and guarantee every section to be entirely satisfactory or returnable at our expense.

We prepay freight to all points east of the Mississippi River and north of Tennessee; points beyond equalized. Ask for Sectional Book-case Catalogue No. 1, mailed free. A postal card will do; please mention Collier's.

THE FRED MACEY CO., LTD.
Makers of High Grade Furniture
Grand Rapids, Mich.

Branches:
342 Broadway, New York City.
212 Walnut Ave., Chicago, Ill.
712 Federal St., Boston, Mass.
14 No. 17th St., Philadelphia.
Cox, New York Ave., and 343 St., Washington, D. C.

Southern California
For reliable information, enclose five cent stamp to the Chamber of Commerce, Los Angeles, California.

PATENTS

NEW BOOK MAILED FREE

Tells all about Patents and How to Obtain Them. Tells What to Invent for Profit. Contains rules of Mechanical Inventions (available to Inventors). PUBLISHED BY H. R. NISSELY, 619 11th St., Wash., D. C.

I Print
My Own
Circulars
Cards &c.
$5 PRESS

Save money. My profit printing for others. Large press for book, newspaper $18. Full instruction sent for use. Write for catalogue prices, type, etc., to factory
THE PRESS CO.
MERIDEN, CONN.

Genuine pre-historic stone and flint implements for sale. Send 10c for a nice arrow point, or a flint knife, or an old shell wampum mailed free with our catalogue of 100 illustrations.
J. R. NISSELY - - - - - ADA, OHIO

GOOD LUCK PIN Bent Footpad 15c.
Oxidized Silver, Ruby or Emerald Eyes.
Suitable for all. High Cannally.
Jeweler, 25 State St., Detroit, Mich.

Buggies $10.00 for a leather quarter, leather trimmed, 2000 mile axle, Buggy, 256 styles.
Hendley Mfg. Co., Dept. J, Owsenboro, Ky.

Behind the Scenes in Washington

By F. A. EMERY

Easy Chair to Get Out Of

WHEN Secretary Taft, the new head of the War portfolio, was inducted into the mysteries of a Cabinet seance he learned something of the repartee that flashes in the inner sanctum. President Roosevelt had just effusively greeted the Ohioan and felicitated him upon his transition from Civil Governor to Secretary of War. Taft then glanced about for a seat. Up at the head of the long table, next to the President, usually sat Secretary Hay, the premier of the Administration, but Hay was absent and his seat was available. The President pointed to it. Taft ensconced himself in it. Then he looked uncomfortable. His upward of two hundred pounds of flesh and bone, and his corresponding height, warranted lack of appreciation of an ordinary chair.

"I believe," said Taft smilingly, "that these chairs are a trifle low. I don't like them."

"Well, Governor," replied Secretary Root, quick as a flash, remembering that this was his last Cabinet meeting, "there are ways by which people can be gotten out of them."

A Wise Woman

MISS ESTELLE REEL, the Superintendent of the United States Indian Schools, the highest salaried woman in the Government service, and a fearless product of Wyoming politics, travels many thousand miles annually in inspection tours. Her field is from Washington west to the Golden Gate, from the Assiniboia line to the Mexican borders. Much of her itinerary lies through rough and dangerous country. She was out in Nebraska, and drove to the little town of Crawford to take the train for her next stopping point. She waited some hours in that community, and finally, about five o'clock in the afternoon, a cattle train hove in sight. It was a far cry from that to parlor-car accommodations, but Miss Reel wasn't taking chances on further delay.

She boarded the caboose that brought up the rear of the long, winding string of cars. The caboose was solid with smoke. Several stock tenders and one or two of the train crew were there, sans coat, sans waistcoat, and all puffing their clay-pipes. "It's a woman, blast the luck!" grumbled one, and a succession of grunts echoed this sentiment. Miss Reel is quick. She saw the struggle between chivalric politeness and undisturbed comfort with the pipe. "Gentlemen," she called out, "don't stop smoking, I beg of you. It's unnecessary to stop, and really it is not bad. I like to smell the smoke."

Then she crawled up to the cupola of the caboose and watched the retreating tracks, remaining there most of the time until the train pulled into Rushville at one o'clock in the morning.

General Gordon's Coal Mine

THE way in which the elder Gordon carved a fortune out of a mountain slab is recalled by the recent death of General John B. Gordon, the former United States Senator and idol of the South. Gordon was formerly well in Tennessee, and there bought a small tract of barren mountain land. The purchase price was a mere fifty-dollar note, and the main object of the deal was to help a neighbor who was flying signals of distress. The Gordons soon moved into Georgia. Not long afterward a Tennessee friend paid a casual call.

"By the way, Gordon," said the Tennessean, "would you like to get shot of that piece of land you own nex' to mine? It ain't worth more'n ten dollars, but it'll do to let the heaves run on't."

"Oh, I reckon it's worth more than that," replied Gordon. "I paid fifty for it, but I'd just as soon sell."

"I'll give you twenty."

"Go a little better," answered Gordon.

"Well, I'll give you thirty."

Still Gordon stood out for more. The Tennessean offered fifty, then sixty, and finally reached one hundred dollars. Then Gordon smiled. There was eagerness in that bidding. Gordon said he'd go to Tennessee and look at the land. He paid no heed to the protestations of the Tennessean that the roads were dangerous to travel. The pair started on the ride through the rough country and arrived safely. The elder Gordon gazed contemptuously at the miserable-looking land which lay near the Georgia line, just south of the present Memphis & Charleston Railroad.

"I reckon you're right, neighbor," said he. "The land isn't worth five dollars."

But just then Gordon's eyes detected a trail, which, the Tennessean immediately explained, led to a spring. "I love Tennessee spring water," said Gordon. "It makes my mouth water to think of it."

The Tennessean insisted that he knew a better spring than that, but Gordon followed the trail, and a few yards away discovered men digging coal from the mountain side. Like a flash Gordon grasped the situation. Turning to his companion, Gordon announced emphatically that he reckoned he wouldn't sell. The mine was soon opened and was profitable from the start.

Strong Furnace Claims

"Cost me less than thirty dollars to heat my entire house of eight rooms the past winter. Has in every way done all that is claimed for it."—Part of voluntary letter from prominent banker in Olney, Illinois.

We do not ask you to accept our claim that it is possible to save from 1/2 to 3/4 of your fuel bills; with no bills for furnace repairs; with immunity from smoke, dirt, escaping gases; with less ashes and no clinkers. All we ask is an opportunity to send you fac-simile letters from prominent bankers, lawyers, insurance men and merchants who, after severest tests, have made voluntary written statements covering their experience, showing

The Peck-Williamson Underfeed Furnace Reduces Coal Bills one-half to two-thirds

This furnace is built on scientific principles. The fuel is fed from below and the fire is on top. The gases and smoke are consumed as they pass through the fire, not escaping up the chimney as they do in ordinary furnaces. The P.W. Underfeed has satisfactorily solved the problem of making a ton of the cheapest grade of coal go as far in producing heat as a ton of the most costly grade, and with less trouble. Simple and strong in construction, easy to operate.

We will gladly send you an interesting Underfeed book explaining scientific points of construction and superiority, and fac-simile letters, all voluntary, fully substantiating every claim we make.

Dealers are invited to write for our very attractive proposition.

The Peck-Williamson Co., 328 W. Fifth St., Cincinnati, Ohio

Even a child can mend things with
Army & Navy Liquid Glue
(Patented)
Comes in a tube; no need to bother with a brush. Will mend quickly and forever, broken china, glass, wood, leather, rubber—anything glueable. Being the only pure hide and sinew glue in liquid form it is far superior to ordinary fish glues and cements.
If your dealer hasn't it, we will send a sample tube on receipt of 5 cents.
WACHTER MFG. CO.
513 West Pratt Street Baltimore, Md.

THE SMITH PREMIER TYPEWRITER
is strongly linked to the
BUSINESS WORLD

Our interesting booklet explaining just why, sent on request.
THE SMITH PREMIER TYPEWRITER CO.
EXECUTIVE OFFICE
287 Broadway
New York
FACTORY
Syracuse, N. Y.

????????????

THE EQUITABLE
HENRY B. HYDE
FOUNDER
STRONGEST IN THE WORLD
J. W. ALEXANDER
PRESIDENT
J. H. HYDE
VICE PRESIDENT

DO YOU KNOW
that you can buy 5% Gold Bonds on instalments — and have them insured while you are paying for them?
A good investment for you — if you live. A splendid protection for your family — if you die.
Opportunities for men of character to act as representatives.
Apply to GAGE E. TARBELL, 2nd Vice President.

Send this coupon, or write, for particulars
THE EQUITABLE LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY of the United States
120 Broadway, New York Dept. No. 24
I would like to receive information regarding Gold Bond for $.....
issued to a person aged ..... years.
Name.....
Address.....

52

Model A
With Detachable Tonneau,
$350.00.

CADILLAC

Model B, Touring Car
$500.00.
Without Tonneau, $300.00.

Our Cars and Our Record—Do You Know Them?

The first Cadillac was put on the market early in 1902. "Can't be sold profitably for the money," competitors said, and prophesied an early rise in price or decline in quality.

The end of the year saw the country full of satisfaction-rising Cadillacs, and our sales exceeded by those of only one manufacturer.

In the recent contest a stock Cadillac went up Eagle Rock Hill on the high gear in 8:19, winning first prize for vehicles of its class and defeating all machines under double its rated horse-power.

At all the big auto shows this season, where the most discriminating purchasers are found, the Cadillac exhibits have been centers of attraction to an extent that speaks volumes both for the reputation of the Cadillac and for the mechanical excellence of the machines exhibited. More Cadillacs were sold during the New York Show than any other make.

Model B, embodies more novel and exclusive features of merit than can be found in any other automobile, no matter what the price.

Frame is of pressed steel; running gear and suspension system an absolutely unique and unrivaled combination of strength and flexibility that makes the car ride over the roughest roads as safely and smoothly as a Pullman coach. In points of speed, ease of construction, luxury of appointments, ease of control and quietness of running, it is all that the name Cadillac stands for—greatest results; fewest complications. All 1904 Cadillacs are equipped with electric tires.

Model A carries several improvements, otherwise it is the same safe, speedy, reliable machine as last year, and is sold at the same price—$350 as a runabout; $550 complete with detachable tonneau.

Our handsome new booklet L explains and illustrates both models in detail, and gives address of agency nearest you where they may be seen and tried. Free on request.

CADILLAC AUTOMOBILE COMPANY
Detroit, Mich.
Member Association of Licensed Automobile Manufacturers

Suit Made $12 to Measure

Suit Case Free

Fine All-Wool
Tailor-Made
Cashmere or
Worsted Suit

Year Choice of a variety of colorings and weaves, and all the newest patterns just from the woolen mills. We direct special attention to the fabrics. The cloth is specially woven from new high grade wool; it is close woven and the wool is full of "life," so that the cloth is elastic and the garments will hold their shape. Before cutting into the cloth for each suit, the suit pattern is thoroughly shrunken. Our cutters are first-class workmen, who incorporate into the suit the latest style, and take into account the various little differences in build of each man. The suit is lined throughout with "Bull's" serge and the sleeve linings are of the celebrated "Pawley" alpaca. All trimmings are the very best, and button-holes are hand finished. The pants pockets are made of strong drilling, and all the findings are such as only can be secured in the high grade merchant-tailor article. Our measure and order blank will enable you to take your own measurements accurately, and a perfect fit is guaranteed. We are manufacturers, importers and custom tailors, and guarantee our $12.00 suits to be equal in wear to the best suits you can obtain from your local dealer for twenty dollars, while in style and fit our garments are incomparably superior to any but the product of high-priced city tailors.

FREE Suit Case

In order to establish customers throughout the United States, we are giving on the first order received from any one person, a handsome suit case, which we use to ship the suit. The suit case that goes with each suit is most presentable and would cost in your local store from $3 to $5.

A trial is all we ask. You run no risk in ordering from us, as we guarantee absolutely a perfect fit. We do not ask you to pay for the goods before seeing them. We send them by express C. O. D., with the privilege of examination at Express Office, and if the suit is not satisfactory in fabric, finish or fit, you need not accept it; it will be returned to us at our expense. The suit shown in the picture is our No. 251, and is a sensible, becoming suit to most gentlemen. The price is $12.00. It is entirely new, out of the ordinary and very stylish. Samples of cloth that make up nicely in this style are shown in our new catalogue, which contains styles and samples varying in price from $12.00 to $20.00. Our catalogue and SAMPLES OF CLOTH FREE will be sent you the very day your request for same reaches us. Remember, we have no agents, no branch stores, and no connection with any other clothing concern. Our business has been established 45 years. Write to-day for samples. Address Meyer Livingston Sons, Dept. 8, South Bend, Ind. References: Citizens National Bank, South Bend, Ind.

NOTES OF PROGRESS IN SCIENCE AND INVENTION

There are indications that Colorado may shortly add rubber to its many other products

THE great demand for rubber, and the high price which it commands, combine to make the discovery of rubber in a new plant a matter of commercial interest. In a bulletin from the Colorado College Museum, the announcement is made of the occurrence of rubber in a native plant, Picradenia floribunda utilis, a dwarf, semi-herbaceous plant of the same family as the sunflower and aster. In the other rubber-yielding plants the gum is obtained from the woody stems, here it is found in the roots. Whether or not the cultivation of this plant can be made commercially profitable is as yet unknown.

The gold mines of Korea might prove profitable by the introduction of American machinery

KOREA is to a certain extent a gold-producing country; gold is exported from that empire to the amount of about $2,500,000 annually. This gold occurs in alluvial deposits and in veins in the rocks. The alluvial deposits are worked to advantage by the natives; the methods, although rather primitive, are perhaps the best when one considers the cheapness of labor. The mechanical difficulties of getting the gold from veins are rather too much for the Korean. The ore-grinding machinery consists of two stones, the motive power a squatting native; very naturally the product is not large. The introduction of modern machinery has been hindered by two causes—the nature of the Government and the price of coal. All the coal used must be obtained from Japan, although there is evidence that Korea contains coal beds sufficient for her needs if permission could be obtained to work them.

A new water pumping system by which streams may be sent as high as the tallest buildings

PHILADELPHIA has recently installed a most elaborate pipe system, solely for fire fighting. For some years past, owing to the increased demand for water in the congested parts of the city, the pressure in the regular water mains has been falling, till, even with the aid of fire engines, a good stream can not be maintained.

The new system is entirely independent of the old, and supplies only the hydrants; the water is drawn from the Delaware River, and kept at a high pressure in the mains by a central pumping station. The pumping station is not yet complete, and for the present the pressure is kept up by fire-boats on the river, but even under these circumstances the pressure is much higher than that of the regular water supply mains.

It is estimated that when the pumping station is finished it will be possible to send four streams over the highest building in Philadelphia, and that, with such a volume of water at command, the toughest fire can be drowned out in a half hour.

The new medico-legal test for blood is a discovery of the greatest importance to society

UNDER ordinary circumstances there is no difficulty in determining whether a given stain is, or is not, a blood stain; and, in case the blood corpuscles are intact, the blood of reptiles or birds is readily distinguished from that of mammals. But, even under the most favorable conditions, the determination of the particular mammal from which a sample of blood has been obtained, is a matter of great difficulty, calling for expert skill and very careful microscopical examination. Even the most expert would hesitate to testify to the presence of human blood, in distinction from dog's blood for example, when such testimony would mean the conviction of one accused of murder. Certain scientific discoveries of the last few years have put us in possession of knowledge which is already beginning to be used in legal practice, and which bids fair to be of great value in all cases where the identity of blood or blood stains is of importance.

After standing a short time the blood drawn from an animal clots, the clot soon contracts and squeezes out a fluid, which, since the red corpuscles are all entangled in the clot, is clear and pale yellow in color. This fluid is called blood serum. If the blood or the blood serum of any animal, e.g., a sheep, is injected into the peritoneal cavity or the veins of a rabbit, the blood of that rabbit acquires, after a few days, a remarkable power. The serum of this rabbit's blood comes to contain a so-called precipitin, by virtue of which, when mixed with the serum obtained from sheep's blood, it forms there-with a precipitate, at first like a cloud, but soon settling out as a flocculent mass; this material separating from the mixed sera is called the precipitin. Moreover, this precipitin is specific for sheep's blood, and will give a precipitate with the blood serum from no other species of animal. Applying this to man, it was found that if small amounts of human blood are injected into a rabbit, the blood of that rabbit will contain in a few days a precipitin, which is specific for human blood, and will give a precipitate with

Without Fault

Aside from its maturity, purity, quality,

Hunter Whiskey

has that rare, old, aromatic flavor that gratifies and satisfies.

A taste the most refined
Which lingers on the palate
And leaves no fault to find

Sold at all first-class cafes and by jobbers.
WM. LANAHAN & SON, Baltimore, Md.

No More Bald Heads

The Evans Vacuum Cap is the only logical method by which baldness is prevented. It is not an experiment but has been in use for two years and the satisfaction derived from it is sufficient proof of its merit.

STIMULATION
without
IRRITATION

as produced by the Vacuum method, give new life to the scalp, prevents hair from falling and makes new hair grow on bald spots where the roots still possess life. The exhilarating effects of the Cap, if used merely as a massage, make it almost indispensable after being once tried. Our patrons write us that the Cap while producing the good effects of hand massage, is devoid of irritating results of rubbing. We guarantee the Cap and would ask those interested to write for our free booklet.

EVANS VACUUM CAP CO.

Fullerton Building, St. Louis

Chicago Office, 119 Dearborn New York Office, 1200 Bow

BOND & LILLARD WHISKEY IS THE BEST

RESURRECTION Life Everlasting PLANT Requires No Care

Something to brighten up that fern dish. A perpetual delight. The only germ absorbent plant, 25c. per plant, charges prepaid.

HERPES VIVA CO., 1434 NEEBOSH STREET, CHICAGO, ILL.

If you have a thing or a talent for Drawing, cut this out, mail with your address and receive our Free Sample Lesson Circular with terms. New York School of Caricatures, 25 World Bldg., N. Y. City.

SILK PIECES WE HAVE THIS
Fancy Mixed Goods—large pieces—just the right material for Gowns, Night Gowns, Baby Gowns, Summer Suits, etc. Sample lot 100 yds. 25c. 50c. 75c. 1.00. 1.25. 1.50. 2.00. 2.50. 3.00. 3.50. 4.00. 4.50. 5.00. 5.50. 6.00. 6.50. 7.00. 7.50. 8.00. 8.50. 9.00. 9.50. 10.00. 10.50. 11.00. 11.50. 12.00. 12.50. 13.00. 13.50. 14.00. 14.50. 15.00. 15.50. 16.00. 16.50. 17.00. 17.50. 18.00. 18.50. 19.00. 19.50. 20.00. 20.50. 21.00. 21.50. 22.00. 22.50. 23.00. 23.50. 24.00. 24.50. 25.00. 25.50. 26.00. 26.50. 27.00. 27.50. 28.00. 28.50. 29.00. 29.50. 30.00. 30.50. 31.00. 31.50. 32.00. 32.50. 33.00. 33.50. 34.00. 34.50. 35.00. 35.50. 36.00. 36.50. 37.00. 37.50. 38.00. 38.50. 39.00. 39.50. 40.00. 40.50. 41.00. 41.50. 42.00. 42.50. 43.00. 43.50. 44.00. 44.50. 45.00. 45.50. 46.00. 46.50. 47.00. 47.50. 48.00. 48.50. 49.00. 49.50. 50.00. 50.50. 51.00. 51.50. 52.00. 52.50. 53.00. 53.50. 54.00. 54.50. 55.00. 55.50. 56.00. 56.50. 57.00. 57.50. 58.00. 58.50. 59.00. 59.50. 60.00. 60.50. 61.00. 61.50. 62.00. 62.50. 63.00. 63.50. 64.00. 64.50. 65.00. 65.50. 66.00. 66.50. 67.00. 67.50. 68.00. 68.50. 69.00. 69.50. 70.00. 70.50. 71.00. 71.50. 72.00. 72.50. 73.00. 73.50. 74.00. 74.50. 75.00. 75.50. 76.00. 76.50. 77.00. 77.50. 78.00. 78.50. 79.00. 79.50. 80.00. 80.50. 81.00. 81.50. 82.00. 82.50. 83.00. 83.50. 84.00. 84.50. 85.00. 85.50. 86.00. 86.50. 87.00. 87.50. 88.00. 88.50. 89.00. 89.50. 90.00. 90.50. 91.00. 91.50. 92.00. 92.50. 93.00. 93.50. 94.00. 94.50. 95.00. 95.50. 96.00. 96.50. 97.00. 97.50. 98.00. 98.50. 99.00. 99.50. 100.00. 100.50. 101.00. 101.50. 102.00. 102.50. 103.00. 103.50. 104.00. 104.50. 105.00. 105.50. 106.00. 106.50. 107.00. 107.50. 108.00. 108.50. 109.00. 109.50. 110.00. 110.50. 111.00. 111.50. 112.00. 112.50. 113.00. 113.50. 114.00. 114.50. 115.00. 115.50. 116.00. 116.50. 117.00. 117.50. 118.00. 118.50. 119.00. 119.50. 120.00. 120.50. 121.00. 121.50. 122.00. 122.50. 123.00. 123.50. 124.00. 124.50. 125.00. 125.50. 126.00. 126.50. 127.00. 127.50. 128.00. 128.50. 129.00. 129.50. 130.00. 130.50. 131.00. 131.50. 132.00. 132.50. 133.00. 133.50. 134.00. 134.50. 135.00. 135.50. 136.00. 136.50. 137.00. 137.50. 138.00. 138.50. 139.00. 139.50. 140.00. 140.50. 141.00. 141.50. 142.00. 142.50. 143.00. 143.50. 144.00. 144.50. 145.00. 145.50. 146.00. 146.50. 147.00. 147.50. 148.00. 148.50. 149.00. 149.50. 150.00. 150.50. 151.00. 151.50. 152.00. 152.50. 153.00. 153.50. 154.00. 154.50. 155.00. 155.50. 156.00. 156.50. 157.00. 157.50. 158.00. 158.50. 159.00. 159.50. 160.00. 160.50. 161.00. 161.50. 162.00. 162.50. 163.00. 163.50. 164.00. 164.50. 165.00. 165.50. 166.00. 166.50. 167.00. 167.50. 168.00. 168.50. 169.00. 169.50. 170.00. 170.50. 171.00. 171.50. 172.00. 172.50. 173.00. 173.50. 174.00. 174.50. 175.00. 175.50. 176.00. 176.50. 177.00. 177.50. 178.00. 178.50. 179.00. 179.50. 180.00. 180.50. 181.00. 181.50. 182.00. 182.50. 183.00. 183.50. 184.00. 184.50. 185.00. 185.50. 186.00. 186.50. 187.00. 187.50. 188.00. 188.50. 189.00. 189.50. 190.00. 190.50. 191.00. 191.50. 192.00. 192.50. 193.00. 193.50. 194.00. 194.50. 195.00. 195.50. 196.00. 196.50. 197.00. 197.50. 198.00. 198.50. 199.00. 199.50. 200.00. 200.50. 201.00. 201.50. 202.00. 202.50. 203.00. 203.50. 204.00. 204.50. 205.00. 205.50. 206.00. 206.50. 207.00. 207.50. 208.00. 208.50. 209.00. 209.50. 210.00. 210.50. 211.00. 211.50. 212.00. 212.50. 213.00. 213.50. 214.00. 214.50. 215.00. 215.50. 216.00. 216.50. 217.00. 217.50. 218.00. 218.50. 219.00. 219.50. 220.00. 220.50. 221.00. 221.50. 222.00. 222.50. 223.00. 223.50. 224.00. 224.50. 225.00. 225.50. 226.00. 226.50. 227.00. 227.50. 228.00. 228.50. 229.00. 229.50. 230.00. 230.50. 231.00. 231.50. 232.00. 232.50. 233.00. 233.50. 234.00. 234.50. 235.00. 235.50. 236.00. 236.50. 237.00. 237.50. 238.00. 238.50. 239.00. 239.50. 240.00. 240.50. 241.00. 241.50. 242.00. 242.50. 243.00. 243.50. 244.00. 244.50. 245.00. 245.50. 246.00. 246.50. 247.00. 247.50. 248.00. 248.50. 249.00. 249.50. 250.00. 250.50. 251.00. 251.50. 252.00. 252.50. 253.00. 253.50. 254.00. 254.50. 255.00. 255.50. 256.00. 256.50. 257.00. 257.50. 258.00. 258.50. 259.00. 259.50. 260.00. 260.50. 261.00. 261.50. 262.00. 262.50. 263.00. 263.50. 264.00. 264.50. 265.00. 265.50. 266.00. 266.50. 267.00. 267.50. 268.00. 268.50. 269.00. 269.50. 270.00. 270.50. 271.00. 271.50. 272.00. 272.50. 273.00. 273.50. 274.00. 274.50. 275.00. 275.50. 276.00. 276.50. 277.00. 277.50. 278.00. 278.50. 279.00. 279.50. 280.00. 280.50. 281.00. 281.50. 282.00. 282.50. 283.00. 283.50. 284.00. 284.50. 285.00. 285.50. 286.00. 286.50. 287.00. 287.50. 288.00. 288.50. 289.00. 289.50. 290.00. 290.50. 291.00. 291.50. 292.00. 292.50. 293.00. 293.50. 294.00. 294.50. 295.00. 295.50. 296.00. 296.50. 297.00. 297.50. 298.00. 298.50. 299.00. 299.50. 300.00. 300.50. 301.00. 301.50. 302.00. 302.50. 303.00. 303.50. 304.00. 304.50. 305.00. 305.50. 306.00. 306.50. 307.00. 307.50. 308.00. 308.50. 309.00. 309.50. 310.00. 310.50. 311.00. 311.50. 312.00. 312.50. 313.00. 313.50. 314.00. 314.50. 315.00. 315.50. 316.00. 316.50. 317.00. 317.50. 318.00. 318.50. 319.00. 319.50. 320.00. 320.50. 321.00. 321.50. 322.00. 322.50. 323.00. 323.50. 324.00. 324.50. 325.00. 325.50. 326.00. 326.50. 327.00. 327.50. 328.00. 328.50. 329.00. 329.50. 330.00. 330.50. 331.00. 331.50. 332.00. 332.50. 333.00. 333.50. 334.00. 334.50. 335.00. 335.50. 336.00. 336.50. 337.00. 337.50. 338.00. 338.50. 339.00. 339.50. 340.00. 340.50. 341.00. 341.50. 342.00. 342.50. 343.00. 343.50. 344.00. 344.50. 345.00. 345.50. 346.00. 346.50. 347.00. 347.50. 348.00. 348.50. 349.00. 349.50. 350.00. 350.50. 351.00. 351.50. 352.00. 352.50. 353.00. 353.50. 354.00. 354.50. 355.00. 355.50. 356.00. 356.50. 357.00. 357.50. 358.00. 358.50. 359.00. 359.50. 360.00. 360.50. 361.00. 361.50. 362.00. 362.50. 363.00. 363.50. 364.00. 364.50. 365.00. 365.50. 366.00. 366.50. 367.00. 367.50. 368.00. 368.50. 369.00. 369.50. 370.00. 370.50. 371.00. 371.50. 372.00. 372.50. 373.00. 373.50. 374.00. 374.50. 375.00. 375.50. 376.00. 376.50. 377.00. 377.50. 378.00. 378.50. 379.00. 379.50. 380.00. 380.50. 381.00. 381.50. 382.00. 382.50. 383.00. 383.50. 384.00. 384.50. 385.00. 385.50. 386.00. 386.50. 387.00. 387.50. 388.00. 388.50. 389.00. 389.50. 390.00. 390.50. 391.00. 391.50. 392.00. 392.50. 393.00. 393.50. 394.00. 394.50. 395.00. 395.50. 396.00. 396.50. 397.00. 397.50. 398.00. 398.50. 399.00. 399.50. 400.00. 400.50. 401.00. 401.50. 402.00. 402.50. 403.00. 403.50. 404.00. 404.50. 405.00. 405.50. 406.00. 406.50. 407.00. 407.50. 408.00. 408.50. 409.00. 409.50. 410.00. 410.50. 411.00. 411.50. 412.00. 412.50. 413.00. 413.50. 414.00. 414.50. 415.00. 415.50. 416.00. 416.50. 417.00. 417.50. 418.00. 418.50. 419.00. 419.50. 420.00. 420.50. 421.00. 421.50. 422.00. 422.50. 423.00. 423.50. 424.00. 424.50. 425.00. 425.50. 426.00. 426.50. 427.00. 427.50. 428.00. 428.50. 429.00. 429.50. 430.00. 430.50. 431.00. 431.50. 432.00. 432.50. 433.00. 433.50. 434.00. 434.50. 435.00. 435.50. 436.00. 436.50. 437.00. 437.50. 438.00. 438.50. 439.00. 439.50. 440.00. 440.50. 441.00. 441.50. 442.00. 442.50. 443.00. 443.50. 444.00. 444.50. 445.00. 445.50. 446.00. 446.50. 447.00. 447.50. 448.00. 448.50. 449.00. 449.50. 450.00. 450.50. 451.00. 451.50. 452.00. 452.50. 453.00. 453.50. 454.00. 454.50. 455.00. 455.50. 456.00. 456.50. 457.00. 457.50. 458.00. 458.50. 459.00. 459.50. 460.00. 460.50. 461.00. 461.50. 462.00. 462.50. 463.00. 463.50. 464.00. 464.50. 465.00. 465.50. 466.00. 466.50. 467.00. 467.50. 468.00. 468.50. 469.00. 469.50. 470.00. 470.50. 471.00. 471.50. 472.00. 472.50. 473.00. 473.50. 474.00. 474.50. 475.00. 475.50. 476.00. 476.50. 477.00. 477.50. 478.00. 478.50. 479.00. 479.50. 480.00. 480.50. 481.00. 481.50. 482.00. 482.50. 483.00. 483.50. 484.00. 484.50. 485.00. 485.50. 486.00. 486.50. 487.00. 487.50. 488.00. 488.50. 489.00. 489.50. 490.00. 490.50. 491.00. 491.50. 492.00. 492.50. 493.00. 493.50. 494.00. 494.50. 495.00. 495.50. 496.00. 496.50. 497.00. 497.50. 498.00. 498.50. 499.00. 499.50. 500.00. 500.50. 501.00. 501.50. 502.00. 502.50. 503.00. 503.50. 504.00. 504.50. 505.00. 505.50. 506.00. 506.50. 507.00. 507.50. 508.00. 508.50. 509.00.

the serum from no other animal. The serum containing a precipitin, which will react with a given kind of blood, is called an anti-serum for that species: thus we have anti-ox serum, anti-sheep serum, anti-human serum, etc.

The value of this precipitin test in distinguishing human blood, or blood stains, is at once apparent. Careful experimentation has shown that watery extracts from old stains act precisely the same as the serum from fresh blood of the same species. The age seems to make no difference with the reaction; blood stains on various objects in the collection at Scotland Yard, some of them thirty years old, gave positive tests with human anti-serum, showing thereby that they were human blood stains. There are only a few animals whose blood is at all likely to be confused with that of man; these animals all belong to the monkey family, and confusion with them in this country is very improbable. Stains on metals, cloths, almost all kinds of leathers, and earth, are readily identified. Certain chemical agents and high temperatures act on blood in such a way that this test can not be applied, and under any circumstances the examination must be conducted with adequate precautions and by one skilled in the technique of the test.

Uhlenhuth made a number of rigid examinations of materials furnished him by the German public prosecutors, and in every case he was able to correctly establish the presence or absence of human blood. In some instances, where the blood was not that of man, he was able to say from what animal it had been obtained. The test has been used in legal practice in a number of European countries, and a few times in this country; we may confidently expect its universal adoption.

□ □

$5,000 for a Short Story

WITH a view to secure not only the finest work of already famous story-tellers, but to encourage and develop younger writers in the field of fiction, COLLIER'S WEEKLY offers the following prizes for original short stories by American writers:

- A First Prize of $5,000
- A Second Prize of $2,000
- A Third Prize of $1,000

There are absolutely no restrictions as to the kind or treatment of stories. Every manuscript will be judged upon its individual merits. The stories may be of love, adventure, business, in fact anything, and they may depend upon plot, style, character, or atmosphere. It is the hope of the Editor to get the best of every kind.

I. The author must be an American by nationality or residence. As the object of the Contest is especially to bring out American fiction, we have made this condition, using the word American in its broadest sense and to include anybody residing on this continent as well as American citizens residing abroad.

II. There is no limit to the number of stories any writer may submit. That is, it is quite possible for one author to submit a dozen stories, win all three prizes, and have the remaining nine stories accepted for publication in the Weekly at five cents a word.

III. Stories may be of any length whatever, from the very shortest up to 10,000 words. The preferable length for use in the Weekly is from 5,000 to 7,000 words, but this will have no bearing on the award of prizes.

IV. All manuscript must be typewritten, laid flat, or folded in its envelope—in other words it must not be rolled. It must not be signed, but accompanied by a plain sealed envelope inscribed with the title of the story and containing a card or slip of paper with the writer's full name and address written on it. Under no circumstances must there be any word or indication on this envelope or on the manuscript itself or any matter sent with the manuscript that would divulge its authorship. No one will know who are the authors of the prize-winning stories until the judges have selected the three best manuscripts. The envelopes with the corresponding titles will then be opened, but not until then.

V. As one of the objects of this competition is to secure as many good short stories as possible, the Editor reserves the right to purchase any of the manuscripts which have failed to win a prize, but which he considers suitable for publication in the Weekly. All such stories will be paid for at the rate of five cents a word, except in the cases of authors whose recognized rate is higher than this amount, in which instance the author's regular rate will be paid.

VI. The copyright of the three stories winning prizes is to vest absolutely in COLLIER'S WEEKLY. All other stories which fail to win a prize, but are acceptable for publication in the Weekly, will be paid for at the rate of five cents a word for the serial rights only.

VII. All MSS. must be mailed on or before June 1, 1904. That is, although a story may reach us a week later than this day, should the envelope bear the post-office stamp with the name of the starting-point and the date of June 1, 1904, or any date previous to that, the MS. will be considered eligible for the contest.

Every story will be carefully read and considered, but the awards having once been made, the greatest despatch possible will be used in returning manuscripts to their authors.

The following gentlemen have consented to act as judges: HENRY CABOT LODGE, United States Senator from Massachusetts; WILLIAM ALLEN WHITE, Author and Journalist; WALTER PAGE, Editor "World's Work."

All MSS. should be addressed,

SHORT STORY CONTEST, COLLIER'S
416 West 13th Street, New York City

Postage for their return should be inclosed in the envelope containing the author's name.

Bear Cubs in Yellowstone Park

Reduced Rates to Yellowstone Park

For the season of 1904 the Northern Pacific announces a great reduction in rates from Chicago, St. Louis, St. Paul, Duluth and other Northwestern points to and through Yellowstone Park. These reductions very materially decrease the expense of the park tour.

New Hotels have been built. Old Faithful Inn, modern in every respect, constructed of logs and boulders, is located near Old Faithful geyser and is probably the most unique structure of the kind in the country and bound to become a favorite. A new and stately hotel on the banks of Yellowstone lake, colonial in style, makes this the most restful spot in the park. EACH of the park hotels now has a capacity for 250 guests, is electric lighted, steam heated and has a good orchestra.

Season extends from June 1 to September 30. Route via N. P. R., Livingston and Gardiner.

Inquire of any agent of the N. P. R. for further particulars.

Write to Chas. S. Fee, Gen. Passg'r Agent, St. Paul, Minn., and send six cents for "Wonderland 1904," which describes the park; fifty cents for "Wild Flowers from Yellowstone," a beautiful flower book; thirty-five cents for "Panoramic Park Picture," 32x48 inches, in colors, a fine panoramic representation of the park, ready June 1.

"Y and E" Vertical Filing

HERE'S THE OUTFIT YOU'VE NEEDED FOR A LONG, LONG TIME

You keep all related letters or papers in consecutive order in a manila folder.

You file the folder vertically (on edge) in this roomy oak tray, behind alphabetical guides, where they're kept upright by a sliding compressor.

Instead of a littered desk—you have all records classified.

You gain instant reference.

No. 3

Either outfit shipped to any railroad station East of the Dakotas and Missouri River PREPAID ON APPROVAL. For points West, deduct 5 per cent, in lieu of freight.

If it does not meet your needs EXACTLY, send it back. Complete Vertical Booklet No. 506 sent on request. Do you wish it?

Yawman & Erbe Mfg. Co.

Main Factories and Executive Offices

Rochester, N. Y.

New York    Pittsburgh    Washington    San Francisco
Minneapolis    Philadelphia    Boston    Chicago
St. Louis    Cleveland

The Office Specialty Mfg. Co., Ltd., Toronto-Montreal

Offer No. 3:

Large, handsome, golden oak tray (with cover) 13 in. wide x 11 1/4 in. high x 20 1/4 in. deep, outside; complete with 250 manila folders for papers 8 1/2 x 11 in.; and one set 25 alphabetical guides (A-Z)—a complete Filing System suitable for Office Managers—Department Heads—Merchants—Dealers and Professional Men of every class $6.85

Offer No. 4:

Complete tray with cover (see below)—together with 200 manila folders, one set 25 alphabetical guides (A-Z), one set daily guides (1-31), one set monthly guides (Jan.-Dec.)—an Automatic Memory Promoter (as well as a complete filing system) especially designed for Credit, Advertising and Order Departments $6.85

No. 4

$37.50 CANOPY TOP SURREY WITHOUT TOP

$31.90 RUBBER TIRED
TOP BUGGY

$22.90 RUBBER
TIRE
TOP BUGGY

$53.90 EXTENSION TOP
COMPLETE WITH TOP
FENDERS AND LAMPS

We Paralyze Competition

$15.90 for our latest 1904 style open buggy, as described in our Big Free Buggy Catalogue. Best value ever for our latest 1904 style offered in a top buggy by a reliable house.

$37.50 for our latest 1904 style offered in a top buggy by a reliable house.

$31.90 for our latest 1904 style offered in a top buggy by a reliable house.

$4.20 for our latest 1904 single buggy harness, as described in our Big Free Buggy Catalogue. Don't buy a harness until you get our 1904 CATALOGUE.

$14.50 for our latest 1904 double carriage harness, COMPLETE WITH COLLARS, 16 Double and Stretched Traces, Over or Side Check, 3/4 in. straps, as described in our Big Free Buggy Catalogue. Harness Catalogue. Buggy harnesses at equally low prices.

$22.90 for our 1904 style top buggy, as described in our Big Free Buggy Catalogue. Best value ever for a top buggy by a reliable house.

$53.90 for our latest 1904 style extension top buggy, as described in our Big Free Buggy Catalogue. Complete with Top, Fenders and Lamps, as described in our Big Free Buggy Catalogue. Cheapest price ever quoted for a complete top buggy by a reliable house.

$42.95 style ladies phaeton, as described in our Big Free Buggy Catalogue. A great offer by a reliable house.

$15.75 for our 1904 heavy double harness, complete with Collars, as described in our Big Free Buggy Catalogue. Buggy harnesses at equally low prices.

CO-OPERATION DOES IT

Send us a postal for our Big FREE 1904 Buggy and Harness Catalogue, fully describing all these vehicles, and our full line 1904 styles; also our Great Free Book explaining how Co-operation reduces the price of everything. Don't buy a buggy or harness until you get our great Free Illustrated Book. Prompt return guaranteed; never refunded if goods are not perfectly satisfactory. GOODS SHIPPED ON THIRTY DAYS FREE TRIAL.

FIRST NATIONAL CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETY, Dept. 47 J, Cash Buyers Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

Rambler

Touring Cars

Model "L" here illustrated, is the strongest and most powerful car of its weight; nothing equal to it, either in power or appearance, sold for less than $2,398.

It has full elliptic springs, two powerful brakes, 30 inch wheels and 3 1/2 inch tires, 84 inch wheel base, 2 cylinder opposed engines of sixteen actual horse-power, and carries five people over any kind of roads, in any kind of weather.

Model "L" complete with canopy top, curtains, beveled plate-glass swinging front, 4 lamps, horn and side bottom, $1,550.00 at the factory.

Rambler Cars are made in six different models, $150.00 to $2,500.00. Shall we mail you our new catalog, illustrating each style and showing why you should buy a Rambler?

THOMAS B. JEFFERY & CO., KENOSHA, WIS., U. S. A.
Chicago Branch 304 Wabash Avenue,
Boston Branch, 145 Columbus Avenue.

HOW TO GROW TALL

Any Short Person Can Now Get Taller

In order to give every short person the benefit of the wonderful discovery of Mr. Leo Minges, whereby anyone can add from two to five inches to their height, we have prepared for free distribution, a limited edition of a book setting forth in detail the secrets of getting tall and telling how anyone can accomplish it without trouble, without pain, without injury, without loss of time, and almost without expense, in their own home.

In addition to getting increased height, Mr. Minges' discovery will also enable you to improve the symmetry of your figure, to make your body strong, and to greatly better your general appearance.

If you would like to add to your height, so as to be able to see in a crowd, walk without embarrassment with those who are tall, and enjoy the other advantages of proper height, you should write at once for this book. It will show you how to accomplish these results quickly, surely, and permanently. Nothing is left unexplained. After you read it, your only wonder will be, "Why did not some one think of it before?" Address to-day

The Cartilage Company, Dept. 335FA, Rochester, N. Y.

A STUDY IN HEIGHT.

Golden Essence of Corn

Karo Corn Syrup, a new delicious, wholesome syrup made from corn. A syrup with a new flavor that is finding great favor with particular tastes. A table delight, appreciated morning, noon or night — an appetizer that makes you eat. A fine food for feeble folks.

Karo

CORN SYRUP

The Great Spread for Daily Bread

Children love it and thrive upon its wholesome, nutritious goodness. Sold in friction-top tins — a guaranty of cleanliness. Three sizes, 10c, 25c and 50c.

"Karo in the Kitchen," a new book of original receipts written for Karo Corn Syrup, will be sent free upon application. If your grocer does not have Karo, please send us his name, and we will tell you where you can get it.

CORN PRODUCTS CO.
NEW YORK AND CHICAGO

COLLIER'S

SATURDAY, APRIL 9, 1904

P. F. COLLIER & SON, PUBLISHERS, 418-424 WEST THIRTEENTH ST., NEW YORK; 10 NORFOLK ST., STRAND, LONDON, W. C. COPYRIGHT 1904 BY P. F. COLLIER & SON. ENTERED AT THE NEW YORK POST-OFFICE AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

JAPANESE CAVALRY SCOUTING NEAR PING-YANG

PHOTOGRAPH BY R. L. DUNN, COLLIER'S SPECIAL WAR PHOTOGRAPHER IN KOREA. PHOTOGRAPH COPYRIGHT 1904 BY COLLIER'S WEEKLY

After the Japanese army of invasion landed at Chemulpo, February 10, and occupied Seoul, the next step in advance was toward Ping-yang, a town a little more than half-way on the road from the capital to the Yalu River, which is the northern boundary of Korea. Ping-yang is not far from the western coast, and many regiments, landed at Chemulpo and other points nearer than Chemulpo, have been concentrated at this strategic centre. It was here that the Japanese and Chinese fought a decisive battle in the war of 1894, the Japanese victory ensuring them the mastery of Korea. That there are to be important developments from Ping-yang seems certain, because such correspondents as followed the Japanese army to that point, including R. L. Dunn, Collier's special war photographer, were "requested" by the Japanese authorities to return to Seoul "for the present." The Russians are known to have a considerable force south of the Yalu River—largely consisting of Cossack cavalry—and against these the Japanese have found it necessary to keep large patrols of cavalry constantly in the field. The first encounter between these outpost forces occurred on March 27 near Cheng-lu, a small town about forty miles south of the Yalu River and fifty miles north of Ping-yang. The Russian general Mishchenko reported that for several days the Cossack patrols had tried unsuccessfully to draw the Japanese into action and that he had therefore sent out six troops toward Chasan, where a Japanese force was reported to be. The Russians found the Japanese in the town and attacked them from an advantageous position on higher ground. But the Japanese made a gallant defence, holding their ground until infantry reinforcements arrived, when the Russians were compelled to withdraw. There were heavy casualties on both sides.

The announcement of Collier's forthcoming features will be made in the April Fiction Number, next week

THE GREAT DIVERGENCE between our two political parties historically has been on the division of power between the Government and the States. The conclusive argument of physical power has made this question a much less active one since 1865, and the Democratic party has been largely at sea for issues because strict construction of the Constitution has become a topic on which there is no longer widespread interest. Occasionally, however, we are still reminded that we are governed by that document. The REED SMOOT case brings up questions of State rights and national power. All the judges in the Northern Securities decision deny to the Government the right to interfere with certain industries where States might interfere. The Constitution, however, makes a division of power far more important and fundamental. The division between Nation and State was fortuitous. It was a compromise, and much may be said against as well as for its utility. The division of power, however, between judiciary, legislature, and executive is a cornerstone of liberty.

DIVISION OF POWER

In a despotism one group or individual enacts, adjudges, executes. Free government can not exist without some division of these powers. In the United States the courts have trespassed upon the powers of Congress, often legislating under the guise of interpretation, but there is small danger in their encroachments. When the Executive extends his power, however, it is another matter. The Presidency is very strong, even under the Constitution, and it has been constantly assuming strength. JACKSON assumed powers that WASHINGTON would not have dreamed of, and government according to CLEVELAND or ROOSEVELT would have horrified MADISON or MONROE. We are not surprised, therefore, at the howl which has gone up from the country over the President's pension legislation. The people are not yet indifferent to the nature of their government. They are not yet willing to be governed by one man. They do not wish a "boss" in national affairs. The President has much more power than the Prime Minister of England. We are not yet prepared to have him develop into an eight-year Czar.

MR. BRYAN'S ATTITUDE toward Mr. HEARST has been the cause of censure in this newspaper, and we have invited a denial of the story that Mr. HEARST paid for Mr. BRYAN's articles from Europe a sum so large as to make its acceptance unwise, considering Mr. HEARST's attempt to storm the political faction led by Mr. BRYAN. We have always been friendly to Mr. BRYAN, the more so because of the injustice with which opposing papers have treated him. Without sharing all of his economic theories, especially his financial lucubrations, we have believed in him as an honest man in whose programme there was a good deal to commend. Our comments upon his speeches abroad and immediately after his return were so enthusiastic as to suggest partiality to many of our readers. We retain, however, the privilege of praising a man most heartily one day and censuring him the next. As Mr. BRYAN's newspaper and his demeanor generally seem to us to encourage the spread of the HEARST ignominy, we have spoken of him as losing standing by the assistance apparently given by him to the yellow hunter of notoriety. Such an attitude we shall maintain as long as the facts seem to compel it. We are delighted, however, to receive from Mr. BRYAN a letter, in the accuracy of which we have absolute confidence, to the effect that the payment for his foreign correspondence was but a fraction of the reported amount, and was no more than the journalistic value of the articles. Mr. BRYAN adds that since 1896 he has devoted more than half of his time to work for which he has received no compensation, and that he has given away to politics, education, church, and charity at least two-thirds as much as he has saved; that his speeches, which outnumber his lectures, being unpaid, are an expense to him; and that his newspaper, as it loses certain advertisements for political reasons, and does not accept advertisements from trusts, pays but a modest income. It gives us sincere pleasure to know and to publish facts which remove the love of money from among the motives sometimes surmised, in order to explain Mr. BRYAN's present attitude toward his party and its candidates; and we shall be very glad if we are in future able to remove other doubts which have been recently disturbing our confidence in the disinterestedness and sanity of the Nebraska statesman.

A LETTER FROM MR. BRYAN

HAVING AN INSATIABLE APPETITE for the best in literature, alleges one correspondent of himself, he reads COLLIER's regularly; which, of course, is both enlightened and sweet of him. After such a propitious introduction, however, he confesses to having felt a shock at the amount of "venom" emitted by us upon the subject of Mr. HEARST. As we have a desire for fairness which may almost be described as morbid, we reproduce the essential part of this letter from Mr. OWEN J. KINDELON, who is President of the HEARST League of New York, and therefore to be looked upon as a spokesman of the shrinking journalistic candidate for the Presidency: "Now, I'll promise to vote for the next Presidential candidate COLLIER's advocates, if you will give good reasons why Mr. HEARST is not better entitled to the honor of the Presidency than any other candidate yet named. My reasons for preferring him are (1) that he is a workingman by choice, (2) that he has used his inherited wealth in undertaking most difficult work, and thereby giving employment to thousands of his fellow citizens. That in this he has set an example worthy of emulation—that no man is too rich to be useful. (3) That he has the grit to advocate the cause of the lowliest and to contest the aspirations of the most arrogant. For these, among other reasons, the finger of Destiny points to Mr. HEARST as the next President of the United States." To have the president of the HEARST League in our greatest city vote according to our dictation is an honor so dazzling that we proceed to give our reasons for not deeming Mr. HEARST better entitled than any other American citizen to receive the Presidency. We pass over what is euphemistically called his private life, thinking that neither the most important nor the pleasantest aspect of the candidacy. 1 and 2. He works voluntarily, instead of loafing. So does the writer of this essay. So does ROCKEFELLER. So does SULLY. So do many burglars and three-card monte men. 3. Such "grit" any demagogue possesses. It is the easiest snap in existence. Personally, we never feel so safe as when we write scathing editorials against the trusts and whoop it up for the downtrodden union laborer. Grit is precisely what Mr. HEARST most lacks. He is as cowardly as any tricky agitator of the masses. He fears his master more than a Senate slave fears the trusts. He never dares to call his soul his own. Mr. ROOSEVELT speaks against labor or against capital, according to his belief. Mr. HEARST would no more dare to speak the impartial truth on any subject in which workingmen are interested than Mr. ROCKEFELLER would about his religion. He is a hypocrite through and through—a cheap and vulgar hypocrite—who would inflict any injury upon his country if it blew him any nearer to the centre of attention. We deem him not only a small but an evil character, and if the president of the League desires any further reasons we shall furnish them at another time.

THROWING DOWN THE GAUNTLET

EVEN AS TWO PRIZE FIGHTERS express confidence in advance, so do great nations find it advisable to exalt themselves before as well as after the encounter. General KUROPATKIN's announcement that he would dictate terms of peace in Tokio, reminds us irresistibly of CORBETT and FITZSIMMONS. The Japanese officials prove their greater instinct for propriety by humbler avowals of their confidence. The line between bragging and stating belief in a favorable outcome is drawn largely by the manner. We think of "I shall fight it out on this line if it takes all summer" not as boastful, but as a quiet announcement of intention. The Russians have been singularly frank in confiding their emotions to the world. They complained bitterly over their surprise, confessed their unpreparedness, they have been honest about their disasters, and now they are equally unreserved in announcing the greatness of their Empire, their Cossack cavalry, and their leaders. If General KUROPATKIN does dictate terms of peace in Tokio, his announcement will become historical, like GRANT'S. It may, however, find a place with the prophecy that in six weeks the French would be in Berlin. On the whole, the best time for martial grandiloquence is after the event. CÆSAR's thrasonical brag is more than equaled in self-appreciation by despatches of the greatest soldier who has lived since CÆSAR, but neither CÆSAR nor NAPOLEON has added anything to his fame by these fulminations. To take an illustration from more recent and smaller happenings, Admiral DEWEY's account of the Manila fight makes much better reading in history than Admiral SAMPSON'S Fourth of July present to the American people. The Russians, however, to return to them, have succeeded in infusing a more solemn spirit into the spectators, who now, with each week of waiting, begin to feel more the ominous vastness of one combatant. Until much hard fighting has been done, opinion about the outcome will be mere guesswork, although your average man will, as usual, be absolutely certain in one direction or the other. While human nature is so easily impressed, it is natural that military men, like statesmen and pugilists, should issue advance bulletins of their victories and their greatness.

MILITARY BOASTING

VAGUE AND EXCITING POSSIBILITIES in the Far East just now are furnished mainly by the Celestial Empire. Nobody knows what activities Japan may encourage in her unwieldy neighbor if she finds herself being overweighted by her antagonist. The European nations do not seem likely to come in. France and England are not only friendly to each other, in spite of some rancor left over from Fashoda, but they would naturally rather neutralize each other by remaining quiet than by destroying their resources and leaving Germany, who threatens each, very much increased in relative strength. Germany, for similar reasons, would rather step in and assimilate some booty, after the fighting has been done, than share in the destruction and consequently weaken herself. Russia, in her phlegmatic, or at least leisurely, manner, seems now so confident that she would hardly seek complications either by calling upon France or by threatening India, a move which the British stand ready to resent with every weapon in their hands. Conversely, England has an additional reason for rejoicing in the confinement of the contest, because she feels that India is a powder magazine that might explode with little provocation. Wars in our day are nervous performances. The news habit has so seized upon the world that public opinion and impatience, at home and abroad, must be considered in the movements of fleets and armies. Russia, in her comparative indifference to what the reading public thinks, has the advantage of being able to go ahead with coolness to execute plans which mean slow advancement. Japan, more sensitive and highly galvanized, is more eager for developments and more particular about what news is published. Such being the general situation, the most probable means by which the fight could be complicated would be the butting-in of China, secretly encouraged by Japan and by those viceroy and other high Chinese who would like to have China act as an independent power when it comes finally to making terms of peace. The world's eyes, which a while ago were turned on France and England, now look with the most intense interest upon developments in China.

WATCHING
CHINA

IS IT NOT SOMEWHAT TRIVIAL, all this talk of Mr. BRYAN's about the distinction between those who voted for him and those Democrats who differed with him on one or more issues? Is there to be no liberty of conscience within a party? Are we Americans to be two great droves of animals, with labels on us? Mr. BRYAN has done what he could to injure every prominent Democratic possibility except his favorite, of whom he says: "I regard Mr. HEARST as one of the men who are to be considered, and at present he has the largest following of any person mentioned, and is the only one who heartily supported the ticket whose friends seem to be active." Does Mr. BRYAN think that he can hold a position of honor and weight, in the world's eyes, when he says, in substance, that he will throw his influence for any kind of cheap agitator who accepted the gospel according to BRYAN, and fight to the death the noblest Democrat who might have had the misfortune to think Mr. BRYAN mistaken at times, and to have voted according to his conscience?

SUPPORTING THE TICKET

He seems to go even further than this, and to oppose Judge PARKER, who did vote for him, for the ostensible and sufficient reason that the Judge's opinions are unknown, but political relations are now such that Mr. BRYAN's hostility to PARKER must be generally regarded as connected with his friendliness to HEARST. We keep arguing, perhaps excessively, with Mr. BRYAN, because we have believed him worthy of an honorable and useful place in current history, and regret to see him occupying a position so little to his credit. That a radical party is needed, jealous of the power of wealth, careful of the people's rights, we heartily agree, and might well be found voting for such a party, wisely organized, and virtuously led. "The art of government" is not, as VOLTAIRE said it was, "to compel two-thirds of the people to pay all they can to support the other third." But nothing can do more to make impossible a powerful and progressive liberal party than the conspicuousness of the shallow and reckless element which is now so liberal in noise.

THE REAL BUSINESS MEN throughout the country, large and small, continue to offer a reassuring contrast to the Wall Street speculators. They continue to look upon the actual amount of wealth being produced in the land, and to pay less and less attention to the gymnastics in New York. Finding it easy to get what credit they need from their local banks, they are not troubled by any tightness at the financial centre. Even where business is dull it is not depressed. Local causes, such as strikes, may check activity, but there is an expectation in all such places that business will look up as soon as the temporary obstacle is removed. The business man who is remote from the feverish gambler's atmosphere of Wall Street is likely to think that the only cause which could really produce depression would be the failure of a number of crops in any one year—a real, in other words, and not an artificial, cause. By such men are affairs throughout the land in the main conducted, and they are as stable and trustworthy an element as our population has, careful, industrious, in touch with actual products and real needs, and hardly aware of what Wall Street thinks. Theirs is industry which helps to make a nation happy. It is the labor from which contentment springs, and wisdom also. It is not

SHADOW
AND REALITY

"the toil
Of dropping buckets into empty wells,
And growing old in drawing nothing up."

as speculation is. As BOOKER WASHINGTON said, the other day, in his large and simple way, a man has gone far who has learned the difference between working and being worked, and realized that the former is a privilege. We agree with Mr. CHOATE's plea that FRANKLIN's homely lessons would be well for us all to take to heart to-day. President ELIOT was in the same vein when he said GEORGE WASHINGTON considered more his duties than his rights. Never did two men belong more clearly to the industrious, clear-headed, unspeculative business type of mind than WASHINGTON and FRANKLIN did.

ARBITRATION SHOULD BE ENCOURAGED whenever the opportunity is found. If France and England can establish arbitration for five years, certainly it ought to be possible to enact such a treaty between the United States and Great Britain. Special arbitration has already been successful; American judges have decided against America; British judges have decided against Great Britain. "The United States," as a prominent American lawyer puts it, "could safely trust almost any dispute of hers to the judicial decision of the judges of the House of Lords. England would, I believe, have faith enough in the fairness of the Supreme Court of the United States to submit, if need be, its controversies to them." Arbitration can not make wars obsolete, but it can diminish them and help to render attractive the idea of peace. As Mr. JAMES BRYCE points out, it is especially useful in making it easy for contending parties to abate their respective contentions without loss of dignity, and a general provision for arbitration makes it less distasteful to refer differences, because less likely to be taken as indicating want of spirit. England has shown herself ready for such a treaty between the two great English-speaking nations, and it is to be hoped we shall not hold off much longer. There are always opportunities enough to fight, where interests conflict too sharply for adjustment. The Boer War and the conflict between Russia and Japan were not averted by The Hague tribunal. The United States need not fear that by encouraging machinery for keeping peace in adjusting minor difficulties she will ever be deprived of the privilege of going to war.

ARBITRATION WITH ENGLAND

THE SALARY OF A SENATOR was declared inadequate, during the present session, by Senator HOAR, who called attention to the fact that an amount which has remained the same in figures since 1865 has become essentially less by the increased scale of prices. Mr. HOAR calculated that in reality a Senator now receives about one-half of what he received thirty years ago, and much less than is required by the dignity and character of the office. The question is hardly practical politics, as shown by the fate of attempted "salary grabs" heretofore. In England, which is passing away from the régime of rule by upper classes, there is a possibility that members of Parliament may some day be paid. Representatives of labor are now sometimes supported by their constituents. We rejected the arguments against paid Legislatures, but have not gone to the logical conclusion of paying adequately. Our judges are similarly underpaid, and our foreign representatives also. Against the manifest injustice of such a system, through the advantages which it gives to men of wealth and the obstacle it offers to the services of poor and able men, may be put an argument of no small weight, in a time when money counts too much. Small salaries for Government representatives, like small salaries for professors, do something to combat the increased pomp of living. The manners and standards in a college town can never take their stamp from money, and possibly the small amounts that are paid to public servants have their little influence in checking the hold which a shower of money has upon the American imagination.

PECUNIARY RECOMPENSE

The transport corps at Chemulpo arranging for the despatch of military equipage and supplies to the north

JAPAN IS PREPARED FOR A LONG WAR

By FREDERICK PALMER, Collier's Special War Correspondent attached to the Japanese General Staff

TOKIO, March 4, 1904

ONE conviction here is universal: Unless Russia wishes to give up in the midst of humiliation, the war will be long. To the General Staff, planning campaigns to extend over years, the impatience of the correspondents to be at the front comes as the patter of rain on the window-pane. These master tacticians and strategists are like so many machinists directing a plant under cover. Now and then one comes out and chats politely with the inquirer, and slips back to the inner mysteries.

Once the whole powerful machine is in action, the engineers, with a Japanese smile, will pull aside the curtain. The first tableau was the diplomatic coup that caught Russia unawares. The second was the occupation of Seoul and the victory of Port Arthur. The third will be the appearance of a big army at some strategic point. Even in peace times the Japanese never say what they are doing; they announce in due time what they have done. Five men in the whole country, not more, know the plan of campaign, even in its general policy. A Cabinet officer put a question to one of the five, whose answer was: "It is better that you should not know. It will help us none if you do know, and you might, in an unguarded moment, let a hint pass your lips." The correspondent who complains must recall that Stonewall Jackson never took his own staff into his confidence.

In this land, where authority comes directly from the Emperor, one man, or a set of men, bears all the responsibility. The business of the rest is to obey. The Major-General himself may not know what is the objective of his division. He is as essentially one of the chessmen as his own privates, moved by the great players in Tokio. When a local paper says that an officer of the Imperial Guard has departed, "destination unknown," it is telling as much as the officer himself knows. Ten days ago Tokio was full of soldiers; to-day it is again a town of peace. At the office of the General Staff, where Lieutenant-General Baron Kodama, the master of the army's work, its plans, and its ambitions, still remains, the mill grinds with the same regularity and fineness as in time of peace.

The Imperial Guard has gone, "destination unknown." The next tableau will show them in action. The system that carries them from Tokio to Korea or Manchuria seems almost as obscure to a foreigner as that of Caesar's transports. Ten days ago trooper-packed trains were running out of Tokio; the nearby villages were alive with flags. By way of welcome the artistic ingenuity inborn in every Japanese gave the inspiration of its patriotism full play in decorations. Little crowds gathered to cheer the glimpse of a uniform. Now the regular train schedule is being re-established and a newcomer, who looks out of the window at the figures, turning the ground for the sowing, might well ask if the country was really at war. This total absence of confusion, heretofore considered inevitable to preparation, is the marvel that continues to impress one who waits upon the word of the General Staff to go to the front.

It is this state of peace which partly answers the question whether or not Japan can afford a long war. It is now clear that the funds will be forthcoming to keep a great army in the field for two or three years, if necessary. With the Russian navy off the seas, Japan can put back into commission all her merchant ships not actually needed as regular transports. She is conducting operations away from home. No subject of the Emperor not actually with the army need ever hear a shot fired. This people is as widely separated from the devastation of war as our own was from that in the Philippines. Three or four or five hundred thousand of her producers are absent. Of these, 150,000 are regularly in the army. To take the places of the others is an increasing population of 600,000 a year. The loss from interrupted human industry, then, is inconsiderable. As much land will be tilled this year as last. Japan can go on raising her silk, rice, and tea, and buying and selling in the summer of 1904 as she did in the summer of 1903. The excess of consumption due to the army will give an impetus to production. Most of what the army uses, outside of flour, meats, and some ammunition, will be produced entirely at home. The old saying that no nation that ever wanted to make war was kept from it by lack of funds has a sound economic basis.

This nation wants to make war. Every man, woman, and child is for bloodshed without end till victory comes. In national finance at such a time, belief is the most valuable asset next to productiveness. If the people distrusted the Government; if they hoarded their gold and refused to subscribe to the war bonds, then we should already be in the midst of a crisis. The contrary is magnificently true. To a war overseas are brought the sacrifices which are supposed to go with a war against the invader; such sacrifices not in the last ditches, but at the outset, when victory is in the air, as the South made in the Civil War, and Frenchmen made in 1870. Joined with this is peacetime production. When a people stand ready to give to the Government their daily earnings and the sale of their products, the nation need borrow only of itself.

In vain you may look for some class which does not regard this entry of Japanese troops into a foreign land as a matter of life and death to the home land. There are literally no "antis" in Japan. The 100,000,000 yen loan is subscribed again and again. The swelling provincial war funds are fed by the money of all classes. The coolie stakes his wages on the courage of Japanese troops; his employer stakes his business. Patriotism gives the whole land the community of interest of a club. The nobles send in their gold cups (perhaps given by the Emperor); their wives send in their jewelry, to be melted down. A certain marquis gave all his horses to the Government. When it came ward to war with Russia as a set eventuality of the same kind as final examinations to the student, they now look forward to a long campaign which shall test their resources and patience. So they settle down to their sinister programme. In a month the news of conflict has become a set part of national life. The Treasury plans for a two or three years' campaign with the same inclusiveness of all possibilities as the General Staff. Heavy shipments of gold may affect the confidence of foreigners, of course; it was foreign exchange that sent the gold abroad. Square-jawed Japanese composure in this, as in its naval strategy, knows its work and the wherewithal for doing it.

The proposition to raise the taxes brings no more sign of opposition than the emergency expenses of sickness to a family; for everybody knew years ago that with the certain war increased revenue would be necessary. Heavy taxation was a thing to be expected as much as heat in summer and cold in winter. The secret of the universal sacrifice is the Emperor himself. In America, where the abundant resources have yielded vast fortunes for some and great prosperity for all who are energetic, few ever think of how much the nation has done for us. The Japanese go further than this. In a land where every mouthful of food comes grudgingly from the earth, there is a sweet temper grateful for small favors.

Scratch your man of position deep, and you find that with the humbler classes he feels the paternity of the empire as the subject of no other nation can and does. Instead of thanking fortune for luck or prosperity, or for the daily bread you earn by the sweat of your brow, this people thank the Emperor. When Admiral Togo, in response to an Imperial message, says, "We are grateful that almost all the officers and men who undertook the task returned safely by the unseen power of protection of your illustrious Majesty," the phrasing means the same as our thanks to God for success. The Emperor gave them the land and national life, so that all heroism is merely paying a debt of love and gratitude. The Japanese idea of the joys of eternal life is limited to the joy of dying for his land. Beyond the grave he expects none of the rewards which excite the courage of the Turks.

In one respect, this war is carrying us back to the days when unconquered new worlds were plentiful, and England, France, Spain, and Holland fought battles over distant provinces, which were no sooner occupied than they changed owners. The taking of either enemy's capital is as much out of the question as in the war of the English and the French for supremacy in North America. Russia throughout her great domain may go on with her home affairs without feeling that any possible defeat will bring the war to her doors. From her own resources she, too, can feed and clothe her army in the field, and she, too, can borrow of herself. But to her Manchuria is distant in the material self-interests which make Korea very near to Japan.

These considerations, which are borne in upon us with renewed force a month after the war has begun, when not even a skirmish on land has occurred, may make the weeks that we have waited here in Tokio for passes to join the advancing columns only the two-line prologue of a great drama. In To-kiyo we get less news, we know far less of the war than you at home. Our sources are crops of rumors and the official accounts published in the daily papers. Ever since the 15th of February the hope that we may go soon, very soon, has been held out to us by report or by the wish that was father of the report. As we do not know where the armies are going to land (or have landed) we can not precede them, if we would. You may hear one day that 100,000 men have already left the islands; the next day the number has gone down to 50,000 or up to 150,000. There is to be one great force moving north from Korea, according to one rumor; there are to be armies advancing on Vladivostok and Port Arthur, and from the Yalu at the same time, according to another. The whole truth is known

A JAPANESE REGIMENT MARCHING THROUGH THE JAPANESE QUARTER OF SEOUL

The first brigades of the Japanese army of occupation were landed at Chemulpo on Feb. 8 and 9, and part of the force was immediately rushed to Seoul by train. Three days after they were disembarked from transports, the buglers of the Japanese infantry were making music in the streets of the Korean capital to the carriage pair, madam protested a little. "My husband was never so angry with me in all my life as with that piece of selfishness," she said afterward. If you at home would understand how the individual regards national affairs as his personal affairs, consider that a foreign force had taken New York, Philadelphia, and Washington and was marching inland. Then the Rockefellers, the Morgans, the Vanderbilts, and the Goulds would contribute their millions to defend their property. The Japanese millionaire has no selfish interest beyond the expansion of Japanese trade, which will follow Japanese successes. But he is a Japanese before he is a millionaire, just as the coolie is a Japanese before he is a coolie.

Even as for nine years this people have looked for-

Refugees from Port Arthur in the streets of Shanghai

Russian sailors rescued at the battle of Chemulpo

SCENES IN THE STREETS OF SHANGHAI SHORTLY AFTER THE OUTBREAK OF WAR IN THE ORIENT

to smiling Baron Kodama, who has at his fingers' ends all details and the buttons that he may press to have his orders executed. But the situation is not unusual. Our public was in the dark six years ago when transports were waiting at Tampa, and the army of correspondents was consumed in the fire of its own curiosity. This is the period of plans for the army and of impotence for the correspondents; the period of action for both is coming. The man who starts from New York a month hence may be in time for the first great battle.

The correspondents at Tampa had the privilege of receiving the rumors in their own language, not in one which is so difficult in its reading, if comparatively easy in speaking, that not more than twenty men in Japan can get sense out of a newspaper report. You get nothing direct. You are as dependent upon an interpreter for your knowledge as you are upon a cook for your food. In the Government offices are a few who speak a foreign language. At the General Staff is Captain Tanaka, who should be famous the world over, if he is not already. He surprises linguists by his command of languages, attaches by his military knowledge, diplomatists by his diplomacy, and correspondents by his mastery of human nature.

In height, Tanaka is five feet two or three inches, and he is as erect as a German drill sergeant. He is never absent from the Staff office, and the instant you send in your card he appears, coming smartly along the hall, smiling as if it was the greatest pleasure in the world to meet men who are after favors. He can understand any kind of English, from Shoreditch to Glasgow, from Mississippi to Maine. He remembers the correspondent's name the first time he hears it, and all who are employed on the same paper. Americans say he is a good American; Englishmen that he is a good Englishman. He laughs with his alert, snapping eyes, which find something of interest in the most trivial things. Some acute men think that they have quizzed Tanaka to a purpose. My opinion is that Tanaka was only having a lark with them.

He knows a joke even when it is subtle as readily as he knows whether or not you have read military history. We even "jolly" him a little, and he takes it in good part. He may get tired, like common mortals; but I have never seen him when he would not throw back his head and appear as interested as if he had just awakened on the first sunny morning for weeks. He is the alertest, quickest, most energetic little man in Japan, outside of Baron Kodama, and that is why he was made aide to Kodama. The two together weigh about as much as the average Occidental, and they have the vitality of about fifty average men. If Napoleon had seen Tanaka walk across a room, I am sure that he would have put him on his staff at once. In selecting him as the go-between of publicity and military secrecy, the Japanese have shown their usual judgment of a man to fit a place. He cushions the stone wall of diplomacy with his affability. He can say "I don't know," and make you feel as if he had given you a cyclopaedia of information.

Officially, the correspondents are now in the General Staff's hands. You first made your application to the Foreign Office through the Legation. Three weeks ago the word came to send in the names of your interpreter and servant at once—an official "at once." This looked business-like. It kept up the spirits of the hotel lobbies for ten days. Then we learned that our applications were passed on and duly turned over to the War Department. A week ago, the Foreign Office informed us that passes would be issued soon, and the lobbies were as cheerful as a garden party. When the passes came they were entitled "Certificate of Permission to Accompany the Army," and they said that the named person was permitted to follow the — Division. An attached slip of rice paper read: "The bearer is requested to inquire of the Military Staff Headquarters as to the name of the division to which he is to be attached and the date of departure, and to request the name of the division to be entered upon this certificate." Immediately, everybody went to the General Staff. Tanaka was a little surprised. "We will let you know as soon as you may go," he said, as if he regretted the inconvenience of the coming—to men who wait and pray for departure. His manner I can not describe; it was the height of art in easing a fall and making you think that you had struck on your feet.

"Will it be two or three weeks before we go?" I asked. "If so, I think that I will run up to Nikko and look at the temples."

Tanaka laughed. "Two or three weeks! That is a long time," he said.

"Two or three days, then."

"Perhaps!" Tanaka laughed again, and I thought almost mischievously, if politely, "You must be patient," he added.

Occasional plays with words with Tanaka form the oasis in this desert of waiting.

CAPTAIN CROWN, COMMANDING THE "MANDJUR"

THE RUSSIAN GUNBOAT "MANDJUR" IN THE HARBOR OF SHANGHAI

This vessel was very nearly the cause of serious international complications by the refusal of her commander to leave port after hostilities between Japan and Russia had begun

PHOTOGRAPH BY JAMES F. J. ARCHIBALD, COLLIER'S SPECIAL WAR CORRESPONDENT. PHOTOGRAPH COPYRIGHT 1904 BY BELL & HOWELL

If I could speak Japanese as well as he speaks English, I might satisfy my ambition to get nearer the heart of this subdued people who take a war of life and death with stoical calm. A hardware dealer, when he told me of his thriving business in the native short knives, struck no Gallic attitude. The knife is not in the regulations. Its ready sale speaks of the aggressive individuality of the Roman legionary reincarnated in a bronze skin and slant eyes, who, if he is surrounded, counts upon taking heavy toll with quick thrusts before he is killed, thus adapting to modern conditions the resoluteness of the hara-kiri.

The mind of the masses finds these little knives more to its fancy than the strange rifles which carry bullets over great distance. In reading the bulletins of naval action, it is the doings of the torpedo boats that are followed most closely. The "water thunderbolts," as they call them, appeal to the imagination of a people small in stature, living in small houses, more than battleships. Their admiration always would be with the sling-thrown stone or the deft sword-thrust, rather than with the smashing blows of the battle-axe that brought down the giant.

SHIP WHOSE CLAWS WERE CLIPPED

Collier's correspondent describes the delicate situation at Shanghai before the "Mandjur" was dismantled

THE Russian gunboat Mandjur is now a dismantled and harmless steamship lying in the harbor of Shanghai, but there were possibilities of trouble enough when she swung at anchor in a neutral port armed to the teeth and with a Japanese warship lying outside the harbor waiting for her to come out. The following letter from the special correspondent of COLLIER'S WEEKLY at Shanghai, James F. J. Archibald, was written at the time when the situation was most delicate and before the disarming scheme had settled matters, safely at least, if not satisfactorily to all concerned:

"The presence of the Russian warship Mandjur here in Shanghai Harbor has stirred the representatives of the various nations represented here to a telegraphic activity that has almost blocked the lines. Despite threats, orders, and pleadings, the Mandjur rides peacefully at anchor off the Bund with absolutely no concern as to the stir she is making in the diplomatic world. At Wu-sung, the entrance port of the Yangtze-Kiang, twelve miles below Shanghai, lies the Japanese cruiser Akitsushima, also violating the laws of the neutrality of China in the most flagrant manner. Just outside the harbor lie two more of the best cruisers of the Japanese navy. They are all waiting the result of the diplomatic correspondence, and hoping that the Mandjur will be turned out to fall prey to their power.

"The Mandjur is a small cruiser of about 1,500 tons, but with an exceptionally heavy armament, carrying two 8-inch, four 6-inch, and a heavy secondary battery of quick-firing guns. Her speed is officially noted at eleven knots, but it is doubtful if she could make nine knots in her present condition. With the proclamation of war the Mandjur raised her battle flags, donned her war-paint, and made all preparations to enter the lists, but the commander, Captain Crown, tells me that just as he was heaving the anchor he received orders to remain where he was, and so he lowered his battle flags and has continued at his old anchorage, much to the annoyance of the resident Japanese officials.

"The Japanese Consul-General immediately took the matter up with the Chinese Government through the Shanghai Taotai, and received assurances that the Russian would immediately be ordered to sea. This was done, but Captain Crown considered that his orders from his own commander were of more importance, and so the order was simply disregarded. Two Chinese warships, the Hai Chi and the Hai Tien, were ordered to force the Mandjur out, and for a couple of days the excitement in the foreign settlement ran high in the expectancy of a naval engagement at their very doors, but at the last minute the Peking Government countermanded the orders. The Japanese officials then appealed to Commander Dennis H. Mahan—of the monitor Albatross, which is stationed here—through the Consul-General, asking that the United States take action in forcing the neutrality of China in compelling the Mandjur to leave. Commander Mahan refused to have any hand in the matter other than in the protection of American interests in Shanghai. Now that the entire fleet under Admiral Cooper has arrived, the matter of the protection of our interests seems to be fairly safe, but the navy apparently have strict orders to take no part in the operations, and to keep the ships well out of the theatre of action so that no complications will arise. Captain Crown says that as the Mandjur has taken no part in the operations of the war, she is not yet a combatant, and that she will now stay here until the end of the war.

"Captain Crown was born in New York of Russian and English parentage, and appears to be more English than Russian, but his sentiment has all the patri-

GENERAL IDIATE ESCORTING THE RUSSIAN MINISTER TO THE RAILROAD STATION AT SEOUL

Upon the arrival of the Japanese army at the Korean capital, February 22, the Russians were invited to leave. Minister Pavlov, with his family and the legation guard, was attended by General Idiate and a Japanese military escort who accompanied him from the legation to the port of Chemulpo, where the Russians embarked for Shanghai

ARRIVAL OF THE JAPANESE AT THE RAILWAY STATION, SEOUL, FEBRUARY 22

THE JAPANESE ARMY ENTERING SEOUL THROUGH THE GREAT EAST GATE

SAPPERS AND MINERS STARTING FOR NORTHERN KOREA WITH THE FIRST ADVANCE

There are thirteen of these battalions of sappers and miners in the Japanese army on a war footing, making a total strength of two hundred and seventy officers and seven thousand men

THE JAPANESE OCCUPATION OF SEOUL

PHOTOGRAPHS BY R. L. GUNN, COLLIER'S SPECIAL WAR PHOTOGRAPHER IN KOREA. PHOTOGRAPHS COPYRIGHT 1904 BY COLLIER'S WEEKLY

U.S.S. "Edna"

R.M.S. "Eagle"

Russian gunboat

American, British, and Russian warships laid up for the winter in mud docks

The United States Consulate

House of the Russian Administrator

The Russian garrison drawn up for inspection on the parade ground

NEWCHWANG, A CHINESE TREATY PORT DECLARED BY THE RUSSIANS ON MARCH 27 TO BE UNDER MARTIAL LAW

The Russians have been establishing themselves politically and commercially at Newchwang for several years, with no apparent intention of ever evacuating the town. The house of the Administrator shown above is a substantial and elaborate edifice of brick and stone. There are also two other fine buildings in course of construction—an administration building and a post-office. A large church is also projected. All these buildings are on the main square of the foreign settlement, which the Russians have appropriated to their own uses. (See "On Guard at Newchwang," p. 25) otic ardor of the officer of the Great White Czar. At this writing the case is just open for discussion, and it remains to be seen what will happen to the little warship. The Japanese cruiser at Wu-sung must, according to international law, remain in port until twenty-four hours after the Mandjur goes out—if she does; but as the Akitsushima is fitted with wireless telegraphy, she will simply signal the cruisers lying outside to make the attack. Thus ends the power of one of the most important of the clauses of international law. From now on the detention of a ship of war in a neutral port, to give the enemy a fair start, will mean nothing at all if there are sufficient forces to stand outside while one ship stays inside. If a fleet is making the attack, one after another of the ships could come in and stay the twenty-four hours allowed, and then go out and be relieved by another ship, which can do the picket duty.

"Refugees from Port Arthur, Dalny, Korea, and Japan have been pouring into Shanghai for the last two weeks, until it is probable that there are now more than six thousand persons of all nations, from all stations of society, and in all conditions, quartered about the town. The Russian Minister to Korea, M. Pavlov, and the members of the Legation, are here, and have taken up a permanent residence during the war, and from here M. Pavlov will continue his diplomatic work. "The French ship Pascal came in a few days ago with the paroled Russian prisoners from the two Russian ships sunk at Chemulpo, and there was an attempt made to land them; but the authorities would not allow it, as the precedent of dumping prisoners at any convenient port would be a dangerous one. The Japanese were anxious to be rid of them, and were only too glad to accept their parole and have them taken away.

Some of the officers were taken on board the foreign warships and given refuge, but the commander of the Vicksburg refused to take two Engineer officers on his ship. He had also refused to enter into the protest against the Japanese action. I met the Russian naval attaché from Japan on board the Mandjur, and he was rabidly bitter in his denunciation of the Vicksburg's action. The whole matter is that both of the belligerents hope for the support of the United States, and, not getting it, they attack from every side.

"Just what Russia is trying to do with the Mandjur it is hard to say, but the Peking Government fear that she is trying to force China into some act of war, so that she can occupy

Commander Fokshans Captain Yashita General Danoye Colonel Oshara Captain Tashita Captain Hamarovich Lieutenant Fano

LIEUT.-GEN. INOUE, IN COMMAND OF THE FIRST ARMY OF INVASION, AND HIS STAFF, AT SEOUL

PHOTOGRAPHS BY R. L. DUNN, COLLIER'S SPECIAL WAR PHOTOGRAPHER IN KOREA. PHOTOGRAPHS COPYRIGHT 1904 BY COLLIER'S WEEKLY

Chinese territory for the furtherance of her war plans. Captain Crown tells me that he will not sail unless ordered by his own Government, no matter what the local authorities say, but will blow up his ship first. The Japanese say that they will force the Mandjur out if they have to come after her up the river. The foreign commanders state that they will allow no fighting off Shanghai or in neutral waters, and if the Japanese make any such attempt they will attack their fleet. And so the matter rests, where a single shot may involve the world in a great war."

CHURCH "COURTING PARLORS"

The Parker Memorial's hospitable scheme for getting boarding-house young people acquainted

THE Theodore Parker Memorial, an institutional church of Boston, is trying to solve the problem of getting together and acquainted the young people of its neighborhood. The Parker Memorial is located in the heart of the boarding-house and lodging-room section of the city. Thousands of young men and women have their temporary homes near the church. What they need is an opportunity to get acquainted.

The Parker Memorial has undertaken to get these young people together. There is on every Sunday evening a service in the church, which, while religious, is yet arranged to attract young people. It usually consists of an address, with music, and is often illustrated by the stereopticon. After the service, the congregation is invited to a social gathering in the parlors on the same floor. Music is furnished and tea is served, and often a brief reading is given, but in general the young folks are left to their own devices until ten o'clock. The dancing classes connected with the church are valuable aids in furthering the movement. The phrase "courting parlors," used in perfect seriousness by a Boston minister in connection with the Parker Memorial's new experiment, has come to stay in Boston apparently, although those directly interested in the movement are naturally inclined to deprecate such an aggressive and literal interpretation of what is purely a big-hearted and hospitable idea. The experiment thus far has been deservedly popular, and is being watched with increasing interest by similar communities in other cities.

WHERE THE CLERKS RUN THE STORE

A department-store experiment in which the employees initiate shop rules and settle disputes

AN ingenious and original solution of the problem of employer and employee is that now found in one of the largest department stores of Boston. The proprietor of this store during his first years of business had all sorts of trouble with his help, and found that his business was not prospering. After studying the subject for a long time, he formed all his employees into a co-operative association. Into its hands he committed the absolute care and control of a club house, social hall, and library, which he donated to the employees. He exercises no supervision over that branch of the business at all, and the workers are relieved of all espionage or suspicion of it.

More important and original, however, is the fact that this co-operative association has an important voice in the management of the business. The association has the power to initiate or amend any store rule affecting the efficiency of its members. A vote on a store rule, when passed by two-thirds of a quorum of the members, goes into effect at once—subject to the veto of the firm. And even the firm's veto may be overridden by a two-thirds vote of all the members of the association. Still more interesting is the Board of Arbitration, consisting of nine members of the association, which acts in case of any dispute between the company and its employees. For example, if an employee is dismissed by the firm and a two-thirds vote of the Arbitration Board decides that his dismissal was a mistake or was unjustified, he must be reinstated. If an employee's salary is reduced and a majority of the Board decides that the reduction was not just, the salary is restored to its former figure.

This presupposes the existence of some one of the employees who must become acquainted with the business of the firm. A young woman, who is called "the social secretary," fills that position. She is really the association, and acts for it in almost every case; knows just what the firm can pay for work, and how much justice there is in the employees' claims.

The proprietor of a large concern in Dayton, Ohio, which had a disastrous strike a few years ago, has, it is said, decided to try this scheme, and believes that if he had tried it before there would have been no strike. The trouble in his case was that the firm seemed to say to its employees, "See all these nice things we give you!" In the Boston scheme the offensive element of paternalism is removed.

SHARKS MUST LEAVE POOR LO

Congress and courts' decisions are driving land-grabbers and corrupt officials to cover

FROM being a helpless, persecuted dependant, driven about at the will of grasping white men, the Indian is beginning to find himself provided with a host of friends eager to protect his interests. Hardly had

M. DELCASSE

France's Minister of Foreign Affairs, who has held this post under four administrations,—a towering figure in French politics the report of the President's investigator, C. J. Bonaparte, on the charges brought against the "Dawes Commission" been made public, when Congress began to consider two amendments to the Indian Appropriation bill designed to protect the tribes from dishonest officials and to prevent collusion in the sale of mineral rights in the Indian Territory. Now, Judge Raymond, Territorial Judge of the Western District of the Indian Territory, is sustained in his opinion that parents and guardians can not lease land allotted to States, directly or indirectly, to purchase, lease, or have any interest in Indian lands, the distribution of which is in any way pending in the branch of the Government service in which he is employed until after two years after the expiration of such employment."

In the case before Judge Raymond, a tract of land belonging to a Creek minor had been leased to a company of land sharks for 15 cents per acre per year! The land was good and growing splendid crops. The father who signed the contract could not write his name. Judge Raymond's decision affects more than 80,000 citizens and 20,000,000 acres of land. Three-fourths of this vast area has been allotted to minors.

LEVIATHANS ON THE LAKES

Ore-bearing steamship, big as Atlantic passenger liners, completely built in four months

THE American Shipbuilding Company has just completed a feat in construction, at its Lorain, Ohio, yard, that would have challenged the best efforts of any shipyard in the world. On December 1 the company began the construction of a 560-foot steel steamship. The vessel was to be ready to sail in April. Building a steamship of the same length as the Atlantic liners, the Philadelphia and New York, in four months, is work of wonderful speed, but it excited little comment on the Great Lakes, where everything is done in a hurry.

Salt water men have been inclined to poke fun at the vessels of the Great Lakes, but the size of this steamship cannot fail to impress them. Only 30 of the fleet of 96 transatlantic passenger steamers are longer than this lake boat, and only two of those vessels, the Finland and Kronland, were built in this country. Only five longer keels have been laid on this side of the Atlantic.

The new lake steamer is 56 feet wide and 32 feet deep, and on a draught of 18 feet she will carry 9,500 gross tons of iron ore. She will have 33 hatches, through which she can be loaded with iron ore in an hour. It will be possible, working at the speed record, to unload the 9,500-ton cargo in about five hours. The original date of her launching was April 1, which was changed later to April 9.

THE MAN WHO PILOTS FRANCE

Delcasse, France's famous Minister of Foreign Affairs, will stay though Ministry falls

FRANCE'S sympathy for Russia in the present war and the delicate situation in which she is put because of it, the intrigues against the Combes Ministry and the investigation now being carried on into the administration of the Navy Department, all combine to make the position of M. Delcasse, Minister of Foreign Affairs, more than usually interesting. That this famous Minister will remain, whatever happens, seems to be assured, and he may yet have need for as delicate diplomacy as he used in assisting in the peace negotiations at the close of the Spanish War, and in avoiding war over the Fashoda incident. "A rumor spread recently," writes our Paris correspondent, "among the brokers in Throgmorton Street, London, that M. Delcasse was on the eve of resigning the portfolio of Minister of Foreign Affairs for France. There was an immediate break in European securities. The explanation is that M. Delcasse is reckoned among diplomats as the greatest Foreign Minister in Europe, and he is notably a man of peace. I saw M. Delcasse recently at the time of an interpellation in the Chamber of Deputies on the Government's policy toward Morocco. When I entered the box in the gallery to which I had been assigned, the Chamber was involved in a monotonous debate, which closed the moment M. Delcasse, black portfolio in hand, appeared at the door. He is short and thick, his hair is closely cut, and he has a bristling moustache. He is near-sighted and always wears a pince-nez. In uniform, he would be the typical soldier of France. His eyes are quick and intelligent, and light up what would otherwise be a plain face.

"The debate turned to foreign affairs, and the Deputy who had deposed the interpellation attacked the policy of the Government. Then M. Delcasse arose. He did not ascend the tribune, but stood beside his desk, half-turned toward his critics and his friends. He is not an orator, that became immediately apparent; but this is due, in part because his duties do not permit his tongue to reveal all that his brain knows, in part because he speaks too emphatically, if in somewhat involved sentences.

"When he mounts the tribune, however, and reads a paper which he has carefully prepared, the expressions are pithy and direct. They leave no doubt what the Minister really means, and if there is question for

A BIG BLAZE IN NEW YORK'S FINANCIAL DISTRICT

Two office buildings at 59 and 61 Broadway, occupied by the Adams, the American, and the Morris International Express Companies, were burned on March 26, with a total loss of $500,000. This fire, in the heart of the downtown business and financial district, gained such headway that the rarely used "two nines" alarm called to the scene all the fire apparatus in New York south of Fifty-ninth street, including thirty-two engines.

minor children without a competent court's approval. Mr. Bonaparte found that members of the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes were taking advantage of their presence in the Indian Territory to form connections with companies organized to deal in tribal lands. One of these corporations, according to the statement made by Judge Townsend of the Southern District, has leased more than 350,000 acres of land; others have gained control of tracts varying in size from 25,000 to 50,000 acres. What Congress is asked to enact into law is a provision making it unlawful for "any person now or hereafter in the employ of the United a moment, it is dispelled by the spasmodic jerk of his forearm. His explanation in regard to Morocco was satisfactory to the Deputies as well as to the diplomatic representatives of Great Britain, Italy, and Spain. Gathering his papers closely to his bosom, M. Delcassé left the Chamber, and as he went out he received an ovation from the floor as well as the gallery.

"In June next he will have served five years in his present position, and will have directed the external policy of the Republic under four administrations—an unprecedented feat. He entered the Foreign Office at a critical stage in American history. Spain had been defeated in the Philippines, and was on the eve of losing her squadron at Santiago. By reason of proximity and French holdings of Spanish bonds, France's sympathy for Spain was great. For both the belligerent countries M. Delcassé entertained feelings of admiration, and he determined to restore peace, if possible; he diplomatically paved the way for Spain to request that France use her good offices. This in itself was a delicate task, for Spanish sensibilities could not brook the idea of begging for peace. Having obtained Spain's consent to act, M. Delcassé then sought to ascertain whether President McKinley was willing to negotiate, and, in order to get the best terms possible for Spain, it was necessary to keep from the United States all idea of the absolute powerlessness of the Castilian kingdom. Another difficulty Delcassé had to encounter was the jealousy of other European powers, which desired joint instead of isolated mediation. He successfully evaded pitfalls, and M. Cambon signed the preliminary peace protocol in Washington. When the Commission to arrange terms of peace assembled at the Quai d'Orsay here, M. Delcassé, in the happiest possible manner, brought the American and Spanish Commissioners together, and throughout the deliberations aided in removing obstacles which might easily have wrecked the negotiations.

"How M. Delcassé avoided war over the Fashoda incident, in spite of the frenzied anti-English outcry of the Paris press; how he forced Turkey, by a naval demonstration, to comply with French demands, which had been persistently put off; how he dealt with the Chinese and Siamese questions, to the profit of his country, and how he has restored cordial relations with Italy, are all matters of recent history. There are two points remaining which must be touched upon to show the tendencies of the Minister. Of the Franco-Russian alliance, he has been an ardent and consistent advocate. The weight of his influence will be thrown for Russia, but he will try to avoid war, if honorably this can be accomplished. His pacific views were displayed in connection with the Fashoda incident and again in Siam, and by his successful efforts to remove all questions in the relations of France and Great Britain, France and Italy, and France and Spain. With each of those countries he has negotiated a treaty of arbitration, supplementary to the general convention of The Hague, and he has initiated negotiations of the same character with the United States. These treaties are harmless, for they specifically except from their application questions affecting national honor and territory, but they may be appealed to, and in any event they show that friendly relations exist between the signatory powers. M. Delcassé made frequent efforts to avert the Russo-Japanese War. His representations to Russia were couched in the most delicate language, and it is no secret that he was kept advised by Russia of every step in the negotiations.

"When a young journalist, M. Delcassé was walking with a colleague along the bank of the Seine near the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. 'That,' he said, in a tone of conviction, 'is where I shall be one day.' Had his friend been a prophet, he could have predicted: 'You will realize your dream of a greater France, and that dream will come true through you, the foremost statesman of Europe.'

"There is one honor still in store for the son of the humble court bailiff at Palmiers, a small town situated at the foot of the Pyrenees, where the Minister was peachment, Senator Hoar of Massachusetts, and Senator Blackburn of Kentucky.

The only way by which a Federal judge can be removed from office is by impeachment, and he is liable to impeachment when he commits "high crimes and misdemeanors," a somewhat vague term and to be interpreted according to circumstances. In the case of Judge Swayne, he is charged with having been corrupt and influenced by personal considerations in administering justice.

The Constitution provides that at the impeachment of the President the Chief Justice shall preside, but in the impeachment of any lesser official it has not been the custom for the Chief Justice to take charge of the proceedings. The form followed is the same in all cases.

The House having decided that sufficient grounds exist for impeachment, and the House under the Constitution has the sole power to originate impeachment proceedings, it appoints a committee to impeach the accused before the Senate, and to demand that that body hear the impeachment. The committee then prepares articles of impeachment, which are submitted to the House. The House, after having approved them, directs the committee, known as the managers on the part of the House, to conduct the trial before the Senate.

Formal notice is served on the accused to appear on the appointed day before the Senate in person, and by counsel if he so elects, when the Senate resolves itself into a high court of impeachment. Every member of the Senate takes a special oath to do justice according to the Constitution and the laws of the land. The accused is then arraigned before the bar of the Senate, and is required to plead to the articles of impeachment, precisely as any other person charged with crime in any other court is arraigned and enters his plea to the indictment which has been found against him by the grand jury. The House of Representatives is both grand jury and prosecuting attorney, while the Senate is judge and petit jury.

After the accused has pleaded not guilty the Senate appoints a day for beginning the trial, which is conducted according to the usual rules of evidence; the managers on the part of the House prosecuting, and the Senate hearing the evidence as would a jury, and, like members of a jury, having the privilege to ask questions of the witnesses so as to make clear any point about which there may be obscurity. If any difference of opinion arises among the Senators during the progress of the trial as to the admission of evidence, or such other matters as would be decided by the judge in a regular court, the chamber is cleared and the matter is discussed behind closed doors, a ballot is taken, and the majority prevails. After all the evidence has been submitted, the managers on the part of the House have made their argument, and the counsel for the accused has been heard, the Senators in secret reach their verdict in the same way that a jury would, and the decision is made public. The Constitution provides that no person can be convicted by a court of impeachment without the concurrence of two-thirds of the Senate. The court has no power to punish otherwise than by depriving of his office the person found guilty, who is then liable to civil or criminal prosecution like any other violator of the law.

The most notable impeachment trial in this country was that of President Andrew Johnson, who was acquitted. In 1804 Associate Justice Chase, of the Supreme Court of the United States, was impeached, a trial which ranks second only to that of Andrew Johnson. The impeachment of Secretary Belknap, in 1876, is the one impeachment of recent times, and from the beginning of the history of the United States down to the present day only three Federal judges have been impeached.

THE BURNING OF WINTER AT ZURICH

At the approach of spring the people of this little Swiss city on the shore of the Lake of Zurich make a grotesque effigy to represent the old winter, and burn it at the stake in the public park near the water's edge with holiday festivities.

born. He is destined to become the head of the Ministry, a post he might already have occupied, but to which he may surely now expect to be swept by the Republican majority of which he is a member."

JUDGE SWAYNE'S IMPEACHMENT

How proceedings for impeachment are conducted by the Senate and House of Representatives

WASHINGTON is more interested in the impeachment proceedings against Judge Charles Swayne, of the Northern District of Florida, than it has been in anything else for many a day. This is largely because of the novelty of impeachment proceedings to members of Congress. There has been no trial for impeachment

Gen. Geo. W. Davis. Rear-Admiral J. G. Walker, U.S.N.

THE PANAMA CANAL COMMISSION

This board, consisting of the foremost American engineers, will direct the construction of the Isthmian Canal and have the responsibility of expending to the best advantage the $150,000,000 appropriated for the work. It will also fall to them to solve more difficult engineering problems than have ever before been confronted in this country for the past twenty-eight years—not since 1876, when Secretary of War Belknap was impeached in connection with the Post-Trade-Fraud. It is somewhat striking that of the men now in Congress there are only two who took part in that im-

“TEIKOKU BANZAI!”—

ENTHUSIASM AT KOBÉ UPON THE DEPARTURE OF A

Photograph by James H. Hare, Collier's Special War Photo

G LIVE THE EMPIRE!"

RAIN FOR UJINA, A PORT OF EMBARKATION FOR KOREA

the Japanese General Staff. Copyright 1904 by Collier's Weekly

Daughters of Desperation

The Adventures of Three Fair Anarchists, an Obliging Young Man, and a Dog

A STORY IN FIVE PARTS—PART FIVE

By HILDEGARD BROOKS : : Illustrated by CHARLOTTE HARDING

One day Maurice Silsbee, the promised groomsmen of his friend Spoffard, who that same day is to marry Miss Ina Bushnell, comes upon three young ladies in a garden adjoining the Bushnell property. These, the Misses Dacey, Houghton, and Halliburton, avow themselves members of an anarchistic society presided over by one Stepnovo. They design, for the benefit of the Cause, to rob Miss Bushnell's wedding silver-chest, and for this purpose have hired the professional burglar Gardiner. Silsbee, appearing at the hour when Gardiner is expected, is mistaken for him and thus initiated into the secret. While impersonating the criminal, Silsbee tries to dissuade the Daughters of Desperation from their purpose. But when the real burglar arrives Silsbee is found out, overpowered, and locked in the cellar. Gardiner, however, fails the young ladies at the critical moment, so that they are obliged to appeal to their captive for aid in carrying off the heavy chest. After some parley with Miss Halliburton he consents. The party drive with the stolen box to a railway station, whence it is expressed to town subject to the order of a fictitious person. Returning home, the young ladies discover that Silsbee's little dog must have been nailed up with the silver. Should the chest be seized by the police, the dog might furnish them with a clue. It therefore becomes necessary to warn Stepnovo (who is waiting to receive the box), and this Silsbee volunteers to do.

CHAPTER IX

THE sunset lights had flitted to the highest buildings before I found the house on West—th Street, the address given me by the ladies in Keswick. There was a general atmosphere of being closed up and gone away for the summer about the whole block. It was perhaps as quiet a place as Stepnovo could have found in the city, for his business of smelting stolen silver.

I used my pass-key and entered a dim and quiet lower hall. Avoiding the elevator for fear of being challenged, I sneaked upstairs in unhappy trepidation, and was glad to reach the door with the cards of my fellow-burglars. Swiftly and noiselessly I used my second key and let myself into the apartment.

Both on the ground of personal safety and because of curiosity, I desired to take Stepnovo entirely by surprise. He was to have no time to jump on me. I meant to do all the jumping. Further than that, I meant to take a good look at the man before he became aware of me.

The passage was rather dark, lighted only by transoms over the closed doors on either side of the hall. At hazard I tried the first door to the right and thereby entered the kitchen. It seemed to be in good order, though it had evidently been lately in use. I saw no signs of crucibles and furnaces, however, and Stepnovo was not there.

From the kitchen, through a dark pantry, I entered the dining-room. Here were the remains of a modest luncheon upon the table: a few leaves of lettuce, crumbs of brown bread, and a wine-glass that had contained claret. Still there was no sign of the man himself.

Through an open door I peered cautiously into the next room; it was large, its width being the width of the house, and pleasant with the light of several windows and attractive by the home-like and unconventional charm of its furnishing. Still I saw no Stepnovo and was about to withdraw to search the chambers on the left side of the hall, when I caught sight of a partially curtained alcove in which stood a couch. There lay a figure stretched in sleep.

Noiselessly I advanced, gently I drew aside the curtains to get a light on his face, and then I stood transfixed in consternation.

Stepnovo was a girl!

A wonderfully pretty girl it was, moreover! She lay in the lovely relaxation of deep sleep. Her dark, glossy hair showed black against the yellow silk cushions of the couch, and an unreal and delicate light played on her features. She was exquisitely dressed and had unfastened her collar in lying down, so that her round white throat was bare.

I stood for a long while regarding her, moon-struck in admiration. There was not the glimmering of an idea in my head as to what I had to do next. Still she slept, her breath coming light and soft as a little child's.

I decided that, danger or none, I could not be so rude as to waken her, and resolved to step back into the dining-room and wait till she awoke of her own accord.

I resolved it, I say; yet minute by minute slipped by and I still prolonged my fascinating watch. I had never before noted the awful beauty of sleep nor felt its mystery. While my gaze, as by hypnotism, was fastened to her lids, I speculated on the lustre of those eyes so close behind that delicate veil of flesh. They were unseeing now, their soul in dreamland; yet the next flash of time might bring them back, those lids might be raised, and I be transfixed.

Evening was falling. Slowly the light on the sleeper's face grew more dim. To lose not a line of it, I bent further over. I held the curtain back as far as I might—

Suddenly I was grabbed from behind, gripped about the neck and almost choked.

The real Stepnovo at last!

With the output of all my strength I hipped my unseen assailant, and he, surprised into losing his first advantageous hold on me, went down. I was on top of him, but I found him pretty game. If this was Stepnovo, he was rather more spirited than prudent in going for me so desperately. How did he know but that I was the chief of police come for him in person?

It was no wrestling; it was a free fight. We were each bent on pummeling the other, and the girl sat up and wailed. But I was the heavier man; in about thirty-five seconds I had proved superior science. I had my man fairly down, and was punching him thoroughly, when suddenly the gas, lighted by the girl, flashed a light on his face and I gazed down upon the still recognizable features of my old friend, Fred Spoffard.

He knew me at the same instant, and we both arose. For a long moment we were engaged with our handkerchiefs. The lady was making no end of a fuss over Fred's little bruises; I betook myself quietly to the kitchen sink and managed alone. Then I went back to the front room.

"Well, old man, we made a mistake, I guess," said Fred ruefully. "I'm awfully sorry, you know. I didn't know you, of course."

I was relieved to find him in the mood to apologize; it seemed to let me out.

"It's rather an unfortunate meeting," I said; "but won't you present me?"

"Ina, this is Silsbee—our best man, my dear, who had the snake-bite," explained Spoffard genially. "Maurice—my wife."

She looked at me as if I were no end of a monster. I was very unhappy.

"Why did you fight?" she cried. "What happened?"

"It was my fault, dear," said Fred humbly. "You see, after you went to sleep I got confoundedly thirsty, and I thought I'd just step out and have a drink, and I suppose I left the door open (eh, Maurice?) and you walked in."

I nodded basely. I seemed to be hurled along by the hand of fate, and only asked myself dazedly, "Is Josh in this?"

"And so when I came hurrying back—I wasn't gone five minutes, Ina—" (The scamp! I had been there a half-hour myself.) "I found him in the room, and it was rather dark, and I naturally tackled him. I thought he was Stepnovo."

Mrs. Spoffard looked far from satisfied.

"Men are always shielding each other," she said sternly. "Has this fight nothing to do with the snake-bite medicine?"

"Good heavens!" I exclaimed, aware now what had been the nature of Miss Halliburton's sufficient excuse for my non-appearance at the wedding.

"How heartless you are, Ina!" cried her husband. "See how you have wounded Maurice. Do you think he is the kind of man who would show himself before he had slept it off?"

"Are you sure it was a rattlesnake?" she asked me, still suspicious.

"It was a venomous serpent," I cried, thinking of Miss Halliburton—wondering whether I could ever forgive her.

"Come, come," urged Fred peaceably. "Let's drop that question altogether. We were awfully sorry, old man, not to have you at the launching; but you see we got afloat all right. And, I say, it's just like you to make a point of looking us up as soon as you got on your legs. Some fellows would have had a sort of false shame about the whole affair, you know. Now you're here to explain yourself, aren't you? Let's sit down here in the cool of the window and have a good talk. I'll just turn down this gas; there's no reason why we should get any hotter. Here's a good chair, Ina. Maurice, here's one for you. Oh, I'm all right in the window-seat here."

I sank into the chair with a sense of that awful calm that precedes the last crash of doom. How many minutes was it given to me to live a reputable and sane man in the eyes of my old friend and his lovely bride? Mrs. Spoffard seemed filled with good-natured regret for the black mistrust with which she had first greeted me. Fred having made light of his injuries, she bestowed on me her full forgiveness. I breathed deeply at the respite. Not till the morning would she know the blackness of her husband's eye—and then I would be far away.

She took occasion to speak to me graciously about the wedding gift I had sent her—and which I had stolen from her again that morning before dawn.

My mental anguish was accentuated by a profound uneasiness in regard to my mission, unfulfilled. I had yet to warn Stepnovo that Josh was in the box and had probably betrayed it; that this flat where the box was addressed was certainly the first place upon which the officers of the law would descend.

And my accomplices, waiting in Keswick for my reassuring telegram! What was their state of mind by now?

"Ina, do you think your friends would object if we smoked here?" inquired Fred of his wife.

"Dear me, no!" she returned promptly. "Stepnovo smokes every minute of his life."

"So you are visiting friends here by the quaint and charming name of Stepnovo?" I asked in a rather strained voice—so great was my effort to make it casual.

"You'd almost think he was the master of the house the way he makes himself at home here," said Mrs. Spoffard in a tone of displeasure. "But to answer your question, Mr. Silsbee; no, this flat is occupied by friends of mine, and Stepnovo is an acquaintance of theirs who seems to be living here in their absence."

"But you say yourself, Ina, you think he probably has permission to be here," put in Fred. "He is not like us, Maurice, breaking in secretly and making ourselves at home."

"Are you doing that?" I cried; and I admired the whirligig of time which so soon was bringing its revenges.

"You see I lived here last winter, Mr. Silsbee, with my friends, and feel very much at home in this flat," explained the lady; "and I still had my keys which they forgot to take away from me when they turned me out. So Fred and I came here for a lark to-day, just to pretend we're housekeeping, instead of going to the hotel till our steamer sails."

"I see! But doesn't the presence of this Stepnovo—" "Well, he isn't here now. But he has been here to-day. In fact, he was lunching in the dining-room and suddenly disappeared; whether he departed by a window, when he heard us coming, or whether he hid somewhere in the apartment, I don't know."

"And are you not afraid of this rather suspicious character?" I demanded with surprise.

"Oh, dear, no, he's a perfectly harmless lunatic," said Mrs. Spoffard carelessly. "My friends, who befriend him, call him a prophet; but you would have to know them to weigh their judgment. I know Stepnovo very well; he was here nearly every evening all last winter. Of course, I would not be afraid of him."

"But I tell you I didn't like the idea of that fellow having a key and sneaking in and out here whenever he liked," said Fred. "You can't tell about these Russian Nihilists—"

"He's not a Russian Nihilist," said Mrs. Spoffard, laughing.

"What is he?" I asked.

"Well, if I knew, I suppose I am sworn not to tell," she returned. "I took so many vows of secrecy last winter I can't remember them all. But I told the girls their secrets were safe with me; they bored me so I couldn't remember them to tell them to any one. But I do remember enough to feel sure Stepnovo is as harmless as a lamb."

"Well, I wasn't going to let him off from a licking, on general principles, when I took Maurice for him," muttered Fred.

"But now, Mr. Silsbee," she said, turning suddenly to the attack I had reason to dread, "we want your story. In the first place, how did you know where to find us?"

"Think a moment," I suggested, and in my desperation I adopted a light tone of raillery. "To how many people did you intrust the profound secret of your plans?"

"Only to my mother, I declare," said she.

"Then from whom else," I asked triumphantly, "could I have got it?"

"Oh, you've been in Keswick!" they both exclaimed. "Yes," I replied weakly, "I've been there all day. Mrs. Bushnell is very well."

I HAD MY MAN DOWN

"Had she any special message for me?" asked the daughter.

"She had," I cried, catching at a straw. I saw a way out of my fearful predicament, and now I pretended to search my pockets. I blessed the darkness that they could not see my face.

"Where in thunder did I put that note?" I muttered—perfectly conscious that I was overacting my part, yet in my extreme agitation unable to get myself in hand. "Great Scott! I've left it at the hotel; however, it's only a few steps!"

"Hold on, don't go now," cried Fred, as I hastily rose. "Yes, sit down. There's no hurry at all," chimed in Mrs. Spoffard graciously.

"Yes, it's very important I should go," I stammered, bound to get away at any cost. "You just wait quietly here till I come back, will you?"

It was a good deal to ask, since I meant never to come back. However, they promised, and I left them.

CHAPTER X

NOW I was free and intent only on putting several hundred miles between myself and these unsuspecting friends of mine; but first I meant to do my duty by Stepanov. I would assure myself he was veritably not in the flat before I left it to make my own escape. First I carefully closed all the doors between the front room and the rear of the apartment that the Spoffards might not hear me walking about. Then with a box of taper matches I made my search.

I saw some strange things. In one narrow room was a grand piano, and the bed had been drawn by pulleys to the ceiling. Evidently at night it rested on the closed piano. In another room the walls were lined with books, and the bed was not so wide as a fore-castle berth. A desk was at one end of the room, and at the other the gas fixture, so that the green, serpentine tube of the drop-light pervaded the room in an ominous, ensnaring kind of way. A third room was hung with an art student's studies. Altogether, these glimpses I had of the cells of the sisterhood were not very cheering. But Stepanov I found nowhere, and, with my last match extinguished, I was creeping down the passage to the door, when I heard low voices outside. I stopped in consternation. The door was opened, and against the lighted stairway without I recognized—not the officers of the law whom I expected, but the figures of three young women whom I knew—the Daughters of Desperation.

"Make no noise!" I warned them in a hoarse whisper. They did not start. Softly they entered and closed the door, and on tip-toe we all repaired to the kitchen. There one of the ladies made a light.

We four confronted one another under the flaring gas-jet. Their faces were wan and weary. They had evidently spent a hard afternoon.

"Why did you come?" I asked sadly. My tone was low, and Miss Dicey spoke softly in answering me:

"To see what is the matter. You didn't telegraph."

They all looked reproach, and Miss Halliburton added with a light break in her voice: "We did not know—but you were caught!"

Was this girl with tender gray eyes and lips softly parted the same who had the day before had the inhumanity to send my friend a telegram that would make me forever ridiculous? I forgot the perilous situation as I faced Miss Halliburton. Words in which I might upbraid her rose to my lips; but already the questions were pouring in on me. "Where is Stepanov?" "Have you seen him?" "How long have you been here?" "All the afternoon, haven't you?" "Couldn't you have found time to telegraph us?"

"Ladies, ladies, have mercy on a mere man like myself," I begged morosely. "Believe me, I've not been taking my ease. But the whole problem is very much complicated for me. Fred Spoffard, my very dear friend, and his wife are—"

"B-r-r-r-r! waa!" went a bell. We all started. Miss Halliburton sprang to a tube in the wall.

"What is it?" she said. A man's voice answered. She turned to us with wide eyes.

"It's the box!" she whispered tremulously. And then to the tube again—"Yes, this is the place," she said. "Bring it right up," and she jiggled a button in the wall that opened the street-door.

I felt all strength ooze out of me, and leaning against the laundry tubs I at last, and for good and all, gave myself over into the hands of my malignant fate.

Soon we heard slow steps on the outer stairs. Miss Halliburton went out into the passage and lighted the gas, then opened the door to the stairs to admit the men. Miss Houghton and Miss Dicey seemed as overcome as I myself. They had sat down clinging together on one chair, in a corner of the kitchen. I, for my part, watched the pantry door; for it was by that that I expected every instant to see one of the Spoffards enter. Surely, they would have heard the bell and answered it.

But if they heard it at all, they had no intention of being disturbed. So much for the alertness of honeymooners. If I go at all far into this business of burglary, I will do all my easy apprentice work on newly married people.

Two men staggered in with the chest. I stepped forward to settle with them. Miss Halliburton was for doing it. Between us the two expressmen were handsomely tipped and went away quiet and grinning. I think they would have been sorry to see us get into trouble.

And now the box stood in the middle of the floor, and we around it; or rather I stood up, with the screw-driver that had been thrust into my reluctant hand, while my companions knelt about the box, listening, calling softly, anxiously whistling to the dog within.

With one last furtive look at the pantry door, I began to take out the screws. The Daughters of Desperation waited breathlessly. Once, when I glanced at Miss Halliburton's face, I noted that her brow was contracted and her tears flowing freely. I knew now that these tears, in any other woman a signal of pitiful distress, were in her nothing more than an expression of excitement or of angry impatience. I reflected bitterly on my wretched weakness in succumbing to those tears the night before.

The last screw was out; we all rose to our feet. Miss Dicey held ready a moistened cracker with which to revive the famishing Josh, should we find a spark of life in his little body. With a sense of solemnity we paused and looked at each other a moment. Then I raised the lid.

Josh wasn't there! The silver punchbowl offered the hollow where he might have lain; but Miss Dicey's theory was exploded.

"He must be here!" she cried excitedly, and she threw off the excelsior and cotton that covered some of the larger pieces of silver.

At this moment the door of the pantry opened and Mrs. Spoffard appeared on the threshold. She stood transfixed with surprise on seeing us all, and the Daughters of Desperation were equally thunderstruck at her appearance. So we all stood a moment in silence and then, as our eyes fell guiltily from her to the floor, we were aware of a small dog who trotted into the kitchen before her. In one voice we cried out: "JOSH!"

"Yes, Josh," said Mrs. Spoffard, with a laugh. "The chief entertainment of our wedding has followed Fred and me on our honeymoon. Aren't you glad to see him, girls?"

Glad to see him? They dropped upon their knees

THE DAUGHTERS OF DESPERATION WAITED BREATHLESSLY

about the creature, and nearly tore him limb from limb in their eagerness to caress him. Miss Houghton laughed hysterically. Miss Dicey showered pet names upon him and reproaches that it was well her excitement made partly incoherent. Miss Halliburton, always more quiet than the others, seemed none the less anxious to handle the dog as if to assure herself she was not dreaming. As for me, I would not have touched my little hoodoo with a toe of my boot. I looked at Mrs. Spoffard; she returned my look and laughed.

I had dropped the lid of the chest and knelt on it. Now at her easy laugh it seemed to me she could not have noticed the silver; yet it had been fully exposed to her view when she entered. Had she not recognized it as her own?

"How did you get him, Ina?" inquired Miss Halliburton above the commotion of the other two.

"At Hopperville Station this morning early," she returned.

"He followed the wagon," cried Miss Dicey.

"We had been up to the Lake House for the night," continued the bride, "and we came down to take the 8:47 train to the city. We drove out to Hopperville to take it, so that we should not be seen in Keswick again. And there was your priceless treasure hanging about the station, and the ticket agent, who hates dogs, was throwing stones at him. As I already had the plan, girls, of trespassing in the dear old flat, it occurred to me to bring Josh along as a peace-offering; so that when I wrote you my confession of what I had done, I could sugar the letter with the news that I had left Josh safe with the janitor."

"And if you'll count the silver—" came Fred's voice, and he appeared beside his wife. Myself and my accomplices started violently, not at his sudden appearance, but at his words. "Don't be frightened, it is only I, the very least among you yesterday and even less to-day," he said humorously, as he greeted his wife's bridesmaids. "I say, if you count the silver you'll find none missing. We are no ordinary house-breakers, and we have scrupulously respected your property—except in the line of tea and sugar and water biscuits."

"And we washed up the afternoon teacups and put everything away," added Mrs. Spoffard. "What you'll find in the dining-room is Stepanov's luncheon. He seems to have been interrupted in the midst of it. He seems to have been making himself at home here. In spite of all the windows open I knew he had been here by the odor of his tobacco. I think, girls, if you let that man come and go as he likes, you ought to be ready to excuse the liberty of an old comrade like me."

There was an embarrassing pause. Mrs. Spoffard evidently expected some cordial reply from the ladies of the house; and she rather flushed and looked a little haughty when it did not come. Indeed, one might have taken for a sullen displeasure the despair that was written on the faces of the Misses Houghton, Dicey, and Halliburton. They stood up straight and pale now, and had at last forgotten Josh and remembered themselves. Between them and their former comrade stood the box of silver they had stolen from her. And this box Mrs. Spoffard ignored with mysterious calm. They said no word. There were a few furtive glances at me and at the chest, and then their eyes returned to Mrs. Spoffard's face with the fascination of horror.

"Of course, I had not the remotest idea you girls meant to come here to-night, or in fact this week," said Mrs. Spoffard, with rather a pretty affectation of heartiness meant to conceal her mortification. "Now we must hurry and get out of your way. Fred, where are my things?"

They both withdrew to the front room. We heard their rather animated though lowered voices. Evidently they shared the mortification and were discussing the situation.

"Oh, haven't we been abominably rude!" exclaimed Miss Dicey aghast. "I didn't know burglary would bring this in its train."

"But she is going," whispered Miss Houghton. "She didn't see the silver. We are saved!"

"But where is Stepanov?" I asked, just by way of keeping our perplexities well in the foreground.

"I think," said Miss Halliburton, "that Powell and Gardiner must have been here and warned him. They've all fled. They've no idea we got the silver."

"Then we have the whole glory!" whispered Miss Houghton.

"But we can't smelt it," said Miss Dicey.

"Mr. Silsbee can and will," declared Miss Halliburton.

"Oh, will I?" said I.

"Won't you?" she asked, and her brow gathered. I saw the menace and had an access of desperation.

"If you cry now, you sphinx, I'll tell you what I'll do," I threatened her in a savage whisper. (I don't excuse my behavior, but I must say my patience had been strained.) "I'll report the whole gang of us at the police station within five minutes."

She gave a low exclamation of rage and fright. The two others turned on me like furious little cats.

"What did you say to our sister?" demanded Miss Dicey with fire-flashing eyes, and Miss Houghton transfixed me with a coldly glittering stare of enmity.

"Ladies, we have pulled together amiably till this extremity," I said with bitter reproach. "Is this the moment to quarrel?"

"There is no quarrel," said Miss Halliburton, with sudden icy self-control. "There was simply an insult."

"An insult?" I protested hotly.

"You called me a minx. That means a forward, saucy girl," she said with trembling voice. "It is not the language I should expect from a gentleman."

"Madam, I called you a sphinx!" I cried.

"Hush-sh-hsh!" went the other two.

Then Miss Dicey pronounced rapid judgment. "If he said sphinx it's no insult, because you know you are one, my dear. And Mr. Silsbee is incapable of disrespect. We do wrong to be so peppery."

"Will he smelt the silver or will he not, that is all I care to know?" said Miss Halliburton, addressing the opposite wall of the kitchen.

"He will," I said to the faucets over the sink.

"Oh, as to this box of my silver—" said Mrs. Spoffard, suddenly coming back into the kitchen. We stood aghast. As she approached the chest, we fell away from it in guilty silence. She seemed not to notice us, but lifted the lid and calmly surveyed the contents.

"What in thunder is all this?" exclaimed Fred, coming in at that moment. His honest amazement wonderfully relieved us. We had been all but hypnotized by Mrs. Spoffard's mysterious composure.

"It's my wedding silver, Fred," returned his wife, shaking her head with a sigh as she still gazed down into the chest. "Isn't it just exactly like mamma to send it after us like this?"

We burglars looked at one another.

"So that's what you came about, Maurice, is it?" Fred asked me.

"Yes," I confessed. "I came here about the silver."

The Daughters of Desperation drew closer together as if for mutual protection. I stood up alone, unprotected save by my poor frozen smile of innocent unconcern.

"Here is another thing for which we must beg your pardon, girls," said the bride to her maids with rather a pathetic little air of formality. "This is making ourselves rather too much at home, isn't it, to have our things brought here to lumber up your kitchen? You see it was this way. Mamma didn't want the silver left in the house at Keswick. She was afraid it would be stolen. But Fred and I insisted because we knew the safe in our basement is absolutely burglar-proof."

"There is no such thing," put in Miss Halliburton, "as a burglar-proof safe. Gardiner could get into anything."

"Yes," I added hastily, "the famous Gardiner, you know, Mrs. Spoffard, is at present loose. He escaped from the penitentiary the other day."

"That's so," said Fred. "I remember seeing it, Saturday morning."

"Perhaps mamma read about it after she agreed to leave the silver," suggested Mrs. Spoffard. "And that is the reason she sent it here in such haste. This is the only address she could have reached us at before we sail?"

She directed the remark to me interrogatively—I responded with a dumb nod. At my defection the Daughters of Desperation gave little gasps.

"It's awfully good of you to bother with it, Mr. Silsbee," said the bride gratefully.

"And say, Maurice," said the groom, "since we sail so early to-morrow, I wonder if you won't just finish up the job and get this stored."

"I expected to have to see it through," I returned with calm.

"Well, we'll give you the proper papers, and you can have the stuff chucked away into the safety vaults of the bank, will you, Maurice?"

"Anything you like," I returned, and my cheerfulness was not feigned. A great and beautiful hope had dawned within me. The Daughters simply stood and dumbly wrung their hands.

"Mrs. Spoffard, there is some more of your silver left in the safe at Keswick," said I. "I packed most of it, but not all."

"Good gracious, why not?" she asked disappointedly. "Well, this chest wouldn't have held any more," suggested Fred.

"I wish it could all have been kept together," sighed Mrs. Spoffard. "Now, unless I unpack, I won't know what's in town and what's in Keswick."

"Suppose you give me a signed order to get the rest of the silver from your mother's house," said I. "Then I'll put it all together in the bank for you."

"Oh, but this is such a lot of trouble for you," she objected.

"Since I was unable to serve Fred as best man, I owe you a service," I returned with a glance at Miss Halliburton; she responded not at all. I took my notebook out and fountain pen, and wrote the following order: "Please give Mr. Maurice Silsbee the combination to our safe, and let him take all the silver out. He will deposit it in the bank for me."

"Will you sign this, Mrs. Spoffard?" I asked her.

"What's the use of being so formal?" she demurred. "Mamma didn't bother about any order for what you have taken out already."

"No, but it is for the very reason that the last deal was so irregular that I am particularly anxious to have this done in good form."

"Sign it, Ina! Maurice knows," advised Fred, and he looked over her shoulder as she wrote. "Don't forget to put on the Spoffard," he murmured anxiously.

"And now, I'll just close this chest again," I remarked cheerfully as I picked up the screwdriver.

"By the way," asked Mrs. Spoffard, as she handed me the order, "why did you open it here?"

"I thought there had been a mistake in packing it," I stammered. "This—ah—punchbowl, I thought ought to have been filled out."

"Yes, it should have," came softly from one of the ladies of the house. I was not sure who spoke.

"Why, it's all right," said Fred, scattering excitement over the whole. "A great solid thing like that wouldn't bend."

"Just as you say," I replied, as I dropped the lid. "The silver is yours, not ours."

THE THREE FAIR ANARCHISTS, THE OBLIGING YOUNG MAN, AND THE DOG

A triple sigh went up from the Daughters of Desperation.

Filled as I was with joy and gratitude over the kindly turn in my affairs, I was still alive to the feelings of my late associates. Though I had saved them, along with myself, from all the consequences of their mad act, yet I knew that at this moment, before they had brought their strong rational powers to bear on the subject, they saw in me the cause of the whole failure.

It was impossible to leave them without coming to some terms of peace. I felt the need of establishing some basis on which I might hope to see them again.

"Let us have dinner, all together," I proposed cheerfully to Mrs. Spoffard, as I put in the screws of the box. "I can get some food and drink served up here on very short notice, if you will preside."

"I should be very glad to have dinner all together," she responded readily, "but I am not the hostess here. Girls, will you all go to the hotel with us?"

"Indeed, you must all stay here and dine with us," exclaimed Miss Dicey with an anxiety that showed she was conscious her hospitality came late. "Please do, everybody. I'll send right out for dinner—"

"Please let me go out and order it," I begged. "I have some specially nice cool things in mind. You must be too fatigued with your journey to give it a thought."

"By all means let Mr. Silsbee manage everything," came Miss Halliburton's cold and level voice. "That seems to be his special talent."

Words will not describe the contained bitterness of her tone. I met her glance in which there was a bright, uncompromising hostility. As for me, my thoughts reverted to her snake-bite story, and my heart was hardened against her.

"Miss Halliburton understands me," I said in amiable tone. "I am never so happy as when I am managing things—successfully!"

The taunt struck deeply home. Her brow gathered, her head fell back in that attitude of pain and her dark eyes overflowed. She turned hastily away and left the room. I was lamed with compunction. I cared not a whit now for the feast of reconciliation. When Fred Spoffard proposed that he himself was the man to go forth in search of food for us, I promptly assented, eager only to find the lady I had offended and try to make my peace with her.

She stood at a window in the front room, looking fixedly out into the lighted street, clearly battling for calm. It was my moment. I knew if she could but once succeed in turning on me icily and with level voice, I should be cowed. (Continued on page 20)

TUBBY SMITH

AND THE TALE OF HOW HIS BUNKIE KEPT HIS WORD

By WILLIAM D. WILLIAMS

ILLUSTRATED BY GEORGE GIBBS

SOME ONE—if I remember correctly it was Chuck-a-luck Joe, the same who some months later left this vain world, going to heaven, I hope it was, in a chariot of flames, which was set afire and kept burning for the occasion by a lot of Apache bucks, under the war-chief Natchez—some one, I say, whether it was Joe or another, found a slender streak of pay-dirt at the Stillwater of the Alamos Altos, in among the mountains of the Datil, and came down to Silver City, bringing with him a bag fairly bursting with the dust of fine gold. Joe was a thirsty man, very friendly in drink, and, quite naturally, it was within the four walls of the Bucket of Blood that he drew Total Wreck Jackson aside in a corner, out of the hearing of the barkeeper, and, in honorable confidence, imparted his secret, whispering hoarsely. After which, the news spread with a rapidity which was truly amazing.

Within twenty-four hours, every fool in the town, myself among the number, had packed him up some sort of an outfit and departed secretly and alone, so each one imagined, for that Eldorado of New Mexico. I met up with Tubby Smith on the road, at the Red Bluffs of the Gila, and, after lying heroically each to the other for a whole half-day, as we followed the Datil trail, we repented, and, having become mutually truthful, told the facts, and entered into a reluctant agreement of partnership, which was good for that trip only.

Dusk was thickening into night as we limped heavily up the valley, and sat down at last at the margin of the Stillwater to wash the dirt out of the raw places on our feet. Above us, along the meanders of the stream, some half a dozen camp-fires shone yellow and red in the dark shadow of the mountains, and men went in and out of the circles of light. I remember I had been uneasy, and it comforted me to see so many gathered together on the banks of that remote creek, for which reason I went about among the fires and counted those whom I found at each.

"There are twenty-one men in the camp," I announced to Tubby Smith, when I had returned. "Twenty-one strong men, fine shots, good fighters, and I reckon we could stand off the whole Apache nation."

"Hub!" he answered, snorting with scorn. "There ain't nary cussed hostility this side of Old Mexico, an' Uncle Sam's a-guardin' the line with an army of five thousand, just as if it was real precious. It seems to me it's teetotally unnecessary, this thing of gittin' skeered so durnation quick."

I thought so, too, and went to sleep as absolutely without fear as ever I did in all my life. Yet, so it was that the very next morning early, before the chill was off the air, while the sun still hung in the jaws of the Yellow Earth Pass, Chato and his band of renegade Chiracahuas smote us as we lay there all unsuspecting, struck us as if it had been a bolt out of the blue, set teeth into our flank and hung there until we had wellnigh bled to death.

I had slept well and was mightily refreshed when I rolled out of my blanket into the frosty dawn, and stood looking up at a little violet cloud, a mere trailing wisp of opalescent vapor hanging upon the shoulder of Fool's Peak, where it caught the first rays of the sun, rising along the opposite slope of the pass. The beauty of it held me for a moment, and then I turned my head and let my eyes fall until they rested on Tinajo Pete and Little Wisdom, staking out their horses in the rich grass of a cove at the northern edge of the valley. The heaviness of sleep was still upon me, and, as I watched them, feeling for the moment almost thankful for the depths of my poverty which set me aloof and held me apart from such early and irksome tramps, all at once I would almost have sworn I saw a rock move itself along the ground, not half-way across. Of course, I knew my eyes had deceived me. I knew the appearance of motion was not real. I was no fool, at least I thought myself no such fool as to believe what I had seemed to see. I looked more closely, and there it lay, as clearly outlined as if it had been in the palm of my hand, a reddish, sandy stone, standing well up out of a clump of prickly pear which grew at this side of its base, split near the middle and fallen a little apart, leaving a wedge of a gash partly filled with earth, in which a thorny bush had sprouted, and a few blades of grass were going yellow and dying for want of moisture. It was a most natural knob of a rock, as natural and as firmly set as any I can remember to have seen. Nevertheless, I was uneasy, and whistled to keep up my courage.

Tubby Smith was pottering around, trying to start a fire out of what I was sure was the greenest, sappiest wood in all New Mexico.

I squatted down to fan the blaze with my hat, and, when I rose again, Chuck-a-luck Joe and another were some hundreds of yards up the creek, casting for trout, and, at a distance below, some of the men were digging in a sandy streak and washing the dirt in pans. The air was loaded down with the inviting smell of frying bacon; the fragrance of strong coffee boiling itself away upon the coals made my mouth water. And even as I turned my eyes to the east, the sun came suddenly up over the Pass, popping out from behind the edge of the world, as if the machinery of the universe had become disordered and was doing its work by jerks.

Then I looked downstream again, and behold, in the places round about where the men were digging, I saw little sandy ridges, crowned with thin tufts of coarse grass, where I was sure the ground had been level and bare only a moment before. Some sort of an idea struggled and struggled to get to the surface of my mind. I could feel it kicking and struggling, like a swimmer drowning in muddy depths, just out of sight.

"Give me some breakfast quick," I called to Tubby. "Give me some breakfast, or I will surely go crazy."

"An' thereby learn some sense," growled Tubby morosely, fiddling and fooling with the frying-pan until I was in an agony of impatience. And all the while that thought, which I was trying so hard to catch and hold and see, sank lower and lower in the depths of my consciousness.

Then I shut my eyes, thinking to restore them by rest, and when I lifted the lids a moment later, the sun was shining into the willows downstream, and, as sure as I live, the foliage was full of dark eyes, shining vindictively, shining murderously, with a greed of blood and a hellish hate that made me shiver. I winked hard and looked again, and the eyes had vanished, like things seen in a dream. The willows were no more or less than any other, the foliage was empty, and the sun shone on the water, which sparkled through the spaces between the leaves.

And at that very moment the idea came up out of the muddy depths of my mind; it came up and stood in front of me, naked and ugly, and turned itself around that I might see it from every side. And there was no side of it that was any less hideous than another. So little did I like it that I rose on tiptoe, and yelled with all the power God had given me of throat and lung. And, even as I lifted myself to my utmost height and filled my breast with air, Tinajo Pete and Little Wisdom came trailing back in single file across the valley.

"Hey, Pete!" I shouted. "You, Pete! Shoot your gun into that split sandrock to your left! Shoot your gun into it! Shoot! Shoot! Confound your fool soul, shoot!"

Right at my back Tubby raised himself from his knees and stood up. "Goin' crazy ain't helped your sense like I thought it would, Kid," he said, speaking very contemptuous-like.

Pete and Little Wisdom halted uncertainly, their heads lifted like the heads of scared cattle, looking to their left, with their eyes fixed as if the place had been enchanted. They stood with their mouths open, as if they could see better with their teeth, and made no more effort to shoot than if God Almighty had denied them the privilege of carrying a gun.

I threw my arms above my head, I flung them about in the air, and jumped up and down.

"Indians!" I screamed. "Shoot into the rock, Pete! Sock it to 'em, Little Wisdom! Shoot! Shoot! Indians! Indians!"

And, except for me, gesticulating like a madman there on the bank of the Stillwater, that valley was as peaceful a place to look at as if it had been in the middle of Paradise before the fall of man. And those two men, just beyond gunshot, turned their faces toward me and took a step or two in my direction, when all suddenly that rock rose up, spilling a deer-skin robe or two and a little common dirt and all its setting of brush and grass, and two painted Apaches rose up with knives in their belts and guns in their hands.

"Good God," said Tubby Smith in a low voice, as if he were talking to himself.

At the same instant, out of all that camp, there arose one great groan, as if it were sounding the mortal agony of a stricken giant, and then, from the heart of the sands, in the clear spaces round and about where the men had been digging, from out of the midst of the foliage of the willows which seemed so full of light, so frank and open, and were in fact so dark and secret—from the bosom of the waters of the stream, from clumps of grass and from snaky-looking clusters of prickly pear, Indians rose up on this side and on that, naked and threatening, until it must have seemed that the trump of the angel had indeed sounded for the resurrection of a host of savage dead.

"Yow! Yow! Yow!"

I am sure no white man can reproduce the war-cry of this Indian, the Apache, in the fullness of its awful anger.

"Yow! Yow! Yow!"

Shrill and terrific, it rang from mountain to mountain. The valley was filled with a clamor and noise which was fairly deafening.

Yow! Yow! Yow! Crack! Crack! Crack!

Those were not our cries which struck terror to the heart. And neither were those our guns which were volleying out so hotly, which were blowing a blast of death beside the Stillwater of the Alamos Altos. But the men who were falling like trees blown down in a storm, those were our men, in all good truth, those were our own men.

"In the name of God!" cried Tubby, "why didn't you tell us, Kid?"

"In the name of the devil," I cried back at him over my shoulder, "what else have I been doing for—for—for the last minute or two?"

Indeed, it was marvelous to think of, that it had been only a single short minute, or even less, since that naked horror of an idea had emerged from the muddy depths of my mind and set my soul to shivering with fear. At first I would have said it was ages and ages ago, I would have sworn it was untold ages ago when I began shrieking and screaming, crying out at the top of my voice to those two men midway of the valley, crying out and trying to tell them how death lay in secret in the heart of the solid rock that stood at their elbows.

I could not turn my eyes away. Hell was loose in that valley, and went roaring up and down, but I could not draw my eyes away. There was such a screeching as if a legion of devils were torturing a legion of the damned, but, try as I might, I could not tear my eyes away. It was years and years ago, yet to this day, I sweat in the night when out of some secret recess of the inner consciousness the unwelcome vision comes forth unbidden and parades itself before me.

"See that dog cut him," said Tubby, whistling the words shrilly in my ear.

"See the blamed hound cut into him," he whistled again, gripping me by the shoulder and shaking me back and forth.

"Poor Tinajo," he sighed hoarsely.

For Tinajo died as if he had been a dumb brute, sinking voicelessly beneath a dozen ghastly mutilations, but Little Wisdom cried out, wailing pitifully in the blackness of his sudden despair, in the sad and hopeless depths of his pain and despair.

Above the Stillwater is the Box Canyon, a narrow cleft in the bosom of the earth, through whose gloomy depths the waters rush in foaming rapids, showing far below in white drifts as of snow, lying in perpetual shadow. Off to the right, as one goes upward, is an outcrop of granite, round, smooth, and bare, shaped as if it had been formed upon the model of a human skull, and at the very top were some dozens of boulders, from the size of a man's body downward. It was there we lay, exhausted and broken, in that wilderness of rock, at the summit of that shining granite skull, when the surprise was over and the rush of the Apache battle had worn itself out. They said I had done something toward saving them from utter destruction, but, at its best, it was a retreat which was alike shameful and disastrous.

There were nine of us left. I counted the men three times before I would believe we were so few. Those were all that were left of the camp, which I had said the evening before could defend itself successfully against the entire Apache nation. Trembling with fear, we huddled there, on a waterless rock, destitute of food, having no more ammunition than the cartridges in our guns and our belts, while below us the hostiles ravaged our camp and made free of our goods.

The sun rose and our thirst grew, until about noon, when Chuck-a-luck Joe, having broken the bones of his leg below the knee, and being full of fever, went stark mad, and we were obliged to tie him up with rags torn from our clothing, and lay him back in such little shade as we had. There he cursed and prayed and prayed and cursed all through that interminable afternoon, and the flies settled upon him in swarms, so that, when night came, there were maggots in his wound, and he suffered beyond belief.

The Apaches amused themselves vastly that day. They killed two horses and cooked the meat over the fires we ourselves had started, and then they ate and ate and gorged and gorged, until Tubby declared himself hopeful that they would burst and die, leaving us safe and no less sound than we had already come to be.

It was a most remarkable siege. So far as I could make out, there were not above forty warriors arrayed against us, and the most of those were always visible down by the Stillwater. In our part of the valley, not an enemy was to be seen. Hour after hour went by, and the silence could not have been deeper had all the world been dead. The sun grew hotter and hotter as it rose up in the sky, until at last, as noon came on, the rock was fairly blistering, and our thirst grew and grew. And still, as we peeped and peered with narrowed eyes over our rocky breastwork, we could see no life, or motion, or thing of threat nearer than the camp, and those who were there paid us no more attention than if we had been in another world.

Then it was that Chuck-a-luck Joe began to talk foolishly and to threaten one and another of our number, so that we had finally to throw him down by force and tie him up, hand and foot, after which he raved worse than before and spent hours alternately cursing us and begging for water.

Finally Four-eyed Charley declared to my face that I was a fool, that all of the Indians were carousing at the camp, that they were paying no attention to us, that I was keeping the men away from water because there was more of cowardice in my make-up than there was of common sense. Having relieved his mind, he got himself up on his feet and began to climb out on the side toward the stream. How many shots were fired at him, I don't at all know. They seemed to come from every direction, and, without a word, he lay down upon the breastwork as quietly as if he had gone to sleep, and when we took him by the legs and pulled him back inside, he was stone dead.

I think Charley's mistake helped us for a while to stand the thirst, though for myself I was so dry I could not spit. The afternoon wore away dimly enough, until perhaps the half of it was gone, when all of a sudden the muzzle of a gun was poked from the outside through a crack, not six feet away from where I lay, and an Apache fired it off right into Oiley Given's face, and Oiley curled up, drawing himself into a knot, his limbs all a-quiver, and was dead before he knew what had hurt him.

That Indian was my meat, for which favor I am still thankful. But things looked pretty blue for us, and I don't know that it gave us a moment's comfort that he lay dead so openly along the slope of that bald rock, in full sight of his own tribesmen.

It was not half an hour later when Big Tom, who was fooling around Joe, trying to keep off the flies, raised up incautiously, and was shot through the shoulder, whereupon Tubby Smith and I drew straws to see which should kill the other, when the time for that sort of thing had come. The lot fell to me, but when I tried to swear at my ill luck, I found my tongue was swollen and painful, and I gave it up as a bad job.

Big Tom took up the notion that, since he was bleeding anyhow and very thirsty, it would relieve him to wipe up the blood with his hand and suck it off his fingers. Of course, it dried so fast he must have lost lots of it, and I doubt if it would not have been a bad thing, even if he could have done it better. For his suffering increased so rapidly that it seemed almost no time at all until he was moaning with pain, and we had all we could do to keep him from running off to the creek. We ought to have tied him up, but the flies were so bad we could not bear to do it.

It was after sundown when we saw the Indians apparently drawing off from around us, and, of course, having heard something of their customs, we began to hope for a quiet night. That far we were willing to look forward, but I don't reckon there was a single one of us who was willing to let his thoughts stray any further down the stream of time. Speaking for myself alone, I know the idea of what was going to happen the next day was so ugly I did not entertain it for a moment.

And it may very well be that we would have had some rest that night, had it not been for that same Big Tom, who grew cunning, and by stealth evaded our restraint, slipping off to the creek for water. The Indians caught him, and caught him alive at that, and when such of us as could attempted a rescue, Breathitt Jones got a ball through his lungs and took to bleeding at the mouth, and Tubby Smith had his left arm broken, while I succeeded in getting shot through the thick of the thigh, a flesh wound which bled rather badly.

I lay awake that night listening to his screams of agony as they tortured Tom to death, and I want to tell you it was no serenade. They brought him in as close as they dared, and built a fire, and then they did things to him, I don't know what. Breathitt Jones died in peace and was at rest. Chuck-a-luck Joe moaned continually, but he was unconscious and suffered no pain. Tubby Smith lay at my right hand and shivered, and I lay at his left and shivered more than he did.

"I'm afraid," said I, somewhere along in the middle of the night.

"I'm afraid," said I again, moving a little closer to Tubby.

"So'm I," he answered, and, having turned toward me, he lifted his right arm until he could touch me on the cheek with his fingers. And it felt good, too, those bloody, dirty fingers of Tubby Smith, patting me on the cheek, while out at a fire that I didn't dare look at Big Tom wailed and cried.

"So'm I, Kid," Tubby repeated, caressing my face with his fingers.

Then we sat together in silence for a long while.

TWO PAINTED APACHES ROSE UP

OUR FEARS WERE FOR LIFE; OUR HOPES FOR DEATH

"9.15 Sharp" means

9.15 ELGIN TIME

Every Elgin Watch is fully guaranteed. All jewelers have Elgin Watches. "Timemakers and Timekeepers," an illustrated history of the watch, sent free upon request to
ELGIN NATIONAL WATCH CO., ELGIN, ILL.

The OLIVER Typewriter

The Standard Visible Writer.

The Oliver record has never been equaled.

Ask for Catalogue.

THE OLIVER TYPEWRITER CO.
 149 Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.
 Principal Foreign Office, 75 Queen Victoria St., London, Eng.

IN HAWAII

THERE ARE 366 DAYS

"IT'S ALWAYS MAY IN HAWAII"

Average Temperatures for the Year 1903 was 72.00 Degrees

These beautiful Tropical Islands are cooled by constant trade winds. A wonderful variety of impressive scenery. Summer seas for bathing the year 'round. Unexcelled Modern Accommodations. Before fixing an itinerary for your outing

HEAR OF HAWAII!

Full information from all railroads, or address
HAWAII PROMOTION COMMITTEE
 Representing the Territory of Hawaii Chamber of Commerce Merchants Association
HONOLULU, T. H.

Send name and address to Hawaii Promotion Committee, Honolulu, T. H., and receive free a beautiful souvenir book, full of photographs and interesting information.

Proofs of Gibson Drawings

Copyright 1902 by Collier's Weekly

THE continued demand for proofs of the full-page and double-page drawings by famous artists that appear in COLLIERS has led us to strike off from the original plates a number of proofs on heavy plate paper. These are printed with the greatest care, and when framed present a very handsome appearance. Mailed securely in heavy tubes for Two Dollars each. Address

PROOF DEPT., Collier's Weekly, 416 West 13th Street, New York

RHEUMATISM

Tartarlithine

removes rheumatic pains promptly and permanently. It does not irritate the stomach nor disturb the heart. It is thoroughly safe and always reliable.

Prescribed and endorsed by the leading physicians of the country.

Ask Your Doctor About It

Free sample and our booklet on the cure of Rheumatism sent on request

McKesson & Robbins
 76 ANN STREET, NEW YORK
 SOLE AGENTS FOR THE TARTARLITHINE CO.

Show Your Loyalty by Wearing the

Class Pin or Badge

(HUNDREDS OF DESIGNS FREE)

of your college, school, class, club, society, Order, etc. Order straight from the factory. Either of the two styles shown, in any two colors of enamel, with any three letters and any two figures.

In Silver Plate $1.50 a doz. Sample 10.

In Sterling Silver $2.50 a doz. Sample 25.

Beautiful catalog showing hundreds of designs free. Satisfaction guaranteed. Will gladly make a special design and estimate free.

BASTIAN BROS., 21 V. South Avenue, ROCHESTER, N. Y.

TEN DAYS FREE TRIAL

allowed on all our bicycles. We SHIP ON APPROVAL, without a cent deposit, any wheel not satisfactory returned at our expense.

Highest grade
 1904 Models $8.75 to $17
 Coaster Brakes, Hedgesworths Puncture proof Tires and best equipment. 1903 and 1902 Models, best makes $7 to $12
 500 Second-hand Wheels $3 to $8
 All makes and Models good as new.
 Great Factory Clearing Sale at Half Factory Cost.

RIDER AGENTS WANTED

In each town to take orders from people wheel furnished by us. Our agents make big profits. Write at once for catalogue and our Special Offer.

AUTOMOBILES, TIRES, Sewing Machines, Sundries, etc., half usual prices.

Mead Cycle Co., Dept. 55-F, Chicago

THE DOBSON X-RAY

Latest Scientific Method. Here is an article, says, that will please you. With the ribbon and lead turn transparent and the bones can be plainly seen. Just think of the fun you can have with it! Sample in strong box, with catalogue and agents' prices. Ten Cents, by mail. J. H. PIRK, Dept. 14, Stamford, Conn.

"Say, Kid," said Tubby at last, and then he hesitated.

"What is it?" I asked him.

"You remember them straws as we drew?"

"Yes," I admitted reluctantly. "What of it?"

Now, don't you forget that I knew what of it. There are some things a man remembers, and that was one of them.

"You'll do it, Kid." The man was pleading with me with his voice. He was begging me with his voice in the dark.

"You'll do it, won't you? Tell me you'll do it. Say you'll do it, so help you God. Say it, Kid."

But I did not intend to do it, and I told him so, for the chances were equal that he would be as able as I. And there was where I made a mistake, for after a bit we came to a new agreement, which was that, if either of us were taken alive, the other would kill him, if by any means it could be done. After all, he begged me, so I expect I would have done it anyhow, even if I had not promised.

There were ages in that night, there were ages and ages in its slow hours. Yet the dawn of another day did come upon us at last. It came up redly out of the east, driving over Yellow Earth Pass with a crimson sky at its back, as if it were bringing blood in its train, as if it were prepared to inundate the earth with the sea of blood which was swelling up behind it, which was following at the heel of its car.

"It's the end of all things," said I, and I pointed down the skull of a rock, toward the west, where half-way up there stood a long screen of brush and grass at a spot which had been naked as the palm of my hand the evening before. There it was, shutting out of sight the bottom of the slope, affording cover for the enemy, bringing them in safety half-way up to the line of our defence. Nor was that the worst: for as we watched it, we saw the screen moving by piecemeal, moving a little at a time up the hill against us.

"I swear to God, it does look like they might a-gone off an' let a man alone," complained Leftwick Lippold, as he began firing into the screen. Nor was I able to restrain any of the men from following his example, save Tubby Smith alone, whom I posted where he could overlook the eastern approach. After all, I didn't reckon it made much difference, for whatever we did, them Apaches were sure to do something else that would meet the occasion. Only I wanted to save the ammunition and kill as many as we could.

I was fevered and suffering, and there were many minutes of waiting during which I fell into a stupor, from which I was awakened by a most infernal screeching, and Tubby calling me to come quick. Even as I opened my eyes, there came to me Leftwick and the others, crawling along on the ground in the broad daylight, crying out that their cartridges were all gone, and asking me for more.

Overhead, the air seemed as if it were being torn to pieces by a multitude of rifle balls, which passed over the breastwork, and went whistling and shrieking by. The spitting of bullets striking upon the rocks made a continuous drumming noise. Evidently, the final assault was upon us, coming from the east, delayed, as I had feared it would be, until our ammunition was nearly exhausted.

I divided my cartridges with the men, doing it hopelessly and in silence; for with the end so near at hand, it did not seem worth while to scold and fret. When this was done, I crossed over, slowly, because of my lameness, and took my stand beside Tubby. The Indians were swarming up the naked rock, jumping from side to side, shooting rapidly, waving robes and blankets before them to distract our aim. We made no effort to conceal ourselves, for the time had come when our fears were for life, our hopes for death.

I set my eyes upon one of the foremost of the Apaches, a stocky brute, with a red rag tied round his head to hold back his hair, freshly painted with lightning stripes of yellow, and circles of black and yellow for his heathen gods on his breast. I remember it increased my pleasure to a wonderful degree that I was able to shoot him right through the mark of a charm which lay just over his heart.

"May your accursed gods eat you up, forever and forever!" I cried out, as he fell, kicking and jerking and rolling down the rock.

I shot again twice as they came over the barricade of broken rock, and then I heard Tubby calling me.

"Kid!" he cried. "For God's sake, Kid!"

I looked to one side and had a glimpse of Tubby, struggling in the midst of a mob of Indians, and, at the same moment, some one plunged against me from another direction, and I struck him with my knife and drew it down through the soft parts of his belly. He screamed and fell, and I knew that he was an Apache, but I don't remember having seen him. There was another who fell upon me from the front at about the same time, and, while I was scuffling with him, I heard Tubby calling me again.

"For God's sake, Kid! For God's sake, Kid!"

It did not seem that he could say anything else. He kept repeating those words over and over, until it was utterly maddening.

A big Indian, with a black Kan painted on his forehead, caught me under the arms and lifted me off my feet, and, as he held me there, head and shoulders above the crowd, I thought I saw, very dimly, as if it had been in a dream, a disorderly mob on horseback, racing down the Pass from the east.

"More hell-cats coming," I muttered, "and we've got plenty already."

The crowd shoved us over to one side, and the Indian who was holding me stumbled against the one I had killed and fell down, throwing me beneath him. As the point of

The culmination of progressive enterprise

Two-Speed Gear, Coaster Brake Chainless Bicycles

Catalogues free at our 10,000 dealers' stores, or any one catalogue mailed on receipt of 2-cent stamp.

Western Dept. Eastern Dept.
 Chicago, Ill. Hartford, Conn.

POPE MANUFACTURING COMPANY

DEAFNESS CURED

Deafness is incurable till the cause is removed. Therefore Ear Drums and other artificial aids never cure. 90 per cent. of all cases of Deafness is caused from Catarrh, and as Catarrh cannot exist under the use of "Actina," nobody need be deaf where the Active Pocket Battery is obtainable. Are you seeking a cure? Then investigate "Actina." Write today for a valuable book—Prof. Wilson's Dictionary of Diseases, Free. New York & London Electric Ass'n, 329 Walnut Street, Dept. 20 D, Kansas City, Mo.

DO IT YOURSELF

We have made plenty of money in the poultry business and have grown from year to year until our Hillbrook Farm is now the largest pure bred poultry establishment in the country. Our new year book "Poultry for Profit" will start you right. All about breeding, feeding, etc. Cite of birds with prices, eggs in season. Book has cost too much money and experience to be given away, but we will it for 10 cents. THE J. W. MILLER CO., Box 21, FREEPORT, ILL.

GO TO FLORIDA NOW

The most trying time of the season in Chicago and the Northwest is during February and March, when the cold new winds make life miserable. Get away from it all by going to Florida where the flowers are in bloom and the warm life-giving breezes are found.

The Southern Railway, in connection with the Queen and Crescent Route is the only line having two through sleeping car lines from Chicago to Jacksonville and St. Augustine, Fla., via Cincinnati, Chattanooga and Atlanta, leaving Chicago 1:00 P.M. and 9:00 P.M. Write J. S. McCullough, N. W. P. A., 225 Dearborn St., Chicago, for rates, schedules and literature, and he will tell you all about it. Phone Harrison 1515, Automatic 4613.

$9,000 Poultry Catalog

40 Birds Turkeys, Geese, Ducks, Chickens, free to and eggs cheap. 100 grand pictures, 20 house plans. We make hen lay, corn cobs, etc. Send 10 cts. for mailing catalog. Incubator 30 days free trial. J. E. Brabazon Jr. & Co., Box 71 Delavan, Wis.

PENMANSHIP

Stenography and Book-keeping, complete course for Home Study in all three, $5. Includes a beautiful hand. Situations for all graduates. C. C. GAINES, Box 961, Poughkeepsie, N. Y., or 119 West 122nd St., New York, N. Y.

$3 a Day.

Send us your address and we will show you how to earn $3 a day absolutely sure; we furnish the work and teach you free, you work in the locality where you live. Send us your address and we will explain the business fully; remember we guarantee that you can earn $3 for every day's work. Write at once. ROYAL MANUFACTURING CO., Box 1168, Detroit, Mich.

STARK TREES

best by Test—75 Years LARGEST NURSERY

FRUIT BONE FREE. We PAY CASH

WANT MORE BALDWIN PAY Weekly

STARK BROS., Louisiana, Mo.; Danville, N. Y.; Etc.

ASTHMA Cured to stay CURED. Health restored. BOOK 4 Free. P. HAROLD HAYES, Buffalo, N. Y.

The Yale has a particular place in the automobile world. It is a family car in the fullest sense of the word. It is a car for all the family or any adult member of it. It is a car that invites and satisfies the most searching investigation.

You who are looking for an automobile from which you can secure the fullest measure of pleasure at a moderate expense: you who seek a car without jolt or jar—learn more about the swift, simple, satisfactory Yale.

The best way is to see the Yale—don't we will gladly send you our beautiful new catalogue upon request.

THE KIRK MFG. CO.
944 Oakwood Ave. Toledo, Ohio
Members of the Association of Licensed Automobile Mfrs.

Temple-Clasps

If You Value Your Eyes

you should wear the BRIGGS IMPROVED TEMPLE CLASP glasses that Don't Pinch the Nose, Don't Pull the Ears, Don't Make Your Head Ache, and Don't Fall Off, as other glasses do. They are the only glasses that always rest the eyes as they enable you to look through the center always.

Everybody who wears glasses or has eye weakness needs our Book on Eye Logic. It's FREE. Write for it. BRIGGS OPTICAL CO., 231 E. H. Triangle Bldg., RICHMOND, N. Y.

WASHBURNE'S PAT. IMP. FASTENERS

The Fastener with a BULL-DOG GRIP

Most fast and useful and utility in their use. Applied to:

Key Chains and Rings	25c
Tool Holders	20c
Seed Holders	10c
Drawers Supporter	10c

Sent Postpaid. Little, but Never Let Go. Catalogue Free. American Ring Co., Dept. 15, Waterbury, Conn. Sold Everywhere.

TELEGRAPHY

Thoroughly and quickly taught. Expenses low and can be reduced one-half by working for board. Railroads give our graduates immediate employment and furnish free passes to destinations. We have more orders for operators than we can fill, and give students choice of different railroads in many states. Write for Catalogue. We pay railroad fare to Janesville. Valentine's School, Est. 32 Years, Janesville, Wis.

Blue Grass Virginia Farms

We have for sale large and small farms, country estates, colonial mansions, timber and fruit lands, hunting preserves, and rice lands among the Sea Islands of Georgia. Our beautiful catalogue, "Virginia and the Carolinas, Illustrated," contains complete descriptions, photographs of buildings and landscapes. 25c.

SOUTHERN FARM AGENCY, 730 Main St., Lynchburg, Va.

CUT DOWN GAS BILLS

From one-quarter to one-half saved by using this Little Joker Gas Governor. Makes pressure uniform. Absolutely prevents back flow and re-ignition by action. D. H. Wilson. "My meter used to register 3000 feet. Saved 1000 feet first month." Anyone can attach. We send full instructions and guarantee. Quickly pays for itself. Price postpaid. Money back if not satisfied. ELKHART NOVELTY CO., Box A, Elkhart, Ind.

FREE THE MINING HERALD

Leading mining and financial paper, giving all the news from the mining districts, and containing latest and most reliable information on the mining and oil industries, principal companies, dividends, etc. Every investor should have it. We will send it free for six months upon request. A. L. WINNER & CO., 32 Broadway, New York.

GREIDER'S FINE CATALOGUE

of standard bred poultry for 1904, printed in colors, fine chrome, includes full breeding, illustrations and descriptions 60 varieties. Gives reasonable prices for stock and eggs, tells all about poultry, their diseases, etc. This book only 10 cents. B. H. GREIDER, Phoenix, Pa.

Invaluable for relieving Hoarseness or Loss of Voice, Coughs, Irritation or Soreness of the Throat. In boxes only. Avoid Imitations. BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES

my knife was uppermost, his own weight drove him upon it, and he relaxed his hold instantly, but, instead of getting up, he continued to lie upon me, shaking like a leaf and feeling very heavy.

"For God's sake, Kid! For God's sake, Kid!"

Not for one moment did I cease to bear Tubby, but I had not expected to find myself at his side when I shoved out from under the Indian who had fallen upon me. I had the knife still in my hand, and, raising my arm in the midst of the struggling mass, I struck him full in the breast, and drew out the blade and stuck it in again, stabbing him frantically. And, as I stabbed him, I heard him say this: "Good boy, Good pardeer. Pardners for all trips, forever."

I swear I heard him say it. If I had not heard it so plainly I would have killed myself long ago. For I wish you to understand I am no frontier desperado, nor have I ever taken human life, save at the Stillwater of the Alamos Altos, in among the Daniels.

Some one hit me over the head, and I felt the blood running down into my eyes. As I got up on my feet and wiped the blood out of my face, I saw that the crowd around me had grown thin, and at a little distance I heard the sound of rapid firing and wild yells and hurrahing and cursing, and the "Yow—Yow—Yow" of the Indians.

I had neither time nor inclination to learn the cause of this new disturbance. For once in my life I had no other thought or desire save to kill. I drove my knife into the naked breast of a warrior who was standing close by with his head partly turned away. I stuck him in the throat, just as one sticks hogs, and threw myself upon his shoulders, so that we fell to the ground together. The handle of my knife being bloody, it slipped out of my fingers, and I made no effort to recover it, but took to beating the Indian in the face with my fist. I beat him with my fist, and then took him by the hair and pounded his head down on the rock, time after time. I suppose he was already dead, nor do I know why I did a thing so brutal and useless. Perhaps I was altogether crazy and mad, as some people have said. Surely, I had been through enough to have made a madman of any one.

I think it was only a moment later that Leftwick Lippold took me by the arm and lifted me up, saying: "Let him alone, Kid. He's dead enough now."

I wiped the blood out of my eyes again and looked at Lippold rather stupidly, I suppose.

"What's the matter, Lefty?" I asked.

"Have the Apaches got us?"

"Not by a blame sight," he answered.

"It's the soldiers as has got the Apaches."

And he laughed a particularly ugly laugh. Then it was that I understood and looked out to see the Indians scattered and running down the valley, quartering across, trying to get to the mountains. Behind them followed the troopers, running their horses until their bellies seemed flat, skimming along just above the ground.

"Give it to 'em!" I shouted, throwing my arms up in the air.

"Give 'em hell! For God's sake, give 'em hell!"

And then I reckon I fainted.

THE WAR

A Record of the Progress of Events in the Conflict between Russia and Japan

ADMIRAL MAKAROFF has already done enough at Port Arthur to stand out as a foeman worthy the steel of Admiral Togo, and the first distinctive figure on the Russian side. The intermittent hammering of Port Arthur by the Japanese fleet was violently resumed on March 21, when more than 200 heavy shells were hurled into the defenses and the town. For the first time the Russian fleet left the roadstead to meet the enemy, which, however, could not be tempted to engage within range of the shore batteries.

The Japanese blockading strength had not been equal to maintaining a continuous blockade, without handicapping operations elsewhere, and this uneasy activity of the Russian ships caused Admiral Togo to make a second and formidable attempt to close the Port Arthur channel. The plan resulted in the most dashing action of the war, although it seems to have failed of its purpose. Four large merchant steamers, supported by six torpedo craft, made for the harbor on the night of March 26. A heavy fire was opened on them, and the torpedo boat Sibir, commanded by Lieutenant Kriniski, a thirty-two knot craft, dashed, single-handed, at the enemy's flotilla. The Sibir turned the Japanese ships from their course by blowing the prow off the leading merchantman with a torpedo, causing her to sheer off to the left of the harbor mouth, as well as the two ships following her in. There Lieutenant Kriniski attacked the torpedo boats, and in fierce fighting at point-blank range, Chief Engineer Swyeroff and six marines were killed, and the commander and twelve sailors wounded, a loss of two-thirds of the little vessel's personnel. The attack of the Sibir frustrated the Japanese plan to block the harbor. Admiral Makaroff was reported to have put to sea again with his fleet on March 28, seeking to engage Admiral Togo.

The Peerless TRUSCOTT

Any thing from a ROW BOAT to the 100-foot YACHT

Selected for exclusive use at the World's Fair on a decision based solely upon merits

GASOLINE OR ELECTRIC POWER

AUTO BOATS AND ENGINES

Send for a copy of our Quarterly Publication, "The Launch." Catalog for the postage, too.

Truscott Boat Mfg. Co.
ST. JOSEPH, MICH., U. S. A.

Illinois Central R.R.

UNIVERSAL EXPOSITION Chicago 1904

DAILY FAST TRAINS

Elegantly equipped and with Dining, Buffet-Library, Sleeping and Reclining Chair Cars, from its northern and southern terminals, connecting at its numerous gateways with trains from the EAST, SOUTH AND NORTH

Particulars of agents of the Illinois Central and connecting lines.

A. H. HANSON, Gen'l Pass'r Agent, CHICAGO

"Time is the Arbitrator of All Things"

The Ingersoll Watch

There is an Army of Americans carrying the Ingersoll Watch, which numbers several times the combined armies of Russia and Japan. In this Ingersoll Army are representative people from every walk of life, brought together on the common ground of public expenditure. The Ingersoll Watch is an accurate time-keeper—GUARANTEED. It has the largest sale in the world of watches of its merit, more than 100,000. Sold by dealers everywhere or postpaid by us. Catalogue Free.

Price $1.00 up

Russians Cossacks THE YANKEE OF THE EAST

ROBT. H. INGERSOLL & BRO. DEPT. 58 51 MAIDEN LANE, N.Y.

BEAUTIFUL MEMORIALS

in White Bronze

"LEST WE FORGET"

Don't purchase marble or granite to get all discolored and moss-grown and to eventually crumble and decay. Purchase the beautiful and ever-enduring White Bronze. Time and the elements have no effect on it. It is PRACTICALLY INDESTRUCTIBLE. If in need of cemetery work, let us know about what expense you anticipate and we will send you a selected variety of our Beautiful Designs with prices and full information. We deliver every where; distance is no obstacle. Besides family monuments we make markers, headstones, grave covers and statuary. Price at once.

This handsome monument and statue only $400.00 worth $1000 to $1500 in granite. We have designs from $400 up.

Agents Wanted

THE MONUMENTAL BRONZE CO.
359 Howard Avenue Bridgeport, Conn.

CALIFORNIA

via

UNION PACIFIC and SOUTHERN PACIFIC

FASTEST TIME SHORTEST LINE SMOOTHEST TRACK

Millions have been spent in the improvement of this line, and all human ingenuity has been adopted to protect its patrons against accident. The line is renowned for its fast trains and the general superiority of its service and equipment.

TOURIST SLEEPERS A SPECIALTY

E. L. LOMAX, G.P. & T.A. UNION PACIFIC Omaha, Neb.

MOSIER RIFLES ONLY $1.00 DOWN AND $1.00 WEEKLY UNTIL PAID

$3.00

THIS young Mosier rifle is made in 22 cal. THE HUNDRETH which we sold last year have proved that it is a worthy child of its parent the MILITARY MAUSER which became so famous in the Spanish-American War and also with the Boers in the war with Great Britain. The rifle is made to shoot all kinds of 22 Calibre Cartridges up to and including long rifle. The barrel is 30 1/2 inches measured from muzzle to extreme end of receiver. The rifling is of the QUICK TWIST which has always made the Mausers famous for long range, accuracy and penetration. We guarantee these rifles superior to anything you ever saw of their class and size. THESE 22 CALIBRE RIFLES are made by the same machinery and factory as THE RENOWNED MILITARY MAUSER. You need send ONLY $1.00 with order to secure one of these rifles at our regular cash price of $3.00 and agree to send $1.00 each week for 2 weeks, we then have no further claim on the rifle. Every one can secure one of these popular rifles on these terms.

KIRTLAND BROS. & CO., Dept. C. W., 90 CHAMBERS ST., New York

O'Sullivan Rubber Heels are now described as the missing link between wings and shoes. Their buoyancy is due to the elasticity of new rubber. 35 cents and small sum for attaching. Buy of your dealer, or O'SULLIVAN RUBBER CO., LOWELL, MASS.

INVESTORS

desiring to realize the Large Interest and Profits possible in legitimate Mining, Oil, Timber and Stock Investments and Dividend-paying Industrial Stocks, listed and unlisted, should send for our Booklets, giving full information, mailed free.

Douglas, Lacey & Co.
Bankers & Brokers 66 Broadway, New York

Suit Made $12 to Measure

Suit Case Free

Fine All-Wool Tailor-Made Cashmere or Worsted Suit

Your Choice of a variety of colorings and weaves, and all the newest patterns just from the woolen mills. We direct special attention to the fabrics. The cloth is specially woven from new, high grade wool; it is close woven and the wool is full of "life," so that the cloth is elastic and the garments will hold their shape. Before cutting into the cloth for each suit, the suit pattern is thoroughly sketched. Our cutters are first-class workmen, who incorporate into the suit the latest style, and take into account the various little differences in build each man possesses. The suit is lined throughout with "Bulfinch" serge and the sleeve linings are of the celebrated "Fowler" silk. All trimmings are the very best, and button-holes are hand finished. The pants pockets are made of strong drilling, and all the findings are such as only can be secured in the high grade merchant-tailor article. Our measure and order blank will enable you to take your own measurement accurately, and a perfect fit is guaranteed. We are manufacturers, importers and custom tailors, and guarantee our $12.00 suits to be equal in wear to the best suits you can obtain from your local dealer for Twenty Dollars, while in style and fit our garments are incomparably superior to any but the product of high-priced city tailors.

FREE Suit Case

In order to establish customers throughout the United States, we are giving on the first order received from any one person, a handsome suit case, which we use to ship the suit. The suit case that goes with each suit is most presentable and would cost in your local store from $5 to $8.

A trial is all we ask. You run no risk in ordering from us, as we guarantee absolutely a perfect fit. We do not ask you to pay for the goods before seeing them. We send them by express C. O. D., with the privilege of examination at Express Office, and if the suit is not satisfactory in fabric, finish or fit, you need not accept it; it will be returned to us at our expense. The suit shown in the picture is our No. 251, and is a scratch, becoming suit to most gentlemen. The price is $12.00. It is entirely new, out of the ordinary and very stylish. Samples of cloth that make up nicely in this style are shown in our new catalogue, which contains styles and samples varying in price from $12.00 to $20.00. Our catalogue and SAMPLES OF CLOTH FREE will be sent you the very day your request for same reaches us. Remember, we have no agents, no branch stores, and no connection with any other clothing concern. Our business has been established 40 years. Write today for samples. Address Meyer Livingston Sons, Dept. 5, South Bend, Ind.

Reference: Citizens National Bank, South Bend, Ind.

OPPENHEIM, COLLINS & CO.

Broadway & 5th Ave., cor. 21st St. NEW YORK

Extra Heavy Black Taffeta Walking Suit $20.00

This garment cannot be duplicated for less than $38.00. Fancy edging around waist, wide lace at sleeves, beautifully tailored. Can also be furnished in Brown and Black. MAIL ORDERS PROMPTLY FILLED

$37.50 Bath Room Outfit COMPLETE AND BRAND NEW

as shown in illustration, consisting of BATH TUB of graceful shape, wooden and solid white porcelain enameled, one piece of cast iron, with roll top with fittings complete.

WATER CLOSET, sanitary, works perfectly, porcelain seat and tank, with up-to-date appliances, nickel plated, all complete.

MARBLE LAVATORY with graceful porcelain bowl and nickel plated trimmings, complete in every particular and handsomely finished.

THE ENTIRE OUTFIT is of strictly new material and as good as anything on the market coming twice as much. The connections can be easily made.

$37.50 in all that it will cost you complete, properly packed, f. o. b. Chicago.

PLUMBING MATERIAL. We carry an immense supply at lowest prices than anywhere else. We carry goods at Sheriff's and Receiver's Sales.

Send FREE CATALOG No. 162 on Plumbing for Household Goods, Pipe, Wire, Pumps, Machinery, etc.

CHICAGO HOUSE WAREHOUSE CO. 30th and Iron Sts., Chicago

Daughters of Desperation

(Continued from page 10)

With the courage of extremity I stepped to her side and addressed her with strong feeling:

"Miss Halliburton, it is an exquisite torment to me to see you shed tears."

She gasped at my boldness, but it had served its turn. Her excitement was far beyond her command now, and she almost sobbed her reply: "You taunt me—with the failure—but I did everything as well as it could have been done. If it hadn't been for you—and your dog—"

Josh was at our feet, fawning about the hem of her dress. I picked him up and set him on the window-sill between us.

"I will not speak of myself," I said, "but had it not been for Josh, your humble adorer, Miss Halliburton, you would at this moment have been in the unlovely peril of arrest. As things have turned out, you are still free and respected."

"Respected!" she repeated bitterly. "I shall be scorned and reproached by all those who looked toward the use of the silver for the furthering of our colonization plans."

"If your anarchist friends are too stupid to appreciate your brilliant and intrepid leadership in last night's affair, they are unworthy of you," said I. "Even I, who have little reason to feel friendly toward you, Miss Halliburton, can not withhold my reluctant admiration."

She looked quickly toward me. The light from the streets was bright enough in her face for me to see the troubled surprise. But she did not speak, and I remained silent. Josh sat before us looking alertly from one to the other. Her hand stole out to stroke him.

"It's too bad," she said at last in a somewhat new voice, "that you should feel unfriendly toward the new owner of your former pet."

"Haven't I a long list of injuries?" I said gloomily. "From the first moment of our meeting, Miss Halliburton, you have treated me as I hope and trust you will never treat my dog. First you took me for a burglar; then by your order I was bound and imprisoned and starved and poisoned. Then, with your own hand, you led me into crime. And throughout the adventure you have snubbed me so markedly—ignored my feelings so persistently—that I shall retire from your presence a crushed and disheartened man."

"Your accusation is as unjust as it is long," she answered me quietly, and I regretted to see that all signs of perturbation had passed from her.

"When I saw you first, I took you for a great genius, Gardner. That was surely a compliment. Then I handed you as a dangerous opponent—another compliment. When I was in need of chivalrous services, I complimented you again by selecting you to perform them. Afterward—I took you to drive." (I could have sworn a smile flitted over her face here, but it must have been the light; she continued with perfect gravity.) "In short, for two days you have been the guest of the society of which I am Regent. You see I have treated you with marked distinction and cordiality."

I was about to bring up the little matter of the snake-bite, but she continued with a fall in her voice to gentleness: "I snubbed you only once—and then it was necessary. I could not let you think for a moment of emigrating with us."

"And I could think of nothing else," I exclaimed.

I laid my hand on Josh, and finding her fingers under mine, I clasped them. Then I bent over the little dog and looked into her face and poured out some foolish words—foolish in that they were so inadequate to what I felt.

Tears raised down her face! but she was smiling through them.

"You are unreasonable in your requests," she sighed. "How could you join us? You can't become a Daughter of Desperation."

"But a son-in-law—" I urged.

They were setting the table in the next room. There were lights and gay words and laughter. Josh began to think we ought to join the others. When we had stood a while in one posture he roused us by a querulous barking.

THE END

THE CALL OF THE SPRING

By CORNELIA BROWNELL GOULD

WHEN the big trees color faint at the twig tips
And the meadows grow green in a night,
When the life-giving, gray, misty rain slips
Through sun-glinted clouds in its flight,
The walls of my flesh are a shiver,
My hate of the town's at the flood—
God-give me the woods and the river
When the run of the sap's in my blood.

Burnett's Vanilla

leaves a good taste in the mouth. It is pure and wholesome. Don't be cheated with cheap goods.—Adt.

Many Beverages

are so vastly improved by the added richness imparted by the use of Borden's Eagle Brand Condensed Milk. The Eagle Brand is prepared from the milk of herds of well fed, housed, groomed cows of native breeds. Every can is tested and is therefore reliable.—Adt.

A tire that enhances the value of a good machine.

A fine combination of the essential qualities that promote ease, strength and durability.

Booklet and Art Calendar sent on request, MORGAN & WRIGHT, 17 May St., CHICAGO New York, Dayton, St. Louis, San Francisco

Learn the Truth

Do you know

that the main cause of unhappiness, ill-health, sickly children, and divorce is admitted by physicians and shown by court records to be ignorance of the laws of self and sex?

Sexology

ILLUSTRATED

Contains in one volume

Knowledge a Young Man Should Have.
Knowledge a Young Husband Should Have.
Knowledge a Father Should Have.
Knowledge a Father Should Impart to His Son.
Medical Knowledge a Husband Should Have.
Knowledge a Young Woman Should Have.
Knowledge a Young Wife Should Have.
Knowledge a Mother Should Have.
Knowledge a Mother Should Impart to Her Daughter.
Medical Knowledge a Wife Should Have.

By WILLIAM H. WALLING, A.M., M.D.

New Edition, Enlarged and Illustrated. Rich Cloth Binding. Full gold stamp. $2.50.

Write for "Other People's Opinions" and Table of Contents, also 100-page illustrated catalogue of books of merit—FREE.

PURITAN PUB. CO., Dept. W., Philadelphia

D. & C. Roses

are the best. Always on their own roots. Plants mailed in any part of the United States. Safe, reliable, guaranteed. 50 years experience. Flower and Vegetable Seeds a Specialty. A Premium with every order. Write for New Guide to Rose Culture for 1904—the leading rose catalogue of America. 148 pages. Mailed free. Over 1,000 varieties. Tells how to grow them and all other desirable flowers. Established 1850. 70 greenhouses. THE DINGER & CONRAD CO., West Grove, Pa.

LE PAGE'S MUCILAGE

No gumming or clog neck of bottle—No sediment—will not spoil nor discolor the finest papers. Full 2-ounce bottle, 5c.; also half-pint, pint and quart.

Russia Cement Co., Gloucester, Mass. Mfrs. of LE PAGE'S PHOTO PASTE and LE PAGE'S GLUE. STRONGEST IN THE WORLD

STUDY LAW

Leading Law School in Correspondence Instruction. Established in 1892. Prepares for bar in any State. Combines theory and practice. Text books used are same as used in leading resident schools. Teaches law at your home. Three Courses—Regular College Course, Post Graduate, and Business Law Course. Approved by the bench and bar. Full particulars a free. CHICAGO CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL OF LAW, 300 North Dearborn, Chicago

PHOTO BROOCHES 10c.

Send us any photograph you want copied and we will return it unharmed with an exact copy on one of these pretty nickel brooch-mountings for only 10c. All our Photo-Minutimens are exact and perfect reproductions. We send this 25c. sample for only 10c. to introduce our goods and send you Free our large 6c. price-list of photo-minutimens, jewelry, novelties. Agents wanted. CORONA PHOTO CO., Box 1275, Boston, Mass.

WHY NOT LEARN SIGN PAINTING?

and Show-card writing. Only field not over-worked. Thorough and comprehensive instruction by mail at your own home by a teacher with national reputation. Easy terms. Write today for large illustrated catalog of particulars. THE DETROIT SCHOOL OF LETTERING, Dept. 5, Detroit, Mich. "Oldest and largest School of its kind."

U.S. Patent Eye-Glass Guard

Don't Mar Your Nose—No Pressure—Firm—Safe—Easy. Sticks to Any Nose. Will Replace Spectacles. Ask your optician or write BORSCH & CO., H. 103 Adams St., Chicago, Ill.

GOOD LUCK PIN Sent Postpaid 15c. Orbed Silver, Ruby or Emerald Eyes. Suitable for all. Hugh Connolly, Jeweler, 25 State St., Detroit, Mich.

Evans' Ale

IS to-day what it has been for 118 years—the best ale in the world, and no expense will ever be spared to keep it so. It will never have to fear any legitimate competition because merit is the foundation of its success.

Shorthand a Mine We loan you a Remington machine, teach you Shorthand & Typewriting by Mail, and help you get a position in Chicago at top salary and with pure promotion. Ver. Sten. Inst., 198 Canal, Chicago, Ill.

ROYALTY PAID ON SONG-POEMS and Musical Compositions. We arrange and popularize. PIONEER PUB. CO. 523 Baltimore Building CHICAGO, ILL.

NOW DEPOSITED IN THE BANK

$75,000.00

IN CASH GIVEN AWAY

To arouse interest in, and to advertise the GREAT ST. LOUIS WORLD'S FAIR, this enormous sum will be distributed. Full information will be sent you ABSOLUTELY FREE. Just send your name and address on a postal card and we will send you full particulars.

World's Fair Contest Co. 108 N. 8th Street St. Louis, Mo.

$200 A MONTH

Active Man or Woman in each county to exhibit, take orders and appoint agents for Eureka Oil Gas News for cooking. New and wonderful inventions. Customers score them delighted with our improved burner. Agents wanted in every business district. Rapidly increasing gasoline demand. Absolutely safe. Makes the very best from kerosene oil. Cheap, clean, fuel. Sells at night. Catalogue Free. Write today. STANDARD GAS LAMP CO., 141-143 Ontario St., Chicago Reduced Rates on Household goods to and from Colorado. Write Beking Household Shipping Co. 97 1/2 Washington Street, Chicago.

Sent on Approval

TO RESPONSIBLE PEOPLE

Laughlin

FOUNTAIN PEN

Guaranteed Finest Grade 14k.
SOLID GOLD PEN

To test the merits of this publication as an advertising medium we offer you choice of

These Two Popular Styles For Only $1.00

Postpaid to any address

(By registered mail 5c extra)

Holder is made of the finest quality hard rubber, in four simple parts, fitted with very highest grade, large size 14k. gold pen, any flexibility desired—ink feeding device perfect.

Either style—Richly Gold Mounted for presentation purposes $1.00 extra.

Grand Special Offer

You may try the pen a week if you do not find it as represented, fully as fine a value as you can secure for three times the price in any other makes, if not entirely satisfactory in every respect, return it and we will send you $1.10 for it, the extra 10c. is for your trouble in writing us and to show our confidence in the Laughlin Pen—(Not one customer in 5000 has asked for their money back.)

Lay this Publication down and write NOW

Safety Pocket Pen Holder sent free of charge with each Pen.

ADDRESS

Laughlin Mfg. Co.

108 Griswold St. Detroit, Mich.

On Guard at Newchwang

Mud-docking a United States gunboat in North China to keep watch over American interests

By LIEUT. R. DE LANCEY HASBROUCK, U.S.N.

NEWCHWANG, CHINA, Feb. 12, 1904.

FROM time to time, during unsettled conditions in China, and for the protection of American interests, the American Minister at Peking asks that a man-o'-war be stationed for the winter in the Peiho and Liaohe Rivers that guard the approach to Tien-tsin and Peking, and Newchwang respectively.

As both the Peiho and Liaohe freeze up solid during the winter months, four feet of ice being not uncommon, a new problem was given to the commanding officers of the ships detailed for this duty. It was evidently impossible for a ship to lie in the stream on account of the masses of ice which come and go with the tide, as both rivers have a rise and fall of thirteen feet; it was observed that the local means of laying up small craft, such as junks, etc., was to dig a hole in the ground, float in the craft at high water before the first freeze, dam up the entrance to this hole, drain off the contained water at low tide, secure the boat for the winter, and the trick was done. Sometimes the water was left in this dock to freeze and remain so during the winter.

This was the scheme, with modifications, adopted by naval officers to securely lay up a man-o'-war for the winter, the difference being that, where the small craft were uninhabited during the winter months and machinery laid up, the man-o'-war had to so make her arrangements that the usual functions of the ship could be carried out, and the officers and crew be made comfortable under the new conditions.

The earlier ships that were laid up for the winter in this manner made their preparations and arrangements for the ship to be dry-docked all winter; that is, no water in the dock, as they imagined it would freeze solid. Later experiment proved, however, that it was possible for a ship to be water-borne all winter, notwithstanding the low temperatures experienced, —24 degrees F. being not unusual at Newchwang.

The first ship to mud-dock properly was the Petrel of 892 tons displacement, and she wintered at Newchwang during the winter of 1894-5, the time of the Sino-Japanese War. She was not water-borne, and had to depend on shore supply for water. A redoubt fort was constructed about her.

The Monoway and Helena are the largest ships that have been mud-docked. The writer passed a winter on each of these ships in North China—on the Monoway during the Boxer outbreak in 1900-1, and on the Helena the winter of 1903-4—and had more or less to do with designing the docks, and the engineering features connected with wintering in mud dock. Both docks were three hundred feet long, fifty feet wide on the bottom, and twelve feet deep, with sides sloping at an angle of 45 degrees.

In any other country the excavation of such a dock would be quite expensive, and would be done by steam shovels. In China, coolies do the work with hand shovels and baskets on the universal carrying pole.

The Helena's dock was dug in twenty-five days, the Monoway's in about the same time, the cost in each case being about $1,000, or twelve cents per cubic yard. The banks of both the Peiho and Liaohe contain enough clay to make the docks independent of any supporting piling, and they came in very little.

In entering the dock, a high tide is awaited, and the ship goes in at flood with a strong current, as in both rivers at slack water the tide has fallen at least two feet. The entrance to the dock is very little wider than the beam of the ship, and a spot is chosen where the bank is steep to minimize the digging of the approach. When the ship has entered the dock and is secured with bow and stern lines for a full due, the dam is built across the entrance. This is the most important part of the dock, as it must sustain the unbalanced pressure of the water in the dock at low tide. Two rows of piling are driven across the entrance, about fifteen feet apart. This is then boarded up inside, and stringers are run across the entrance outside of the piles and above high-water mark, and the piles are tied together across the dam with iron stay rods. This forms a coffer-dam, which is filled with earth and heavily tamped, and soon freezes solid and tight as a drum.

A sluice is now installed at half-tide level, but not through the dam, and by means of it the water in the dock is renewed or refreshed. The excavated earth is carried back ten feet from the edge of the dock, which leaves a clear walk all around the ship, and a wall built which makes a barrier to keep out the ever-curious Chinamen.

The wisecracks of Newchwang said it would be impossible for the ship to remain water-borne all winter, and, citing their temperature of —24 degrees F., declared the dock would freeze up solid.

The Monoway having been water-borne the winter of 1900-1, it was decided to try it in any case with the Helena, and to-day, the middle of February, the Helena's dock is the only unfrozen sheet of water in Manchuria, and a source of constant wonder to the passing Chinaman, who, probably seeing the steaming dock, thinks it some "foreign devil joss pigdin."

Day after day the thermometer registered —12 degrees F., yet the water in the dock has never been below 55 degrees F. This is due to the fact that the ship itself is an enormous heater, and also due to the hot circulating water which is constantly being pumped from the ship into the dock. The ship keeps steam on two boilers, distils her own water, runs her dynamo, and is heated by steam; in fact, all her functions are the same as if cruising.

A NEW SCHOOL FOR BOYS

Prepares for college or business. Ages 13-19. Complete scholastic equipment. Faculty of 25. Conducted on board the American Line Ocean Steamship "Pennsylvania" en voyage to the various countries of the world. Capacity 250 cadet students.

The study of the classics, modern languages, history, geography, natural sciences, commerce and art illustrated by graphic object lessons in the places visited. All observation on shore intelligently directed by members of Faculty. Unusual advantages for individual training and instruction.

Organization and discipline like Naval Academy. The development of personal honor and manliness is the aim of the moral training. Two regular physicians on board. A Director of physical culture. Every temptation of life on shore avoided, kindly care and wise oversight ever at hand.

The cruise follows the temperate climate and is laid out on the most approved routes for the avoidance of storms. With no exacting schedule to make the travel will be like a delightful yachting trip. The "Pennsylvania" sails from Narragansett Bay, Rhode Island, September 15 next, voyages 19,000 miles, touching at 30 ports in Europe, N. Africa and the West Indies, returning home in June, 1905.

Attractive features of the equipment are a music room, library, printing presses for the School periodical, dark room and photographic facilities, gymnasium, scientific museums and a ship's band for military and social functions. The Ship is provided with two steam launches and twelve large rowing and sailing cutters. Also tents and full camping outfit.

Cadets are drilled at ship's battery, infantry drill, with boats under sail and with oars, arm and away boats, single sticks, quarters, pitching camp, setting up drill, etc., etc.

The "Pennsylvania" is a safe and comfortable ship rated 21,000; 360 feet long, 44 feet beam, 25 feet draught. Equipment includes every device for comfort and safety—heat, light, ventilation, distilled water, cold storage, extensive kitchens and corps of servants. The ship manned by full crew of sailors and mechanics—cadets take no part in operation.

PROSPECTUS FOR 1904-05 ON APPLICATION

NAUTICAL PREPARATORY SCHOOL, PROVIDENCE, RHODE ISLAND, U. S. A.

Will You Help A Sick Friend?

Get My Book For Him Now.

Which shall I send?

Book 1 on Dyspepsia.
Book 2 on the Heart.
Book 3 on the Kidneys.
Book 4 for Women.
Book 5 for Men (sealed).
Book 6 on Rheumatism.

Send me no money. Only tell me which book to send. You certainly know of some one who is sick—some sufferer who will be grateful for the help my book offers.

And that book tells of a way to help. Tells of a way so certain that I, as a physician, offer that help on trial. The book tells how for 30 years in hospitals and at bedside I searched for a way to cure deep-seated and difficult diseases. It tells how I perfected my prescription—Dr. Shoop's Restorative. How by scientific experiment I traced out the causes that bring on chronic diseases.

I found invariably that where there was a weakness, the inside nerves were weak. Where there was a lack of vitality that the vital nerves lacked power. Where weak organs were found, I always found weak nerves. Not the nerves commonly thought of, but the vital organs' nerves, the inside—the invisible nerves.

This was a revelation. Then my real success began.

Then I combined ingredients that would strengthen, that would vitalize these nerves. That prescription I called a restorative. It is known the world over now as Dr. Shoop's Restorative. After that I did not fail to cure one case in each hundred. In the extremely difficult cases my failures for five years were one in each forty treated. I found cancer incurable. Cancer is for surgery, not medicine.

Then how to get this prescription to sick ones everywhere was my thought. I must announce it in the public press. But, thought I, will they realize the truth of my discovery—the real power of Dr. Shoop's Restorative? Then a way came to me—like an inspiration. "I will offer it to the sick on trial. Then they will know I am sincere." I wrote a reliable druggist in each city and village in America. They agreed to co-operate with me. Now by any sick one

Dr. Shoop's Restorative

Can be taken on trial. For a full month I will let you use it entirely at my risk.

Send no money. Just write me for the book you need. When I send it I will tell you of a druggist near by who will permit the month's trial. Use the Restorative a month. Then decide. If you say to the druggist "It did not help me," that will relieve you of any expense whatever. It will bill the cost to me.

This is my way of clearing your mind of all doubts as to what Dr. Shoop's Restorative can do. No matter how prejudiced, you cannot dispute this absolute security I offer. You cannot resist an offer like this if you are at all sick.

If you have a weakness, write me. If you can't do things like you used to do them, tell me about it. Write in confidence. As a physician I will tell you a way to help. Get my book now—today.

Address Dr. Shoop, Box 4521, Racine, Wis. Mild cases, not chronic, are often cured with one or two bottles. At druggists.

POSTAGE STAMPS Big 1904 Catalogue, 737 Illustrations, 10c. 31 Large Civil War Revenue, 10c. 6 Extra Honduras Cards, 10c. Best 50c Sheets on Approval. Premiums. HOLTEN STAMP CO., Dept. Z, Boston, Mass.

A splendid fit across shoulders, chest—everywhere.

MODEL SHIRTS

combine the style, comfort and choice of fabric secured in "made-to-order shirts," with the price of ready made shirts.

LOOK FOR THIS MARK, MAKE YOUR ORDER.

MODEL SHIRTS

Try our cost shirts. Write to-day for our booklet—all about good shirts and the style to wear on certain occasions.

Model Shirt Co., 30 Century Bldg., Indianapolis, Ind.

3 Months Free

Send us your name and address and we will send you The Investor's Review for three months free of charge. A great journal of advice for everybody. Fully illustrated. Gives latest and most reliable information concerning industrial, mining, oil and other stocks and enterprises. Knowledge is power. Great opportunities come and go. Great fakes likewise. Get posted before investing. Write today.

INVESTOR'S REVIEW, 1419 Gall Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

Knowledge of Automobile matters will enhance your Social standing

Automobile Topics

A WEEKLY MAGAZINE of highest quality—entertaining, clever, instructive and superbly illustrated—will keep you posted.

See our Special Departments, entitled TOPICS, SOCIETY, CLUBS, SPORT, UTILITY and BOAT MOTORING.

KEEP ABREAST WITH THE PROGRESS OF THE TIMES

TWO DOLLARS invested for one year's subscription to AUTOMOBILE TOPICS will prove a paying investment. Send name and address for free sample copy To 1440 BROADWAY, NEW YORK CITY.

HAVE YOU A RIGHT

to bring children into the world and leave their future to chance and charity in case of your death? You can provide for their future and save money at the same time. Our booklet "The How and the Why" tells. Send for it. We insure by mail.

PENN MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE CO.
921 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia

Save Your Papers

COLLIER'S WEEKLY BINDER

Fitted with patent clasps. Will hold fifty-two numbers of the paper.

Price $1.25. Address COLLIER'S WEEKLY, 416 WEST 13TH STREET, NEW YORK CITY

In One Ear and Out the Other

A Good Memory Saves Time and Money
Pelman's System of Memory Training
 converts a treacherous memory into a reliable one. Gives mind control and mental poise. An easy, simple and scientific method of training. Original and of absorbing interest. Requires but a few minutes each day, and richly repays the time invested. No matter what your life work, the Pelman System will make you more successful. Mr. Pelman's pupils range in age from 16 to 55 years. Taught in six languages. FREE—Mr. Pelman's book entitled "Memory Training: Its Loss and Its Application to Practical Life." This book is sent absolutely free, postpaid upon request. Write at once.

THE PELMAN SCHOOL OF MEMORY TRAINING
 1636 Masonic Temple, Chicago
 LONDON, 4 Bloomsbury Street, W. C.; PARIS, Avenue de Neuilly, 109; MUNICH, Maximilianstr. 9; MELBOURNE, G. F. O. Box 491; DUBLIN, Naval, Lynn Building.

A Revelation
 In size, magnificence and beauty, the St. Louis World's Fair will surpass any previous Exposition. To see it as it will be, get the Katy Flyer. Views of all principal buildings reproduced in colors in the lithographer's highest art. The leaves, 4x10, are lovely bound and may be framed. Send 25c to "KATY," Box N 912, St. Louis, Mo.
THE KATY FLYER, the track guide of the M. K. & T. Ry.—between St. Louis, Oklahoma, Texas and Old Mexico.

MUSIC LESSONS FREE

For Beginners or Advanced Pupils

A Conservatory of Music in Your Own Home, with a Corps of Trained Professors at Your Command

YOU DO NOT HAVE to Leave Your Home to secure Free & Full Course for Either Piano, Organ, Violin, Banjo, Guitar, Cornet or Mandolin

We want a representative of our method of teaching in every locality in this country, and as you are interested in learning to play your favorite instrument by note, our Free Tuition Contract should appeal to you at once. It is the opportunity of a lifetime, and your experience will be the most grateful lesson. Everything is so plain and simple you cannot help learning. Any boy, girl, man or woman can learn to play their favorite instrument by note in a few weeks, by using the spare moments at their disposal, and if you only know how simple our method and how easily acquired, you would write to us at once.

Our lady, Miss Evelyn Scarborough, Richmond, Tex., has just written us after six months' study on the guitar: "If I ever get a piano, you may rest assured that I will take lessons of the U. S. SCHOOL OF MUSIC again, as your teaching by mail is far better than any teacher I have ever tried."

OUR FREE OFFER
 We will give, free, for advertising purposes, 48 music lessons for beginners or advanced pupils, on Piano, Organ, Banjo, Guitar, Violin or Mandolin (your expense will only be the cost of postage and the music you use, which is small). We teach by mail only, and guarantee success. Hundreds write: "Wish I had known of your school before."

We can teach a child to play the piano or organ by note with both hands in 12 weeks, and guarantee it. It reads like a fairy tale, but it's true, every word of it, and we'll prove it to your entire satisfaction by actual demonstration and testimonials from hundreds of grateful and delighted pupils.

Now, if we can do this with a child who knows nothing of music except its A B C's and how to read, we can do a great deal more with you.

When you see how easy it is to learn to play the instrument you like or further improve your present knowledge of music, you will wonder you did not write to us long ago.

Aside from its value as an accomplishment, you can derive infinite personal pleasure and charm your friends and neighbors when they call to see you by playing some popular air on the instrument you like best.

You can learn by our system in the spare moments at your disposal, if you are able to read.

Our Advanced Course in Harmony and Composition is unequalled, and by our method is as easy to acquire as the regular course. No other School of Music compares with ours in equipment, and no other curriculum is so comprehensive.

A knowledge of how to play any instrument by note may prove of incalculable advantage. It may be the means of earning you a livelihood if need be, for good musicians are always in demand. There's a place for you, perhaps, at the organ in your own Church, or in the Neighborhood Musical, in the School or College Mandolin and Guitar Club. You may seek honors as a Soloist Performer in Public Recitals—however it may be, there's a place for you somewhere if you can play some musical instrument by note. Be one of society's useful and welcome members. Sit down now and write us; get in touch with us—we can do your world of good.

Just as soon as your request is received, we will send our booklet, free tuition contract and testimonials, and arrange for you to begin at once. Address

U. S. SCHOOL OF MUSIC
 Dept. 30, 19 Union Square, New York, N. Y.

As the greater part of the ship's drills have to be suspended on account of the cold weather, the amusement of the crew becomes a serious matter. Both on the Monocacy and the Helena this matter was taken in hand by the officers, the crew and officers subscribing liberally for an athletic outfit.

The Monocacy built a recreation building alongside the ship, while the Helena hired a building and compound nearby. The crew of the Monocacy had football and baseball, and a usual indoor outfit, games and a "paper mess," i.e. newspapers and periodicals. The Helena's outfit was more elaborate, including the Monocacy's list as well as golf, basket-ball, ping-pong, and a regulation bowling alley, the latter being the greatest success of all. The men and officers played match games of football and basket-ball, and the ship has a bowling and basket-ball league among the divisions. Silver cups have been presented for the best bowling scores for the season, one for the crew and one for the officers.

In a mud stable in the compound the officers keep four Manchurian ponies. These little beasts are very apt, and the Helena boasts a well-organized and fairly well-trained polo team, which plays all comers. An all-navy polo team is about the last thing one would expect to find aboard a man-of-war; horse-marines still have their place. The writer played polo when on the Monocacy, but the ship could not muster a team. Both the Peiho and Liaoh freeze up about November 25 and remain so until the middle of March. During these months all sea traffic ceases, the ship is cut off from the outside world, and must be self-sustained and self-amused.

$5,000 for a Short Story

WITH a view to secure not only the finest work of already famous story-tellers, but to encourage and develop younger writers in the field of fiction, COLLIER'S WEEKLY offers the following prizes for original short stories by American writers:

- A First Prize of $5,000
- A Second Prize of $2,000
- A Third Prize of $1,000

There are absolutely no restrictions as to the kind or treatment of stories. Every manuscript will be judged upon its individual merits. The stories may be of love, adventure, business, in fact anything, and they may depend upon plot, style, character, or atmosphere. It is the hope of the Editor to get the best of every kind.

I. The author must be an American by nationality or residence. As the object of the Contest is especially to bring out American fiction, we have made this condition, using the word American in its broadest sense and to include anybody residing on this continent as well as American citizens residing abroad.

II. There is no limit to the number of stories any writer may submit. That is, it is quite possible for one author to submit a dozen stories, win all three prizes, and have the remaining nine stories accepted for publication in the Weekly at five cents a word.

III. Stories may be of any length whatever, from the very shortest up to 10,000 words. The preferable length for use in the Weekly is from 5,000 to 7,000 words, but this will have no bearing on the award of prizes.

IV. All manuscript must be typewritten, laid flat, or folded in its envelope—in other words it must not be rolled. It must not be signed, but accompanied by a plain sealed envelope inscribed with the title of the story and containing a card or slip of paper with the writer's full name and address written on it. Under no circumstances must there be any word or indication on this envelope or on the manuscript itself or any matter sent with the manuscript that would divulge its authorship. No one will know who are the authors of the prize-winning stories until the judges have selected the three best manuscripts. The envelopes with the corresponding titles will then be opened, but not until then.

V. As one of the objects of this competition is to secure as many good short stories as possible, the Editor reserves the right to purchase any of the manuscripts which have failed to win a prize, but which he considers suitable for publication in the Weekly. All such stories will be paid for at the rate of five cents a word, except in the cases of authors whose recognized rate is higher than this amount, in which instance the author's regular rate will be paid.

VI. The copyright of the three stories winning prizes is to vest absolutely in COLLIER'S WEEKLY. All other stories which fail to win a prize, but are acceptable for publication in the Weekly, will be paid for at the rate of five cents a word for the serial rights only.

VII. All MSS. must be mailed on or before June 1, 1904. That is, although a story may reach us a week later than this day, should the envelope bear the post-office stamp with the name of the starting-point and the date of June 1, 1904, or any date previous to that, the MS. will be considered eligible for the contest.

Every story will be carefully read and considered, but the awards having once been made, the greatest despatch possible will be used in returning manuscripts to their authors.

The following gentlemen have consented to act as judges: HENRY CAROT LODGE, United States Senator from Massachusetts; WILLIAM ALLEN WHITE, Author and Journalist; WALTER PAGE, Editor "World's Work."

All MSS. should be addressed,

SHORT STORY CONTEST, COLLIER'S
 416 West 13th Street, New York City

Postage for their return should be enclosed in the envelope containing the author's name.

OUR 31 YEARS' EXPERIENCE

and continued success is a guarantee to you of good quality and fair dealing. WE HAVE NO AGENTS anywhere but sell direct to you, thus saving you the agent's and dealer's profits. We are the largest manufacturers of vehicles and harness in the world selling on this plan exclusively. We ship for examination guaranteeing safe delivery. You are out nothing if not satisfied. We make over 200 styles of vehicles and 45 styles of harness. Our prices on both vehicles and harness represent the actual cost of material and making plus one profit. Our large illustrated catalog is free. Send for it.

No. 1114—Cutter and Driving Wagon with 4-hk Kelly Rubber Tires. Price complete $62.50. As good as sells for $12.00 more.

No. 4194—The Combination Top Buggy and Sybilite Four Driving Wagon with 4-hk Kelly Rubber Tires. Price complete with extra spools only, $68.00. As good as sells for $12.00 more.

No. 336—Fine Convert Wagon with Basket Seat and 4-hk Kelly Rubber Tires. Price complete $109.95. As good as sells for $12.00 more.

No. 301—Fine Canopy Top Surrey. Price complete $122.00. As good as sells for $12.00 more.

ELKHART CARRIAGE & HARNESS MFG. CO.
 ELKHART, IND.

SUCCESS SHORTHAND

Taught by mail under the direction of the most successful firm of shorthand reporters in the world. They teach you by mail the same system they use. Write to-day for our book, "Success Shorthand System."

WALTON, JAMES & FORD
 Suite 26, 77-79 Clark St., Chicago, Ill.

Gray Hair Restored

Premature gray hair is universally regarded as a sign of weakness. Good positions in business and society are often lost because of it.

MRS. POTTER'S WALNUT JUICE Hair Stain

makes gray hair any shade of brown and keeps it so, with only one application a month. Contains no chemicals, simply the pure juice of the black walnut.

Walnut. Regular size, which lasts a year, mailed on receipt of $1.15, on sale at first-class druggists.

Face Tonic—Will mail you a trial package on receipt of twenty-five cents to cover expenses. Write for Mrs. Potter's "Causal" in Ladies.

As interesting booklet, mailed free.

MRS. POTTER'S HYGIENIC DEPOT
 Suite 371 Grouton Bldg. Cincinnati, O.

500 Ways to Make Money

Men—Women—Boys—Girls. Something is it for all. Read

What a widow has done: "From the money I make on the plan on page 8, I provide for my family of 4 children and myself, I having been left a widow without support a few months ago. It was a happy day for me when I bought your book."

What a business man writes: "I wouldn't take $1000 for the good I got out of pages 191 to 200."

A schoolboy writes: "It's a bully book; I made $17.00 out of way No. 457."

220 pages, Leather Binding, sent postpaid for 50c.

G. W. OGILVIE & CO., 190 Monroe St., CHICAGO, ILL.

LEARN TO WRITE

ADVERTISEMENTS

Taught by Mail Thoroughly. Taught by the founder of the original school. Taught in an expert manner, enabling you to earn expert salary. Six years' success and hundreds of successful graduates. Large prospectus free on request.

PAGE-DAVIS CO., Suite 19, 90 Wabash Ave., Chicago

WHITE GASOLINE MARINE ENGINES

SAFETY demands a marine engine that is absolutely reliable, certain and prompt in starting. White Gasoline Engines are guaranteed to start readily and run satisfactorily under all conditions of weather, and to be free from defects in material and construction. They are of the four cycle type and are designed for long and heavy service. Each engine is fitted with a sensitive ball governor, solid propeller with reversing gears held in engine bed, early and late spark, self cleaning igniters, glass gasoline feed cup showing supply and working of fuel. Distillate and cheap grades of oil may be successfully used. Minimum vibration and noise and no disagreeable odor.

Catalog sent upon request—also estimates on complete launches. Special Catalog of Stationary and Portable Engines for general ranch purposes.

GLOBE IRON WORKS CO.
 P.O. BOX 1436 MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

THE STAGE BY MAIL

ACTING ELOCUTION

$1.00 One Dollar Per Week $1.00

In order to convince you that my course of ACTING BY MAIL is meritorious and deserving of recognition, I will send you prepaid weekly at the rate of ONE DOLLAR per week a thorough course of ACTING, including stage business, theatrical technique, voice culture, diction, art of making up, and HOW TO SECURE A POSITION. Try my first lesson. One dollar will not embarrass your pocket-book, and may be the means of assisting you to your heart's desire, and procure an enviable position with some first-class traveling organization. Others have succeeded with my assistance—why not you? Do not delay, but risk one dollar for my first lesson, and be convinced of my earnest desire and ability to help you. Money refunded if my assertions are misrepresented.

Address HENRY KEEFE, Dept. 25, New York Theatre, New York

LEARN TO WRITE A GOOD LETTER

Sherrin Cody's "Complete Training Course in Correct English, Business Correspondence, and Advertisement Writing," (immediately subscribed for by the Pres. of A. C. McClurg & Co., 445 N. W. of 12th & Hennepin), is a practical system, showing by actual letters corrected and rewritten as model letters, just how to do all kinds of business by mail—"How to Write," "How to Collect Money," "How to make Friends," "By Mail," 10 lessons mailed weekly, 50c.

Mr. Cody's four books on English, containing his secret complete business correspondence, Persuasion, Composition, etc.—in a book 12, postpaid, returnable.

SCHOOL OF ENGLISH, 423 Opera House Bldg., Chicago.

First-Class Hotels and Clubs, on Wheels
 The Through Trains of . . . The New York Central

The advertisement is framed by a decorative border. At the top right, a hop cone is shown. A vertical line runs down the right side, ending in a flourish. On the left side, there is a vertical line with a hop cone at the bottom. The word "Schlitz" is written in a large, stylized script at the top left.

Schlitz

The Beverage of Health

Pure beer—Schlitz beer—is the best drink in the world for you.

The malt is a food; the hops a tonic. The alcohol—only  $3\frac{1}{2}$  per cent—is an aid to digestion; a healthful stimulant.

The most healthy nations in the world—the most hardy, most energetic—drink the most of it.

But the beer must be pure.

Impurity means germs and germs are harmful. That is why we brew Schlitz in absolute cleanliness. That's why we filter even the air that touches it, then filter the product, then sterilize every bottle.

And the beer must be aged.

Green beer causes biliousness. That's why we age Schlitz for months before we market it.

Schlitz beer is absolutely pure; it can't harm you. And the habit of drinking it is good for you. Ask for the brewery bottling.

The Beer That Made Milwaukee Famous.

WINTON

¶ Easiest to control. ¶ Wonderful simplicity. ¶ Very best materials and workmanship. ¶ Not a combination of fads and fancies, but a car of real merit, certain to please those who would enjoy motoring in town or country. ¶ Motor is strong and dependable. Construction thoroughly in accord with best engineering practice. ¶ Utter absence of experimental features is a strong recommendation. ¶ Price, with hinged glass front canopy, full lamp equipment, tools, etc., $2500, f. o. b. Cleveland. ¶ Our new catalogue is ready.

THE WINTON MOTOR CARRIAGE CO.

Winton Agencies in all important places.

Factory and General Offices
CLEVELAND, OHIO, U. S. A.
 New York Boston Philadelphia Chicago

Member Association
 Licensed Automobile
 Manufacturers.

WING PIANOS

Are sold direct from the factory—and in no other way

WHEN you buy a Wing Piano you buy at wholesale. You pay the actual cost of making it with only our small wholesale profit added. When you buy a piano as most people buy pianos—at retail—you pay the retail dealer's store rent and other expenses; his profit, and the commission or salary of the agents and salesmen he employs. This is what you save by buying a Wing Piano direct from the factory. The retail profit on a piano is never less than $75—often it is as much as $200. Isn't this worth saving?

But in buying a piano there is something a great deal more important than the price to be thought of. A piano is a musical instrument and the one great object for which it is made is its tone. A perfect tone is appreciated by everybody—the beginner in music as well as the trained musician. "Pure and sweet; every note clear and musical; responsive to the lightest touch yet possessing great volume and power, without a trace of harshness"—this describes the tone of the Wing Piano.

Our experience of over a third of a century manufacturing pianos of the very highest quality, enables us to produce an instrument that cannot be improved upon in tone, workmanship, finish or durability.

Our plan of selling is not an experiment. It is a great success. Over 38,000 Wing Pianos have been manufactured and sold in 36 years—since 1868. We can probably refer you to purchasers right in your own neighborhood.

Sent on trial. We pay freight. No advance payment

We do not ask anyone to buy a Wing Piano merely because of what we say about it; and although we can refer to over 38,000 satisfied purchasers, we do not ask you to buy a Wing Piano because they recommend it. We will place a Wing Piano in your home if you live in any part of the United States. We will not ask for any advance payment or deposit. We will pay the freight and other charges on the piano in advance. We will allow you to keep the piano in your home for 20 days. You will be under no obligation to buy it. If it is not satisfactory in any way or if for any reason you think it is not the piano you want, we will take it back at our expense and without one cent of cost to you. Should you decide to buy it, then and not until then, you pay us for it. You can pay by small monthly installments if desired. We take old instruments in exchange. Our responsibility does not cease when you buy the piano. Every Wing Piano is guaranteed by us for 12 years against any defect in tone, action, workmanship or material.

Instrumental Attachment

The Wing Piano contains a number of improvements and special features which are not to be found in any other piano. Among them, the Instrumental Attachment by which any ordinary player can imitate perfectly the tones of the mandolin, harp, guitar, zither and banjo.

WING ORGANS are made with the same care and sold under the same guarantee as Wing Pianos. Sent on trial to any part of the United States, freight paid in advance by us, without any advance payment or deposit being made. Sold on easy monthly payments. Separate Organ catalogue sent on request.

A Book You Need—Sent FREE

A book which contains as much information about pianos as any expert possesses. It makes the selection of a piano easy. If read carefully, it will make you a judge of tone, action, workmanship and finish; will tell you how to know good from bad. It describes the materials used; gives pictures of all the different parts and tells how they should be made and put together. It is the only book of its kind ever published. It contains 115 pages and is named "The Book of Complete Information About Pianos." We send it free to anyone wishing to buy a piano. Write for it.

WING & SON 346-348 WEST THIRTEENTH STREET NEW YORK CITY
ESTABLISHED 1868

24 H. P. "TONNEAU DE LUXE" SPECIAL

THE HOWARD Gasolene Touring Car

The motors in the Howard cars are the result of experience gained through persevering work for the past eight years upon all types presented to the public, both in the United States and Europe.

We have in this time sold over five thousand gasolene motors for all sorts and conditions of work.

The Howard car comes under the classification of a highly finished product and is pronounced by experts to be the best American car built.

The 24 H. P. Touring car is fitted with a "King of Belgians" aluminum body, side entrances, and is a dream of luxury—$3,000.00; with top and glass front, $3,500.00.

The Howard 8 H. P. Runabout (two cylinder opposed) is a speedy, substantial car, built on lines of grace and beauty, combined with strength—$800.00; with tonneau, $1,000.00.

Engines and all mechanical equipments manufactured by Gas Engine & Power Co., and Charles L. Seabury & Co., Consolidated, at Morris Heights, New York City, which is a guarantee of the best quality of material and highest class workmanship.

THE HOWARD AUTOMOBILE CO., YONKERS, N. Y.

Sole Agents New York City and Vicinity:

THE MOBILE STORAGE & REPAIR CO.

1709-11-13 Broadway, Corner Fifty-Fourth St., N. Y. City

Telephone, 2090 Columbus.

????????????

THE
EQUITABLE
HENRY B. HYDE
FOUNDER

J. W. ALEXANDER
PRESIDENT

STRONGEST
IN THE WORLD

J. H. HYDE
VICE PRESIDENT

DO YOU KNOW
that you can buy 5% Gold Bonds on instalments—and have them insured while you are paying for them?
A good investment for you—if you live. A splendid protection for your family—
if you die.

Opportunities for men of character to act as representatives.
Apply to GAGE E. TARBELL, 2nd Vice President.

Send this coupon, or write, for particulars

THE EQUITABLE LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY of the United States
120 Broadway, New York Dept. No. 24

I would like to receive information regarding Gold Bond for $.....
issued to a person aged ..... years.

Name.....

Address.....

Model A
With Detachable Tonneau,
$3500.00.

CADILLAC

Model B, Touring Car
Without Tonneau, $3000.00.

Our Cars and Our Record— Do You Know Them?

The first Cadillac was put on the market early in 1902. "Can't be sold profitably for the money," competitors said, and prognosticated an early rise in price or decline in quality.

The end of the year saw the country full of satisfaction-giving Cadillac, and our sales exceeded by those of only one manufacturer.

In the recent contest a stock Cadillac went up Earle Rock Hill on the high gear in 5:19, winning first prize for vehicles of its class and defeating all machines under double its rated horse-power.

At all the big auto shows this season, where the most discriminating purchasers are found, the Cadillac exhibits have been centers of attraction to an extent that speaks volumes both for the reputation of the Cadillac and for the mechanical excellence of the machines exhibited. New Cadillacs were sold during the New York Show than any other make.

Model B, embodies more novel and exclusive features of merit than can be found in any other automobile, no matter what the price.

Frame of pressed steel; running gear and suspension system an absolutely unique and unrivaled combination of strength and flexibility that makes the car ride over the roughest roads as safely and smoothly as a Pullman coach. In points of speed, design, construction, luxury of appointments, ease of control and quietness of running, it is all that the name Cadillac stands for—greatest results; fewest complications. All 1904 Cadillacs are equipped with elastic tires.

Model A carries several improvements, otherwise it is the same safe, speedy, reliable machine as last year, and is sold at the same price—$3500 as a runabout; $3500 complete with detachable tonneau.

Our handsome new booklet explains and illustrates both models in detail, and gives address of agency nearest you where they may be seen and tried. Free on request.

CADILLAC AUTOMOBILE COMPANY
Detroit, Mich.
Member Association of Licensed Automobile Manufacturers

ONLY LINE TO WORLD'S FAIR MAIN ENTRANCE
Illustrated Folder sent free on application

Get My Book, if Sick

Don't send a penny.
Wait until you see what I can do.

Let me take all the risk.
Simply write.
I ask no more.

I will send you my book.
I will arrange with a druggist near-by so that you may take six bottles

Dr. Shoop's Restorative

A month on trial. I will absolutely stand all the cost if it fails. If you say "It did not help me," that ends it as far as cost to you is concerned.

Do You Understand Me?

I am telling it as plainly, as clearly as I can. I want you to know absolutely and without doubt that this offer is made on honor. I have the prescription that cures. My only problem is to convince you that Dr. Shoop's Restorative will cure—that it is an uncommon remedy.

A common remedy could not stand a test like this. It would bankrupt the physician making the offer. And I am succeeding everywhere and here is the secret of my success:

I found invariably that where there was a weakness, the inside nerves were weak. Where there was a lack of vitality the vital nerves lacked power. Where weak organs were found, I always found weak nerves.

Not the nerves commonly thought of, but the vital organ's nerves. The inside—the invisible nerves.

This was a revelation. Then my real success began. Then I combined ingredients that would strengthen, that would vitalize, these nerves. That prescription I called a restorative. It is known the world over now as Dr. Shoop's Restorative.

But do not misunderstand my offer. This is not philanthropy. Not free treatment, mind you, with nothing ever to pay. Such an offer would be misleading, would belittle the physician who made it. But I believe in a sick one's honesty, his gratitude. That when he is helped he will pay the cost of the treatment—$5.50—and gladly.

And I make the offer so that those who might doubt may learn at my risk.

Thousands Have Written

Thousands are accepting this offer. And only one in each forty writes me that my remedy failed. Just think of it. 39 out of 40 get well—difficult cases too. And the fourth has nothing to pay.

That is a record I am proud of. It is wrong to stay sick when a chance like this is open. For I have made all the experiments that you can make. And the methods which failed with me will fail with you. But the treatment that helped 600,000 others will just as surely help you.

So send for my book today. My way is probably your only way to get well. Every day that you wait will add a day to your suffering. Write a postal now to learn why.

If well, you should tell others who are sick, of my offer. Don't let a sick friend stay sick because he knows not of it. Tell him. Get my book for him. Do your duty.

You may be sick yourself sometime. Sick people need help. They appreciate sympathy and aid. Tell me of some sick friend. Let me cure him. Then he will show his gratitude to both of us. What greater reward can you have than that—a sick one's gratitude, his everlasting friendship.

Send for the book now. Do not delay.

Simply state which book you want and address
Dr. Shoop,
Box 7497, Racine, Wis.

Book 1 on Dyspepsia.
Book 2 on the Heart.
Book 3 on the Kidneys.
Book 4 for Women.
Book 5 for Men (sealed).
Book 6 on Rheumatism.

Mild cases, not chronic, are often cured with one or two bottles. At druggists.

THE SMITH PREMIER TYPEWRITER

is strongly linked to the
BUSINESS WORLD

Our interesting booklet explaining just why, send on request.

THE SMITH PREMIER TYPEWRITER CO.
EXECUTIVE OFFICE
287 Broadway
New York
FACTORY
Syracuse, N. Y.

WE SHIP ON APPROVAL

without a cent deposit and allow 10 DAYS FREE TRIAL on every bicycle. Any wheel not satisfactory returned at our expense.

Highest grade
1904 Models $8.75 to $17
Coaster Brakes, Helgehorne pressure proof tires and best equipment. 1903 and 1904 Models, best make $7 to $12
500 Second-hand Wheels
All makes and Models $3 to $8
good as new
Great Factory Clearing Sale at half factory cost.

EARN A BICYCLE taking orders from people who are provided by us. Our agents make large profits. Write at once for catalogue and our Special Offer.

AUTOMOBILES, TIRES, Sewing Machines, Stoves, etc., half cost prices.

Mead Cycle Co., Dept. 53-F, Chicago

I. W. Harper Rye.

"On Every Tongue."

For gentlemen who appreciate quality; for the weak who need to be strengthened; for the careful physician who requires purity; for everybody who knows a good thing. Sold by leading dealers everywhere.

BERNHEIM DISTILLING CO., Louisville, Ky.

The culmination of
progressive enterprise

Two-Speed Gear, Coaster Brake Chainless Bicycles

Catalogues free at our 10,000 dealers' stores, or any one catalogue mailed on receipt of 2-cent stamp.

Western Dept. Eastern Dept.
Chicago, Ill. Hartford, Conn.

POPE MANUFACTURING COMPANY

The New University Encyclopedia

Edited by
HENRY M. MAC CRACKEN, D.D., LL.D.
Chancellor New York University

Complete in 10 Royal Quarto Volumes
Handsomely and Substantially Bound in Half Morocco
Sold Only by Subscription

The New University Encyclopedia is written in simple, straightforward English, and contains more information that is reliable and comprehensive than any other reference work ever placed upon the American market. Every department has been prepared by a noted specialist.

WE HAVE A REMARKABLE INTRODUCTORY PROPOSITION

for those who desire this latest and most desirable reference work, by which it may be obtained at a very low price and upon very easy terms of payment. To obtain this offer and full information and prospectus of this work, you need only SEND A POSTCARD with your name and address, plainly written, to P. F. Collier & Son, 416 West 13th Street, New York.

San Francisco—Four Days from New York or Boston—By New York Central

Copyright 1904 by Hart Schaffner & Marx

THE fact is, if you haven't a frock coat, you ought to have; there are occasions when to appear in any other coat is uncouth. With such clothes as these, ready for sale by good clothiers everywhere, at $18 to $40 for coat and vest, it looks as if a man without a frock coat were deliberately careless about clothes.

Look for our label; a small thing to look for, big thing to find. You can get our handsome Style Book for six cents in stamps.

Hart Schaffner & Marx
Chicago

Boston

Good Clothes Makers
New York

We are sending Regal Shoes to all parts of the world

A Regal Store on Paper

Send a postal card for the latest Regal Style-Book. It is the only complete bulletin of this Spring's shoe-fashions. It shows the new styles in 32 pages of photographs as well as any of our seventy-two stores can show them in the actual shoes. It's worth sending for whether you happen to need shoes now or not. We will place your name on our mailing-list and send you all the future numbers as fast as they are issued. Every time the Style-Book comes it's just like stepping in at the Regal store to see what's newest and latest.

The Regal Mail Order Department brings to your door all the facilities of a well-appointed New York Shoe store.

We have just established Regal Mail-Order Sub-stations in San Francisco, Chicago, St. Louis, New Orleans, and Atlanta. If you need a pair of shoes for a special occasion and cannot wait for your order to reach Mail-Order headquarters at Boston, send your order to the nearest sub-station.

MODEL "G"
A more shapely Oxford than even the photograph suggests. Model taken directly from custom-makers' private lasts. Combination of full slope toe, "Flat-Iron" sole and Military heel.

Style D431—As illustrated, Low Shoe, Blucher Cut; made of tough, glossy, imported Patent Colleton; medium-heavy extension sole, high Military heel.

Delivered carriage postpaid anywhere in the United States or Canada, Mexico, Cuba, Porto Rico, Hawaiian and Philippine Islands, also Germany and all points covered by the Parcel Post System, on receipt of $5.75 per pair. (The extra 25 cents is for delivery.) We are prepared to furnish special low shipping rates to any part of the world. Samples of leather and any information gladly furnished.

Are you planning to visit the Exposition at St. Louis? We have a handy folding map in colors we'll send you free for the asking.

22 Regal Stores in New York City. 4 Regal Stores in Boston. 4 Regal Stores in Philadelphia. 12 Regal Stores in United States and England.

Women's Regal Shoes are made in all the latest styles. Sold only through our Mail Order Department and in our exclusive women's stores.

Regal Shoe Company, Inc., Mail Order Department, 707 Summer Street, Boston, Mass.

Sub-station A—100, Geary and Stockton Sts., San Francisco
Sub-station B—102 Dearborn St., Chicago
Sub-station C—618 Olive St., St. Louis
Sub-station D—421 Canal St., New Orleans
Sub-station E—4 Whitehall St., New York
Sub-station F—4 Whitehall St., New York
London Post Depot, 91 Chancery Lane, London, England

REGAL

Men's and Women's Shoes, $3.50

LIGHT

12-14 Horsepower

TONNEAU

Price, $1750

Self-lubricating, two-cylinder opposed motor in forward bonnet. Cylinders 5 x 4 1-2 inches. Bevel gear drive. Driving pinions and gears as strong as found in most cars of twice the weight. All-metal clutch running in oil. Positive controlling levers without notches or indices. Easiest of all gasoline cars to operate and maintain.

30-35 H. P. Touring Car $4000

Most powerful and efficient car of its weight. Canopy-top, Limousine or Surrey Body to order.

24-30 H. P. Touring Car $3500

The car that holds the Chicago-New York record. Canopy-top or Limousine Body to order.

New Model Electric Runabout $850

Lightest, fastest and most efficient vehicle in its class.

"Elberon" Electric Victoria $1600

In its fourth successful season. Improved this year.

Catalogue will be sent on request; also Special Catalogues of Columbia Electric Town Carriages and Commercial Vehicles.

ELECTRIC VEHICLE CO HARTFORD CONN

NEW YORK: 134, 136, 138 West 39th St., opp. Metropolitan Opera House
BOSTON: 74, 76, 78 Stanhope St. CHICAGO: 1413 Michigan Ave.

Member Association Licensed Automobile Manufacturers.

POMMERY

The Standard for Champagne

QUALITY

The World Over

WHEN YOU ORDER CHAMPAGNE WHY NOT HAVE THE WINE THAT RANKS HIGHEST AMONG CONNOISSEURS. THAT'S POMMERY

COLLIER'S

APRIL FICTION NUMBER

FUTURE SOLDIERS OF JAPAN

PHOTOGRAPH BY JAMES H. HARE, COLLIER'S SPECIAL WAR PHOTOGRAPHER IN JAPAN. COPYRIGHT 1936 BY COLLIER'S WEEKLY

THE DEMOCRATS ARE STILL AT SEA in many ways, although they seem to have progressed in the plan of campaign for the nomination. Judge PARKER has been selected as the rallying point of the saner Democrats, while Mr. HEARST remains the standard-bearer for the inflammatory odds and ends. People generally to-day believe that Judge PARKER has a better chance for the nomination than any other candidate, but even his chance is miles away from certainty. Mr. HEARST has no chance at all, his function being to keep together the fortune-hunting elements of the party, for the purpose of either dictating the compromise candidate or making other deals. His personal recompense is vast in any case, for he is about as notorious as so small and unworthy a man could be. Judge PARKER, upon being selected as the conservative leader, abandons his rôle of leading compromise possibility, and leaves that part to some horse of darker hue, like Mayor McCLELLAN, for example. Admirers of Mr. CLEVELAND talk about him less than they did before they agreed to follow PARKER, but they still dream of a convention, unable to agree upon a smaller figure, stampeded for the foremost Democrat. All over the country there will be politicians eligible for a stroke of Destiny, and ready to receive it, like GORMAN, HARRISON, WILLIAMS, HILL, and many others, but such possibilities are very vague, and the forces are now fairly well in line: PARKER, with the shadow of CLEVELAND back of him; HEARST, nominal holder of the BRYAN cards, and ready for the best deal that can be made. On issues, however, the Democrats are still in a confusion as complete as they have enjoyed since the collapse of the silver movement. On the only legitimate issue, the tariff, with its branches of reciprocity, the trusts, and justice to our dependencies, few politicians are ready to go before the country. Mr. GORMAN wishes to make a personal contest about the President's autocracy, in which the discredited Maryland leader shows himself possessed of as short and haphazard views as have been distinguishing him of late. That issue will bear the test about as well as GORMAN's Panama issue did. Mr. ROOSEVELT is properly called to account when he makes an error of judgment, as he did in regard to pensions, but his instinct to use power is so commingled with democratic feeling and the representative instinct, or openness to the people's will, that a campaign fought over such an argument would be a race in which the opposing candidate could hardly even be called an "also ran." What the Democrats most need at present is some interposition of fate or Providence, like the one which gave life to the English Liberals when CHAMBERLAIN raised the banner of protection.

CONVERGING
FORCES

if it did give us money which belonged to some one else, it would be an uncommonly low form of selfishness.

DEMAGOGUES IN AMERICA may not endanger our form of government, as they have done elsewhere, but they can none the less lower our civilization. When something dishonest and degrading springs up on our horizon, like the present yellow seeker of a nomination, we take refuge in the belief that our people are fundamentally all right, and that if they ever went so far as to put an indignant gamester in the White House, their sentiment would make him powerless for evil when they had him there. Probably it is true that this country is of too good stock, too firmly based in sanity and freedom, and too fortunate in its institutions, to allow any agitation to take away its foundation-stones of individual liberty, order, and respect for law. There is, however, room enough for injury short of any radical overthrow of those principles in which Anglo-Saxon freedom has found its bulwarks, and the very existence, the very prominence, of the demagogic type among us is not only a cause of shame, but a force for spreading evil and lowering the level of our people in the same sense that the schools are a force for good by their influence on the general mind. We are keeping up our standards remarkably, through our devotion to education, but the amount of immigration, and the deterioration in its quality, makes the task a mighty one; and agitators of the European stamp, who are new in this country, are strongest where our common schools are weakest. Two differences between such a phenomenon as Mr. HEARST and the familiar European malcontent are that the European is more likely to be sincere, and that he usually lacks the facilities given to the American by his money and by the rather astutely executed scheme of using this wealth with an eye single to his own political importance.

POSSIBILITIES OF DANGER

JAPANESE HEROISM GAINS by detailed report. The second attempt to bottle up Port Arthur proved daring which must cause emotion in the calmest breast. Four defenceless steamers were taken to the harbor entrance, facing the enemies' searchlights, and exposed to fire from forts on either side and from the ships on guard. Two blew themselves up and sank, and two were sunk by Russian torpedoes. The officers who were engaged in this fatal undertaking were those who made the first attempt, and they were sent again by their own request. The crews and stokers were chosen from new volunteers. Admiral Togo's account of individual heroism during the undertaking is not less stirring for its extreme simplicity. Commander TAKEO, who was killed while investigating the fate of a companion, is the officer who returned to the Hokoku Maru in February, because he had left his sword upon the sinking ship. We shall learn a great deal about modern courage during this war. One variety has been already shown by the Japanese to a degree which wins applause throughout the world. Other kinds are yet to come, in the long, hard battles to be fought on land, where picked individuals will count for less and the fibre of the average for more. About whether the Japanese or Russians will show the greater amount of this courage of endurance, we can only hazard useless guesses, but of one thing we are sure, that a most essential element in the result will be the strategy of the commanders, about which, especially on the Japanese side, we know so little. If one side is poorly led, all the courage in the world will count for as little as it did in some battles of our Civil War, or on the French side in the last great European contest.

COURAGE IN
THE WAR

THE PHILIPPINES WOULD BE GREAT as a moral issue in the hands of an orator of sufficient power. Any argument for their independence would fall on barren ground, for not only do the people feel instinctively that the word independence applied to them in their present state is meaningless, but the best informed expert opinion has confirmed the people in their instincts. The robbery, however, which is being practiced upon them for the benefit of a few wire-pulling bodies in America, is an outrage which the Democrats should make the most of. It is far worse in principle and amount than the impositions for which the Colonies took up arms against Great Britain. It is "grafting" meaner and more injurious than what takes place in the post-office or the legislative bodies of our States and towns. It is like the land-office stealing from the Indians, and more despicable even, because we have made no pretence of controlling the Indians primarily for their benefit. The FAYE bill, which has been recommended to the House of Representatives by a majority of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, confines commerce between the United States and the Philippines to American vessels, as if using the tariff for frank looting of the natives were not enough. We apparently have the executive ability to govern other peoples, but as long as Congress is so much the prey of various money interests, we shall probably not have the decency to give them the treatment by which England now keeps her colonies prosperous and loyal. We treat the Philippine Islands as part of the United States, and therefore exclude foreign vessels from trade with them. We treat them as not part of the United States, and therefore swing our tariff club against them. "However American industries may be affected," says the minority report, "we believe the controlling question should be the consideration of the Philippines themselves. Anything else implies a cold-blooded indifference to their well-being and their relation to our Government." There is a grievance worth fighting for. The Republican plan will hurt us as well as the islands, but even

A MORAL ISSUE

TIBET MAKES A PECULIAR APPEAL to those who love the old order of the world, when there were strange countries, and to travel was to discover. Nowadays the world is almost one, and so close are the new bonds that we know not whether the divergence of Asiatic and Occidental nature will continue. Commerce is called the great civilizer. It is at least the great changer of civilization. It is in the name of commerce that Asia is submitting to Western exploitation unwillingly to-day. It is in the name of commerce—or, as Lord ROSEBERY expressed it, over a question of tastes in tea—that the one remaining land of mystery is being opened with modern engines of destruction, mowing down the valiant and unsophisticated natives, who now, in a few years, will entirely comprehend the difference between a pop-gun and a repeating rifle. The people of the Grand Lama were entirely innocent. Nobody blames them for what they did. They happened to stand on a spot of importance in the game being played by England against Russia, and some pretext was necessary to their subjection. It is an easy philanthropy that blames Great Britain. She is doing only what is done by beetle, man, and nation. The protection of her Indian frontier is as vital to the existence of her empire as control in Korea is essential to Japan. Therefore the wishes of Tibet, or her suzerain China, are a negligible quantity, and a "political mission" with an armed escort is much like any other method of taking what is necessary. English papers remind the United States of the case of Cuba. They might reasonably recall our march westward over Indian corpses. The Liberals naturally seize upon the slaughter for political capital, for that is the function of an opposition. Probably the same step would have happened had Lord ROSEBURY been in power. The forward policy of Lord CURZON and the sending of Lord KITCHENER to India represent the determined attitude of Great Britain. The Liberals may win on the tariff. They could never win on the Empire policy.

TROUBLE
IN TIBET

AS CHINA HAS REPUDIATED her treaty with us, the question of Chinese immigration will be again dragged out from the repose which it has recently enjoyed. China's objection to the treaty is not founded upon any wish to use America as a place for her coolies to make money in. She is peculiarly indifferent to whether her coolies, or any other element of her population, make money, or whether Chinamen go abroad or stay at home. She is merely resenting an affront. She is objecting to being treated as a pest by a nation which is leading the diplomacy of the open door. Most of the Chinamen who do come here are instigated by steamship companies or American contractors. They are not led by naturally expanding ambition, like the immigrants who used to come from Ireland and Germany. If this country is determined upon one thing, it is the exclusion of the Chinese. Immigration tends to become a habit, and we do not wish any large Mongolian ingredient in our mixture. We are puzzled enough about southern and southeastern Europe, which is giving us people who are engineered away by their Governments, and there is a fair probability that a stricter education clause will be inserted in our immigration law. We ought to make sure that educated Chinese are not subjected to the hardships which have been inflicted upon them lately, but there is certainly no possibility that we shall allow from China the infusion of a question which might surpass the negro problem. This is not doing unto China precisely what we force her to do unto us, but it is conducting national affairs according to the cruel laws of DARWIN.

OUR TREATY WITH CHINA

THE RELIGIOUS CRISIS IN FRANCE has reached a stage not easy for a nation like ours to understand. The question of Church and State, which is smouldering a little temporarily in Italy, and is waiting to be brought forward when the Liberals come into power in England, now blazes hotly in France alone; so hotly, indeed, that the Government chose Good Friday to remove pictures of Christ, crucifixes, and other religious emblems from their courts of justice. Whether this was a mere proof of anger or a scheme to stir the Church into repudiating the Concordat we do not know. What is known is that the Socialists, who would more properly be called Liberals, are determined to centre their attacks upon the Church. M. JAURÈS foretells that the clerical question must receive the verdict of the French people at the general election of 1906, and attributes the great popularity of the present French Government among the masses to its attitude toward the Catholic clergy. The Socialists declare that clericalism becomes every year less a religious and more a class question. Undoubtedly such intensity of feeling as France is showing about it now has little to do with faith and much to do with politics. What agitates the excitable French nature to-day is whether the people shall choose their political principles for themselves. Education, which is all that is left of the clerical question in Great Britain, has also been the centre of commotion on the Continent. The French Government's brutal manner of executing its decision is a manifestation of the fact that the twin questions of clericalism and domestic reform compose the most heated internal problem in France and Italy to-day.

VEHEMENCE
IN FRANCE

CHICAGO HAS LONG BEEN NOTORIOUS for the insecurity of its streets. It has been the paradise of thugs, the hotbed of sandbags, the terror of pedestrians. Men have been knocked down and robbed with impunity in broad daylight in front of the principal hotels. Criminals from all over the country appreciate and despise Chicago because it is so "easy." JOSIAH FLYNT found the town unsafe because of what he published on its opportunities for crime. Captain PIPER's recent investigations bring the well-known inefficiency of the police once more into general conversation. One difficulty in properly protecting this great city lies in its geography, but the extra money needed to cover properly the whole extended territory will probably be granted readily by the citizens. Captain PIPER shows how bad in quality is even the small force which the city already has. The Irish-American has in him the making of the best policeman in the world. His aptitude for the job has become a current joke. All that is necessary is the right kind of discipline to keep him from the social bar and the profitable alliance with crime. Such a reform must begin at the top. Captain PIPER found in his investigations just one policeman whose behavior he could commend. Fortunately Chicago is well stored with energy and rather strong in civic pride, and she will apparently soon make the present members of her force believe that

POLICE
EFFICIENT

"Taking one consideration with another,
A policeman's life is not a happy one."

Then she will get to work and build up a force that shall enable citizens to follow calmly the ordinary ways of peace.

NOTHING IS MORE POPULAR than violent denunciation of that group of persons who are usually distinguished by a capital S from other sections of universal society. This fashionable Society is so safe a mark that any one who shies a brick toward it is sure to be regarded as having made a very palpable hit. We are not sure that it is to the credit of human nature that it rejoices in the most exaggerated libels of the fashionable, as it does in equal libels of the rich. Envy counts for much in the popularity of this kind of diatribe. What is the truth about Society in America, or rather in that city where all such discussion centres—in New York? It is by no means equal to the Society of London, and some other foreign capitals, where the leading social organization is marked by special culture and information, as well as by sufficient leisure for social pleasures. It is not, as those foreign societies are, especially London, addicted to a process of selection, which brings a remarkable amount of training and talent into small compass. But, if one compares it not with what Society ought to be, and in some places is, but with unselected humanity, the case is different. What is called Society in New York averages as high and higher than people would average if taken indiscriminately from other walks of life in equal numbers. It has weaknesses enough, but nevertheless take its thousand families, or its four or five hundred, or whatever number you like, and you will get a quality of human competence and intelligence above the ordinary level. Its conspicuous absurdities are committed by a few; the men who are part of it, without being devoted to it, are as good as the average, and the women are much above the average. This is faint praise, where opportunities for better things are great, but even Society should have its due.

NONSENSE ABOUT SOCIETY

FEW MEN IN THEIR LIFETIME acquire much of a legendary character, especially in this age of publicity, realism, and familiarity. The mixture of reality and myth, or rather the generalization of the real facts, the pedestal of distance, the reduction of the personality to its essentials and the heightening of those essentials, is a process which is often accomplished in foreign countries before it is at home. President ROOSEVELT, among living Americans, is most subjected to this operation of enlargement and simplification by observant foreigners. Reading papers in foreign tongues, especially those of liberal democratic tendency, in what they say about the President, one would get the feeling of contemplating a historic personage, so entirely is everything reduced to the typical and significant. The type is not always the same, to be sure; the figure lacks the settled quality of history; but it is treated nearly always in the sweeping historic manner. Mr. ROOSEVELT is treated as the absolute ruler of his party; as the concentrated force of conscience against American corruption; as energy incarnate; as any one of several ideas personified, simple as a myth. Various figures in Europe, and especially in England, are contemplated by us after this manner. There are the CHAMBERLAIN idea, or businesslike power (and this is the only legend which is clearly defined in England itself); the BALFOUR idea, or sceptical intelligence; the ROSEBURY idea, or charm in diversity; but among our own statesmen Mr. ROOSEVELT and Mr. CLEVELAND alone have any of this kind of atmosphere at home, and only Mr. ROOSEVELT has it abroad.

ROOSEVELT
LEGEND

RUSSIA PLACES HER TRUST IN KUROPATKIN

By JOHN CALLAN O'LAUGHLIN, Collier's Special War Correspondent at St. Petersburg

ST. PETERSBURG, March 14.

RUSSIA has settled down to the serious business of preparing for a war upon which she is already embarked. In her capital there are few signs of unwonted activity; along her Trans-Siberian Railroad thousands of soldiers and tons of supplies are rushing to Manchuria, in obedience to orders issued from the quiet offices which overlook the Nevsky. During the war with Spain the White House at Washington was a hive of industry, and the War and Navy Departments were surcharged with excitement. In London, during the South African War, the War and Admiralty offices were besieged, and Whitehall was thronged with people anxious for news from the front.

St. Petersburg knows no such scenes as those of Washington and London. A few persons gathered around official bulletins pasted upon lamp-posts, and interested groups examining photographs of Kuropatkin and Makaroff, or of soldiers of the different corps at the front—these are the visible indications of the trend which the thought of the people has taken. Walk to the Place Dvortsovy, a huge semicircle, the base of which is formed by the imposing Winter Palace, and the circumference by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, the Ministry of Finance, and the Department of the General Staff. There are a few soldiers scattered about the Palace; occasionally a carriage dashes through the arched driveway. A line of droskies is in front of the Foreign Office, seeking fares among the modest number of callers upon officials in that building. The Ministry of Finance is almost deserted, and the Department of the General Staff, and the Admiralty Building, which is just across to the right of the Palace, are as in time of peace. Neither anxiety, nor haste, nor fear is apparent. The white garb of snow clothes the scene with its deadening silence.

Turn now to the first man you meet, be he prince or peasant, and ask him of the war. He will repeat as facts rumors that themselves cry out their exaggeration. He will tell you what he has heard, and sometimes amplify it, and if you press him he will add: "War was not of Russia's seeking. It was thrust upon her. It is a Holy War, a war against heathenism and for God. It is a war of races, of the white against the yellow." The magnificent Cathedral of St. Isaac is a step distant. Pass through its colossal bronze doors, and you will find a mass being said for the success of Russian arms, and jostling each other, as they kneel and bow their heads against the flags, are men of the bluest and reddest blood of the empire. Patriotism levels class in Russia as elsewhere.

The hour approached for the departure of General Kuropatkin for Manchuria. I drove down the Nevsky Prospect looking at the thousands lining the boulevards awaiting the man who had sworn to meet and defeat the Japanese upon his name day—March 17 in the Russian and April 3 in our calendar. The sleighs of grand-dukes and other dignitaries passed, and the crowd perfunctorily cheered; then came Kuropatkin, and the roar that kept pace with the progress of his carriage showed the measure of satisfaction of the people with his appointment to command the Czar's armies in Manchuria, and their hopes that he might fulfil his oath.

General Kuropatkin arrived at the Nicolas Station, to find waiting to bid him God-speed a gathering distinguished enough to greet a returning conqueror. To reach the Imperial waiting-room, which he was permitted to use, he passed through a short hall, lined with officers having high rank and wearing medals for exceptional service upon their breasts. Each one of those officers grasped his hand and kissed his bearded face thrice and sometimes oftener, and when he reached the door of the Imperial waiting-room he stopped to receive from the white-haired General Eggerstoff an ikon, the talisman of his patron saint. The waiting-room was so packed that it was hardly possible to move, but, aided by officers of the household of the Czar, the General struggled through the respectful and affectionate embraces of his friends and admirers. Humanity laid its heart bare in that scene of feeling. The Korean Minister and his Secretary brought the laugh that readily comes to the surface in such situations by their struggles to reach the General and shake his hand. In their top hats and frock coats, black splashes against the brilliant gold trappings, the gorgeous uniforms, and the medals which covered the breasts of nearly every one there, they squirmed and wriggled around the room, following in the wake of a pushing mass that wanted none but Russians to surround their hero, when he took his final look upon the room. My last glimpse of the battle showed that diplomacy had conquered war. "I will not say good-by," General Kuropatkin said to the Minister. "It is an revoir. We will meet again in Seoul." "I pray that it may be so," responded the Minister.

I no longer doubted the patriotism of all classes of the Russian people; their determination to wage successfully the struggle which they did not want, which they did not expect, and for which they had not prepared.

To look at Kuropatkin is to be convinced of his ability. He is modest and unassuming in manner. He is short and stocky, and has a good head, with shrewd, kindly eyes, and a determined chin. He is popular with the rank and file of the army, and has the prestige of having been the favorite pupil and Chief of Staff of Skobelev, the great Russian hero of the Turkish war. It is a legend of the Russian people that Skobelev is not dead; that he became involved in a that can be adapted to circumstances," they assert, "and its execution will begin as soon as sufficient troops are on the ground." General Kuropatkin says he will not hurry. "There is no need," he asserted, "for haste."

How many Russians have asked me: "Do you think we will win?" The question seemed to imply doubt in their ability to conquer. But often they answered the question themselves. "The Japanese are brave and hardy," they said. "The war will be long and fierce. We will lose heavily. But we will win, for we must win." That they feel keenly the unfortunate crippling of their fleet is shown by what they next said: "Our sailor and our soldier are alike in the possession of courage. They are Russians. But you will see that the army will not be so easily surprised as were our ships; nor will the latter again permit unperceived attack. The fleet is to be excused, because, under positive orders from St. Petersburg, Vice-Admiral Stark was forbidden to take any action which might lead the Japanese to believe that we were preparing for war. But war has been forced upon us, and our fleet has been seriously weakened. The army will avenge the treachery of which the Retvizan, Czarevitch, Pallada, Varyag, and Koriets were the victims."

I was curious to ascertain upon whom the Admiralty fixed the responsibility for the strategical blunder, in connection with the division of the fleet, which Captain Mahan pointed out in his first article in COLLIER'S, and I sought an Admiral of the Staff. "Captain Mahan's criticism," he said, "is absolutely just. Had I been at Port Arthur, I would never have authorized the detachment of a division of the squadron and its assignment to Vladivostok, where manifestly it could be of no service."

"Who," I asked, "was responsible for the separation?"

"Well, you know," he answered evasively, "we did not expect war. In fact, our orders prevented us from taking any action of a war-like character. Our hands were tied."

"But who," I insisted, "ordered the formation of the squadron of four cruisers at Vladivostok? Vice-Admiral Stark?"

"No," he said.

"Then who?"

"The Viceroy, Admiral Alexieff." And he added, as if to divert my mind from what he had said: "Admiral Makaroff has relieved Vice-Admiral Stark, you know, and he will make a brilliant record. You read about his effort to rescue one of our torpedo boats which was struck by a Japanese shell? He went out not in an armored ship, but in the second-class cruiser Novik. This gives you an indication of his courage, and also an idea of his method of warfare. He is an ardent advocate of torpedo boats and light cruisers. 'Those are the types of ships which win victories,' he has often said to me. Now he will use them. It is comforting to us here, however, to know that he has six battleships fit for service. The Retvizan will soon be ready. The Czarevitch unfortunately can not be easily repaired at Port Arthur. You did not know that the Retvizan, when she ran aground after being torpedoed, prevented our heavy ships from going out? Nor did Captain Mahan," and his eyes twinkled. "But the Japanese must have had an idea of the situation, and that is the reason why they sent those steamers in. You can depend upon it that, in spite of the inactivity of our fleet, it is decidedly not a negligible quantity, and will play an important part in future operations. Its duty will be to cut Japan's communications when military operations begin in Manchuria."

It was a most instructive talk. I walked over to the Foreign Office, where I presented a letter of introduction to M. Hartwig, the able chief of the Far Eastern Department. A big head, a clear, incisive voice, and a hearty manner were my first impressions of this strong man. He talked of the situation with precision scandal in connection with Queen Victoria, and that, to please the British Government, he was stripped of his rank and banished. "When the Little Father needs him," peasants and soldiers say with childlike simplicity, "he will reappear upon his famous white horse." In Kuropatkin some of Skobelev's spirit is supposed to dwell. As Minister of War, General Kuropatkin displayed remarkable administrative capacity. He knows what his troops can do, and, more important at this moment, he knows the capacity of the single-track railroad which forms the vital artery of his supplies. "The railroad," he said to the officers of the General Staff, "that is the important feature of the campaign. Upon it depends the strength of our army." He repeated this opinion at Moscow and at other points along the road to the Far East. It may, therefore, be depended upon that he will see that the railroad shall suffer no irreparable damage. His confidants have told me that he has the general features of his plan of campaign already outlined. "It is a plan and judgment, and then turned me over to an assistant, who was familiar not only with the diplomatic but with the military game that is being worked out in the Far East. I asked him particularly about Russia's force in Manchuria. "By the month of April," he replied, "we will have in the Far East all the men we will need. (I later heard from an excellent source that on March 10 there were 240,000 men in Manchuria.) By the same month the communications will be in good working order. Because of fissures which have appeared in the ice, Lake Baikal can not be crossed by railroad, and trains of wagons are carrying men and supplies from one shore to the other. Between 5,000 and 6,000 men are now en route daily to Manchuria. Prince Hilkoof is at Lake Baikal, and April will witness, we hope, the completion of the railroad around the lake."

PATRIOTIC DEMONSTRATION IN FRONT OF THE KASAN CATHEDRAL, ST. PETERSBURG

JUDGE ALTON B. PARKER

A sketch of the character and personality of the man who may be the Democratic candidate

IF simple habits, a farm rearing, old-fashioned neighborliness and hospitality, are virtues that the American voter loves in a President,—then Judge Parker has the beginnings of a strong candidate. It is almost an anachronism that a man who has kept so close to the soil and to the simple old ways should arise from a country village to stand as the hope of a great political party.

Judge Parker was born on a farm, and his home to-day is on a farm nine miles from the nearest town. There is significance in the fact that the greatness which now singles him out as the candidate of his party has radiated from the country village where, as a young man, he began the study of law, and where he courted his wife. He has never found it necessary to leave that village or to give up its simple life.

His home, which has become the mecca of Democratic leaders and politicians from every section of the Union, is a place of ninety acres, with a house on it such as may be found on thousands of other farms throughout the United States. It is eight miles from Kingston, on a hill above the Hudson, and Judge Parker drives into town every Sunday to hear his son-in-law preach at the Episcopal church. Judge Parker bears the certain stamp of the country life. It is in the bold, vigorous swing of his giant frame and in the deep outdoor ingraining of his sunburned face. In size he is over six feet, and erect as a soldier. He is trained to the minute by a daily routine of outdoor exercise that would delight the strenuous President. He is big-armed, heavy-shouldered, and strong, from a youth of hard work on the farm. His face is flushed with health, and his eyes are clear and sparkling. His mustache is red; his hair of a darker shade tinged with gray. His face is that of a man with a slumbering temper that it would be dangerous to arouse. Though his official duties keep him a great deal of his time in Albany, his home is at the farm at Esopus—"Rosemount" it is named. When he is in Albany he lives at the Ten Eyck Hotel, and the first moment that his official duties will let him get away he hurries to Rosemount. Here most of his decisions are written. His great library overlooking the Hudson is more complete than any to be found in a big New York law office. Whether at Albany or at Esopus, he keeps the habits of the farm. His fad is cattle—a certain red breed which he imported from England.

The fear has been expressed that the quiet judicial temperament of Judge Parker would contrast badly with the vivid personality of President Roosevelt. Around Esopus, where his vigorous activities are so well known, this would create surprise. Though Judge Parker has been on the bench since he was twenty-six years old—and he is now fifty-three—those who see him in the glow of health can never associate him with the quiet retirement of the bench. There is not the first hint of the sedentary about him.

Judge Parker is a native New Yorker. His parents were too poor to send him to college, but he graduated from a normal school in his native county, intending to be a teacher. It was as a teacher that he went to Ulster County, where he lives. He taught for $18 a week, and boarded with a neighbor. Then he studied law on his savings. Later he went to the law school at Albany. Still later he became a lawyer at Kingston. He has steadily refused to become a city man. He has declined many temptations and proffers. He bought the farm at Esopus as a home for the rest of his life, it being his highest ambition to continue to hold his office on the Court of Appeals bench until he became too old to serve.

FROM PRAIRIE TO BOX-STALL

Modern conditions and advanced methods make cattle raising less romantic but more profitable

THE new type of cattle owner has abandoned spurs and six-shooter, wide hat, and "chaps." He is no longer lord of unlimited ranges, with a large faith in Providence to carry his herd through the winter. On the contrary, he must confine his cattle to the limited acreage of a farm, and make his cultivated land feed them from November to May. As a necessary consequence, the grade of cattle has improved and the size of the herd has been much reduced. The greatest problem of the new cattle owner, therefore, is to get the greatest weight of beef or the largest output of dairy products for the feed that he must use.

As indicating the completeness of the change from prairie fattened to stall-fed ideas in cattle raising, the recent action of the St. Louis Fair authorities was illuminating. Absolutely no provision was made, until a strong protest had been lodged by the western Texas

EX-MAYOR GRANT, OF NEW YORK, AND JUDGE PARKER, OF ESOPUS

"Judge Parker is over six feet and erect as a soldier. He is big-armed, heavy-shouldered, and strong, from a youth of hard work on the farm" ranchmen, for the exhibition of range cattle. No prizes had been provided. At the Chicago live-stock show last February, it was a steer fed and cared for at the University of Iowa Agricultural Experiment Station that took the chief prize in its class.

The wheat fields of the Northwest have taken the place of the prairies of the Southwest as the feeders of American beef. While the great mills of Minneapolis are turning out 16,000,000 barrels of flour every year, to be sent to feed remote countries, there is a huge output of secondary or residuary products that goes to make beef. These by-products of wheat, some 500,000 tons of which are sent out from the Minneapolis mills yearly, constitute about 30 per cent of the wheat as it comes in from the field. Naturally, therefore, the making of bran and bran products has developed into an almost separate industry of great magnitude. The demand for prepared feed for cattle is great throughout the United States east of the "desert" border, and from Denmark—the home of the dairying industry—orders for "mill feed" are sent to this country, to Argentina, to Russia, Austria, Canada—wherever wheat is grown and milled. Driven to use this more valuable, very concentrated feed, such as bran and cheap molasses, cotton-seed cake, sugar-beet pulp, dried blood, or dried brewers' grain, the modern cowman demands good blood in his stock. He can not afford to put a long-legged, slim-bodied, wide-horned range beast into a box-stall. It amounts to a loss of romance, but it is a gain in economic production.

A BEWILDERED THIEF

Wallace H. Ham, treasurer of a church, had stolen $260,000, but could not tell where it had gone

WALLACE H. HAM of Boston has just entered the Massachusetts State Prison, under a sentence of fifteen years for embezzlement, and the police, his attorney, and apparently the man himself are puzzled by the case. Ham had been treasurer of St. Paul's (Episcopal) Church and the St. Luke's Home for Convalescents for twenty-five years. For seven years he was Boston representative of a great surety company of New York. He was trusted by the public, and his administration of affairs was universally commended. Suddenly he was arrested for embezzlement, and after several preliminary appearances he pleaded guilty and was sentenced to prison. He had stolen about $220,000 from the surety company and $40,000 from St. Luke's Home. Yet he had no money with him, and no one can find any, and he himself says he does not know where the money has gone.

He lived quietly, although well, but not at all out of proportion to his salary of $7,500 a year. He had no scandals in his private life. He had a good wife and loving family. He did not drink or gamble. He did speculate, but is said to have made money at it. He confessed that he had been stealing for twenty years, and had got in so deep that no matter how much he earned he was always hard up. Yet that does not explain anything. He complained in a pitiful letter to the press that he had begged $6,000 to $8,000 a year for St. Luke's Home, and he could not understand why he was abused so for hypothecating some of its securities.

He also confessed that he had to pay $5,000 or $6,000 a year in interest, and that reveals some disquieting circumstances. Being head of a surety company, he held the bonds of many big concerns. These he deposited with his banks as security for loans. This was a most irregular procedure, and yet he seems to have done it over and over again without meeting a refusal. Indeed, Bishop Lawrence is said to have discovered the powder train which led to the explosion quite accidentally, one banker asking him why St. Luke's Home had to borrow money. He was startled, and began the investigation which led to the exposure. Yet no matter what excuse Ham made, bankers must have known that he had no right to use the securities of his concern to borrow money for himself or for an institution. Another revelation of the case was that neither of these church institutions required its treasurer to give bond.

Ham is a little, bent-over, pitiable object. He is suffering with rheumatism, indigestion, and other complaints. He knew the investigation was in process and could have escaped. He leaves his family, so far as any one can learn, penniless. His wife surrendered the home to the surety company without being asked to do so, and retired to the country, where she is now conducting a dairy with which to support herself. How much Ham has stolen in all, and where it went to, no one apparently will ever know. Ham, it is expected, will not live out his term.

REDUCING THE NEGRO VOTE

Simple poll-tax expedient will practically disfranchise 500,000 negroes for coming election

CERTAIN Southern States, notably Louisiana, Virginia, and Alabama, have succeeded in their purpose to disfranchise the negroes by a very simple expedient. This is the requirement that every voter shall show to the election authorities that he has paid a poll-tax to the State at least two years before the date of the election at which he purposes to cast his ballot. It is estimated that fully 500,000 votes will be lost at the coming Presidential election by reason of the law, and the huge majority of these will be negro votes. In Richmond, Virginia, alone only 6,264 out of 22,000 voters have qualified by paying poll-taxes. Of those who have qualified 500 are negroes.

In Alabama, at the last election for Governor in 1902, there were about 162,000 male negroes over the age of twenty-one; some 2,000 negro votes were cast, and though it has always been somewhat difficult to get a colored vote counted in that State, there had never been such wholesale disfranchisement. At the same time, however, it was found that the white vote had been cut in half, so that only one out of twenty of the inhabitants of the State had a voice in the election of Governor Jelks. The proposition to repeal the law in Alabama is hardly likely to succeed, for it would have to come before the voters—the one-twentieth who have contributed

SIR HIRAM MAXIM'S FLYING FISH

For exhibition at the St. Louis Fair, the inventor of the Maxim gun has contrived a sort of merry-go-round, the cars of which are built in the shape of huge fish, which by centrifugal force fly out into the air as the machine revolves and travel around a circle 600 feet in circumference

$1.50 each to the school fund of the State, and who naturally prefer to keep the suffrage out of the hands of those who refuse to plant so small a sum in order to reap, two years later, the privilege of voting.

In Texas, where a loss of 150,000 votes (negroes, Mexicans, and "poor whites") is indicated, and in Mississippi and Louisiana, where the reductions have been equally satisfactory from the point of view of the progressive white man, the law is regarded as an admirable one. The recent primaries in the two latter States showed a larger white vote than at any time since the laws were enacted. In the opinion of the whites of the States where it has been tried, the poll-tax requirement is quite as effective a bar to negro suffrage as the property or educational test, and simpler. It avoids also the complexities of the so-called "grandfather clause," which is in force in some sections, and which excludes all whose fathers or grandfathers were not qualified to vote in 1867.

LET THE OYSTER LIVE

Maryland legislators and journalists rush to the rescue of the perishing bivalve

THE "Song of Cities," which recites that one must go to Charleston for pretty girls, to Boston for beans, to Baltimore for oyster-shells, and "for niggers to New Orleans," must soon be changed so far as it refers to Maryland's chief city unless something is done to stimulate the dwindling oyster crop. A recently published table of statistics shows that in the last seventeen years the number of bushels of steamed and raw oysters purchased and marketed in Baltimore has decreased from 7,500,000, approximately, to some 2,500,000. Throughout the State the same ratio of reduction of output has held, and now arguments, flippant and serious, are being hurled at the Maryland lawmakers to prove that legislation is necessary to recover the prosperity lost through the exhaustion of the natural beds.

A formidable petition addressed to the Maryland Legislature explains that "the present condition of the oyster industry of Maryland demands the immediate consideration of the citizens of the State." The former flourishing oyster trade of Baltimore is said to be almost extinct. Many packing houses are closed and ten thousand employees have been thrown out of employment. The oyster fund of the State Treasury is bankrupt. Packers, and the boatmen themselves are suffering from the prevailing famine. The price of this food is so high as to make it prohibitory to the average consumer. It is to repair the shattered state of the trade that a measure known as the "Haman bill" is before the Legislature of Maryland. This bill has had the indorsement of practical men in the trade, and has also been approved by experts appointed by the United States Fish Commission. Its object is to stimulate an increase in the supply of oysters by opening the now unproductive parts of the oyster bottoms of the Chesapeake Bay and its tributaries to oyster culture. The proposed system excludes the natural beds, where the free fishermen conduct their business, and provides for the renting of what are known as "barren bottoms" for the culture not a part of the United States and that its only function is to furnish votes. Several men have been talked of as possible Southern candidates. Among them are Senator Bailey of Texas, Senator Daniel of Virginia, and Representative Williams of Mississippi. Bailey has worked up from an obscure Representative—an object of ridicule on account of such things as his aversion to dress-suits, and his determination to override the unwritten law which puts Congressmen who are young both in years and in service in the background—to unquestioned leadership in the Senate. No member of the minority, save Gorman, perhaps, is looked up to more than he. Williams has come into notice because of his masterful work as Democratic leader in the House. Both are of Presidential size. If a Southern man were nominated it would probably be one of these two.

TEMPEST OVER DEWEY

The Admiral unwittingly leaves a wake of heartburnings behind him in Havana

THE elections and the visit of Admiral Dewey have been the most interesting of recent happenings in Cuba. The elections passed off quietly enough, but Admiral Dewey did not get away without leaving a lively supply of heartburnings behind him. "When Admiral Dewey quitted Havana," writes our correspondent, "after a couple of days' visit en route homeward from the winter fleet manoeuvres, he unwittingly left behind an assortment of jealousies which it will require months to assuage. The American Legation and the society people of the American colony were piqued because he did not call, either officially or socially, on anybody below the President of Cuba. The general public were treated better, for they were invited to visit the Mayflower on Sunday afternoon. Many did so, but got only a somewhat distant view of the Admiral as he sat on the quarter-deck. But these trifles, concerning Americans only, were nothings compared to a controversy which arose as soon as the Mayflower sailed. Before leaving the Admiral gave an interview to a leading Cuban paper, in which he pictured in optimistic colors the progress and prospects of Cuba. The paper responded to the well-deserved compliments by lauding Dewey in characteristically Latin fashion as the justly celebrated hero and idol of the American people. This brought out a chorus of fierce retorts from the pro-Spanish newspapers, who declared that Dewey was anything but a hero; that his peppering of a few little ships in front of Cavité was nothing to brag of; that Americans were silly indeed to pretend to elevate Dewey to a place in history equal to that of their naval heroes who had really fought against equal or superior conditions. They ridiculed Dewey's praise of Cuba's progress, and averred that the sensible people of the island did not want to be thus patronized. The Cuban papers flew back at the Spanish organs with hot sarcasm about the latter's attitude toward Cubans and

MAP OF THE YALU RIVER REGION

The Yalu forms the boundary between Korea and Manchuria. The Japanese have been advancing upon it rapidly from their base at Ping Yang. The first land action of the war, a mere advance-guard skirmish, occurred March 27 at Chongju. For a detailed description of this region see page 30 of the bivalve. The income from leases to planters is reserved by this bill to the State, to be divided among the counties for the improvement of their public highways.

Those who oppose it declare that such a law, if enacted, would lead to a monopoly; that oysters will not grow on barren bottoms, and that it would be difficult to define fairly the limits of "natural" and "barren" waters. Yet it is impossible to overlook the fact that twenty years ago the State had in its treasury $250,000 collected as licenses from "tongers" and dredgers, and that three years ago $35,000 was appropriated to pay the salaries and expenses of the oyster police force. It is recalled that a few years ago, in the tributaries of Chesapeake Bay, canoes, bug-eyes, dugouts, skip-jacks, and crapping boats covered the waters and brought their luscious products to the markets of the State, thence to be transported to the markets of the West and to foreign ports. Now the industry in the open bay is practically gone. The dredge captains are impoverished. Their boats are worthless. Many of the young men among the boatmen have left the State.

THE SOUTH AND THE PRESIDENCY

The time has come when a Democratic candidate from the Southern States is no longer an impossibility

A YEAR ago the suggestion that a Southern man could be nominated for President on the Democratic ticket would have been derided as visionary and absurd. Six months ago the man making such a suggestion would not have been regarded as far-seeing, perhaps, but he would not have been laughed at. Now, so far has the pendulum swung, the subject is seriously considered by conservative men of both parties and of all sections.

Republican papers in New York have gone to some pains to demonstrate the feasibility and possibility of such a consummation. Democratic papers in the South have declared that the abnegation of their section has gone far enough. Independent papers in the West have declared that there is no good reason why a Presidential nominee should be chosen because of the section in which he lives rather than on account of his ability. In a speech at Old Point Comfort, Virginia, recently, Congressman Grosvenor of Ohio expressed the opinion that the Democrats would be more likely to appeal successfully to the country by putting up a representative of their most conservative sentiment in the South than by catering to some of the queer elements which are represented by men from other parts of the country. Other Republicans who are close observers have said the same thing.

The nomination of a Southern man at St. Louis this year is by no means probable, yet most of those who believe the South should assert itself think that the time to act is not this year, but four or eight years hence. If Judge Parker or any other Democrat, who stands for neither of the factions resulting from the schisms of 1896 and 1900, should be nominated and elected, he would be renominated in 1908, and the South would be compelled to wait until 1912. The South wants the nomination, because it desires to eradicate the impression that in a political sense it is

HON. JOSEPH CHAMBERLAIN AT NAPLES

The former British Colonial Secretary and his American wife have been traveling in Southern Europe since the close of his active protective-tariff campaign

SENATOR JOSEPH W. BAILEY OF TEXAS

"Bailey has worked up from an obscure Representative, an object of ridicule on account of such things as his aversion to dress-suits, to Senate leader ship"

MODEL OF THE NEW BUILDINGS FOR THE NAVAL ACADEMY TO BE EXHIBITED AT ST. LOUIS

The main block, at the back, is the "Cadet Building," where the students will reside. Directly opposite, across the square, stands the "Academic group," comprising the lecture rooms, laboratories, and library. At the left is the power-house, and at the right the chapel, beyond which lie the officers' quarters in a long row. These buildings were designed by Ernest Flagg and are now well under way some of them being practically completed. When finished, the Naval Academy will have as fine and modern an equipment as any similar institution in the world.

Cuba's progress in the days when the Spaniards had the power to oppress Cuba. The American newspaper joined in the fray, giving to and taking from the Spaniards, and for ten days the public was treated to a bitter revival of old prejudices little heard of since the establishment of the republic. The conflict has quieted, save for an occasional shot, but Dewey's well-meant words of praise will long be remembered in Havana on account of the tempest which they aroused."

THE SELF-SUFFICIENT EAST SIDE

New York's city within a city needs only raw materials to be independent of the rest of the world

DURING a recent week nearly 25,000 immigrants were landed in New York by a dozen liners. It is estimated that nearly one-half of those new-comers did not go beyond the great eastern gateway of this Continent, and that more than one-fourth added their numbers to the swarming multitudes that inhabit the portion of the metropolis bordered by Fourteenth Street, Broadway, Division Street, and the East River. As spring and summer wear on, new thousands will pour across the ocean to swell the census of that district. By the end of the year, little less than 600,000 people will be dwelling within its pale. In other words, an area constituting a small fraction of the greater city's wide-spreading domain will hold—and now holds—fully one-fifth of its entire population.

This district is generally referred to as the Lower East Side. It has been explored, analyzed, and described until it would seem that every vestige of available information concerning it had been made public. Yet the average American fails hopelessly to realize the unique character of the quarter. Were the district in question a separate municipality, it would be the sixth largest city in the country. And that city would have neither race nor language or faith in common with the country at large. It would be, and it is now, the largest distinctly Jewish community in the world.

Here may be found the best and most widely circulated Jewish newspapers in the world. No other city has so many, so prosperous, or so pretentious Jewish playhouses. Within the narrow confines of this region are gathered the foremost actors, the most talented poets, the brightest prose writers, the most powerful teachers and orators that use Yiddish as a medium of expression. It is, in a way, the capital of the Hebrew race.

But even this un-American character of the Lower East Side does not form its most noteworthy feature. This is rather found in its industrial and commercial self-sufficiency—a quality that is little recognized and rarely pointed out. Sweep the rest of Greater New York off the map, and the teeming thousands of the Lower East Side would continue to live and thrive unaffected by the catastrophe, which would have deprived them of nothing needed for their daily life. Every industry that ministers to the actual necessities of man is found within the district. Those who dwell there make a rule of buying at the next street corner and selling all over the globe. For raw materials they are dependent on the outer world, but only raw materials are imported. The exports include so many different kinds of merchandise that it would take a page to enumerate them.

The East Sider prepares his own food, makes his own dress, builds his own house, manufactures his own furniture, and does his own banking, doctoring, and lawyering. The dry-goods industry conducted in or controlled from this small spot—a mere pin-point on the map of the Continent—exceeds in value and quantity of annual output the combined production of London and Manchester. There is not a single article of clothing for man, woman, or child, shoes alone excepted, that is not manufactured within this district on a scale entitling it to recognition as one of the world's principal marts for the goods in question.

There are other ways through which this city within a city indicates its desire and ability to exist all by itself. Not only does it have its own markets, shops, factories, and amusement places; its banking establishments, its charitable and educational institutions, it has also an office-building district of its own. Lawyers, physicians, accountants, and other professional men with a large Jewish clientele, who have their daytime headquarters in convenient proximity to courts and city departments and stock exchanges, have found it increasingly necessary to establish branch offices in the heart of the Lower East Side, where they are on hand every night ready to do business within a stone's throw of their clients' thresholds.

Each passing day, each new shipload of immigrants, tend to further development of this remarkable self-sufficiency, in form as well as in degree. It is already impossible to find this self-sufficiency equaled in any city leading a distinct communal life within fifty miles of the metropolitan boundaries.

THE COSSACK SINGS AS HE RIDES

Picturesque entry of the Russian cavalry into Newchwang described by one of Collier's correspondents

NEWCHWANG, March 12.—Russian troops from the interior continue to arrive here, as they have done ever since hostilities began. For the last two or three days we have heard the incessant tramp of infantry and the clatter of cavalry as they pass along from the railroad station. Now comes a troop of Cossack cavalry mounted on Manchurian ponies, wearing heavy sheepskin overcoats and caps, with their rifles slung over

A NEW MECHANICAL BALL TOSSER

It is claimed that this new device will propel a baseball with a speed and accuracy greater even than that of the best of League pitchers. It is said to be capable of giving the ball any kind of curve or drop at the will of the operator.

their shoulders and their heavy cavalry swords hung to their sides, singing as they go. One of the troop who has a good voice sings the verses of the song alone and the whole troop sings the chorus. With the tramp of the horses and the clanging of accoutrements, the sight is very impressive to any one who has never seen a troop of Cossack cavalry sweeping by. After the cavalry come the infantry in heavy marching order, dressed in sheepskin coats and caps, thumping along in their heavy boots, with bayonets fixed; their stolid, grimy faces (probably not washed for weeks) peering out between their caps and overcoats.

The Hung Hoodzas or "Red Beards," which is an organization of Manchurians consisting principally of bandits are forming bands which will no doubt give the Russians no end of trouble. They know the country so well that the Russians will have no chance of capturing them. They will do everything they can to cut the telegraphic communication with St. Petersburg, and disable the railway line and bridges. This would seriously delay reinforcements and make it almost impossible for the Russians to supply their army, especially in the summer rainy season, when the roads are absolutely impassable, and carts sink up to the hubs of their wheels in the soft mud.

TROUBLE IN THE FRENCH NAVY

Charges of inefficiency against Minister Pelletan may disrupt present Ministry

THE charges of inefficiency which the French Radicals have made against the present administration of Naval Affairs in France are of peculiar interest at the present time, in view of the marked French sympathy for Russia, and the fact that the French colonies in Indo-China are within striking distance of Japan. "Two years ago," writes our Paris correspondent, "a plan was formulated for the protection of Indo-China. Its defence is pitifully weak. I have under my eye a report made to the Chamber of Deputies by the Appropriations Committee of the Colonies which contains the following significant admissions: 'Our colonies are dispersed all over the globe. They are distant from each other and from France by several thousands of miles. Their coasts are protected only by small naval divisions, comprising for the most part ships of no fighting value. The mobile and immobile maritime defences are not organized. The routes of communication between different points of the same colony are few and difficult. The native population counts from forty to fifty millions, and their pacification is hardly complete. The number of French citizens established in our most important colony, Indo-China, is below 10,000. The total commerce of that colony exceeds by half that of Algeria. Yet the troops charged with preserving order and defending this immense domain aggregate 57,000, of which 17,000 only are French.'"

The unpopularity of M. Pelletan, Minister of Marine, has been so great that it has threatened to disrupt the present Combes Ministry. The present extra Parliamentary investigation into M. Pelletan's department is one of the results of this rabid opposition to him. "There is no question," continues our correspondent, "of M. Pelletan's activity, but his activity, his enemies insist, expends itself outside of his department. He neglects the business of the navy, they claim, leaves the fleets without admirals, the ships without boilers, the naval stations without coal. In everything that does not concern the navy he is ready. He travels in the provinces far from the coasts; he attends banquets, and makes speeches upon all questions not connected with the naval defence. The cruiser Sully was ordered to join the Asiatic squadron. Three weeks elapsed before she was ready to sail.

"This state of things aroused the Deputies of the Left to ask the Commission charged with the budget of the navy to investigate the condition of the navy, and particularly the administration of M. Pelletan. Deputy Firmin-Faure submitted an interpellation regarding the measures the Government proposed to take to put the fleet in condition to assure the national defence. The Budget Commission adopted a resolution requesting the Government to submit recommendations for appropriations. It is not surprising that the Chamber should have acted as it did in the light of a letter written by M. Pelletan, in which the Minister stated that the French colonies are not adequately defended, and that England had made arrangements in the event of war for the despatch of troops from her naval stations of Malta and Gibraltar. It seems certain that M. Pelletan will find the investigation embarrassing to his administration, if it does not lead to his withdrawal from the Cabinet."

MAM' LIDDY'S RECOGNITION

By THOMAS NELSON PAGE

ILLUSTRATED BY THOMAS FOGARTY

WHEN Cabell Graeme was courting pretty Betty French up at the Chateau place, though he had many rivals and not a few obstacles to overcome, he had the good fortune to secure one valuable ally, whose friendship stood him in good stead. She was of a rich chocolate tint, with good features and long hair, possibly inherited from some Arab ancestor, bead-like black eyes, and a voice like a harp, but which on occasion could become a flame. Her figure was short and stocky; but more dignity was never compressed within the same number of inches.

Mam' Liddy had been in the French family all her life, as her mother and grandmother had been before her. She had rocked on her ample bosom the best part of three generations. And when Freedom came, however much she may have appreciated being free, she had much too high an estimate of the standing of the Frenches to descend to the level of the class she had always contemned as "free niggers." She was a deep-dyed aristocrat. The Frenches were generally esteemed to be among the oldest and best families in the county, and the Chateau plantation, with its wide fields and fine old mansion, was commonly reckoned one of the finest in that section. But no such comparative statement would have satisfied Mam' Liddy. She firmly believed that the Frenches were the greatest people in the world, and it would have added nothing to her dignity had they been princes, because it could have added nothing to it to be told that she was a member of a royal house. Part mentor, part dependant, part domestic, she knew her position, and within her province her place was as unquestioned as was that of her mistress, and her advice was as carefully considered.

Cesar, her husband, a tall, ebony lath, had come out of another family and was treated with condescension. No one knew how often he was reminded of his lower estate; but it was often enough, for he was always in a somewhat humble and apologetic attitude.

The Frenches were known as a "likely" family, but Betty, with her oval face, soft eyes, and skin like a magnolia flower, was so undeniably the beauty that she was called "Pretty Betty." She was equally undeniably the belle. And while the old woman, who idolized her, found far more pleasure than even her mother in her bellefship, she was as watchful over her as Argus. Every young man of the many who haunted the old French mansion had to meet the scrutiny of those sharp, tack-like eyes. The least slip that one made was enough to prove his downfall. The old woman sifted them as surely as she sifted her meal, and branded them with an infallible instinct akin to that of a keen watchdog. Many a young man who passed the silent figure without a greeting, or spoke lightly of some one unheeding her presence, wondered at his want of success and felt without knowing why that he was pulling against an unseen current.

"We must drop him—he ain't a gent'-man," she said of one. Of another: "Oh! Oh! honey, he won't do. He ain't our kind." Or, "Betty, let him go, my Lamb. De Frenches don't pick up dat kine o' stick."

Happily for Cabell Graeme, he had the old woman's approval. In the first place, he was related to the Frenches, and this in her eyes was a patent of gentility. Then, he had always been kind to little Betty, and particularly civil to herself. He not only never omitted to ask after her health, but also inquired as to her pet ailments of "misery in her foot" and "whirlin' in her head," with an interest which flattered her deeply. But it went further back than that. Once, when Betty was a little girl, he had found her and her mammy on the wrong side of a muddy road, and wading through, he had carried Betty across, and then wading back, had offered to carry Mam' Liddy over, too.

"Go 'way f'om heah, boy, you can't carry me."

"Yes, I can, Mam' Liddy— You don't know how strong I am."

She laughed at him, and with a flash in his gray eyes he suddenly grabbed her. "I'll show you."

There was quite a scuffle. She was too heavy for him, but he won her friendship then and there, and as he grew up straight and sturdy, the friendship ripened. That he teased her and laughed at her did not in the least offend her. No one else could have taken such a liberty with her, but Cabell's references to old Caesar's declining health, and his innuendoes whenever she was "fixed up" that she was "looking around" in advance only amused her. It made no difference to her that he was poor, while several others of Betty's beaux were rich. He was "a gent' man," and she was an aristocrat.

At times they had pitched battles, but each knew that the other was an ally. Cabell won his final victory by an audacity which few would have dared venture on. Among his rivals was one Mr. Hereford, whom he particularly disliked, partly because he frequently outsat him, and partly because he thought Miss Betty favored his attention too much, and whom Mammy Liddy detested because he always ignored her. Cabell charged her with deserting his cause and going over to the side of Mr. Hereford, and threatened to carry off the prize in spite of her and her ally.

SHE WAS TOO HEAVY FOR HIM, BUT HE WON HER FRIENDSHIP THEN AND THERE

"You evant cyah off nothin'," she said with a sniff of mock disdain. His eyes snapped. Without a word he seized her, and notwithstanding her resistance he lifted her, and, flinging her over his shoulder, as if she had been a sack of corn, stalked up the steps and into the house, where he set her down abashed and vanquished before her astonished young mistress. The old woman pretended to be furious, but that day Cabell Graeme carried off more than Mam' Liddy.

When Cabell and pretty Betty were married, Mam' Liddy threw in her lot with "her lamb."

Through all the evil days of carpet-bag rule, no white, not even Cabell Graeme himself, who was a leader of the young men, had looked with more burning contempt on the new-comers, or shown a sterner front to the miscreants who despoiled the country. And when negro rule was at its worst, Mam' Liddy was its most bitter reviler. Cabell Graeme was a captain among the young men who finally put down the evil element that had been running its riotous course. And during the fierce fight that was waged, he was much away from home; but he knew that in Mam' Liddy he had left as redoubtable a guardian of his wife and babies as ever kept watch on a picket line.

Among the most obnoxious of the colored leaders was one Amos Brown, a young negro with some education, who to the gift of fluency added enough shrewdness to become a leader. He was while in power one of the most dangerous men in the State, and so long as he had backing enough, he staggered at nothing to keep the negroes stirred up. One of his schemes was to get money from the negroes with which to pay, as he claimed, ten per cent for the best places in the State, after which, according to his account, the Government was to give them the places. This scheme worked well enough till the day of reckoning came, but happily it came. Among those who were duped was old Caesar, who, unknown to Mam' Liddy, invested all his little savings in Amos Brown's homestead plan and was robbed. Partly in terror of Mam' Liddy and partly in hopes of saving his money, the old man made a full disclosure of the scheme, and with the proof he furnished Cabell Graeme and others succeeded in sending the statesman to the penitentiary.

GUIDING HER AS IF SHE HAD BEEN THE FIRST LADY IN THE LAND

What Caesar possibly had to endure from Mam' Liddy, only those could imagine who knew her blistering tongue. From that time she took herself not only everything that she made, but every cent that old Caesar made. "You keep 'dis for me, Marse Cab. I'm never goin' to trust dat Caesar wid a cent long as I live. A nigger ain't got a bit o' sense about money." But though Caesar would gladly have paid all he made to purchase immunity from her revilings, it is probable that he heard of his error at least three times a day during the rest of his natural life.

II

AS LONG as the old people lived, the French place was kept up; but the exactions of hereditary hospitality ate deeply into what the war had left, and after the death of old Colonel French and Mrs. French, and the division of the estate, there was little left but the land, and that was incumbered.

Happily, Cabell Graeme was sufficiently successful as a lawyer, not only to keep his little family in comfort, but to receive an offer of a connection in the North, which made it clearly to his interest to go there. One of the main obstacles in the way of the move was Mam' Liddy. She would have gone with them, but for the combined influences of Old Caesar and a henhouse full of hens who were sitting. The old man was in his last illness, a slow decline, and the chickens would soon be hatching. As it was as apparent that old Caesar would soon be gone as that the chickens would soon be hatched, Graeme, having arranged for Caesar's comfort, took his family with him when he moved.

He knew that the breaking up would be a wrench; but it was worse than he had expected, for their roots were deep in the old soil. Old friends, when they said good-by, wrung his hand with the faces men wear when they take their last look at a friend's face. The parting with the mammy was especially bitter. It brought the break-up home as few things had done. And when they reached their new home with its strange surroundings, her absence made it all the stranger.

The change in the servants marked the change in the life. The family found it hard to reconcile themselves to it. Mrs. Graeme had always been accustomed to the old servants, who were like members of the family, and to find her servants regarding her as an enemy or as their prey disturbed and distressed her.

"You are going to try colored servants?" asked one of her new friends in some surprise.

"Oh, yes, I am quite used to them."

"Well— Perhaps—but I doubt if you are used to these."

Mrs. Graeme soon discovered her mistake. One after another was tried and discarded. Those who knew nothing remained only until they had learned enough to be useful and then departed, while those who knew a little thought they knew everything, and brooked no direction. And all were insolent. With or without notice the dusky procession passed through the house, each outgoer taking with her some memento of her transient stay.

"I do not know what is the matter," sighed Mrs. Graeme. "I always thought I could get along with colored people; but somehow these are different. Why is it, Cabell?"

"Spoiled," said her husband laconically. "The mistake was in the Emancipation Proclamation. Domestic servants ought to have been excepted."

His humor, however, did not appeal to his wife. The case was too serious.

"The last one I had told me that if I did not like what she called coffee—and which I really thought was tea—I'd better cook myself. And that other maid, after wearing one of my best dresses, walked off with a brand-new waist. I am only standing the present one till Mammy comes. She says she likes to be called, 'Miss Johnson.'"

"I paid twenty dollars last week for the privilege of chucking a dusky gentleman down the steps; but I did not begrudge it."

said her husband cheerfully. "The justice who imposed the fine said to me afterward that the only mistake I had made was in not breaking his neck."

At last, old Caesar was gathered to his dusty fathers, and the chickens having been mainly disposed of, Mr. Graeme went down and brought the old mammy on.

The passengers who streamed through the great station the evening of her arrival were surprised to see a pudgy old black woman escorted by a gentleman who, loaded down with her bundles and baskets, was guiding her through the throng as respectfully as if she had been the first lady in the land. At the gate a lady and several children were awaiting her, and at sight of her a cry of joy went up. Dropping her bundles, she threw herself into the lady's arms and kissed her again and again, after which she received a multitude of kisses from the children.

"Well, I never saw anything like that," said a stranger to another. "She is their mammy," said the other one simply, with a pleasant light in his eyes.

The old woman's presence seemed to transform the house. She was no sooner installed than she took possession. That very morning she established her position, after a sharp but decisive battle with the airy colored lady who for some days had been dawdling about the house. The mammy had gauged her as soon as her sharp eyes fell on her.

"What does yo' call yo'self?" she asked her. "What is my name? I am called 'Miss Johnson—Miss Selina Johnson.'"

The old woman gave a sniff. "Yo' is? Well, what does yo' call yo'self doin' heah?"

"You mean what is my employment? I am the help—one of the help."

"Yo' is?" Mam' Liddy tightened her apron strings about her stout waist. "Well, 'Miss Johnson,' you git hold of that mattress and help me meck up dis heah bed so it'll be fit for yo' mistis to sleep on it." With a jerk she turned up the mattress. The maid was so taken aback for a moment that she did not speak. Then she drew herself up.

"I know I ain' gwine to tetch it. I done made it up onct to-day. An' I ain't got no mistis."

Then mammy turned on her.

"Umh'm! I thought so! I knows jest yo' kind. Well, de sooner you git out o' dis room de better for you. 'Cause if I lay my han' 'pon you I won't let you go till I've done what yo' mammy ought to 'a' done to you ev'ry day o' yo' life."

She moved toward her with so dangerous a gleam in her sharp little eyes that "Miss Johnson" deemed it safest to beat a hasty retreat, and before bedtime had disappeared from the premises entirely.

In the kitchen the old woman had been equally strenuous. She had shown the cook in one evening that she knew more about cooking than that well-satisfied person had ever dreamed any one knew. She had taught the other maid that she knew by instinct every lurking place of dirt, however skilfully hidden, and, withal, she had inspired them both with so much dread of her two-edged tongue that they were doing their best to conciliate her by a zeal and civility they had never shown before.

For the first time the Graemes knew what comfort was in their new home.

"Well, this is something like home," said Mrs. Graeme that evening as she sat by the lamp. "Why, I feel like little Ben. He said to-night, 'Mamma, Mammy brought old times with her.'"

"May she live forever!" said Graeme.

In time, however, Mrs. Graeme began to feel that the old woman was confining herself too closely to the house. She needed some recreation. She had not even been to church, and Mrs. Graeme knew that this was her chief delight.

Yes, she would like to go to church, she said, but she did not know "about dese fine churches." She did not like much to go on the streets. "Dere was too many strange folks around for her. Dey didn't keer nuthin' for her ner she for dem." And it was "de same way, she reckoned, with de chutches. Dey wuz new niggers, and she didn't had no use for dem, nor dey for her."

Mrs. Graeme, however, was insistent. Not far off, she had learned, was a colored church, "Mount Salem," over which the Reverend Amos Johnson presided with much show of broadcloth and silk hat. He had considerable reputation as a speaker, and from time to time appeared in the newspapers as a rather ranting writer on matters with a political coloring. Mrs. Graeme explained to the old woman that she need have no more to do with the people than she wished, and the following Sunday she went herself with her to the door of the church. Before leaving her she gave her a half-dollar to put in the plate, and asked a solemn-looking usher to show her a good seat. When the old woman returned she was interested, but critical.

"I's been used to chutch all my life," she declared, "but I never saw no fixin's like dat. Br'er George Wash'n'ton Thomas of Mount Zion was de fanciest one I ever seen, but he couldn't tetch dat man. Why, dey outdoes white folks!"

"Weren't they nice to you?" asked her mistress.

"Nor'm, none too nice. Dat one what you spoke to for me wuz gwine to give me a seat; but a uppish young yaller one stopped him an' made him teck me back and stick me in a corner behind a pillar. But he didn't stick me so fur back 't dey didn't fine me when dey tecked up de money. When I put in dat fift-cent you gi' me, he jumped like a pin had stick him. I dropped 't in so 'twould soun', I tell you."

This gave Mrs. Graeme an idea, and she encouraged her to go again the following Sunday, and this time gave her a dollar to put in the plate.

"Be sure and drop it in so it will sound," she said to her.

"I'm gwine to."

"Well, how did you come out to-day?" she asked her on her return.

"Right well. Dey didn't stick me quite so fur back, and when I drap de dollar in dey wuz several on 'em lookin', and when de chutch was over dey come runnin' arter me, an' tell me ef I come next time dey'll have a good seat for me. I'm gwine agin, but fust thing dey know I'm gwine to fool 'em. I ain't gwine put a dollar in agin, I know."

Mrs. Graeme laughed. "Oh! you must pay for being in society. We all do."

"I know I ain't," declared the old woman, "and I don't reckon you gwine to gi' me a dollar ev'ry Sunday."

"I certainly am not. I am only getting you launched." The following week Mrs. Graeme said to her husband, "I think Mammy is launched. The preacher came to the front door to-day and asked to see Mrs. Quivers. At first I did not know whom he meant. Then he said it was a colored lady. You never saw any one so gotten up—silk hat, kid gloves, and ebony cane. And Mammy was quite set up by it. She says the preacher is from home and knew Caesar. She was really airy afterward."

Mr. Graeme uttered an obijuration. "You will ruin that old woman, and with her the best old negro that ever was."

"Oh, no," said Mrs. Graeme, "there is no danger of that. You couldn't spoil her."

SHE SWEEPED TOWARD HIM WITH SO THREATENING AN AIR THAT GRAEME INTERPOSED

A few weeks later she said, "Yes, Mammy is launched. She told me to-day she wanted to join the club, and when I asked what club she said, 'the Colored-Ladies Society Club.'"

"I should say she was launched," sniffed Mr. Graeme. "She told me she wanted her money to invest it herself. The old fool! They will rob her of it."

III

THE weeks that followed and Mam' Liddy's immersion in "Society" began apparently to justify Mr. Graeme's prophecy. A marked change had taken place in the old woman's dress, and no less a change had taken place in herself. She began to go out a good deal, and her manner was quite new. She was what a few weeks before she would have derided as "citified and airified." At length Mrs. Graeme could not conceal it from herself any longer. One evening as her husband on his return from his office threw himself into a chair with the evening paper, she brought up the subject.

"Cabell, it is true; have you noticed the change?"

"What? I have no doubt I have." He glanced at his wife to see if she had on a new dress or had changed the mode of wearing her hair, then gazed about him rather uneasily to see if the furniture had been shifted about, or if the pictures had been changed, points on which his wife was inclined to be particular.

"The change in Mammy? Why, I should never know her for the same person."

"Of course I have. I have noticed nothing else. Why, she is dressed as fine as a fiddle. She is 'taking notice.' She'll be giving Old Caesar a successor. Then what will you do? I thought that fat darky I have seen going in at the back gate with a silk hat and a long-tailed coat looked like a preacher. You'd better look out for him. You know she was always stuck on preachers. He is a preacher, sure."

"He is," observed the small boy on the floor. "That's the Reverend Mr. Johnson. And, oh! He certainly can blow beautiful smoke-rings. He can blow a whole dozen and make 'em go through each other. You just ought to see him, papa."

His father glanced casually at his cigar box on the table. "I think I will some day," said he, half grimly.

"I never would know her for the same person. Why, she is so changed!" pursued Mrs. Graeme. "She goes out half the time, and this morning she was so cross! She says she is as good as I am if she is black. She is getting like these others up here."

Mr. Graeme flung down the paper he was reading.

"It is these Northern niggers who have upset her, and the fools like the editor of that paper who have upset them."

Mrs. Graeme looked reflective.

"That preacher has been coming here a good deal lately. I wonder if that could have anything to do with it?" she said slowly.

Her husband sniffed. "I will find out."

At that moment the door opened and in walked Mam' Liddy and a small boy in all the glory of five years, and all the pride of his first pair of breeches. The old woman's face wore an expression of glumness wholly new to her, and Mr. Graeme's mouth tightened. His wife had only time to whisper: "Now, don't you say a word to her." But she was too late. Mam' Liddy's expression drove him to disobedience. He gave her a keen glance, and then said, half jocularly: "Old woman, what is the matter with you lately?"

Mam' Liddy did not answer immediately. She looked away, then said: "Wid me? Ain' nuttin' de matter wid me."

"Oh, yes, there is. What is it? Do you want to go home?"

She appeared half startled for an instant, then answered more sharply: "Nor, I don't wan' go home. I ain' got no home to go to."

"Oh, yes, you have. Well, what is the matter? Out with it. Have you lost any money?"

"Nor, I ain' lost no money 's I knows on."

"Been playing lottery?"

"I don't know what dat is."

"You don't, ah? Well, you would if you had been in Wall Street lately. Well, what is the matter? You are going around here as glum as a meat-axe. Something's up. What is it?"

"Ain' nothin' de matter wid me." She glanced away under her master's half amused, half disdainful glance, then added half surlily: "I wants rec'nition."

"Want recognition? What do you mean?"

"Dat's what we wants," declared the old woman, acquiring courage.

Graeme laughed.

"What is recognition?"

"I don't know what 'tis edzac'ly, but dat's what we wants. You all's got it and you got to gi' it to us."

"You mean you want to sit at table with us?" exclaimed Mrs. Graeme.

Mammy Liddy turned toward her. "You know I don't mean nuttin' like dat! I leetle more'n smacked that yaller gal what you call yo' maid over 'bout talkin' dat way t'other day."

"Then what do you want?"

"I wants rec'nition—dat's all I wants."

"Who told you to say that?" asked Mr. Graeme.

"Who tol' me to say dat?" She was puzzled.

"Yes."

"Ain' nobody tol' me to say it."

"Yes, some one has. Who was it?—the Reverend Johnson? Didn't he tell you that?"

She hesitated; but Mr. Graeme's eye was searching. "Well, he no mo' 'n others—not much mo'. Of co'se, he tol' me dat—he preaches 'bout it; but didn't nobody have to tell me—I knows 'bout it myself."

"Of course, you did, and you must have it. So shall the Reverend Mr. Johnson," said Mr. Graeme. His tone expressed such sudden amiability that the old woman glanced at him suspiciously, but he was smiling softly and thoughtfully to himself.

"What did you do with the four hundred and fifty-five dollars you drew out of bank last week? Did you invest it or lend it to Mr. Johnson?" It was a bow drawn at a venture, but the arrow hit the mark, as Mr. Graeme saw.

"I 'vested it."

"You mean Mr. Johnson invested it for you? By the way, what is his first name?"

"Yes, sir. His name's de Rev. Amos Johnson."

"By George! I thought so," said Graeme, half aloud. "I knew I had seen him." His countenance grew suddenly cheerful.

"What did he give you to show for it?"

"He didn't gi' me nothin'. He's gwine to draw the intrust for me."

"Oh! I thought so. Well, I want to see the Rev. Mr. Johnson when he comes next time. When do you expect him?"

"I ain't 'spectin' him 't all. He comes sometimes. He was a friend of Caesar's."

"Ah! He was? So I thought. Comes to smoke a cigar, I suppose?"

She looked so uneasy that he went on casually: "Well, it's very well; always keep in with the cloth. He is a fine preacher, I hear? Keeps quite up with the times—interested in the races in more senses than one."

"Yes, sir; he preaches very well."

"That is all. Well, your friend must have 'rec'nition.'" The old woman withdrew.

This is the third of a series of twelve paintings, made especially for Collier's by Frederic Remington, illustrative of the Louisiana Purchase Period. These pictures will appear, one every month, in the Fiction Numbers.

THE GATHER

AFTER THEIR LONG WINTER HUNTS IT WAS THE CUSTOM OF THEIR SUPPLIES AND DEVOTED SEVERAL WEEKS TO REST AND ACROSS COUNTRY FROM THE SCATTERED AND DISTANT

COPYRIGHT 1904 BY COLLIER'S WEEKLY

ING OF THE TRAPPERS

APPERS AND TRADERS TO GATHER AT A RENDEZVOUS IN THE MOUNTAINS, WHERE THEY RENEWED
RE—GAY PARTIES OF HORSEMEN, EAGER TO REACH THEIR DESTINATION, RODE GAYLY AND NOISILY GROUNDS, AS SOON AS THE SNOWS HAD DISAPPEARED AND THE SPRING HAD FAIRLY COME

PAINTED BY FREDERIC REMINGTON

The following day Graeme went down to a detective agency and left a memorandum. A few days later he received a message from the agency: "Yes, he is the same man. He frequents the pool rooms a good deal. Came from Kentucky. He used to be known as 'Amos Brown.'"

IV

FOR some days Mr. Graeme took to coming home earlier than usual, and one evening he was rewarded. Just after his arrival little Ben came in, and, climbing up to his cigar-box, took out several cigars, and silently withdrew. As soon as he had disappeared his father stepped to the telephone, and, calling up the police station, asked that an officer be sent around to his house immediately. A few minutes later the officer arrived, and after a few words with him Mr. Graeme stationed him at the back gate and strolled back toward the kitchen. As he softly approached the door he heard voices within—one of them his little boy's voice, the other the deep, unctuous voice of a negro man. The child was begging the latter to blow smoke-wreaths, and the man was bartering with him.

"Well, you must get me more cigars—remember what I told you—six wreaths for one cigar."

At this moment the mammy evidently came in, for Mr. Graeme heard the man caution the child, and heard her voice for the first time.

"What dat you tellin' dat chile?" she demanded suspiciously.

"Nothing. I was just entertaining him by blowing a few of those artistic wreaths he admires so much. My good friends keep me in cigars. It is one of the few consolations in a hard-working pastor's life. Well, sister, I called around to tell you your investment promises to be even more remunerative than I expected—and to tell you if you have any more, or even can borrow any, to let me place it as you did the other. I can guarantee to double it for you in a short time."

"I ain' got any more—an' I ain' got nobody to lend me none."

"Well, ah! Couldn't you get any from your employer?" He lowered his voice; but Graeme caught the words. "You could raise money on the silver—and they would never know it. Besides, they owe it to you for all the work you have done without payment. Think how many years you worked for them as a slave without pay."

"Now, I ain' gwine to do dat!" exclaimed the old woman.

At this moment Graeme softly opened the door. The mammy was standing with her back to him, and in one chair, tilted back with his feet in another chair, was a large and unctuous-looking negro of middle age, in all the glory of a black broadcloth coat and a white tie. He was engaged at the moment in blowing small wreaths, while little Ben stood by and gazed at him with open-eyed wonder and delight.

At sight of Mr. Graeme, the preacher, with a gulp, which sadly disturbed his last effort, rose to his feet. An expression of fear flitted across his face, then gave way to a crafty, half-insolent look.

"Good-evening, sir," he began, with an insinuating smile, not wholly free from uneasiness.

"Good-evening, Amos. Mammy, will you kindly go to your mistress. Take the boy with you. Run along, son."

The old woman with a half-scared air led the child out, and Mr. Graeme closed the door and turned back to the visitor, who looked much embarrassed.

"Take my cigars out of your pocket."

The preacher's hand went involuntarily to his breast pocket, and then came down.

"What? Your cigars out of my pocket? I have no cigars of yours, sir." He spoke with slightly rising severity, as Mr. Graeme remained so calm.

"Oh, yes, you have. But no matter for the present. You had just as well leave them there for a moment. What are you doing, coming here all the time?"

"What am I doing? Coming here? I am a minister of the Gospel, sir, and I have a member of my congregation here, and I come to look after her welfare."

"And to see that she gets recognition?"

"Suh?"—with a wince.

"And incidentally to rob me of my cigars, and her of her small savings"—pursued Mr. Graeme calmly.

"Suh? Nor, suh, I has not done dat. I will take my oath to it on the word of Almighty God."

The veneer of his fine speech had all been dropped, and the Rev. Johnson was talking naturally enough now.

"What did you do with that money you took from her?"

"What did I do wid—? What money?"

Mr. Graeme showed impatience for the first time.

"The four hundred and fifty-five dollars you got from her. Was there more than that?"

At this point Mam' Liddy opened the door and came in. She looked somewhat mystified and rather disturbed, but she said nothing. She only took her stand, and with arms folded waited silent and observant.

The negro saw that Mr. Graeme knew of the fact and answered promptly:

"Oh! You are mistaken, sir. I have taken no money of her. You can ask her. She had a sum of money which I as a favor to her invested for her. You can ask the sister there. I suppose you refer to that?"

"Invested! In what?"

"Ah—ur—in—ur—the Afro-American Sisters' Loan and Trust Association. I have promised to invest it in that for her."

He stammered a good deal at the start, but was glib enough when he brought out the name. "Didn't I, sister?"

"Yes, sir." The old woman was manifestly impressed.

The preacher's cunning face brightened.

"You see what she says?"

"With its chief office at the Racecourse out here," said Mr. Graeme, with a toss of his head. "Look here, I want you to get that money."

The negro shot a glance at Mam' Liddy and decided that she would stand by him. He suddenly stiffened up and resumed his affected manner.

"Well, sir, I do not know by what right you interfere with my affairs—or this lady's."

"You don't? Well, that's what I am going to show you now. My right is that she is a member of my family, whom I am going to protect from just such scoundrels and thieves as you, Amos Brown."

The preacher received the name like a blow.

At the words the old Mammy jumped as if she were shot. She leaned forward, moving up slowly.

"What's dat?—'Amos Brown?' What's dat you said, Marse Cabell? 'Amos Brown?'"

Mr. Graeme nodded. "Yes. This is Amos Brown, 'a friend of Caesar's.'"

"Indeed, I ain't, suh. I'm de Reverend Amos Johnson—" began the preacher, but his looks belied him.

Mammy Liddy took in the truth, and the next second the storm broke.

"'Amos Brown' you is? I might 'a' knowed it! You thief! You a friend of Caesar's! Whar's my money?—My money you stole from Caesar? You come talkin' to me 'bout rec'nition? I done rec'nize you, you black nigger. Let me git at him, Marse Cabell."

The old woman swept toward him with so threatening an air that Graeme interposed, and the preacher retreated behind Graeme for protection. Even that place of security did not, however, save him from her vitriolic tongue. She poured out on him the vials of her wrath till Graeme, fearing she might drop down in a faint, stopped her.

"Stop now. I will settle with him."

His authoritative air quieted her, but she still stood glowering and muttering her wrath.

"You will have that money back here by to-morrow at this hour or I will put you in the penitentiary, where you have already been once and ought to be now. And now you will take my cigars out of your pocket, or I will hand you to that policeman out there at the door. Out with them."

"Boss, I ain't got no cigars o' yo's. I'll swar to it on de wud o'—"

"Out with them—or—" Mr. Graeme turned to open the door. The negro, after a glance at Mam' Liddy, slowly took several cigars from his pockets.

"Dese is all de cigars I has—and dey wuz given to me by a friend," he said surlily.

"Yes, by my little boy. I know. Lay them there. I will keep them till to-morrow. And now you go and get that money."

"What money?—I can't get dat money— Dat money is invested."

"Then you bring the securities in which it is invested. I know where that money went. You go and rob some one else—but have that money at my office to-morrow before three o'clock or I'll put you in jail to-morrow night. And if you ever put your foot on this place or speak to that old woman again, I'll have you arrested. Do you understand?"

"Yes, sir."

"Now go." He opened the door.

"Officer, do you recognize this man?"

"Yes, sir, I know him."

"Well, I am going to let him go for the present."

The Rev. Amos was already slinking down the street. Mr. Graeme turned to the old woman.

"You want recognition?"

"Nor, suh, I don't." She gave a whimper. "I wants my money. I wants to git hold of dat black nigger whar's done rob' me talkin' 'bout bein' sich a friend o' Caesar's."

"Do you want to go home?"

"Dis is my home." She spoke humbly, but firmly.

Two days afterward Mrs. Graeme said:

"Cabell, Mammy is converted. It is like old times."

"I think it will last," said her husband. "She is out four hundred and fifty-five dollars, and the Mount Salem flock is temporarily without a shepherd. The Rev. Amos Johnson was gathered in this morning for fleecing one of his sheep and signing the wrong name to a check."

THE PENNSYLVANIA DUTCH IN RECENT FICTION

THE fiction of locality has covered almost all of the States—but Pennsylvania has been very slow in giving its character and scenery expression. The region around Philadelphia has appeared in historical novels, and Bayard Taylor wrote several stories of "Kennett." Wolcott Balestier made a good beginning with his Bethlehem Moravian tale, "A Victorious Defeat," and there have been several novels of the oil regions. All of these have simply touched the edges of the great Keystone State. When dialect tales were in the air, novelists shied at the Pennsylvania Dutch. It is a dialect, but so outlandish and hard to comprehend that writers were afraid of it. Leland's "Hans Breitmann" ballads were a great humorous success, and have become almost a classic—Kipling, himself, bringing the Dutchman to life in one of his tales. But Breitmann spoke a simplified dialect, which was little more than a cold in the head. About fifteen years ago John Luther Long, now so well known as the author of "Madame Butterfly," began to write little tales in the real Pennsylvania Dutch dialect—that is, the language used by him when he tries to speak English. (The "Dutch" itself is something nobody, even a German, can understand, unless he has lived among that people.) Mr. Long's stories were exceedingly well conceived, but the dialect was so faithful as to be almost incomprehensible. One of his stories, the "Nix-nutz," was published and justified its dialect, difficult as it is. Then the Dutchman had a rest for a number of years.

Recently several good writers have taken him up again. Nelson Lloyd was first in the field. He had known Central Pennsylvania when a boy, and his observation and power of expression had been trained on the New York "Sun." His first stories were collected in a volume entitled "The Chronic Loafer." In them the Dunkers, Amish, and Mennonites appear at the village store, along with real Pennsylvanians of mixed lineage. The talk is rural Pennsylvanian, only occasionally seasoned with words from the Dutch dialect. But their traits of slow humor, clumsy satire, and apparent stupidity, combined with unexpected shrewdness, are all there. The humor of a simple, saving, not to say stingy, but kindly people pervades Mr. Lloyd's stories, and will no doubt appear in his new novel, "The Soldier of the Valley."

By ROBERT BRIDGES

Several striking short stories signed "Georg Schock" have recently appeared in the magazines. They show the deep feeling and domestic intensity of the apparently stolid Dutchman (who, as everybody knows, is not a Dutchman at all, but the descendant of German immigrants). These little stories are sympathetic and touched with poetry of a homely sort.

The latest portrayal of these people in fiction is a full-fledged novel, "Tillie, a Mennonite Maid," by Helen R. Martin. It has in its workmanship much of the careful thoroughness which is characteristic of the Dutch themselves. There is nothing vague about the characters; each one is as definite as a photograph. Tillie, herself, is a delightful creature—practical and persistent like her race—but, in her heart, boiling with emotion and love of the color of life. To put such a semi-tropical flower in the plain strait-jacket of the Mennonites, who believe in the suppression of emotion, is the beginning of tragedy. How Tillie "found a way"—as the precocious Tommy would say—is the charm of the story. To become free in mind and spirit, though born into narrowness, and "dummeness," to use the Dutch phrase, is Tillie's aspiration. It is a story of humble heroism; the means which the heroine uses are humble, the people who help her are humble, but what she achieves is heroic—the liberation of her own blithe spirit. Out of all the sordidness and littleness and petty motives of a simple people is evolved this really beautiful idyll.

The mistake which will be made about the book will come from those who take Jake Getz and some of his brethren as typical of his whole race.

With their bigotry and ignorance they are no more typical than Tillie with her soul of beauty and freedom. The Pennsylvania Dutch have produced men and women of learning and culture; their beautiful farms and pleasant homes can be seen for two hundred miles along the railroad as it crosses the State from East to West. The Normal Schools are filled with the children of these homes—homes where kindness rules and the virtues of a gentle life are cultivated. Few of the girls have the hard discipline that Tillie received from her father. They may "dress plain" and renounce the allurements of the world—but they make their straight bonnets sometimes out of purple silk, and their plain gowns out of lilac cashmere—and ride a bicycle in the costume. It is a picture that lingers in the memory.

The least successful characters in the story are those who came from the outside world. The Harvard man who drops into the tale as the "dude teacher" talks like a "gentleman friend" in a May Agnes Fleming novel. Tillie deserved a better fate. She ought to have run away to Easton and have been saved by a good plain-spoken Lafayette man of Scotch-Irish descent. That kind understand the Tillies of Pennsylvania.

The dialect has been simplified and managed with a great deal of skill. It will be a revelation to the outside world who think that all farmers should talk with a Down-East twang or a Virginia drawl.

AN INVASION OF DODGE

THE STORY OF A CRAVEN DESPERADO

By

ALFRED HENRY LEWIS

Author of "Wolfville," "The Boss," etc.

ILLUSTRATED BY GEORGE GIBBS

AFTER Mr. Masterson killed Messrs. Wagner and Walker, who murdered his brother Ed, the word of that bloodshed was not slow in reaching Texas. The tale, when told throughout those cow-camps whose hundred fires winked along the Canadian, aroused an interest the foundational element whereof was wrath. The tragedy deeply displeased all Texas people of cows. The dead gentlemen had been Texans. Mr. Masterson, on the exasperating other hand, was an emanation of Illinois. That he stood Sheriff of Ford County, and, ex officio, Marshal of Dodge, owned no importance. That Messrs. Wagner and Walker had slain Mr. Masterson's brother, and were killed while their hands were red, was permitted to have no weight. Cowboys are a volatile lot; they probe no question over-deep, surely none so commonplace as a question of homicide. Wherefore, in connection with the blinking out of Messrs. Wagner and Walker, they of Texas chose to consider only the Texas origin of the deceased. Angry with the injured vanity of tribe, they spake evil of Mr. Masterson, and nursed vague feuds against him in their hearts. In the first, there was no one along the Canadian who specifically meditated the taking off of Mr. Masterson. But enough of general sort was said to show how none would be inconsolable should that gentleman find a soon and sudden ending for his days. With the last of it, however, the trend of public sentiment was not wanting of a positive effect.

There existed a Mr. Gato, just then riding for the Turkey Track. Mr. Gato was neither old nor reputable. He is dead now, and the ravens and coyotes have wrangled over his ignoble bones. Other Turkey Track boys called Mr. Gato "The Tomcat"—this latter, to give his name in English.

If the Tomcat had been all Mexican or all Comanche, this leaf of his story might never have been written. But he was half Mexican and half Comanche, and the blend was unfortunate. The Tomcat, ignorant, vicious, furtive, savage, was upon an intellectual level with the wolf, and of impulses as secret and as midnight. Also, he was dominated of an inborn pride to shed blood. He had been withheld from feeding that pride by vice or virtue of the rickety cross in his veins; he lacked the downright courage which was the enterprise's first demand.

The Tomcat, during their lives, had not been numbered among the friends of Messrs. Wagner and Walker. He was not possessed even of a drinking acquaintance with those mourned and vanished ones. Indeed, he never so much as heard of their existence until he heard that they were dead, as neither had labored with an outfit that bore the Tomcat on its books. It is due the Tomcat to say that this was chance, and not because of any social delicacy on the parts of the departed.

Despite a lack of personal interest, while the Tomcat listened to the sour comments of his spurred and broad-brimmed mates, as the story of Mr. Masterson's pistol practice found relation, a thought took struggling shape in the narrow fastnesses of his wit. He would ride those two hundred northward miles to Dodge and destroy the hated Mr. Masterson. Throughout two seasons he had gone with the beef herds over the Jones and Plummer trail, and, since the terminus of that thoroughfare lay in Dodge, he knew the way.

Also, at those beef times he had been given glimpses of Mr. Masterson about the streets in his rôle of protector of the public peace. The Tomcat did not recall Mr. Masterson as one uncommonly dangerous. He remembered him as a listless man of middle size and thoughtful eye. The Tomcat, when he thus gazed on Mr. Masterson, was somewhat blurred of drink. Still, had Mr. Masterson been more than usually perilous, the fact would have left some impress upon him, however steeped in rum. No. He was convinced that Mr. Masterson was not a problem beyond his powers. He could repair to Dodge and solve Mr. Masterson with his six-shooter.

When he should return to the Panhandle, bearing Mr. Masterson's hair upon his bridle-rein, the Tomcat foresaw how his own status as one of iron-bound fortitude would be thereby, and instantly, fixed. He would be placed in the deadly foreground with such worthies as Doc Holiday, Shotgun Collins, Curly Bill, and Soapy Smith. Poets would make verses about him as they had about the sainted Samuel Bass; dance-hall maidens would sing his glory in quavering quatrains. It was the Tomcat's vision of fame; rude, bloody, criminal, but natural for the man and the day and the land it grew among.

The day following this bold decision, the Tomcat went forth upon the duties of the round-up; later he returned to camp in the hot middle hours of the afternoon. Having gotten a mouthful at the grub-wagon, the Tomcat thoughtfully walked his tired bronco toward the band of ponies which the horse-hustler was holding in the bottom grass that bordered the Canadian. The Tomcat's pregnant purpose of the night before was in no whit abated; indeed, it had grown more clear and strong with the hours. It looked sensibly feasible, too, as all things do when miles and weeks away. Likewise, since the idea improved upon him pleasantly, he would start about its carrying out at once.

In and out among the grazing ponies wound the Tomcat on his foot-weary mount. At last he pitched the loop of his rope over the head of a little bay with four black legs and an eye like the full moon. This pony had name for speed and bottom. He had come from the ranges of the Triangle-dot, whose ponies, as all the cow world knows, have in them a broad streak of the thoroughbred. The one roped by the Tomcat, carrying a 30-pound saddle and a 150-pound man, could put one hundred even miles behind him between dark and dark. He had never tasted anything better than mother's milk and grass, at that, and would have drawn back and hollyhocked his nostrils at an ear of yellow corn as though that vegetable were a rattlesnake. The name of the bay pony was the name of Shakespeare's Jew.

There was to be no delay in the Tomcat's design.

THE TOMCAT WAS "BUFFALOED" AND CHUCKED INTO THE STREET

Shifting the saddle from the tired one to Shylock, the Tomcat went at once his northward path.

Dodge, when once our gentleman reached that vigorous metropolis, took no absorbing interest in the Tomcat. His kind was frequent in its causeways, and the Tomcat as a specimen owned no attribute beyond the common, save an inordinate appetite for rum and a

Ballard rifle. He could drink more liquor than was the custom of Dodge; also the Ballard attracted attention in a region where every man used either a Winchester or a Sharp's. But neither the Tomcat's capacity for strong drink, nor yet his rifle, could hold public curiosity for long, and within ten minutes after he strode into the Sound Asleep Saloon, and called for an initial drink, Dodge lost concern in him and turned to its own affairs.

The Tomcat, now he was in Dodge, seemed in no haste to search forth Mr. Masterson. This was in no wise strange; for one thing, his Shylock pony needed rest. Shylock had been put in the Dodge corrals, and, gorging on alfalfa, was bravely filling out the hollows of his flanks. The Tomcat decided that he would abide in Dodge two days before sounding his war-cry. Then, just as night was drawing, he would saddle up and hunt the obnoxious Mr. Masterson. Upon meeting that officer, the Tomcat would shoot him down. His mission thus happily concluded, he would make a spurring rush Panhandleward. Once more by the Canadian, he did not fear for his safety.

Running the plan forward and back in what he called his mind, the Tomcat again reflected on what would be his glorious reward! His daring and stark manhood should become the theme on every lip! He would be no more the Tomcat, but gain re-baptism as the Man who downed Bat Masterson! The girls of the hurdy-gurdies would set his fame to music! Indeed, the Tomcat foresaw a gorgeous future when, returning to his native heath, he should wear laurel as that stout one who from the fame of Texas washed a stain away.

These matters ran like a millrace in the vainglorious pate of the Tomcat as he loafed about the barrooms of Dodge, waiting for Shylock to recuperate, and the moment of murder to ripely arrive. On occasion the Tomcat brushed by Mr. Masterson as the pair met in the narrow walks of Dodge. But the Tomcat did not give his victim-to-be a look. There was a steadfastness in the jade-stone stare of Mr. Masterson that was disconcerting to the Tomcat. Wherefore, the Tomcat gazed up or down the street; but never once at Mr. Masterson.

"Never mind!" grunted the Tomcat behind his teeth, "I'll try a shot at him if I swing for it."

It was the day appointed by the virulent Tomcat for the destruction of Mr. Masterson. The Tomcat programmed the slaughter for that last moment when the setting sun should touch the hard gray skyline. The Tomcat might want in mental depth; but he was posted concerning the value of night as a trail-coverer.

Under the pressure of great events to come, the Tomcat's cunning had been so far promoted that he even thought of riding out of Dodge to the north after Mr. Masterson had been successfully wiped out. Then, it being dark, he could sweep to the unseen south; not alone his trail but his direction would thus be lost to whomsoever should pursue. A hot-foot all-night ride should bring him to the Cimmaron. There he would be out of Kansas and into the Indian Territory, Texas, and celebration within easy throw. Now, all this might have come to pass as the slender wisdom of the Tomcat schemed it, had it not been for the unexpected.

It stood four for the hour with every honest clock in Dodge when the Tomcat, killing time, came into the Sound Asleep Saloon. There, among other attractions, he found a noncommittal Mexican dealing monte. The Tomcat cast a careless dollar on the queen, and lost. A second dollar vanished in pursuit of its predecessor. At that, the Tomcat, holding Mexicans in cheap esteem, lifted up condemnatory voice.

"This is a robbers' roost," quoth the depleted Tomcat, "an' every gent in it is a boss-thief."

Now Mr. Kelly, proprietor of the Sound Asleep Saloon, was present, dozing in a chair. The clamorous Tomcat aroused him with his uproar. It struck Mr. Kelly that the wide-flung extravagance of the Tomcat's remark multiplied the insult it conveyed. Without ado Mr. Kelly, in retort to the slanderous Tomcat, arose and exhaustively "buffaloed" that individual.

When an offender is "buffaloed," he is buffeted, shoved, choked, manhandled, and chucked into the street. Once on the sidewalk, he is kicked until justice asks no more. In this instance, the Tomcat was excessively "buffaloed," and at the close of the ceremony crawled to the cheap hotel wherein he had pitched his camp, there to nurse his bruises and bind up his wounds.

No, every violator of Western ethics is not "buffaloed." It is a method of reproof reserved for folk who are of small estate. When one is known for the sandstone sort of his courage and the prompt accuracy of his gun, he is never "buffaloed." By his achievements he has raised himself superior to such reprimand, just as a Sioux warrior may lift himself above the power of tribal judges to "soldier-kill" him for misdemeanors, by his prowess in the field. Only humble malefactors are "buffaloed." Those whose eminence forbids the ordeal may be shot instead. When one is too great to be "buffaloed," the close season for that personage is at an end. He is open game to the gun of any man he injures. The law has abandoned him, and his hand must keep his head.

That the Tomcat was disgracefully "buffaloed" by the energetic Mr. Kelly may be accepted as evidence that he had no respectful standing in the estimation of Dodge. As stated, after it was over, he withdrew to cure his aches, while Mr. Kelly modified his own fatigues with three fingers of an Old Jordan which he kept especially for himself.

The Tomcat had been so deeply "buffaloed" that he did not move from his blankets for two days. Thereby the taking off of Mr. Masterson was deferred. Indeed, the current of the Tomcat's blood-desires found itself deflected. When he crept forth, his ambition to kill Mr. Masterson had been supplanted by a vengeful wish to murder Mr. Kelly of the Sound Asleep Saloon.

No one should marvel at this. Mr. Masterson had injured only the Texas public. Mr. Kelly had come more nearly home with injuries personal to the limping Tomcat himself. All men prefer a private to a public interest. It was but nature moving when the wronged Tomcat, forgetting Mr. Masterson, for whose hair he had come so far, gave himself heart and soul to how he might best spill the life of Mr. Kelly.

After mature study, when now he was again abroad, the Tomcat could devise nothing better than to pull up his pony in front of the Sound Asleep Saloon, at the hour of eight in the evening, and attempt, from the saddle, to pot Mr. Kelly with the Ballard. The Tomcat banged away with the Ballard all he knew, but the enterprise went astray in double fashion. The Tomcat missed Mr. Kelly by a wide foot; also he killed a girl whose mission it had been to dance and sing, for public gratification, in the Sound Asleep Saloon.

Shylock jumped sidewise at the flash, and the Tomcat—whose seat in the saddle had not been strengthened by his troubles—was thrown upon his head. Before he might recover, the Dodge populace piled itself above him and the Tomcat was taken captive by twenty hands at once. He would have been lynched, only Mr. Masterson charged into the press. With the Tomcat held fast in one fist, Mr. Masterson drew his six-shooter with the other and established therewith a zone of safety. Since the Alcalde, Mr. Wright, was at leisure, Mr. Masterson hailed the Tomcat instantly before that magistrate.

If one were writing fiction, one from this point would find open sailing. One would have nothing more difficult to do than empanel a jury, convict, and swing off the Tomcat. In this true relation, however, there opens no such gate of escape. One must now record a temporary good fortune that fell to the share of the Tomcat.

The Tomcat, somewhat a-droop, was brought into the presence of Mr. Wright, Alcalde. Before a word might be said, a fusillade of pistol shots split the evening into splinters at the far end of the street. Two gentlemen, disagreeing, had adduced six-shooters in support of their positions.

The dispute, audible to all Dodge, aroused the liveliest curiosity. There befell a general stampede, every man rushing toward the forum where the debate was being waged. So universal was that sentiment of curiosity that it even swept the careful Mr. Masterson from his official feet. He forgot for the nonce the Tomcat. He recovered himself only to learn that the Tomcat was gone. Our furtive one had slipped away in the hurly-burly, and since the fleet Shylock—who had been left saddled in the street—was also absent, the assumption obtained that the two had departed together and were already overhauling the distant Panhandle at the rate of fifteen miles the hour.

Disgruntled for what he looked upon as the fruit of his own neglect, Mr. Masterson cinched a hurried saddle on to the best horse in Dodge, and flashed southward after the Tomcat. Mr. Masterson was twenty minutes behind the hurrying Tomcat. Laid flat on the ground and measured, those twenty minutes in the swallow-like instance of Shylock would mean nothing short of seven miles. Mr. Masterson cursed as he remembered this, and considered how a stern chase is never a short chase. For all that, Mr. Masterson was resolved dead or alive to have his man again.

"I'll get him," said Mr. Masterson, "even if I have to swing and rattle with him plumb to the Rio Grande!"

Mr. Masterson had one advantage over the Tomcat. He knew the country as a beggar knows his dish. At the end of the first three miles he swung into a short cut to the left. His design was to outstride the Tomcat and cut him off on the banks of the White Woman. Once in the side trail, Mr. Masterson, like a good rider, disposed himself in the saddle so as to save his horse; the latter—big and rangy—uncoupled into that long, swinging gallop which carries the furthest because it is the easiest of gaits.

"It is the foxy thing to head this party off," commented Mr. Masterson, as he swept along. "Once I'm in his front, he ought to be sure. A flying man never looks ahead."

The white alkali trail rung hard and loud beneath the horse's hoofs. There was a veil of cloud across the face of the sky. Then the west wind put it aside, and the moon and the big stars looked down. A coyote punctuated the stillness with its staccato yelps. A jackrabbit jumped up and went bustling ahead, never leaving the paper-white streak of trail that seemed to fascinate it. At last, breath gone and wholly pumped, it had just instinctive sense enough to wobble a yard to one side, and escape being run down by the galloping horse. A band of antelope brushed across in front like startled shadows.

Mr. Masterson was not to be engaged by these phenomena of the hour and place; he must reach the White Woman in advance of the Tomcat. Lifting his horse to the work, Mr. Masterson nursed it through trail-devouring hours.

Then there came an interference. It was midnight by the shining word of the moon when a low roaring, distant and muffled, like the beat of a million drums, broke on Mr. Masterson. It was up the wind and from the west.

"What?" exclaimed Mr. Masterson aloud, and he pulled up his horse to listen. "It's a good ways off as yet," he continued. "It must be a hummer to send its word so far." Then patting his horse's neck: "My sympathies will be with you, old boy, when it reaches us."

Over in the northwest a cloud came suddenly up with the swiftness of a drawn curtain. One by one it shut out like a screen the stars and the moon. Mr. Masterson was on the ground in an instant.

"It'll detain him as much as it does me," thought Mr. Masterson, whose mind ran always on his quarry.

Mr. Masterson took a pair of rawhide hobbles from the saddle and fastened the fore fetlocks of his horse. Then he stripped off the saddle.

"I'll leave you the blanket," remarked Mr. Masterson to his horse, "but I'm going to need the saddle for myself."

Mr. Masterson crouched upon the ground, making the saddle a roof to cover his head, the skirts held tight about his shoulders by the girths. The roar grew until from a million drums it improved to be a million flails on as many threshing floors. It was indeed a noble din. Mr. Masterson clawed the saddle-skirts tight, as with a swish and a swirl the hailstorm was upon him. The round hailstones beat upon the saddle like buckshot. They leaped and bounded along the ground. They showed of a size and hardness to compare with those marbles meant for children's games.

Saved by the saddle, Mr. Masterson came through without a mark. His horse, with nothing more defensive than a square of saddle-blanket, had no such luck. Above the drumming of the hailstones, Mr. Masterson might hear that unfortunate animal as torn by mixed emotions of pain, amazement, and indignation, it bucked about the scene in a manner that would have done infinite grace to a circus. A best feature of the hailstorm was that it did not last five minutes; it passed to the south and east, and its mutterings grew fainter and more faint with every moment.

The storm over, Mr. Masterson caught up his horse, which seemed much subdued of spirit by what it had gone through. As gently as might be—to humor the bruises—he re-cinched the heavy Colorado saddle in its place.

"Better keep you moving now, old boy," quoth Mr. Masterson. "It'll take the soreness out. You needn't shout about it," he concluded, as the sorely battered horse gave a squeal of pain; "a hailstone isn't a bullet, and it might have been worse, you know."

Again Mr. Masterson stretched southward, and again the moon and stars came out to light the way. The son to his horse, "but I'm going to need the saddle for myself."

MR. MASTERSON PUT ASIDE HIS GLASSES AND PLANTED HIMSELF WHERE HE WOULD DO THE GREATEST GOOD

Mr. Masterson crouched upon the ground, making the saddle a roof to cover his head, the skirts held tight about his shoulders by the girths. The roar grew until from a million drums it improved to be a million flails on as many threshing floors. It was indeed a noble din. Mr. Masterson clawed the saddle-skirts tight, as with a swish and a swirl the hailstorm was upon him. The round hailstones beat upon the saddle like buckshot. They leaped and bounded along the ground. They showed of a size and hardness to compare with those marbles meant for children's games.

Saved by the saddle, Mr. Masterson came through without a mark. His horse, with nothing more defensive than a square of saddle-blanket, had no such luck. Above the drumming of the hailstones, Mr. Masterson might hear that unfortunate animal as torn by mixed emotions of pain, amazement, and indignation, it bucked about the scene in a manner that would have done infinite grace to a circus. A best feature of the hailstorm was that it did not last five minutes; it passed to the south and east, and its mutterings grew fainter and more faint with every moment.

The storm over, Mr. Masterson caught up his horse, which seemed much subdued of spirit by what it had gone through. As gently as might be—to humor the bruises—he re-cinched the heavy Colorado saddle in its place.

"Better keep you moving now, old boy," quoth Mr. Masterson. "It'll take the soreness out. You needn't shout about it," he concluded, as the sorely battered horse gave a squeal of pain; "a hailstone isn't a bullet, and it might have been worse, you know."

Again Mr. Masterson stretched southward, and again the moon and stars came out to light the way. The storm drew forth the acrid earth-smells that sleep in the grass-roots on the plains. To mix with these, it brought a breath from the pine-sown Rockies four hundred miles away. These are the odors which soak into a man and make him forever of the West.

It was broad day when Mr. Masterson rode down to the lonely ford. He sighed with relief as his hawk eye showed him how no one had passed since the storm.

"I'm in luck!" said he.

Mr. Masterson hobbled his horse, and set that tired animal to feed among the fresh green of the bottom. Mr. Masterson unslung a pair of field-glasses which he wore for the good of his office, and sent a rearward glance along the trail. Rod by rod he picked it up for miles. There was no one in sight; he had come in ample time.

"I had ten miles the best of him by that cut-off," ruminated Mr. Masterson.

Then Mr. Masterson began to wish he had something to eat. However, he must starve till he got his man. He might have found a turkey in the brush-clumps along the White Woman. He might have risked the noise of a shot, being so far ahead. But Mr. Masterson did not care to eat a turkey raw, and he dared not chance a smoke; the Tomcat would have read the sign for miles and crept aside. Mr. Masterson drew his belt tighter by a hole, and thought on other things than breakfast. It wouldn't be the first time that Mr. Masterson had missed a meal, and he consoled himself with that. It is an empty form of consolation, as he who tries may tell.

"If there's anything I despise, it's hunger," said Mr. Masterson. He was a desperate man at table.

Mr. Masterson lay out of view, and kept his glasses on a strip five miles away where the trail ribboned over a hill. There, in the end, he found what he sought. Mr. Masterson had made out the Tomcat, a bobbing speck in the distance.

Mr. Masterson put aside his glasses, and planted himself where he would do the greatest good. While concealed, he still commanded the approach to the ford. To give his presence weight, Mr. Masterson possessed a 16-pound buffalo gun—a Sharp's, .50-calibre.

"As I remember this party," soliloquized Mr. Masterson, "I don't reckon now he's got sense enough to surrender when he's told. And when I think of that little lady dead in Dodge, I don't feel like taking chances on him. I'll hail him, and if he hesitates the risk is his."

Thirty minutes had come and gone since Mr. Masterson through his glasses followed the Tomcat down the far-off slope. Shylock, stanch as whalebone though he was, had found the clip a killer. He was not covering ground as in the beginning. There they were at last; the weary pony and the hunted man, both showing the wear and tear of pace.

Ballard ready on his hip, the Tomcat, giving a nervous backward look, brought Shylock to a walk. The broken pony came stumbling down to the ford. Mr. Masterson, with his mighty buffalo gun, aroused himself for official business.

"Drop that rifle!" said Mr. Masterson.

It was like a bolt from the blue to the spent and shaken Tomcat. He gulped and gasped in a startled way. Then despair standing in the stead of courage, he tossed the Ballard into his left hand and fired, bang! at Mr. Masterson's face where it showed above the bank. The bullet tossed the dust a yard to the left. Mixed bloods and Indians at their best are but poor hands with a rifle, and the Tomcat was at his worst.

With the crack of the Ballard came the roar of the Sharp's. The great bullet, which would have torn its way through the vitals of a buffalo bull at six hundred yards, brought the Tomcat whirling from the saddle like a stricken wild duck. What with sheer weariness, and an inadvertent yank at the Spanish bits, as the Tomcat went overboard, poor Shylock also stumbled and fell. He came down on the Tomcat; in the scramble to get to his feet, Shylock blundered and fell upon the Tomcat again. Mr. Masterson flung another cartridge into the buffalo gun. Then he warily approached the Tomcat, muzzle to the fore, finger on trigger. A dying man will sometimes pull a six-shooter with the last flicker of his failing strength, and gulp vengeance as he quits the earth.

Mr. Masterson seized the Tomcat by the shoulders and dragged him from under Shylock—still heaving and plunging to regain his feet. There was no call for a second look; the experienced Mr. Masterson could tell by the ash-color struggling through the tan that the death-draw was on the Tomcat at the very moment.

The Tomcat, hiccupping and bleeding, lay on the short stiff grass and rolled a hateful eye on his destroyer. Mr. Masterson, thinking on the girl who died in Dodge, gave back a look as hateful. And this, in the midst of the lonesome plains, is what these spoke to one another—these, the slayer and the slain—to show how bald is truth.

"You blank-blanked-blankety-blank! you ought to have made a better shot than that!" said the Tomcat.

"Well, you blank-blanked murderer, I did the best I could," said Mr. Masterson.

It was an hour later. Mr. Masterson, as he walked his horse over the hill upon which he had first beheld the coming of the Tomcat, halted and looked back. Shylock of the empty saddle nosed up to Mr. Masterson's horse in a friendly way. Five miles to the south, on the banks of the White Woman, a raven wheeled and stooped. Away to the left a coyote yelped—another yelped in answer, and then another. Mr. Masterson shrugged his wide shoulders. The coyote by daylight makes grawsome melody.

"The ground was too hard to let me dig a grave," said Mr. Masterson, as he turned his horse's nose again toward Dodge, "even if I'd had the tools. Besides, I'm not an undertaker; I'm a sheriff."

AN INDEPENDENT CHARGE

By OWEN OLIVER.

Author of "In His Private Capacity," "Young Briggs' Sister," Etc.

ILLUSTRATED BY MARTIN JUSTICE

A story of the war time in South Africa, in which a British corporal acquits himself of his first charge under the mixed incentives of loyalty to his flag and love for a little Boer child

SHE LOOKED AT HIM DOUBTFULLY FOR A FEW SECONDS

THERE was sun-red in the west, and fire-red over a farm to the north, and dull blood-red on some of the bayonets of Captain Foulke's detachment. The farm had hoisted the white flag first and fired afterward, and the detachment had run like mad toward the farm. 1980, Private G. Brown, had won the race by a stratagem, entering a window instead of a door, and executing a masterly flank attack. His bayonet was twisted, and when he fell behind the rest to hammer it straight with a stone, the Captain joined him.

"You've done good work to-day, Brown," he said. "If I can find a way to record it—"

"Put it in the defaulter-sheet, sir," Brown suggested cheerfully. The previous records of his service were there! The Captain shook his head.

"It's a pity that a brave soldier should be in there," he said gravely. "Especially a man who could get his stripes. Why the deuce don't you buck up?"

Brown shifted two fowls from one shoulder to the other, and fidgeted with his belt.

"Doesn't seem anything to make me," he explained. "I might if I had a charge of my own."

"Then you'd better— Confound those boys. They'll have it over." The Captain ran to the drift, where the ration cart was tilted on one wheel, and used strong words to the sergeant. The sergeant used strong words to the men, the men used strong words to the Kaffirs, and the Kaffirs used strong words to the kicking mules. Private Brown stopped again to tie up his shoe laces, and used strong words to himself.

"If that blooming farm doesn't burn down—as it won't—there'll be something more for the 'records.' The Captain's right, blessed if he isn't, I'm a fool—a blooming fool!"

Then he overtook his officer with huge swinging strides. He was a long, good-looking youth, and led the battalion forward at football.

"Looks as if the fire's going out, sir," he suggested. "There wasn't enough paper to fire the wood properly, if I'm a judge." As he had removed most of the paper, he had special qualifications for judging.

"Umph!" The Captain looked behind him at the faint red glare. "We can't go back now."

Brown shifted the fowls again. It seemed to relieve his feelings.

"Will you be dropping me at the blockhouse again, sir?" He had volunteered for the trek, in place of a man who was footsore.

"Ye-es," the Captain said slowly. "I'm taking Hughes away on his promotion. I've the Colonel's orders to select some one to take charge in his place. I've selected you, Corporal Brown—I'm taking a risk."

He looked hard at Brown, who flushed under his tan.

"I hope you'll drop on me heavy, sir, if I let you in," he said emphatically. "and—and—thank you—About that farm. I could easy drop over and fire it again."

"Umph! It's a good seven miles, and there are always a few Boers knocking about."

"I don't mind them. That isn't against me in the—records." He had taken a sudden dislike to mentioning the defaulter-sheets. "Knowing the place, I'd be all right, and if I wasn't it would only be one short at the Post."

The Captain did not answer till they were nearly at the blockhouse; then he nodded.

"Very well," he agreed.

He installed Brown in charge of his little garrison—the usual seven men—then he and his detachment trudged wearily along to the siding where they were to entrain. Brown acknowledged the congratulations of his comrades with successive grunts, handed over the fowls to Saunders, who acted as cook, and sat down on a biscuit-box outside the barbed wire fence, hung with jingling cans. He sat there a long time, with his elbow on his knee, and his chin on his hand, looking into the twilight, where the stars were beginning to blink. Presently Lee strolled out and joined him.

"Thinkin' of things, matey? Ah-h!—Makes yer think, lookin' at them 'ere bloomin' 'ills, an' them 'ere bloomin' stars. A chap's bound to think w'en 'e's dry!"

Brown roused suddenly and slapped his leg. "Smell this, old chap!" He held out his water bottle.

Lee smelled it eagerly, and heaved a sigh of satisfaction. Then he called the others and they sniffed in turn. They fetched Saunders from his cooking to have a smell too—being fair-minded men.

"Saw the jar on the table as I scrambled in the window," Brown explained complacently. "Chucked the tablecloth over it as I passed, to keep it out of notice of them as can't keep off liquor." He winked. "A Boer at the door turned as I was doing it, and nearly pipped me 'fore I gave him point. He shouted, and they all came bunking along the passage. I bayoneted the first chap, but couldn't get it out. Luckily for me, the passage was narrow, and they were too crowded to get their guns up. So I just landed out with my fists and feet! Then the Captain and the others came in like a hurricane, and I went down with half a dozen Boers on top of me. 'Mind Brown,' the Captain shouted, 'he's underneath.' I couldn't shout myself, 'cause my breath was squeezed out. When they pulled them off top of me I was so winded that I had to go and lie down—alongside of the jar!" He winked again.

"Ow much do you reckon was in it?" asked Nipper Jones, wiping his hand thoughtfully across his mouth.

SHE OFFERED EACH A SPOONFUL, AND THEY PRETENDED TO EAT IT

"'Bout three gallon—now."

"Didn't 'e burn the shanty?"

"He set light to it, but it didn't catch properly."

"'Wotho!" said Smiler Harris. "We'll do a little trek on our own to-morrow!" Brown frowned.

"There'll be no leaving this post while I'm in charge. Tain't no use grousing. They're my orders— But I've got the Captain's leave to go by myself and fire it again."

"Wot you won't do, in course, while there's anything to go back for," said Taffy Williams with a grin.

"What I'll do sure as a man's drunk on pay day," said Brown steadily. "And there'll be no going back, 'cause we can't spare men from here."

"Nipper an' me 'll go with yer," suggested Smith; but Brown shook his head again.

"Can't risk men," he pronounced. "I tell you what I'll do, though. I'll take all the water bottles—I can sling 'em on a strap—and fill 'em. Only mind this, if I don't come back, there's no coming after me. This blockhouse has got to be held. That's my orders."

The men looked at one another; then they looked at Brown. He was the biggest man, and the strongest, and a little above their class, which told more.

"Seems to me," said Smiler, "as the commander-in-chief 'as brought in a scheme of army reform—beginnin' with 'isselt!'"

After supper two packs of war-worn cards were produced for whist. Smiler's pack was fairly satisfactory, every card being represented by a whole or a fragment; but two of Williams's cards were missing. They replaced them by a biscuit and a lump of sugar, assigned to the dealer and elder hand.

"Ver might 'ave nicked a pack of cards, Gen'ral," Lee observed, "seein' as we only got one 'ole pack, an' two 'ole fours."

"You haven't," said Brown sharply. "Mac is on sentry-go."

"Sentry be blowed," said Macdonald. "I'll 'ave a lookout between the deals, same as usual."

"You won't!" Brown brought his big fist down on the pile of biscuit-tins that served as a table. "We'll have a proper lookout while this show is in my charge. That's my orders."

There was a grumbling murmur. The men looked at Lee, who was usually their spokesman, but he shook his head. He always had a liking for Brown, and he had been a good soldier—before he was a bad one.

"Orders," said Taffy Williams, "depends on wot is be'ind 'em."

Brown leaned forward, and wagged a long finger at him.

"Behind 'em," he said, "is military law—and me."

There was an ominous growl, and Macdonald smiled evilly.

"I'll account for one part," he growled, "you puffed-up—"

Brown rose, and Macdonald jumped up simultaneously, but Lee intervened.

"Mates," he said, "you can back-jaw as much as you like; but 'e's right, an' you know it."

There was an awkward silence. Ted Murphy broke it.

"Faith, Gin'ral," he said, "ye'll be after savin' a week av me pay from them gamblin' spalpeens. O'd rather do sentry-go, an' trust meself to the Boers."

He picked up his rifle, and slouched to the door, but Macdonald faced him furiously.

"I ain't 'andin' over my jobs to nobody," he yelled, "an' that's military law—an' me!"

Thereupon he seized his rifle, and marched up and down outside. Brown saw that the whist-players had their rifles ready. Then he went outside and inspected the sentry. The sentry inspected him also.

"I'm all right," he growled.

"If you ain't, no one ain't, Mac," said Brown. "The best eye and ear of the lot of us, you've got."

Macdonald grunted. "It wasn't that, mate. I—I wanted to shake hands with you."

When Smiler relieved Macdonald

and down outside. Brown saw that the whist-players had their rifles ready. Then he went outside and inspected the sentry. The sentry inspected him also.

"I'm all right," he growled.

"If you ain't, no one ain't, Mac," said Brown. "The best eye and ear of the lot of us, you've got."

Macdonald grunted. "It wasn't that, mate. I—I wanted to shake hands with you."

When Smiler relieved Macdonald

and down outside. Brown saw that the whist-players had their rifles ready. Then he went outside and inspected the sentry. The sentry inspected him also.

"I'm all right," he growled.

"If you ain't, no one ain't, Mac," said Brown. "The best eye and ear of the lot of us, you've got."

Macdonald grunted. "It wasn't that, mate. I—I wanted to shake hands with you."

When Smiler relieved Macdonald

The Captain did not answer till they were nearly at the blockhouse; then he nodded.

"Very well," he agreed.

He installed Brown in charge of his little garrison—the usual seven men—then he and his detachment

trudged wearily along to the siding where they were to entrain. Brown acknowledged the congratulations of his comrades with successive grunts, handed over the fowls to Saunders, who acted as cook, and sat down on a biscuit-box outside the barbed wire fence, hung with jingling cans. He sat there a long time, with his elbow on his knee, and his chin on his hand, looking into the twilight, where the stars were beginning to blink. Presently Lee strolled out and joined him.

and stopped till Lee took a turn. Then he went all round the fence, listened with his ear to the ground, and went to "bed."

"Fancy you're a bloomin' gen'ral, young 'un?" Lee inquired good humoredly. Brown laughed nervously. "I've got my show to run," he apologized. Small show or big show, a show of his own makes a man.

The next morning Corporal Brown made his little army clean their arms, pile an extra row of big stones on the sangar, or breastwork round the trench, and fire some bushes which obstructed the view of "Dog Kopje." They called it that because Lee had put a dying dog out of his misery there, and laboriously dug a grave in the hard soil for him.

"Couldn't be worried with the beastie's 'owls," he apologized. "Like a lurcher wot I 'ad onst, 'e was."

When the garrison was in order, Brown set out with eight water bottles slung over his shoulder, taking cover (for his legs chiefly!) of mimosa scrub, and boulders, and ant-hills, in accordance with the instructions which the Captain had often given them.

"It don't seem right to be hiding from a pack of Boers," he reflected, "but if I don't get back, there's no telling what those chaps will do. I've got my responsibilities." Which was a new view of life to Corporal Brown.

He scrutinized the farm from a clump of trees, and approached it cautiously along a hedge. From this hedge he advanced in extended order to an outhouse. Then he heard a noise in the farm. He became rigid, and raised his rifle steadily. After a few seconds he heard it again. It sounded like a muffled sob. He lowered the rifle and mopped his forehead.

"Some of the women come back," he muttered, "and found—what we left. I ain't going to face them. They've got their feelings, the same as other people."

He listened intently, and heard the sound again and again. Then it rose to a sharp cry.

"Hang me!" he said, "if it isn't a blooming kid. It must have been left behind and got back to the house!"

He skirried from the shed to the stoep, from the stoep to the window, from the window to the door, and from the door to another door. In the kitchen he saw a baby, about eighteen months old, tiptoeing vainly to reach a piece of bread on the dresser. She was a chubby little girl, with big blue eyes and light hair, and the tears had made white tracks down her grubby little face. When she saw him she backed away, with her small hands clinched in fright.

"Ka!" she cried with a gasp. "Ka!" She meant Khaki, the Boer term for our soldiers.

"I won't hurt you, baby," he protested, with clumsy gentleness; but the child backed further away, till the wall stopped her.

"Ka!" she cried shakily. "Ka!"

"Ka not hurt," he assured her. "Ka good. Baby not cry."

She continued crying softly, and it occurred to him that perhaps she was hungry. He produced a biscuit from his pocket. She held to a chair with one hand, and stretched out the other slowly. He inserted the biscuit at arm's length. She looked at him doubtfully for a few seconds, with one eye on the biscuit. Then she ate it so greedily that she half choked.

"Not so fast," he remonstrated, but she finished it rapidly. So he gave her another. He thought that she was probably thirsty too. He found some milk on the dresser, but it had gone sour. He fetched some water instead. When she had finished the cupful, he wiped her eyes and mouth, and gave her another biscuit. She held up her mouth.

"Kus Ka!" she offered. He kissed her and took her on his knee.

"Poor little girl," he said. "Poor little girl."

The child nestled against him and held his tunic with one hand, while she fed herself with the other. Then she went to sleep, shuddering and catching her breath every few seconds. Each time he drew her a little closer. When she was sleeping soundly, he laid her on the sofa, and stretched himself to get the pins and needles out of his arm. Then he went in search of fresh fuel to add to the charred pile against the house. Failing anything better, he tore the paper out of some books, and chopped up the kitchen table and some chairs, and poured a can of oil over the whole. He went back to the kitchen and lunched off some dry bread and biltong, and a generous dose from the jar, watered cautiously. Then he had a look at the child. "Wonder what kids eat?" he muttered. (Continued on page 27.)

THE GREAT COOK TRUST

A STORY OF HOW A DEVELOPMENT OF CO-OPERATIVE EFFORT NEARLY RESULTED IN THE ANNIHILATION OF ALL COOKS

By KENNETH BROWN : : : Illustrated by HERMAN HEYER

IT WAS almost immediately after my return to my own world that I fell in love with Edith Wooster of New York. For one year I had been lost to my friends and to the world, of which it would be false modesty to say I was not a distinguished ornament. In a discussion, just after my graduation, my practical knowledge of sociological matters was questioned, in spite of my having written the most brilliant thesis, on "The Soul of a Workingman," that a Harvard Commencement had ever produced. My thesis was asserted to be the product of books, not of personal acquaintance with what I wrote about, and while its brilliance was freely admitted, its convincingness to the well-informed was denied.

That night I disappeared and wandered for three hundred and sixty-five days through all ranks of labor, till I felt that I had exhausted the subject, till I admitted the truth of what the questioner of my thesis had asserted. The knowledge of the lower world that I gained during this year now not only became of tremendous use in furthering my love affair with Edith Wooster, but indirectly led me into the greatest scheme that the mind of man had ever conceived—the Great Cook Trust—as I shall tell.

I had always been used to a good deal of feminine admiration, and, perhaps because of this, marrying had never been to me anything except a remote possibility, like growing old, or dying. I am not in the least of an amorous disposition, and love-making had been for me nothing except a pleasant social amusement, an affair of the intellect, not of the senses—although I had noticed, not without a certain pitying contempt, how profoundly it often affected other men, at least for a time. Yet now I found my whole will bent on marrying Edith, the only child of a man who was said never to see the initials of his country except in the monogram which stands for our unit of currency, and who piled millions on millions as children heap sand on sand. Old Wooster opposed me, and I have often wondered since how much this opposition determined me on marrying Edith. It was the first opposition I had ever encountered. I, who had wandered free, encountered barriers, and barriers were an insult.

My courting was curious. With Edith, of course, I had no trouble; but suddenly I became as punctilious as any little princeling of Europe. It had never occurred to me that the consent of parents was a necessary prerequisite to marriage; but when I found the consent withheld, and withheld in an offensive manner, I determined to force it. I could easily have eloped with Edith. I might have married her without her father's consent, since she was of age. Instead, I sought an audience with old Wooster, and at the audience demanded the hand of his daughter, like the hero of any historical novel.

There never was any great sympathy between me and my father-in-law to be, even later when we were hand-in-glove associates in the Cook Trust, and at this interview our mutual dislike of each other was near ferocity. My ideas and ideals—sitting lightly upon me as they often do on a young man—were those I had got at Harvard: In Fine Arts 3, in Geology 4, in English 12—Norton, Shaler, and Briggs, modified or intensified by my year among the working class. Old Wooster had one simple standard, the dollar mark. The newspapers that he subsidized spoke of the thousands he employed; they might as well have praised him for the red and white corpuscles that lived in his veins.

Our interview was one in which a humorist would have found delight, so thoroughly did our ideals clash, so genuine was the contempt of each for each.

"You can play-act and sing and kick a football about with other boys," Wooster said, with a glance more cutting than his words.

"I can earn my living," I interrupted fiercely.

"In what manner?" he sneered.

"With these hands—at a dollar and a half a day!" I exclaimed proudly.

"Yes, you are a big husky fellow. I dare say you might earn your living digging a ditch."

For the first time I realized the utter dissimilarity between the standards I had been taught were worth holding and those held by such men as Wooster. I had, of course, heard of mercenary standards often enough; what they meant I had never appreciated before. I saw I had made a profound tactical mistake, had lowered myself in his eyes when I thought I was showing my manhood. At the same time, as if I were awakening from sleep, I became aware of my powers. I knew that this man, who wrecked railroads at will, who could almost make or unmake the prosperity of the country, was but an infant, in comparison with me, in real ability.

I turned to him quite calmly: "There is something else I can do—I can marry your daughter with your full consent inside of a year," and walked from the room without waiting for an answer.

II

DURING the next year I discovered my genius for organization. At my interview with old Wooster, a plan for bringing him to his knees had flashed through my mind, a plan so chimerical and absurd that I am convinced no other mind than my own would have entertained it for an instant. To me, even with its absurdities, its almost infinite possibilities were patent from the outset.

To be brief—for to tell everything in detail would require a library—during this year I organized the whole of the domestic labor of New York into a union, which came to be known—at first jocularly, and then in mingled fear and hate—as the Cook Trust. And this stupendous machine I had called into being for one girl, held leveled at one man. Had he known of it he might well have sought flight in the grave, but it was begun and carried on in a secrecy always well maintained, and, at first, perfectly impenetrable. This I consider the greatest proof of my genius; to be able to inspire in the inchoate mass of cooks, butler, cham-bermaids, and the rest of this class, a faithfulness which not only followed me to their temporary pecuniary loss, but inspired them to hold their tongues instead of vaunting each little victorious step and so defeating complete ultimate victory.

The position from which I directed my campaign was that of butler in the Wooster household. I had a genius for acting (at Harvard I was the star of the Hasty Pudding theatricals) and no one—not even Edith—suspected me the whole time that I was there. My strategic position was masterly. I was in the enemy's inner citadel; every move of his I could discount; every sign of weakness and exhaustion was revealed to me. In addition, Edith, who might have forgotten me in my absence, received letters from her lover in a mysterious manner that served to envelop the thought of him with ever greater glamour.

After my interview with Wooster, Edith was bidden to stay in her chamber, incommunicado, for a week, after the fashion of daughters of the Middle Ages, and this she did with tears and repinings. At the end of that time Wooster relented. The society columns of the papers related that I had gone from New York and was sporting myself at Bar Harbor. The society papers were wrong; for before the end of the week I was installed as butler in the Wooster household.

Wooster released Edith from her imprisonment all sighs and tears, but the same day she found beneath her plate, at her solitary luncheon, a letter from her absent lover. She was too pleased and frightened to question any of the servants as to how it got there, and none of them would have known about it if she had. (She did not connect the letter and the new butler.) When Wooster came home that night he found a rosy and happy daughter, who bore a slurring reference to her lover with smiling equanimity. Wooster felt that he had cured her of what, in the language of the sensation novels, is called "her mad infatuation," and her continued cheerfulness, as time wore on, lulled him in his sense of a love affair well broken up. But thereafter, as I have said, at irregular intervals and in unexpected places—in her card-case, in her powder-box, beneath her pillow, inside the book she was reading where she had left a mark, once even in a box of roses her father himself brought her, and which he had left standing a few minutes in the hall—appeared these letters from me. No wonder the thought of me did not grow cold in her heart.

III

In a few months my organization of cooks had proceeded far enough so that I was enabled to begin dropping the woe of the universe upon my prospective—at that time not very prospective—father-in-law. It may seem absurd to think of a man who held the happiness of thousands, of millions, in his power, being plagued by trouble with his servants. And so it must have seemed to him; for when the annoyance of it first began to penetrate to him he raged as a lion might who was caught in a mouse-trap and could not get out. He appeared to scent an indefinable conspiracy against himself, although he could not be even morally sure of it. When his meals began to fail he would go out to restaurants, but he was a man with domestic tastes—of which much was made in the newspapers favorable to him—and was not suited with this. At last, after a number of meals cooked by his butler—the butler remained faithful to him through all his troubles—he roared out that he would have cooks no matter at what price—a thousand dollars a month, if necessary. (I can cook as good a chafing-dish supper as any chef in Paris, but I managed to turn out execrable stuff for Wooster.)

When this offer of the baited millionaire became noised about, there was tremendous clamor among my cooks to accept it. One of the secrets of my success is that I know when to give in; that and the disinterested way in which I act. As butler I always turned three-fourths of my wages into the common fund. I was never self-seeking and was incorruptible. I now called the cooks together and told them to accept this munificent offer of Wooster's, wrung from him by his stomach. There was a rush for his house. He was almost suffocated with cooks. Fifteen hundred called in two days, outsiders coming from as far away as Omaha, Nebraska. And the result was exactly what I had foreseen: fourteen hundred and ninety-nine disappointed and one happy. At that price he did not feel like hiring the two he had been in the habit of keeping.

For a few weeks matters went smoothly in the Wooster household, and I waited in some anxiety to see if there was any mistake in my reckoning. The first result I had anticipated came: the fortunate cook was practically ostracized from cook society, though with the wages he was receiving he could afford to laugh at that. I watched Wooster to see if he would let the present state of affairs continue. I had not sized him up as a man who would patiently eat thousand-dollar-a-month dinners for long. For a few square meals he derived tremendous satisfaction from his knife and fork; then I could see that the food began to choke in his throat. He had too good an idea of values to enjoy being subject to extortion with every bite.

At the end of the first month Wooster announced that he was going to cut wages in half. The cook came to me with tears in his eyes; his elysium was shrinking. The crisis I had hoped for had come. I said to him: "Now, Alphonse, as Chief Grand Generalissimo Cuisinier"—that was my official title: we tickled ourselves with large names, and I was able to accept nothing less from my enthusiastic followers—"I have given permission to all to cook for Wooster the Oppressor at a thousand dollars a month. If you remember, I distinctly stated at the time that this was to prove to all of you the mistake of ever knuckling under to mere money power in our profession." (This was a lie. I had said nothing of the kind, but Alphonse nodded grave acquiescence.) "Now," I continued, "if you wish to prostitute your art and your honor to even a smaller bait—a bait for a minnow, not for a trout, you have my official permission to do it." My metaphors were rather mixed; but I have found that mixed metaphors, like mixed drinks, are often more potent than straight ones. "But, Alphonse, my dear fellow"—here I trickled a tremor of emotion through my voice—"you have enemies even among your brother chefs. There are some who were once admirers of your science and skill—disciples, I might almost say—and now they have turned against you for betraying our order, as they feel you have. You know the poem, 'Just for a handful of silver he left us'—Alphonse, it might have been written about you. The poet with his mystical prescience seemed to see you as he wrote. But," I interrupted myself, "forgive my digression. Stay with Wooster for five hundred dollars this coming month—for two hundred and fifty the next—for a hundred and twenty-five the next—for a beggarly sixty-two dollars and fifty cents the next—for—"

"Nervaire!" he shrieked. "Ah, Monsieur Shief Grand Generalissimo Cuisinier, a thick meest hass been before my eyes. I had been begotting in my desire for the money. I thank you for to haf made me see clear again."

REPORTERS DOGGED HIS FOOTSTEPS

Thus skilfully played upon, he talked long of the scurvy trick played upon him, of his cookish honor, untarnished until the devil Wooster tempted him. He was voluble after the manner of his race, and carried himself along on the stream of his volubility. He shook the dust of the Wooster mansion from his feet, and I caused a rumor to be circulated that he had not even received his promised wage for this month he had stayed. Then I tipped him the wink to accept this rumor as the best way of rehabilitating himself with his fraternity, and he took it with such eagerness that before long he really believed it himself.

Our organization made of this whole affair a great grievance, and when, driven to desperation, Wooster again bruted about a thousand-dollar offer, not a cook responded.

IV

SEVEN months after I came as butler into the Wooster household, the Cook Trust—I might as well use the name that afterward became fastened to it in place of the long and ornate one we adopted—the Cook Trust was in such a perfect state of organization that Wooster, except for the pitiful attempts of Edith, might almost have starved to death. He gave up trying to eat at home, and took his meals at Delmonico's. Two days after he appeared there, not only the cooks but also the waiters failed to put in an appearance. There was no strike, no talk of strike, simple absence. Wooster went to Sherry's. The same thing happened there. He moved to another and still another, but presently his very intention of going to a restaurant or hotel—whenever I was able to learn of it—was sufficient to make of it a foodless desert. A blind terror descended on the millionaire, and he scurried about like the Wandering Jew, popping into miserable little restaurants on side streets with the furtive look of a hunted murderer. I almost became sorry for the old rascal. And even this surreptitious manner of obtaining his food was presently frustrated through some enterprising reporter remarking on the hoodoo effect of Wooster in the eating line. After that reporters used to dog his footsteps to see where he was going to eat, and whether he would succeed in obtaining a meal; for by this time the curious action of the cooks had become the topic of greatest public interest in New York. It was this hoodoo quality of Wooster's which first gave him the bad name which contributed not a little to his ultimate destruction, and to my own escape when the Cook Trust became so powerful that the people were transformed into a mob and destroyed it through brute force.

The time was now ripe, I judged, for another interview with my father-in-law to be. His manner toward me—in my proper person—was quite different from what it had been last time. He received me with the eagerness with which a hunted fox dives into a hole. I was from out of town; I had perhaps not heard the obloquy attached to him, did not know that his name had become execrated in this greatest city of our country.

"You're not looking well," I said sympathetically. "Lionel"—he had never before called me by my Christian name—"I've aged ten years since you saw me. Yes, confound it!" he roared, plucking up spirit again, "this country has gone to the dogs, and it used to be the finest country God ever made." And then, with a little urging he told me all his trouble. "I would go to Europe to-morrow to live," he ended up, "if it weren't for the ocean voyage." His voice dropped to a terrified whisper. "Suppose, on the way over, in mid-ocean, the cooks should refuse to cook, the waiters to wait. Oh, the horror of it! They would turn me adrift in a boat—throw me overboard." He put his hands over his eyes and shook as with palsy at the dreadful thought.

"No, I daren't risk it," he continued brokenly, as I laid my hand on his arm and murmured a few soothing words in his ear. "No, Lionel, I'm a doomed man—I'm locoed. My club is shut up because all the servants have gone. And my nerve is gone as they. Shall I tell you to what I have been driven?" His awestruck voice thrilled me. "I have voluntarily raised wages on seven railroad systems this summer to try to break the hoodoo."

"Is it on account of your business methods?" I asked in a low tone.

"Business nothing!" he flared up. "I can beat anything living at business. Didn't I break the strongest bull combination that's ever been formed, not three months ago? But what can I do in this? They have no organization to get an injunction against—no union to buy up." He clutched wildly at the air, as if in truth the atmosphere were his impalpable enemy, and he would strangle it.

"What would you give, my dear Mr. Wooster?"—I leaned toward him confidentially—"if I could stop this affair for you, remove this blight from your life?"

"Give!" he sprang to his feet. "I'd give you a mil-

IT WAS AN AWFUL SIGHT WHEN THE MOB LINED UP ONE HUNDRED OF THE BEST KNOWN COOKS OF NEW YORK IN MADISON SQUARE AND SHOT THEM DOWN

CORLISS COON & CO.

Economy

Economy usually means sacrifice of style, of quality, of wear—or perhaps all three—and your pride as well. Not so of Helmet Brand Collars. They're the most economical because the most stylish, the best fitting and most durable—and moderate in price, as well. At leading dealers, 15c. each, 25c. for 25c. Why pay more?

Minto and Werner are two of the many popular styles in our Helmet Brand, made also in a variety of designs. Write for our Style Booklet, which shows all the latest shapes and heights in up-to-date collars. It will guide you in matters of correct dress. Sent free on request.

Corliss Coon & Company
Dept. B Troy, N. Y.

lion dollars, or any railroad in the country—just give me a week to get control of it—or make you President of the United States, if you can wait till the next election.”

“Or Edith?” I questioned. He had apparently forgotten her.

“Edith—ten Ediths!” he cried.

Whether I inspired him with confidence, or he thought I was proposing to do something entirely beyond my powers, I do not know.

“Well, suppose you take dinner with me to-night, and we will talk it over.”

“Dinner,” he repeated sadly. “You forget—”

“I never forget,” I interrupted. “We’ll dine at Del’s at half-past seven.”

V

HAD Wooster been a social struggler at his first big function, he could not have looked more pleased when our meal at Delmonico’s passed off without a hitch. In my pocket I bore a contract, drawn up by the best lawyer in New York, pledging Wooster’s consent to the marriage of his daughter and myself. Wooster uncorked his fountain pen with the champagne, and my battle was won. Then mellowed, perhaps, by the wine and the victory, and knowing that the man opposite me was one who would appreciate a cleverly fought campaign, I told him the whole story of my machinations. When I had finished he looked stunned for a minute, then lay back in his chair and roared with laughter. It was as much for the lifting of the dread that had been weighing on him, I imagine, as from appreciation of my manoeuvre.

“And now, my son,” he exclaimed with father-in-lawly warmth, “I suppose you are going to let the world eat its dinners in peace.”

“No,” I replied, “the trouble has only just begun.”

“Eh!” he cried; his new-found complacency vanished, and he turned pale so that the waiter started.

I sent the waiter for another bottle of wine, and continued: “Here is a machine, built up with no little trouble, whose capabilities—How much would you have sold your house for yesterday, if you could have moved somewhere else where cooks would cook for you?”

“My house? I’d have given it away if I could have been sure of getting fed at some respectable boarding-house,” he replied grimly.

“Exactly! Now supposing that all the people living in a section of the city—say between Fifty-ninth, One Hundred and Tenth, the Park, and Third Avenue—supposing all the people living there find extreme difficulty in getting servants, in spite of their wealth, while in all other sections of the city servants are more plentiful than ever, how long would it take for property in that particular section of the city to depreciate one-half?”

Wooster was a man who dealt in large things, but I think I took his breath away this evening. He lay back in his chair and gazed up at the ceiling. He lighted a long cigar and puffed slender puffs upward. He did not speak for fully five minutes. I believe the waiter thought I had hypnotized him, from the absolute disregard he paid when asked if he would have some wine.

At last Wooster came back to earth and addressed me: “My son”—and the appellation seemed to give him great satisfaction—“words fail me to express my pride and joy in you,” and words failed him right there. He sank back into rapt contemplation of the frescoes on the ceiling.

“Of course, it will take some capital,” I continued carelessly.

“I consider you an equal partner in all that I possess,” he replied. “What has a father that he would not gladly share with his daughter’s husband? And I happen to have a good deal of ready cash just now. I have been drawing in my investments since this infernal—this ingenious scheme of yours has been in operation.”

VI

I WALKED home with Wooster after dinner, and I need not describe the rapture of my meeting with Edith, after these months when she was separated, so to speak, and I was under a restraint worse than separation. But love was not allowed to hinder business for many days. With a daring natural to both of us, we picked out the very best residence portion of the city for our attack—the very district that I had cited suppositively at our dinner—and we had not long to wait for results. The rich are less patient of annoyance than the poor, and in a few months we were enabled to buy up many of the handsomest houses in New York for not more than half their value, as their owners found it impossible to obtain servants. We were very discreet at first, working through agents, so that there seemed to be no concerted plan. I need not go into the details of the matter; for it will be plain to every one how effective such a scheme of operation would be. Time passed, and when one section was practically ours we transferred our operations to another, sending an influx of servants into the first section to bring back its natural value to real estate there. Our idea—an idea which seemed with every day to become more and more feasible—was first to absorb the whole of New York, by repeated buyings and sellings, and then to transfer is the best, and the best is none too good for your food and drink. Insist on having Burnett's.—Ad.

Burnett's Vanilla Extract

If You Are Looking

for a perfect condensed milk preserved without sugar, buy Borden's Peerless Brand Evaporated Cream. It is not only a perfect food for infants, but its delicious flavor and richness makes it superior to raw cream for cereals, coffee, tea, chocolate and general household cooking. Prepared by Borden's Condensed Milk Co.—Ad.

Suit Made $12 to Measure

Suit Case Free

Fine All-Wool Tailor-Made Cashmere or Worsted Suit

Your Choice of a variety of colorings and weaves, and all the newest patterns just from the woolen mills. We direct special attention to the fabric. The cloth is specially woven from new, high grade wool; it is close woven and the wool is full of life, so that the cloth is elastic and the garments will hold their shape. Before cutting into the cloth for each suit, the suit pattern is thoroughly shrunken. Our cutters are first-class workmen, who incorporate into the suit the latest style, and take into account the various little differences in build of each man.

The suit is lined throughout with “Eli” serge and the sleeve linings are of the celebrated “Fowler” silks. All trimmings are the very best, and buttonholes are hand finished. The pants pockets are made of strong drilling, and all the findings are such as only can be secured in the high grade merchant-tailor article. Our measure and order blank will enable you to take your own measurement accurately, and a perfect fit is guaranteed. We are manufacturers, importers and custom tailors, and guarantee our $12.00 suits to be equal in wear to the best suits you can obtain from your local dealer for Twenty Dollars, while in style and fit our garments are incomparably superior to any but the product of high-priced city tailors.

FREE Suit Case

In order to establish customers throughout the United States, we are giving on the first order received from any one person, a handsome suit case, which we use to ship the suit. The suit case that goes with each suit is most presentable and would cost in your local store from $5 to $6.

A trial is all we ask. You run no risk in ordering from us, as we guarantee absolutely a perfect fit. We do not ask you to pay for the goods before seeing them. We send them by express C. O. D., with the privilege of examination at Express Office, and if the suit is not satisfactory in fabric, finish or fit, you need not accept it; it will be returned to us at our expense. The suit shown in the picture is our No. 251, and is a sensible, becoming suit to most gentlemen. The price is $12.00. It is entirely new, out of the ordinary and very stylish. Samples of cloth that make up nicely in this style are shown in our new catalogue, which contains styles and samples varying in price from $12.00 to $20.00. Our catalogue and SAMPLES OF CLOTH FREE will be sent you the very day your request for same reaches us. Remember, we have no agents, no branch stores, and no connection with any other clothing concern. Our business has been established 40 years. Write today for samples. Address Meyer Livingston Sons, Dept. 41, South Bend, Ind. Reference: Chicago National Bank, South Bend, Ind.

Skin Diseases

Eczema, Salt Rheum, Pimples, Ringworm, Itch, Acne or other skin troubles, can be promptly cured by

Hydrozone

Hydrozone is endorsed by leading physicians. It is absolutely harmless, yet most powerful healing agent. Hydrozone destroys parasites which cause these diseases. Take no substitute and see that every bottle bears my signature.

Trial Size, 25 Cents
At Druggists or by mail, from

Prof. Charles H. H. 39 H Prince Street
New York

FREE Booklet on the rational treatment of Diseases sent free.

SOMETHING NEW AND CHEAP

Everyone will be interested in our new catalogue, just out. Shows many new and attractive pieces never before offered for sale—everyone at our actual factory price, shipped direct from our OWN factory on approval—satisfaction guaranteed.

$26.50 buys this solid quarter sawed oak sideboard—size 44x46 inches wide, 81 inches high. Three mirrors of French bevel plate, one 20x20 inches, and two 20x10 inches, hand rubbed and polished, beautifully carved, velvet lined drawer. Dealers would sell for $35.00 to $40.00.

Write today for our new free catalogue showing bargains in bedroom, dining room, parlor, library furniture, mattresses, etc.

Freight prepaid to all points east of Dakota and Nebraska and north of Tennessee and equal to points beyond.

Grace Furniture Company
Grand Rapids, Mich.

A Perfect Lawn in Six Weeks BY SOWING

"HENDERSON" LAWN GRASS SEED.

25c. per quart, $1.50 per peck, $5.00 per bushel.

(By mail, 5c. per quart extra.)

The Days of Using Sod Are Over.

For a plot 15x20, or 300 sq. ft. 1 qt. is required for new, or 1 pt. for renovating old lawns.

Our Catalogue, "Everything for the Lawn," mailed free on application

PETER HENDERSON & CO., 35-37 Cortlandt Street, New York

The Only One World in the

This Does Not mean that we have all the knowledge in the world about the Science of Salesmanship.

It Does mean, however, that there is but ONE Science of this particular species, and that it has been formulated by A. F. Sheldon, Founder and President of the

Sheldon School of Scientific Salesmanship

The simplicity of the arrangement of the basic principles, the plan and scope of the Lessons, the open style which you may acquire the power to persuade others (which is salesmanship in the strictest sense) impart an energy to your thought force and a suggestive influence to your personality, that makes your presence in the world of business a factor to be reckoned with by every competitor.

We Offer You nothing except that which will stand the test of the "time of reason." We have no secrets. We count investigation.

Our Little Messengers

"The Birth of a Science" and "The Science of Salesmanship" will take the first train in answer to your request for further information—no expenses paid by you. To the man who knows the value of opportunity, yesterday and to-morrow are alike impossible. Write us today.

S. S. of S. S., 944 McClurg Bldg., Chicago
Copyright 1904, by A. F. Sheldon.

Illinois Central R.R.

DAILY FAST TRAINS

Elegantly equipped and with Dining, Buffet, Library, Sleeping and Reclining Chair Cars, from its northern and southern terminals, connecting at its numerous gateways with trains from the

EAST, SOUTH AND NORTH

Particulars of agents of the Illinois Central and connecting lines.

A. H. HANSON, Gen'l Pass'r Agent, CHICAGO

GOOD LUCK PIN Sent Postpaid 15c.

Outlast Silver, Ruby or Emerald Pins. Suitable for all. Hugh Connolly, Jeweler, 12 State St., Detroit, Mich.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES

Surpass all other preparations in allaying Hoarseness and Irritation of the Throat. As a cough remedy they are unequalled.

Avoid Imitations. John S. Brown

THIS IS THE ROYAL INCUBATOR

On 30 Days Free Trial

We say it's the best incubator made. Try it and see what YOU think. No pay until satisfied. Automatic and certain. Send for trial plan. Catalog free, with poultry paper 1 year 50c. ROYAL INCUBATOR CO. Dept. 512 Des Moines, Ia.

20 YEAR GUARANTEE

Goes with the old original Prairie State Incubators and Brooders. U. S. Government uses them exclusively. Have won 302 first prizes. Our free catalog interests poultry raisers. Send for it. PRAIRIE STATE INCUBATOR CO. Homer City, Pa.

VIGOROUS CHICKS

are the result of Petaluma Incubators. They maintain Nature's conditions. They have no accidents, make no failures. Catalogue free. PETALUMA INCUBATOR COMPANY Box 572, Petaluma, Cal. Box 555, Indianapolis, Ind.

Increase Your Income

Learn profitable poultry raising. Our success in teaching it has been phenomenal. The faculty are practical poultrymen and experienced teachers. Tremendous opportunities for those who begin NOW. No other investment brings such large and sure returns. Write today for the illustrated booklet fully describing various courses. COLUMBIA SCHOOL OF POULTRY CULTURE, Box 615, Waterville, N. Y.

CHICKS—NOT WORDS

Sure Hatch claims are not empty ones. Sure Hatch Incubators hatch live, healthy chicks. Proof in free catalog B-17. SURE HATCH INCUBATOR CO. Clay Center, Neb., Indianapolis, Ind.

GOOD RESULTS

To be absolutely sure about it use the RELIABLE INCUBATORS & BROODERS. If the eggs are right, you can't make a mistake. Just follow instructions—the Reliable will do the rest. Our 20th Century Poultry Book, mailed for 10c, tells all about it and other things you should know. We have 125 yards of thoroughbred poultry. RELIABLE INCUBATOR & BROODER CO., Box B-195, Quincy, Ill.

ASTHMA Cured to stay CURED. Health restored. BOOK & PILL. F. HAROLD HAYES, Buffalo, N. Y.

"Mackinette"

RAIN COAT

For Sunshine and Showers

WHEN you buy the dressiest Spring overcoat, you will buy the "Mackinette." It is rain-proof, wind-proof, dust-proof.

It is made in many patterns controlled by us alone.

This label on every coat is a guaranty of the famous "R. & W." workmanship. Whenever you see the "R. & W." label on any garment, you are as sure of true quality as when you buy silver marked "Sterling." Ask your dealer to show you the "Mackinette" coats. They sell at prices from $15 to $35. Buy one and know what it is to have an overcoat that combines comfort, protection and a smart appearance. Our book, "Sunshine and Showers," is worth reading and will show you illustrations of this season's styles.

This Book is Free-
Ask for it

Rosenwald & Weil

CHICAGO-NEW YORK

Makers of High Class Clothing Specialties, "Mackinette" Rain Coats, Summer Clothing, Fine Trousers, Fancy Vests, Smoking Jackets and Lounging Robes.

All bearing this mark

Date _____

Rosenwald & Weil
Chicago

Please send me your booklet

"Sunshine and Showers"
My clothing dealer is _____

Signature _____

Street _____

Town _____

State _____

W. L. DOUGLAS

$3.50 SHOES

$10,000.00 REWARD will be paid to anyone who can prove that W. L. Douglas does not make and sell more men's $3.50 shoes than any other manufacturer in the world.

The reason W. L. Douglas $3.50 shoes are worn by more men in all stations of life than any other make is because they hold their shape, fit better, wear longer and are of greater value than any other $3.50 shoe.

2,473,464 PAIRS OF FINE SHOES WERE MADE AND SOLD BY W. L. DOUGLAS IN 1903.

"For years I could not believe it possible to make a first-class shoe for $3.50, until at last I tried a pair of your $3.50 shoes. I am now convinced that W. L. Douglas $3.50 shoes are the best in the world for the money."—Merritt L. Brown, with Knott, the Butler, New York.

W. L. Douglas High-Grade Boys' Shoes, $2.00 and $1.75.

Douglas uses Ceresia Coltskin in his $3.50 shoes. Ceresia Colt is conceded everywhere to be the finest patent leather yet produced.

Fast Color Eyelets Used Exclusively.

W. L. DOUGLAS, 154 SPARK STREET, BROOKTON, MASSACHUSETTS.

All over the civilized world
THE IMPROVED

BOSTON GARTER

IS KNOWN and WORN
Every Pair Warranted

The Name is stamped on every loop—

The Velvet Grip

CUSHION BUTTON CLASP

Lies flat to the leg—never Slips. Tears nor Unfastens.

ALWAYS EASY.

Geo. Frost Co., Makers, Boston, Mass., U.S.A.

REFUSE ALL SUBSTITUTES

A Hot Bath anywhere—any time—in one minute—for one cent.

Send for our valuable and interesting booklet, "The Luxury of a Bath," which tells how

Hot Water

and plenty of it, has been brought within the reach of everyone, no matter where, at an insignificant cost, by the Humphrey Crescent Instantaneous Water Heater.

Sold by All Plumbers.

This heater is used in over 50,000 homes, is handsome in appearance and readily and quickly installed. Hot water starts the moment the match is applied and flows in unlimited supply. Gas is the fuel and less of it is used than in any other heater. Saves time and money and is the greatest convenience a house can have. Sent on

30 DAYS TRIAL
Humphrey Co., Dept. K, Kalamazoo, Mich.

ORIENT BUCKBOARD

With Two Speed

Price $425

4 H. P. WEIGHT 500 LBS.

Fast, Practical and Safe

Write for Handsome New Catalogue.

WALTHAM MANUFACTURING COMPANY WALTHAM, MASS.

Diamonds on Credit

3/8 KARAT FINE PERFECT STONE $44.

$7.00 Down—$4.00 Per Month

We have 1000 3/8 kt. stones, bought before the recent advance in prices. We'll sell them as long as they last at $44. on credit, ring mounting included. Let us send you one for inspection. If it meets with your approval, pay express agent $7.00 and send the balance to us in nine equal monthly payments. Our new Spring Catalogue No. 103 sent free everywhere.

HERBERT L. JOSEPH & CO.
Largest Diamond and Watch Credit House in America
148 (201) State St., Chicago

MAKE MONEY MILLER'S WAY

I GUARANTEE to make a good show-card and sign writer of you in 48 hours' practice. All can learn this fascinating, profitable art by my copyrighted system of mail instruction. Illustrated lessons are "fresh from the brush" copies. Every up-to-date store wants good show-card writers. $2 to $5 daily earned in your own town. Ladies! Learn this money-making art! Complete outfit free to students. Good paying positions guaranteed graduates. Tuition fee low, terms easy. Circulars, testimonials, etc., on request.

G. W. Miller College, 74 Journal Bldg., Boston, Mass.

EASIER TO ROW ABSOLUTELY SAFE

Mullins Unsinkable Steel Pleasure Boats

Made of steel. Practically indestructible. All changes each end. Cannot sink. Cannot leak. Requires no sailing. Ideal boat for family use. Excellent for parties. Guaranteed. Will seat five persons in row boat. The modern row-boat for pleasure, safety and durability.

W. H. MULLINS, 407 Depot Street, Salem, Ohio

Write to-day for free catalogue
15 foot boat, crated, $29.00 No other boat so desirable for ladies and children.

BUILD YOUR OWN BOAT BY THE BROOKS SYSTEM

1675-1680 Exact size PATTERNS of every piece. Complete 18' 4" FT. BEAM. INSTRUCTIONS. Each step plainly illustrated. Expertly fitting. Once necessary. Hundreds have built this boat. Working spare time at a total cost of $4.00.

Boat Patterns of all kinds and sizes up to 50 ft. at prices from $3.00 up. We also build complete boats and knock down frames.

CONSERVATION LASHING-SAIL PARTICULARS FREE—25 c brings 44 g. illustrated catalogue, set of working instructions and illustrations.

BROOKS BOAT MFG. CO., 374 C BAY CITY, MICH.

NEW STANDARD SEARCHLIGHT

By pressing button, instantly throws a strong bright light 50 to 75 feet. Indispensable to Automobiles and in the house or on the farm, especially in the sick room and in cases of emergency. Far superior to lanterns, candles or matches. Absolutely safe and no risk of fire. Will last a lifetime. Fitted with "NEW STANDARD DRY BATTERY" (acknowledged best in the world). Price prepaid $1.50. Write for Catalogue No. 20.

W. M. ROCHE, Inventor & Mfr., 52 Park Place, New York

our campaign to Philadelphia, Chicago, and the other cities of the Union until we practically owned the residence portions of all the large cities of the United States.

Of course, I had to spend a large part of the time in disguise among my cooks. One might have thought that they would have suspected me. They did not; they worshipped me. I treated them with the tact and skill one learns in society, and there was nothing they would not have done for me, so long as I appeared not to profit pecuniarily by it—and even that I am convinced they would not have minded, except for the fear that with increasing prosperity I should be removed from among them.

That we should have succeeded in our scheme in its entirety I have not the slightest doubt had it not been for the greed of my father-in-law. We had absorbed about a third of New York, when I foolishly allowed myself to be persuaded by him to go for more, and to go for it quicker. This could not be done without losing some of the secrecy that had hitherto enveloped us. When the news of what we were doing began to leak out, I have never seen such ferocity exhibited as was aroused, apparently, in the breast of every staid householder in New York, men whom one would have called temperate and reasonable. Wooster obstinately flaunted his power in the face of the people—good living had made him bold. I permitted him to take the credit and the odium of the whole matter.

The end was not long in coming, as the reader well knows. We talk about our republican institutions giving men the remedy through the ballot-box. The ravening mob of "respectable" citizens which surged about Wooster's house took no thought of ballot-box or constitutionality. Wooster talked about injunctions. I simply changed into a butler and awaited developments. (Edith I had already sent away.)

VII

It was an awful sight when the mob lined up Wooster and one hundred of the best-known cooks of New York in Madison Square and shot them down with howls of execration. At the last instant my father-in-law caught sight of me among the mob, and the fear of death seemed to lend him remarkable powers, for he discovered me through my disguise, and, breaking away from his guards for a second, tore my wig from my head and cursed me with horrid imprecations. On the whole, this was a good thing for me. The newspapers got hold of the matter, and all were convinced that Wooster and I were deadly enemies. Romantic stories were cautiously set afloat by me of the enmity that existed between us, and of my winning Edith against her father's desire—stories more picturesque than true—though not so picturesque as the truth would have been.

I should be almost ashamed to tell how much real estate I owned after the smoke cleared away. I lay low for some time, and then began converting it into cash and good securities, and when I found out how much it amounted to I was not sure but that it was worth even the sacrifice of a father-in-law. But even had I been minded to sacrifice myself for my father-in-law, my public spirit would have obliged me to admit that a far greater man would have been lost to the community had I, and not Wooster, been shot on the bloody day in Madison Square which ended the Cook Trust.

□ □

THE LAND OF PEACE

By EDMUND W. PUTNAM

FAR—far out where the sea turns gold
In the sunset's dying gleams,
Where the purple sky and the ocean meet,
Beginneth the Sea of Dreams,
Whose restful waters murmur low,
And a drowsy rhythm keep,
As out to the West, by their lullabies,
We drift in our Boats of Sleep.

Out—far out till our Earthly Cares
Are left in the dusk behind,
And Trouble's distant voice is lost
In the whisperings of the wind:
Out—on the shimmering golden Sea,
Till the soft-tongued ripples cease
At the dreamy City of Blissful Calm,
On the shores of the Land of Peace.

Where our tired Spirits solace find
Beneath the Dream Mount's crest,
'Mid the shadowy groves and fountains cool
Of the Gardens of Perfect Rest;
Where Lethe laxes its languid course
On its way to the tranquil Sea,
And the Slumber breezes stir the leaves
To a soothing melody.

Where, too, snow-white on the mountain-side,
High over the City fair,
Stretch skyward the misty pinnacles
Of our Castles in the Air:
In whose unbroken quietude
Our fondest visions bide,
And send us back with Hope refreshed
On the ebb of the golden tide.

Where the Sorrow scars are smoothed away,
And the heart, in its pain-racked breast,
Finds balm for its throbbing agony,
Far out in that distant West—
At the end of nightly journeying
Where the murmuring waters cease,
At the white-walled City of Blissful Calm,
On the shores of the Land of Peace.

DUFFY'S 1842 CIDER

Non-Alcoholic, Sterilized, Carbonated

Our book on Cider sent free

Made from the finest, selected juicy apples. Leaves no webby feeling in the head or bad taste in the mouth.

Retains pungent and snappy flavor that makes it a favorite family beverage acceptable alike to peasant or king.

American Fruit Product Co.
60 White St., Rochester, N. Y.

PURE APPLE JUICE

Invalids want to insure; healthy men hesitate. You may be healthy to-day, and an invalid to-morrow.

Think of the consequences to your children! Send for "The How and the Why"—tells how to insure and save. We insure by mail.

PENN MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE CO.
921 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia

U. S. A. Liquid Pistol

Will stop the most vicious dog (or man) without permanent injury. Perfectly safe to carry without danger of leakage. Fires and re-charges by pulling the trigger. Loads from any liquid. No cartridges required. Over 30 shots in one loading. All dealers, or by mail, 50c. Rubber covered holster 5c. extra.

PARROT, STEAKS & SUTTON, 224 South St., New York, U. S. A.

TELEGRAPHY

Thoroughly and quickly taught. Expenses low and can be reduced one-half by working for board. Railroads give our graduates immediate employment and furnish free passes to destinations. We have more orders for operators than we can fill, and give students choice of different railroads in many states. Write for Catalog. We pay railroad fare to Jacksonville, Fla.

Valentines' School, Est. 22 Years, Jacksonville, Fla.

SUCCESS SHORTHAND

Taught by mail under the direction of the most successful firm of shorthand reporters in the world. They teach you by mail the same system they use. Write to-day for our book, "Success Shorthand System."

WALTON, JAMES & FORD
Suite 26, 77-79 Clark St., Chicago, Ill.

SUPERIOR FENCES

We build along, durable, wrought-iron and wire fences to order for lawns, parks, farms, courtyards, etc. 30 designs. Write for our illustrated Catalogue.

ENTERPRISE FOUNDRY & MACHINE CO., 312 South Senate Ave., Indianapolis, Indiana.

Quicker to Talk Than Walk

A Private Line Saves Time

A Telephone is
A Step-saving,
Labor-saving,
Soul-saving necessity

It reaches from Chamber to Kitchen; from Parlor to Pantry; from Boudoir to Barn.

Any Distance Required

Two Telephones complete, ready for service, with 100 feet of wire, batteries, buzzers, etc. Any one can install. Price $10.00. Satisfaction guaranteed. Send cash or equivalent.

ANDERS PUSH BUTTON TELEPHONE CO.
136 Liberty Street, New York City

BOOTH'S DELICIOUS CHOCOLATES

THE LAST WORD IN CONFECTIONERY
HIGHEST PRICE FINEST QUALITY

THESE chocolates are the most delicious confection ever made. The result of years of experience. Nothing so good has ever been offered in any market. They are packed for long-distance shipment in dainty boxes of exquisite design, hermetically sealed each enclosed in special travel box, heavy and tight. They arrive fresh as if sent by messenger boy one hour from maker's hands.

YOU ORDER BY MAIL—I PREPAY EXPRESS
60 pieces, special assortment from 57 kinds, more than a pound—$1 per box. Every piece bears my name. Money back if not perfection. Liberal sample postpaid 10c. Agencies wanted.

WILFRID I. BOOTH, Dept. B, Elmira, N.Y.

A New China Book

An attractive and out-of-the-ordinary contribution to "house beautiful" literature. It is printed in several colors and lavishly illustrated from photographs showing artistic dining rooms, effective arrangements of china, correctly laid tables, trays, etc. The Princess Dinner Set and other dainty pieces are also included in the illustrations. A copy of the "China Book" will be sent free on request to The Taylor, Smith and Taylor Co., East Liverpool, Ohio. Address Dept. H.

Agents Earn $75 to $250 a Month Selling "NOVELTY KNIVES"

Your name, address, photo underneath handles; also emblems, signs, socials, etc. Finely tempered razor steel blades. Big Profits. Good commission paid. Send 2c stamp for great special offer to agents.

NOVELTY CUTLERY CO., 40, Bar St., CANTON, O.

Gems of Art

A book containing 24 of the most extraordinary photographs ever shown in any publication. The Artist's Dream Realized. Size of Book 6x9 inches, all full page pictures. Sent prepaid for 25c.

Address THE WHITE CITY ART CO.
316 Dearborn St. Chicago, Ill.

The hygienic influence and correction of carriage acquired through wearing O'Sullivan's Rubber Heels receives the recognition of the medical fraternity. When you need a lift on your heels ask your dealer to put O'Sullivan Rubber Heels on. 38 cents and small sum for attaching. All dealers, or O'SULLIVAN RUBBER CO., LOWELL, MASS.

PATENTS

NEW BOOK MAILED FREE

Tells all about Patents and how to obtain them. Tells what to invent for Profit. Contains one of Mechanics' Magazine invaluable to inventors. O'NEARA & HOOK, Pat. Attys., 430 11th St., Wash., D. C.

You Can Make $3 to $10

a day sitting glasses. Our 24p. FREE EYE BOOK tells how. We give complete instructions for testing eyes, fitting glasses, and fitting all goods. Write for our book and letters from some of our successful representatives.

JACKSON OPTICAL COLLEGE, (Chartered)
C14 College Building, Jackson, Michigan

"SNOOK" The new Domino Card Game. All the rage for social parties. Great fun for two or three hundred; can be played progressively. Price, postpaid 25c. Five or more sets, 20c each. Have a "Snook" party at your house. If not for sale at your dealers, order direct. You may not see this ad, again. LEONARD MFG. CO., 14 Ferry Street, GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

AN INDEPENDENT CHARGE

(Continued from page 22)

He decided upon arrowroot and biscuits, which he made up in a brown paper bundle and tied on his rifle. Next he went to the jar and filled seven water bottles. When he came to his own he paused.

"What a kid wants," he pronounced, "is milk. I wonder if I could catch that blooming nanny-goat out there."

He found a large jug, and captured the goat in a corner, after a spirited chase. After the milk was more than enough for his bottle, he rinsed out a medicine bottle and put the rest in that.

"I'll be a regular caravan," he said aloud—the lonely veldt gets a man into the habit of talking to himself. "Heaven knows how I'll drag that blessed youngster along.—Lor! She's a soft little thing.—Wake up, baby—Was she sleepy? Go ta-ta with Ka!"

"Ta-ta, Ka," she repeated drowsily. "Kus." "I'll kus you, you little scamp—Nice milk? Say milk—there's a lady. Is this your hat? Come on. Hold hand."

He marched on with the baby and his load and lighted the fire. She clapped her hands at the flame and looked back at it regretfully as they departed. Then she began to laugh and jabber things that he did not understand. Then she crooned to herself as she trotted along. Then she wanted to pick a few red marguerites. Then she stopped to play with stones, and then to watch a great green locust. He pretended to run away to entice her along, but she began to cry. So he went back to fetch her.

"You're a blooming young terror," he said gruffly. "That's what you are. There then! Never mind. Kus Ka!"

After about a mile the child began to flag. He sat down under a shady boulder to rest. She kept pleading, "Mak, Ka." He gathered that she meant "Milk, soldier!" He gave her some and took a sip himself. He was not greatly interested in milk. Then they started again. She was inclined to loiter, and when they had gone on for about twenty minutes she stopped determinedly and held out her arms.

"Ka!" she begged persuasively. "Ka?" He looked at her ruefully and mopped his forehead. The sun was firing at him point-blank.

"Come along, baby," he said. "Come along."

But she clung round his leg and rubbed her cheek against it. So he took her up in his arms and staggered on. At first she seemed a small addition to his burden; then she grew heavier. He was bathed in perspiration when he sat down under the scanty shade of a mimosa bush.

"Near five miles to go," he groaned. "I'll have to persuade her along a bit at a time. Hi, baby! Catch Ka!"

He enticed her about a mile in about twenty instalments. Then she began to whimper. As soon as he took her up she went to sleep. This time she smiled as she slept. She looked very rosy and she felt very soft. He laid her gently over his shoulder and trudged on. When he came to a suitable boulder he sat down on it for a few minutes, and when he came to a bush big enough to shade him he sat down on the ground till the sun sank behind Dog Kopje, and the purple-pink-brown half-light began. Then he kept right on. As he approached the deserted Kafir huts, about half a mile from the blockhouse, Macdonald came out.

"It's only me, mate," he called. "Thought I'd come to meet you."

"Why—didn't—you—come—further?" Brown grunted. His breath was short.

"Your orders!—Hullo! What the—?"

"Found her—at the—farm."

Macdonald bent over the sleeping child and touched her gently, as if he doubted her reality.

"I'll carry 'er for a spell," he offered. There was an excited shake in his voice.

"No, you won't. She's mine. You can carry these here." He jerked his head at his load.

"Let's 'old 'er while you take 'em off, mate. I—I'd like to."

Brown put the child in his arms.

"You can have her for a minute," he agreed. "Mind you, I wouldn't let every one."

Macdonald did not hear him. He was bending over the child, and seeing her through a mist in his eyes—No, it was a yellow-haired Scotch baby that he saw—I was away from my little ones in the war, and I know. Perhaps Brown guessed, for he did not demand her back till they were close to the blockhouse. Williams, who was punctiliously on sentry-go, nearly let his rifle fall with astonishment, and the others, who were playing the inevitable cards, dropped them in the middle of a nap hand. Brown laid the child gently on the "table."

"Found her at the farm," he explained. "Must have got left behind somewhere about, and toddled back to the house and found—what she found. If we ain't good to her, God forgive us!"

Lee's face twitched curiously, and he brushed a curl softly off her forehead.

"An' I 'ope 'E won't," he said slowly, "if we ain't."

"Same to me," Saunders assented.

"An' me," said the next. Nipper Jones added a bad oath, with good intention, but Macdonald turned on him.

"Nice language before a child!" he said. "In course," Nipper apologized, "I wouldn't do it if she was awake. I got a bit of the Old Lady's chocolate wot I was keepin'. Jest do for 'er."

"She'll like the pictures out of that paper my sister sent." Smiler remarked. "They ain't much to 'ere."

"I used to know a way to make balls out of colored rag," Murphy observed casually.

"My ole man used to cut pigs out of wood

This is the New Science Library

We call it the "new" Science Library, because it is so different from the collections of dull and dry facts that most of us are accustomed to class mentally under the head of science.

It consists of twelve famous classics, selected and arranged with the idea of providing the average reader with an attractively printed and bound library, containing just the knowledge of modern science he demands—and requires, if he expects to be well informed.

It is a set of books to be read and enjoyed, for the great authors who wrote it were too close to nature to be dull and too big and human to be narrow. They wrote in simple language—not technical or abstruse—and you need not be a scientist to understand or to appreciate them.

Why You Should Own It

It contains the best work of Spencer, Darwin, Huxley, Tyndall, and their disciples. The roar of controversy that arose about these men and their original views has not yet died away. They awoke the world in the nineteenth century as Martin Luther awoke it in the sixteenth.

Glance over the titles of the volumes at the top of this page. Every book marks a new advance in the world of thought—every volume has made history. The library touches comprehensively the whole circle of modern thought—Astronomy, Evolution, Geology, Anthropology, Zoology, Philosophy, and Chemistry—and it is written in the simple manner in which great men treat great subjects.

No collection of books, however small or large, is complete without this library—and no one can be called well-read without a knowledge of its contents.

SEND NOW

For a Complimentary Copy of

"Some Wonders of Science"

Perhaps you have always thought that science is dreary and uninteresting—and too far removed from practical life for anybody but a college professor. We have printed a book bearing on this point, entitled "Some Wonders of Science." It contains articles by Huxley, Tyndall, Pasteur, and Tyle—all taken from the New Science Library—and it is so absorbingly interesting that you will read it from cover to cover.

It treats of such interesting subjects as Space, Time, Matter, and Force; Man-like Apes; Savage Customs; the Planet Mars. Incidentally, it will give you a good idea of the Library, for it is printed in the same size of page and from the same clear type. It contains some fine photographs and color plates. There are only a thousand copies printed.

As long as they last we will exchange one copy for the exchange coupon printed in this advertisement.

Public Opinion Club

Fourth Avenue and 23d Street
New York

Introductory Edition at Half Price

These twelve great classics of science have never before been published in a uniform de luxe style at a popular price—an astonishing fact when one recalls their wide popularity and the discussion that has arisen over them. The New Science Library is absolutely unique in that it presents these great works for the first time in a de luxe form, beautifully illustrated, printed, and bound—and at a price that makes their purchase a matter of duty to every book-lover.

PUBLIC OPINION has obtained exclusive control of the first edition, which will be distributed, for advertising purposes, at half price, and on the Individual Payment Plan, by means of which the purchaser arranges the payments to suit himself. The coupon will bring you full particulars of the Library, and—if you send it at once—a complimentary copy of our interesting book "Some Wonders of Science."

Our business is done by mail.

We send no agents.

Exchange Coupon

Good for one complimentary copy of "Some Wonders of Science," if mailed at once to the Public Opinion Club, Fourth Avenue and 23d Street, New York.

Name _____

C. W. 4-10

Address _____

City and State _____

We will send, at the same time, full particulars of our New Science Library and our half-price offer.

ALLIGATOR PUNCTURE-PROOF SELF-HEALING RUBBER TIRES

Now Only $4.95 a Pair Express Paid

NO SUBSTITUTE A Dated Guaranty Tag on each Tire

Protect your car against Old Stock

The Alligator and only Puncture-proof and Self-healing Tire made. Nails, tanks, and glass will not let the air out. Puncture will not be your worry. Strong, durable, resilient. Greatest thickness where needed (see U.S. Pat.) Examined—"Best of 2." Sent C.O.D. anywhere, subject to examination—no deposit asked, but we pay express only when each accompanies order. Also diameter of rim and size tire wanted. Catalog Free. THE VIM COMPANY, Sole Manufacturers, State and Lake Streets, CHICAGO.

MENNE'S BORATED TALCUM TOILET POWDER

A Positive Relief

PRICKLY HEAT, CHAFING, and SUNBURN, and all ailments of the skin.

Removes all odor of perspiration. Do not forget after shaving. Sold everywhere, or mailed on receipt of 25c. Get Mennen's (the original). Sample Free.

GERHARD MENNEN COMPANY, New York, N.Y.

SAVE ONE THIRD

By Buying of the Makers

We are actual manufacturers—not a commission house. We can and do save our customers one third on retail prices by selling direct to user and cutting out all dealers' profits. All our goods carry our guarantee. Our free illustrated catalogue shows a greater assortment of carriages and harness than any dealer can show you. Send for it.

THE COLUMBUS CARRIAGE AND HARNESS COMPANY
COLUMBUS, OHIO

"The Car of Quality"

Represents Good Value

Premier 16 Horse Power. Air Cooled. Without Tonneau. Price $1,250; with Tonneau, $1,400. 32-inch wheels. 3 1/4-inch tires. 8 1/2-inch wheel base. Many excellent features which posted drivers appreciate.

Write for illustrated, descriptive catalog.

PREMIER MOTOR MFG. CO.
906 Ft. Wayne Avenue INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

STENOGRAPHERS WANTED

We are giving valuable premiums to stenographers who use Pilot Non-Smut carbon and ribbons. We deal direct from our factory with stenographers giving the agent's commissions in premiums.

PILOT Non-Smut Carbon and Ribbons

are absolutely the best—they last longer and do cleaner work than any other kind. Send to-day for Booklet A, premium list and free samples.

PILOT CARBON AND RIBBON CO., Inc.
349 Powers Block, Rochester, N. Y.

At Factory Prices

Direct from our own Factory

Why pay your dealer from $5 to $40 more for a stove or range, when you can buy direct from our factory

KALAMAZOO

STOVES AND RANGES

saving all dealers' and middlemen's profits? We save you from 25% to 40% on every purchase and you run no risk for we give you a 360 Days Approval Test and a guarantee under a $50,000 bank bond. If a Kalamazoo does not satisfy you in every way, send it back and we return every cent you paid. We pay the freight. Can we make a fairer offer? We are selling thousands of both steel and cast iron stoves and ranges in all parts of the country, and can refer you to pleased customers in your own neighborhood. New patterns, large square ovens and guaranteed fire backs. All blacked and polished ready to set up. Send postal for Approval Offer and Catalog No. 176.

Kalamazoo Stove Co., Mfrs.
Kalamazoo, Mich.

We fit all our ranges and cook stoves with our patent more thermometer which reads baking temp.

Kalamazoo Steel Range
$50,000 bank bond.

Kalamazoo Cast Iron Range
For Coal and Wood

We are manufacturers, not "mail order" dealers.
We make everything we sell and sell to the user exclusively.
We make a complete line of stoves, ranges, heaters and make them right.
We ship all Kalamazoo freight prepaid, blacked and polished, and any one can set them up.
We guarantee satisfaction, or your money back.

PENDLETON INDIAN ROBES

$4 to $15 Express Prepaid

Made of the finest Eastern Oregon Wool, in absolutely fast colors, in the latest, most attractive Indian patterns, these popular robes have become a necessity in the well-ordered home.

The color combinations and designs are thoroughly Indian and are furnished as by the tribes themselves. The Indian is the best judge of a blanket, always says the best. That is why we ship thousands to the Reservations every year. They are used in homes everywhere for slumber robes, veranda wraps, couch covers, trunk and box throws. Their bright, striking colors will be a welcome addition to every room, "dies" and college room, while their satisfying warmth is a boon to the invalid, the convalescent, the traveler, the camper.

Send for FREE catalogue "C," with illustrations of the various patterns and the robes in actual use. Robes returnable if not perfectly satisfactory.

PENDLETON WOOLEN MILLS, Pendleton, Oregon.
Dealers, write us for discounts.

Don't jar your nerves—Wear Rubber Heel Shoes

Swell "Don" $3.50 SHOE

Fast Color
Hooks and Eyes
Don't turn brassy

(TRUSS PATENT)

We guarantee our DON Bright Colt Shoe to out-last patent leather shoes of any make regardless of name and price and not to break through with reasonable wear until after first sole wears out. Greatest Leather ever known.

Sent to any address in world upon receipt of $3.50. Money order or registered mail for $3.50 extra we prepay Express. Money returned if not satisfied.

WANTED, AGENTS in every city and town and all foreign countries. We want to hear from all readers. Write for FREE sample of leather and terms to agent.

DON SHOE CO., Factory C, Brockton, Mass.
Shoes and C. O. D. Privilege of Examination if you will send $10.00 to pay Express charges.

FOOTBALL POKER

The Greatest Game Out
Mimic Football Played with Cards
Easy to Learn—Easy to Play
Fun for Two—Fun for a Crowd

A real game of football played on a paper "gridiron" and using broken bones. Price 50 cents at book dealers, or from us post-paid. Sample chart of game free. Young and old, teachers, college students, society—everybody is playing Football-Poker.

"All Harvard plays Football-Poker—now the rage with students."
—Chicago Tribune.

"An interesting and instructive game."
—Director Bland, Michigan.

THE REILLY & BRITTON CO., 86 Adams St., CHICAGO, ILL.

FOOTBALL POKER

The Greatest Game Out
Mimic Football Played with Cards
Easy to Learn—Easy to Play
Fun for Two—Fun for a Crowd

A real game of football played on a paper "gridiron" and using broken bones. Price 50 cents at book dealers, or from us post-paid. Sample chart of game free. Young and old, teachers, college students, society—everybody is playing Football-Poker.

"All Harvard plays Football-Poker—now the rage with students."
—Chicago Tribune.

"An interesting and instructive game."
—Director Bland, Michigan.

THE REILLY & BRITTON CO., 86 Adams St., CHICAGO, ILL.

AGATE NICKEL-STEEL

Look for the BLUE LABEL pasted on every piece guaranteeing the enamel FREE FROM POISON

Why the manufacturers of AGATE NICKEL-STEEL WARE do not have toxic poisonous ingredients is explained in booklet free to any address. IF SUBSTITUTES ARE OFFERED WRITE US.

DEPARTMENT AND HOUSE FURNISHING STORES, EXPERTS IN SOLUTION.

LALANCE & GROSJEAN MFG. CO.
NEW YORK CHICAGO BOSTON

NOW DEPOSITED IN THE BANK

$75,000.00

IN CASH GIVEN AWAY

To arouse interest in, and to advertise the GREAT ST. LOUIS WORLD'S FAIR, this enormous sum will be distributed. Full information will be sent you ABSOLUTELY FREE. Just send your name and address on a postal card and we will send you full particulars.

World's Fair Contest Co.
108 N. 8th Street
St. Louis, Mo.

Patents, Trade Marks, COPYRIGHTS, etc.,

MUNN & CO., Solicitors of Patents.

Office of the SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN
361 Broadway, New York.
Branch Office: 625 F St., Washington, D. C.
Hand-book Sent Free on Application.

TO FAT PEOPLE

I know you want to reduce your weight, but probably you think it impossible or are afraid the remedy is worse than the disease. Now, let me tell you that not only can the obesity be reduced in a short time, but your face, form and complexion will be improved, and in health you will be wonderfully benefited. I am a regular practicing physician, having made a specialty of this subject. Here is what I will do for you: First, I send you a blank to fill out when it comes, I forward a five weeks' treatment. You make no radical change in your food, but eat as much or as often as you please. No bandages or tight lacing. No harmful drugs or sickening pills. The treatment can be taken privately. You will lose from 3 to 5 pounds weekly, according to age and condition of body. At the end of five weeks you are to report to me and I will send further treatment if necessary. When you have reduced your flesh to the desired weight, you can retain it. You will not become stout again. Your face and figure will be well shaped, your skin will be clear and handsome, you will feel years younger. Ailment of the heart and other vital organs will be cured. Double chin, heavy abdomen, fatty cheeks and other disagreeable evidences of obesity are remedied speedily. All patients receive my personal attention, whether being treated by mail or in person; all correspondence is strictly confidential. Treatment for either sex. Plain sealed envelopes and packages sent. Distance makes no difference. Satisfaction guaranteed. Send for my new book on obesity; its cause and cure—it will convince you. Address:

HENRY C. BRADFORD, M. D., 24 & 26 East 23d Street, NEW YORK

for us when we was kids," Thompson stated. "I'm da— She ain't awake—I'm blessed if I don't believe I could do it."

"I was thinkin'," Saunders said, "as I could make a sort of puddin' out of that 'ere arrowroot an' milk." He made for the door with these articles. Williams intercepted him.

"Give a chap a chanst," he entreated. "Jest take my rifle, while I 'ave a look at the kid. Wot say to wakin' 'er?"

Lee and Macdonald, who had experience, pronounced against this course, and Brown sent Williams back to his sentry-go. "By rights," he pointed out, "I ought to have you shot for leaving your post, Taffy— Howsoever, you couldn't be expected to hold it under the circumstances."

The rest drew their biscuit-box chairs to the table and sat in a circle, waiting for the baby's eyes to open. They were very quiet, because it is bad for children to be disturbed in their sleep; and they did not smoke, because it makes them cough. Just after Saunders came in with the pudding she roused. Brown took her up, with his arm round her. "Ka-Mac," he introduced, "Ka-Nipper," and so on. The baby stared at them with big, wondering eyes. "Ka," she told Brown, catching on to his sleeve, "Ka!"

"Jest 'ear 'er!" said Lee. "Ka, baby, Ka!"

Saunders put some of the hot pudding on a saucer and they all blew it in turn. She had two spoonfuls, then she offered one to Brown, who pretended to eat some. She took some more, looking at the others out of the corners of her eyes. Then she offered each a spoonful and they pretended to eat it. Nipper made out that he was eating some out of the saucer. She hit him with the spoon and he pretended to cry, and she laughed.

"Yer want to know 'ow to play with kids," he pointed out with modest triumph. So they all pretended to steal from the saucer, and she repelled them all with the spoon, and they all pretended to cry, and she laughed aloud. When she had finished she held out her arms to Brown, and he took her on his knee and taught her pat-a-cake, and the others sat round and joined in the instruction. When she grew tired of pat-a-cake they played fox's-hole. Then Smith, who had a voice, sang "Just one girl," and Lee jumped her on his knee, and Saunders played Ride-a-cock-horse, and Macdonald danced the sword dance over two rifles in her honor. She joined in their whoops in such a piping treble that he had to stop for laughing, and she tried to lift his legs to set him going again. She went to them all in turn till she was sleepy, then she would go to nobody but Brown. He put her to bed on a collection of the softest things they could find. Then they smoked outside and discussed the difficult problem of rearing a child. They concluded, in brief, that she must be fed and washed, and have a doll, and learn her prayers—if they could remember any—which is a very good curriculum for a little girl.

Under the administration of Corporal Brown and Nen, as she called herself (meaning Nellie), the garrison became a model one. Arms and accoutrements were kept smart to satisfy him. Men and clothes were kept smart to make her say "Pitty Ka!" Scouting and looking-out improved on his account, and language on hers. There was no complaining over the fatigues, because he took a share, and no quarreling over cards, because she tore so many that they couldn't play. In short, they had a man to work for, and a little girl to teach her prayers; and there is a taste for doing one's duty, even if it is an acquired one. "This is Nen's show, boys," Brown used to say, "and it's got to be held." And they nodded, and patted their faces with a gleam in their eyes.

She had been in supreme authority for a fortnight, and had learned twenty-seven words of English (Murphy kept a list), and all their names, and fallen in a puddle four times, and been lost for five minutes once, and had four dolls of sorts, one doll's house (the inevitable biscuit-box), five wooden animals, three rag balls, one see-saw, two Kaffir bracelets, one small chair and table (Williams made them), and Brown's watch (it did not go)—when the blockhouse had to be held.

It was the close of an oppressive day. Macdonald had been fidgity for no apparent reason. He came from an old deer-stalking, man-stalking clan, and had a "war-sense." When the sun dropped under a curtain-cloud of many colors he drew Brown aside.

"There's something, mate," he whispered. "I'll take a look round."

He stole craftily into the dark, and Brown put a second sentry, and made a hollow square of boxes, clothes, and bedding, as an additional protection for Nen in case of attack, and they played boisterous games quietly. She was asleep when Mac returned.

"Boers in the donga to left of Dog Kopje," he reported, "where we saw the snake. A hundred of two. Couldn't see to count. They're just movin'."

"Here's our chance, boys," Brown said cheerfully. "Get to your loopholes. Block up the door— Umph! They've cut the telephone wires. Lights out—keep your fire till they're right on us."

There was silence for a quarter of an hour, except for the thunder rolling round beyond the hills. Then Thompson suggested a sweep-stake on who saw the Boers first. They agreed to a "bob" apiece. Then there was a further silence. There were several bright flashes of lightning, and the thunder drew nearer. Presently the rain began.

"Wish it 'ud rain whiskey," Taffy observed.

"Tain't rainin' on us," said Murphy, "you bally idiot."

"None of that," said Brown in a sharp whisper, "there's row enough outside without—"

There was a terrific crash of thunder, and a flood of lightning. One could smell the electricity.

ROOF LEAK

Elliott's Durable Asphalt Coating

is about the best investment the owner of a roof can make. Will add at least ten years to the life of a new or an old and leaky shingle, tin or felt roof. Makes rusty tin water-tight and arrests rusting. It is used as a liquid cement on big leaks and stops them absolutely.

Composed of pure Utah Asphalt, prepared Linseed-Oil and Pine Creosote (wood preservative). It prevents decay in new shingles and arrests it in old ones when used as a shingle dip or paint. Imports no taste to water. Highly fireproof.

Will not soften in summer or crack in coldest weather. A boy can apply it. It is not possible to make a more durable liquid coating. Nothing else so good in salt water atmosphere—200 per cent more durable than pure oil paint. One-half the price. A perfect coating for iron fences, etc.

Made in Black, Dark Green and Rich Maroon. On a trial order we will send, express prepaid to your door, one gallon for $1.00. Sufficient for cementing 100 square feet, or painting 200 square feet. One gallon shingle dip covers 400 square feet shingles both sides. The express charges frequently cost us more than $1.00.

Five gallons or more, 75 cents per gallon, freight paid east of Denver. Guaranteed to be satisfactory or returnable at our expense. Please write for interesting booklet, "History of Asphalt," together with liquid samples free.

ELLIOTT VARNISH CO.
CHICAGO, 149-151 Fulton St. NEW YORK, 249 Pearl St.

... TRY ...

Roof Leak?

"Perfection" AIR MATTRESS

(Camp Mattress with Pillow attached. Also showing mattress inflated.)

THE IDEAL BED

For Home, Camp, Yacht, Hospital

Non-absorbent—Hygienic—Odorless. When deflated can be rolled into small packages for storage or transportation. No Camping Outfit Complete Without Them.

"PERFECTION" AIR CUSHIONS

For Office Easy, and Invalid chairs, Yachts and small boats. Send for descriptive booklet "C" and price list.

MECHANICAL FABRIC CO., Providence, R. I.

"IDEAL" STEAM FREE COOKER FREE

To introduce our new 1894 patterns in every home in America, we will send a free, by mail, cooker, steam or electric, freight prepaid absolutely free, under the easy conditions of our Plan No. 15, "Ideal" on the only cooker, both steam and electric, that are absolutely steam and odor tight and that have whistles to warn when water is low; with drawing mechanism; stainless copper lined bottom. Fuel bills reduced one-half. 28 page book and free offer if you write today. Agents make $10 to $50 a month.

TOLEDO COOKER CO.
Desk 2 Toledo, O.

The Bridge

For the needs of health of men and women when the physician says "Get the Best," get it.

There is only one best—

Hunter Baltimore Rye

Thus prescribed, it will prove to be the bridge between infirmity and strength.

Sold at all first-class cafes and by jobbers, W.M. LANAHAN & SON, Baltimore, Md.

SAVE YOUR PAPERS < COLLIER'S WEEKLY
Binder, fitted with patent clasps. Will hold fifty-two numbers of the paper.
Price $1.25. Address Collier's Weekly, 415 West 13th Street, New York City.

Saves 5/6

HYLO

High or low—a bright light or a mere glim—or OUT entirely—according to the way you pull the string. Anybody can attach it the same as an ordinary electric bulb. Gives greater satisfaction than any other light and lasts three times as long. When turned down it saves five-sixths of the cost for current. Made in various styles, sizes and colors. Send for catalog and "How to Read Your Meter." Mailed free.

CAUTION.—Genuine Hylo lamps have a label on the glass bulb. Look for the name and refuse imitations, imitations and imitations. The dealer of course makes more money on the imitation, but he has the genuine Hylo in stock and will supply it if you insist.

THE PHELPS CO., 39 Rowland St., Detroit, Mich.

How I Grew Tall

A Startling Story Which Will Interest All
Who Are Short

The Height of Either Sex Can Quickly Be Increased from Two to Five Inches. These Marvelous Results Can Be Accomplished at Home Without the Knowledge of Your Most Intimate Friends.

THE FREE BOOK TELLS YOU ALL ABOUT IT

MR. K. LEO MINGES

Inventors, scientists and physicians have for years been trying to find some method whereby the height of an individual could be increased, and up to the last few years have met with failure. It remained for a compensatively young man, Mr. K. Leo Minges, by name, to discover what so many others had failed to do.
Mr. Minges resides in Rochester, N. Y., and has devoted the best part of his life in studying and experimenting on the Cartilage, and his great efforts have at last been crowned with success. A large company, composed of Rochester's leading citizens, have been formed for the purpose of placing Mr. Minges's discoveries and inventions before the public, so that now it is possible for any lady or gentleman who is short to increase her or his height from two to five inches.
These results are absolutely guaranteed.

Mr. Minges has successfully used his method on himself, and has grown from a short, stunted boy to a handsome, robust man of six feet one inch in height.
Thousands of people living in all parts of the world are using his method with equally as startling results.
Let us send you the absolute proof of the above statements. We have just issued a beautifully illustrated book, entitled "The Secret of How to Grow Tall," which contains information that will surprise you.
Ten thousand of these remarkable books will be given away absolutely free of charge in order to introduce them. If you fail to receive a copy, you will always regret it. This great book tells how Mr. Minges made his wonderful discovery. It tells how you can increase your height and build up the entire system. It contains the pictures and statements of many who have used this method. After you receive the book you will thank us the longest day you live for having placed within your reach this great opportunity.

Remember, a postal card will bring it to your very door, all charges prepaid. All correspondence strictly confidential, and sent in plain envelopes. If you wish a free copy of this book and the proof of our claims, write today. Address, The Cartilage Co., Dept. 555 F. C., Rochester, N. Y.

PATENT SECURED
Or Fee Returned

Please explain as to patentability. Send for Guide Book and What to Invent, Patent Information issued for free distribution. Patents secured by us advertised free in Patent Record, Scientific Correspondence, EVANS, WILKENS & CO., 405 F St., Washington, D. C.

100 VISITING CARDS 35c

Correct styles and sizes. Order filled day received. Booklet "Card Style" FREE! Also business, professional and fraternal cards. We have one of each for all occasions. Card Case, etc.
E. J. SCHUSTER PTG. & ENG. CO., Dept. 25, St. Louis, Mo.

"Eight bob to me," Mac claimed. "Saw
'em by the 'uts."

There was another long silence. The tension could be felt. The rain stopped, and the thunder was further away. At last there was another flash.

"They're this side, too," said Smiler. "By the bushes we fired."

"Keep cool," Brown reminded them.
"Wait till they're close—Ssh!"

"See 'em," Mac cried. "Looks as if the dark was wrigglin'. That's them."

Suddenly the darkness seemed to flow forward. There was an almost simultaneous report of eight rifles. Two Boers swayed —clutched at the air—fell. There were flashes all round, and the bullets pattered on the blockhouse like hot hail.

"Ka!" cried very frightened little voice.
"Ka!"

"All right, dear," said Brown. "Ka coming—Mark 'em, boys—Don't cry, there's a good girl—Steady, boys—"

Nipper uttered a sharp exclamation. "Got me in the right arm," he explained. "D—Lor', if I didn't forget she was awake."

"Ka! Kus Ka!"

"Go and sit by her, Nipper, old chap."

"Not while I got a arm left."

"Meanin' a left arm," said Smiler, and they laughed hoarsely.

"They're drawing off, boys— Don't fire while they're picking up the wounded."

"Ka!—Ka!—Ka!"

"You go and talk to her, Brown," Lee suggested. He had lighted a candle, and was kneeling beside Nipper, binding up his arm.
"She'll take more notice of you—God!"

There was a loud explosion, and some of the bricks fell down from the wall, and Saunders dropped with a dull thud.

"Pom-pom!" said Taffy. "It'll fetch the place down in time— 'Ow about—'er?"

"Ka! Ka!"

Lee finished his doctoring, and bent over the barricade of boxes to hold her hand.
"Pat-a-cake, pat-a-cake, baker's man," he said cheerfully. Macdonald took the candle from him and looked at Saunders. One look was enough.

"Want to speak to you," a voice called outside. "Will you not fire? We will not.
Come outside."

"Very good," Brown answered. "Give her some of the toffee, Lee— Undo the door—I suppose we're going to chance their blessed pom-pom, chaps?"

There was a murmur of assent, but Macdonald hesitated perceptibly, and every one noticed it.

"Mac's little uns ain't growned up, like mine," Lee apologized for him. Mac grunted.
"They've got the same right to expect as I'll do my bit," he said gruffly. "Tain't myself I'm thinkin' about. It's Nen."

"Nen," said Brown unsteadily.

"Are you coming?" the Boer leader called.
Brown crawled through the partly open door and strode toward him.

"Well?" he asked.

"You can not fight our gun."

"Very likely not."

"You will surrender?"

"No. We don't care, only—we've got a baby in there. One of your Dutch kids.
Found her at the farm over there. I suppose you'll take her before you fire?" The Boer stroked his long beard.

"Yes," he agreed. "Yes. Give us the blockhouse and your arms, and you shall go."

"No, thanks," said Brown. The Boer stroked his beard again.

"Bring me the child."

Lee and Macdonald were just finishing dressing her when he got back. Murphy was tying up her dolls and the smaller toys in a towel— Brown took the child and the bundle and placed them in the arms of the Boer.

"Be good girl," he said. "Say prayers—
'God bless Ka! Kus—Take care of her.'"

The Boer peered at the child. The half moon had come out for a moment between two black clouds.

"It is the niece of Field Cornet Struben, my wife's brother," he said slowly. "Give up the blockhouse and you shall keep your arms."

"Thanks," said Brown. "We'll take our chance. Good-by, little girl." He bent and kissed her again. Then he walked quickly away. The child waited after him.

"Ka!—Ka!" The candle was out, and the blockhouse was very silent. Presently Taffy laughed an unmirthful laugh.

"We can swear now the kid's gone," he said. But no one swore. A good habit is nearly as hard to break as a bad one.

They waited for five minutes—ten—fifteen.
Then Macdonald spoke suddenly.

"They're going away!" he cried. "Going away!"

They listened and heard a faint rumbling,
but they could see nothing in the darkness.
They were moving the gun to a better position, probably, Lee said. But half an hour later the moon came out, and Macdonald distinguished the Boers riding slowly over the top of a distant hill. He caught a glimpse of Brown's face, where a streak of moonlight came through a loophole, and touched his arm.

"You was good to 'er, mate," he said. "Awful good."

Brown said nothing, only unfastened the door, and walked slowly—very slowly—through the moonlight into the shadow.
He would not like us to follow him there—

A year later, when the war was over, Color-Sergeant Brown took a furlough, and went up the line. He got off at the siding near the old blockhouse. When he had put a little white cross upon Saunders' grave, he trudged away to Nen's farm. There was a temporary hut of corrugated iron where the house had been, and a yellow-haired baby girl, between two and three, was at the door.
She dropped her doll suddenly and ran toward him.

"Ka!" she screamed wildly. "Ka!"

"GUNN" IMPROVED SYSTEM
SECTIONAL BOOK CASE
PATENTED

The GUNN has a handsome appearance with all the sectional systems eliminated. Cabinet-work and solid but of GRAND RAPIDS production. Heavy and a self-lubricating, durable, valuable book set solid when cleaning the glass. For further information ask
"The man with a GUNN"—He knows. Complete catalogues free. For sale by leading dealers or direct from the factory. No higher in price than the old styles.
GUNN FURNITURE CO., Grand Rapids, Mich.
Also makers of GUNN DESKS and GUNN CHAIRS.

Built like a watch and recommended by "THE MAN WITH A GUNN." A sectional system that is not confusing and has all the outward appearance of a solid piece of handsome furniture.

Unlimited artistic effect—for any room.

MUSIC LOVERS

If your music dealer cannot supply you

Send us 50 cents
in U. S. stamps and we will send (prepaid) one of the

Ditson Half-Dollar Series

Full folio size and the greatest values ever given in music collections

Do not confuse these with CHEAP music

They represent such composers as Mozart, Beethoven, Brahms, Schubert, Schumann, Bach, Mendelssohn, Liszt, Wagner, Strauss, Tchaikovsky, etc., etc., are beautifully printed on extra quality paper and well bound.

If bought as Sheet Music these collections would cost $5.00 or more each

Dance Waltzes for the Piano. 44 pages.
Easy Four-hand Pieces (2d and 3d grades). 42 pages.
Easy Pieces in Easy Keys. 26 pages.
Easy Solo Music for the Piano. 64 pages.
Favorite Duets for Violin and Piano. 60 pages.
Forty Very Easy Piano Pieces. 44 pages.
Four-hand Recreations (3d grade). 42 pages.
Marches and Two-steps for the Piano. 62 pages.
Very Easy Piano Duets (1st and 2d grades). 40 pages.

Sold by Music Dealers or mailed as above.

OLIVER DITSON COMPANY
B-251 Dept. C 184 Tremont St., Boston

Send NO Money
$30 OUTFIT for $10

FREE SAMPLES AND MEASURE-MENT BLANKS

We make an up-to-date suit strictly to your measure in latest English Back Style for only $10, and give the following complete outfit FREE and you don't pay one cent until you receive the suit and Free Outfit, and send it just as represented. Send us your P. O. address and we will send you FREE SAMPLES of cloth, tape measure and measurement blank, for size of Suit, Shoes, Hat, etc. FREE

A lot of Clothes Made to Measure from any of the samples sent you, for which you would pay from $30 to $100.00

A Doublet, Black, any shape Hat. . . . 2.00
A pair English Lace or Canebrake Shoes. . . 2.00
A pair Persian Socks. . . . 1.00
A neat four-hand Bow of Pure T. . . . .50
A pair of good web Suspenders. . . . .50
A pair Handkerchiefs. . . . .50
A pair extra quality Lisle Thread Socks. . . . 25

$10 for this Complete Outfit Worth $30.00

Write at once for free literature. Address:
CHICAGO MFG. & MDS. CO., Dept. 401
87-89-91 Washington St., CHICAGO
Rev. Metropolitan Trust and Savings Bank, Capital
$100,000.00, or any Express Company in Chicago.

"Select Cruises" to NORWAY and SPITZBERGEN
to Norway, Sweden, Russia, Denmark and Germany, to the principal Seaside Resorts of Europe during
June, July and August
By Palatial Twin-Screw Steamers
Superb Service
Unsurpassed Accommodation
Send for Programs
also
Around the World First Cruise
September 15, 1904
Second Cruise Jan. 24, 1905
Duration 4½ months, cost $1500 and up. Success assured. Ports of call not affected by hostilities in the East.

HAMBURG AMERICAN LINE

New York Chicago
Philadelphia
St. Louis
Boston

Read the Coupon

Your last chance to get a set of "The World's Best Music" at half-price, and on easy payments. Only a few sets left—not enough to warrant our taking a full-page ad. Write to-day or you may be too late. Don't send any money until you have seen and used the books. Just sign the coupon and mail to-day. We stand all expense.

This is the best musical library ever published. $200 worth of music at 10 cents on the dollar—enough to last a lifetime. All the favorites, new and old, by famous and popular composers—the pieces people ask you to play and sing. Eight large volumes, sheet music size, that open flat at the piano. 600 illustrations, 500 biographies of musicians.

We will make you a present of a handsome oak bookcase, made to hold this library, the regular price of which is $4.00,
providing you send us the coupon at once.

THE UNIVERSITY SOCIETY
78 5th Avenue, New York

C. W. 4-16-04
University Society

Please send me for inspection a set of "The World's Best Music," in half leather, at no expense or obligation on my part. If I retain it I will pay $1.00 within 5 days and $1.00 per month thereafter for 24 months; also send me your $4 bookcase which I am to retain free of charge if I keep the books.

Name.....
Street.....City.....
In ordering cloth, charge 24 months to 36 months.

DWIGGINS
Wear Well

Absolute resistance to climate changes; double galvanized steel wire meshing. Best manufacture of intelligent architects and artists.
Said good for a life-time. For formal town and country residences.
Catalogue FREE, shows a variety of styles 10c. to 10c. a ft.
Dwiggins Wire Fence Co., 52 Dwiggins Ave., Anderson, Ind.

BOND & LILLARD
WHISKEY
IS THE BEST

Dr. Graves Unequaled Tooth Powder

Pure and refreshing. Removes tartar and prevents decay. Gives the teeth a snowy whiteness and the sharply defined appearance of perfect cleanliness. Leaves a perfume of purity to the breath.

3 Ounce Metal Cottle 25c 6 Ounce Metal Bottle 50c

SOLD EVERYWHERE

A Trial Bottle FREE on request

Dr. Graves' Tooth Powder Co., Chicago, Ill.

Jiu-Jitsu

Jiu-Jitsu is the Japanese method of Physical Training.
Jiu-Jitsu has been practised for 3000 years.
Jiu-Jitsu means "muscle-breaking."
Jiu-Jitsu is easily learnt.
Jiu-Jitsu gives power over an adversary that counts for more than strength.

For full information see H. IRVING HANCOCK'S timely book

Japanese Physical Training

FOR MEN FOR WOMEN FOR CHILDREN

3 volumes. Illustrations from life

Each $1.35 by mail if not at your dealer's

Send for Illustrated Circular

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS

19 West 23d Street

NEW YORK

WILLIAMS' SHAVING SOAP

"Why torture yourself?"

A correspondent writes:

"I had my first experience with Williams' Shaving Soap some time ago. For 15 years previous to that time I had tortured myself with other kinds. You may be sure I shall never use anything but Williams' Soap hereafter. It's the only soap fit for the face."

Sold in the form of Shaving Sticks, Shaving Tablets and Shaving Creams

THE J. B. WILLIAMS CO., Glastonbury, Conn., U. S. A.

Non-Sinkable Steel's 250 Automobile Launch

Fitted with powerful Automobile, four cycle marine engine, cannot sink, cannot rust. Capacity 10 to 12 people.

Nonsinkable Steel Launches, Row Boats, Sail Boats, Canoes, Duck Boats, etc.

Made from the best quality Apollo steel—will last a lifetime. Send for catalogue. Write for agents' discount.

Michigan Steel Boat Co., 1296 Jefferson Ave. DETROIT, MICH., U. S. A.

ALLEN'S FOOT-EASE

Shake Into Your Shoes

Allen's Foot-Ease, a powder for the feet. It cures painful, swollen, aching, sore feet, and instantly takes the sting out of corns and bunions. It's the greatest comfort discovery of the age. Allen's Foot-Ease makes tight-fitting or new shoes feel easy. It is a certain cure for ingrowing nails, swelling, calluses and hot, tired, aching feet. We have over 30,000 testimonials. TRY IT TO-DAY. Sold by all Druggists and Shoe Stores, etc. Do not accept an imitation. Sent by mail for 10c, in stamps.

FREE TRIAL PACKAGE sent by mail. MOTHER GRAY'S SWEET POWDERS, the best medicine for French, Teaching Children, Sold by Druggists everywhere. Trial Package FREE. Address, ALLEN S. OLSTED, Le Roy, N. Y.

RED TOP RYE

GOOD WHISKEY

It's up to YOU

FERDINAND WESTHEIMER & SONS
CINCINNATI, O.
ST. JOSEPH, MO. LOUISVILLE, KY.

Too Fat

Don't ruin your stomach with a lot of useless drugs. Our method is perfectly safe, natural and scientific. It strengthens the heart, allows you to breathe easily and takes off Double Chin, Big Stomach, Fat Hips, etc. Send your address and 4 cents to the Hall Chemical Co., 774 Hall Building, St. Louis, Mo., for Free Trial Treatment. No starving. No sickness. It reduces weight from 5 to 15 lbs. a month, and is perfectly harmless.

BARRETT'S COMPLETE COURSE IN HEALTHFUL EXERCISE

Thoroughly demonstrates by numerous illustrations the best and quickest method of obtaining physical development and perfect health. No apparatus or medicine necessary. A complete, inexpensive system everybody should have. Teaches same course for which personal instructors charge $25.00. Only $1.00, prepaid. Send at once. Money back if not satisfied.

WALTER O. KRAFT, 125 LaSalle St., Chicago

MOVING PICTURE MACHINES

Stereopticons You can make BIG MONEY Entertaining the Public. Nothing affords better opportunities for men with small capital. We start you, furnishing complete outfit and explicit instructions at a surprisingly low cost. The Field is Large comprising the regular theater and lecture circuit, also local fields in Churches, Public Schools, Lodges and General Public Gatherings. Our Entertainment Supply Catalogue sent upon request fully explains everything. Send Free CHICAGO PROJECTING CO., 225 Dearborn Street, Dept. 150, CHICAGO, ILL.

Blue Grass Virginia Farms

We have for sale large and small farms, country estates, colonial mansions, timber and fruit lands. Hunting preserves, and rice lands among the Sea Islands of Georgia. Our beautiful catalogue, "Virginia and the Carolinas, Illustrated," contains complete descriptions, photographs of buildings and landscapes. 25c.

SOUTHERN FARM AGENCY, 739 Main St., Lynchburg, Va.

STARK TREES best by Test—78 Years Largest Nursery. FRUIT-BEARING. We PAY CASH. WANT MORE SALESMEN. STARK BROS., Louisiana, Mo.; Danville, N. Y.; Etc.

THE MAN WHO IS TWELVE YEARS OLD

By MAURICE SMILEY

THERE'S a man that I know, and he lives near you.
In a town called Everywhere;
You might not think he's a man from his hat
Or the clothes he may chance to wear;
But under the jacket with many a patch
Is a heart more precious than gold—
The heart of a man 'neath the coat of a boy,
A man who is twelve years old.

He only is waiting to wear the crown
That is already made for his brow;
And I pray that his mind will always be clean,
His body as pure as now;
His heart always fresh and sunny and warm,
And free from Life's canker and mould,
And may he be worthy his waiting estate,
This man who is twelve years old.

We never may know what the future will make
Of the boys that we carelessly meet;
For many a statesman is doing the chores,
And Presidents play in the street.
The hand that is busy with playthings now
The reins of power will hold:
So I take off my hat and gladly salute
This man who is twelve years old.

THE YALU RIVER

By CYRUS C. ADAMS

THE hostile armies have first confronted one another along the shores of Korea Bay. Much history has been written on these coast lands between Ping Yang and the Yalu River, and other chapters are to be added.

Observe the Yalu River in the northwest corner of this map. The Russians have moved thousands of troops across the Manchurian plain to the west bank of the river, have taken them across in junks and flatboats, and marched them southward on Korean soil to thwart, if they can, a Japanese invasion of Manchuria.

The lower Yalu is likely to be very important in the war. A photograph of it in time of peace would probably show a number of log rafts floating down the wide stream; for along its banks are the forests whose products are carried southward by the Yalu current to the sea-going junks which take them to market.

Near its mouth the Yalu broadens into a lake-like expanse, about twenty-five miles in length and from four to five miles wide. The heavy tides raise and lower its level by several feet at every flow and ebb. Steamers have seldom ruffled these waters above Antung, but sea-going junks ply up and down for thirty miles, beyond which point the river is navigable by smaller craft for about 130 miles.

The Russian camps are spread along the wider portion of the lower Yalu, because here converge the roads that pass into Korea.

So this is the part of the Yalu that now wears a military aspect; and the busiest scene of all is at Antung, the rendezvous of the Russian troops for the crossing of the river. Antung, now a treaty port, is only a few years old, but it is the real business centre of the Yalu valley. Millet fields covered its site till recently, but to-day Chinese merchants store their goods in large buildings; broad streets have been opened and the place wears a prosperous air. The river edge is thronged with junks and coasting steamers loading and discharging their cargoes instead of transshipping, as formerly, at Tatung, near the Yalu's mouth. The town is about fifteen miles above Yungampo, the Korean hamlet which has just been declared by the Korean Government to be a treaty port. A few miles across the Yalu, from Antung, is Wiju.

There are no cart roads crossing the river where it narrows toward the north, but paths here and there come down to the banks. Most of the riverine territory is little developed, because it is in the domain of almost impenetrable forests through which the sunlight scarcely reaches the waters of the river.

These Korean forests helped to fan the quarrel between the Japanese and Russians, which finally burst into flame. Several years ago the King of Korea conceded the part of the forests lying along the river to the Russians; and their Manchurian woodsmen have felled a large quantity of the finest trees and floated the logs down to the junks that have carried them to the saw-mills of southern Manchuria. The timber is mostly pine, and nearly as good as our white pine. There is also an abundance of walnut, beech, oak, maple, and other varieties, making the wood trade of the Yalu River very important in eastern Asia. This forest concession helped to assure the certainty of war, but the wooded region will not figure in the conflict, because it is no place for marching armies. Europeans who have visited it say that the growths are so thick that a half dozen yards on each side of the paths are the limit of vision.

Only the narrow river lands along the Yalu are settled, and that sparsely, but the river has for ages been the great water highway between upper Manchuria and the southern end of that country where the Russian soldiers have been massing.

Setting foot in Korea, a very different scene is spread before the Russians from that of the dense forests to the north. They are looking over a plain extending far south,

DEAFNESS CURED

A Device That Is Scientific, Simple, Direct, and Instantly Restores Hearing in Even the Oldest Person — Comfortable, Invisible, and Perfect Fitting.

190-Page Book Containing a History of the Discovery and Many Hundred Signed Testimonials From All Parts of the World — SENT FREE.

The True Story of the Invention of Wilson's Common Sense Ear Drums Told by Geo. H. Wilson, the Inventor.

I was deaf from infancy. Eminent doctors, surgeons and ear specialists treated me at great expense, and yet did me no good. I tried all the artificial appliances that claimed to restore hearing, but they failed to benefit me in the least. I even went to the best specialists in the world, but their efforts were unavailing.

My case was pronounced incurable! I grew desperate; my deafness tormented me. Daily I was becoming more of a recluse, avoiding the companionship of people because of the annoyance my deafness and sensitiveness caused me. Finally I began to experiment on myself, and after patient years of study, labor and personal expense, I perfected something that I found took the place of the natural ear drums, and I called it Wilson's Common Sense Ear Drum, which I now wear day and night with perfect comfort, and do not even have to remove them when washing. No one can tell I am wearing them, as they do not show, and, as they give no discomfort whatever, I scarcely know it myself.

With these drums I can now hear a whisper. I join in the general conversation and hear everything going on around me. I can hear a sermon or lecture from any part of a large church or hall. My general health is improved because of the great change my Ear Drums have made in my life. My spirits are bright and cheerful; I am a cured, changed man.

Since my fortunate discovery it is no longer necessary for any deaf person to carry a trumpet, a tube or any other such old-fashioned makeshift. My Common Sense Ear Drum is built on the strictest scientific principles, contains no metal, wires, or strings of any kind, and is entirely new and up to date in all respects. It is so small that no one can see it when in position, yet it collects all the sound waves and focuses them against the drum head, causing you to hear naturally and perfectly. It will do this even when the natural ear drums are partially or entirely destroyed, perforated, scarred, relaxed or thickened. It fits any ear from childhood to old age, male or female, and aside from the fact that it does not show, it never causes the least irritation, and can be used with comfort day and night without removal for any cause.

With my device I can cure deafness in any person, no matter how acquired, whether from catarrh, scarlet fever, typhoid or brain fever, measles, whooping cough, gatherings in the ear, shocks from artillery or through accidents. My invention not only cures, but at once stops the progress of deafness and all roaring and buzzing noises. The greatest aural surgeons in the world recommend it, as well as physicians of all schools. It will do for you what no medicine or medical skill on earth can do.

I want to place my 190-page book on deafness in the hands of every deaf person in the world. I will gladly send it free to anyone whose name and address I can get. It describes and illustrates Wilson's Common Sense Ear Drums and contains bona fide letters from numerous users in the United States, Canada, Mexico, England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, Australia, New Zealand, Tasmania, India, and the remotest islands. I have letters from people in every station in life—ministers, physicians, lawyers, merchants, society ladies, etc.—and tell the truth about the benefits to be derived from my wonderful little device. You will find the names of people in your own town and state, many whose names you know, and I am sure that all this will convince you that the cure of deafness has at last been solved by my invention.

Don't delay; write for the free book to-day and address my firm—The Wilson Ear Drum Co., 1740 Todd Building, Louisville, Ky., U. S. A.

Good Things to Come in Collier's

THE ST. LOUIS WORLD'S FAIR is one of the principal events of the year 1904: not only for Americans, but for many people all over the world. In this number the readers of COLLIER'S WEEKLY are given a preliminary survey of the big show. There has been so much to say about the war that we have not had the time as yet to say all that we wanted to say about the Fair, and a great number of other interesting and very important things. It may interest our readers to know that COLLIER'S will also have a special building at St. Louis to which all the readers of the WEEKLY will be more than welcome, and where they will find a great many things worth seeing.

BIG LAND BATTLES between the Japanese and Russians may now be expected at any moment. The death of Admiral Makaroff, one of Russia's greatest fighting men, and the sinking of the Petropavlovsk, is pretty universally believed by military experts the world over to mark the date of the beginning of an aggressive Japanese land campaign. COLLIER'S correspondents and COLLIER'S photographers are waiting on the spot. The WEEKLY has, as you know, made preparations for covering the war in the Far East on a scale not approached by any other periodical in this country. To send a man to the front in this war means, for each man, horses, coolie servants, an interpreter, etc. On these mere "incidentals" COLLIER'S has already spent fifty thousand dollars. What our photographers have done—even tied up as they were in Tokio and other places—you have already seen. A new phase of the war seems now about to begin—the phase of active aggressive fighting on both land and sea. Whatever happens during the next few weeks or months our readers may know that COLLIER'S men will be on the spot and that in the pages of the WEEKLY the war will be reproduced as in no other place. Our men will be at the front, no matter how long the war continues. But do not fear that the pages of the WEEKLY are to be in a continuous state of belligerency until the struggle in the East is over; merely because they are there does not imply that our peace-loving American readers are going to be fed on an unrelieved diet of strife and bloodshed.

WE ARE NOT INDEPENDENT IN NAME ONLY. We uphold what we believe to be right, no matter whose toes are stepped on. Some of our subscribers from Utah, for instance, have canceled their subscriptions because of what was said in the WEEKLY about Mormonism. And some of the followers of Mr. Hearst have done so because of what was said of Mr. Hearst's eccentric attempts on the Presidency. We are sorry to lose any subscribers, but we intend to say what we believe in the coming political campaign. We will praise and criticize both parties and their candidates from the viewpoint of the welfare of the whole people.

"MR. DOOLEY" IS SOON TO REAPPEAR. His pungent wit and sound philosophy have been sadly missed. He will talk about the campaign, naturally; because politics is something that all Americans will talk about during the coming summer; and he will talk exclusively in COLLIER'S. Those who know "Mr. Dooley" of old will know that in no place will he be more at home than in the humors of the Presidential campaign. His reappearance will be awaited with enthusiasm.

OUR SPECIAL ARTICLES during the next few months will be of exceptional interest. Arthur Brisbane, editor of the New York Evening Journal, will write, for instance, a character sketch of Mr. Hearst. Some people have said that, except as far as money was concerned, Mr. Brisbane was Mr. Hearst. This article will have a unique interest. Senator Hoar and John Sharp Williams, the new Democratic leader in the House, have written articles on political subjects for COLLIER'S. The Louisiana Purchase

OFF FOR SCHOOL

One of the series of drawings by W. T. Smedley for the frontispieces of the Household Numbers will be treated by Winston Churchill. William Allen White is another contributor. The big speculative bubbles whose collapse has shaken Wall Street during the past will be exploited from the "Inside" by Cleveland Moffett.

OUR SHORT-STORY COMPETITION is open for six weeks more. If the stories keep coming in as fast as they have been of late, we ought to be able to pick out the best collection ever printed by any magazine. That is just what we want, and we are going to buy every good story that comes. Already we have four expert readers at work classifying the manuscripts for reference to the judges. By the time the contest closes everything will be so arranged and classified that the judges will doubtless be able to announce their decision two months later. Their decision will be watched by every one interested in American literature, and their opinion will carry weight. It is doubtful if three men better qualified to act in this capacity could have been found. Senator Lodge is a man of keen discrimination in literary matters, and his coadjutors, Mr. Page and Mr. White, are both editors—men whose profession it is to determine upon the merit of written things. We feel sure that our readers will watch the result of this great contest with the closest interest and we can assure them a harvest of splendid stories. These will be published during the coming year—and as we have decided not to publish any more serials, our fiction pages will be devoted wholly to short stories.

AND WHILE SPEAKING OF STORIES that we are going to get, let us slip in a word about stories that we already have. During the summer months we shall print a series of six tales of political life and bossism in a small town, under the general title of "Slaves of Success," by Elliott Flower, a series of especial interest to every prospective voter. We shall also print an exquisitely humorous set of five tales by W. A. Fraser, called "Five Little Men." They are stories of the adventures of a handful of small boys, so true to life that no reader who ever was a boy—or even a girl—can fail to enjoy them.

"TWO STRIKES AND THE BASES FULL!"

Double-page Drawing by Charles Dana Gibson for publication in an early issue of Collier's

Then, entirely different from these, will follow a story of ghosts, hidden treasure, and mystery—"The Blood is the Life"—in three parts, by F. Marion Crawford; and entirely different again from any of the preceding will be a new series of stories of eighteenth century times by Agnes and Egerton Castle.

HOW TO MAKE ROOM for all this good material during the summer months is the problem. One thing we have reluctantly decided—that is, not to publish any more Sherlock Holmes stories until autumn. Sir Arthur Conan Doyle agreed to write twelve of these "Adventures," and he has already sent us ten of them, but in a recent letter he told us that he was going into politics a little this summer and that the manuscripts for the last two stories of the series would not reach us so far in advance as the others did. So we thought it would be a good idea then to postpone the publication of the last four stories so as to give Sir Arthur all the time he needs for politics and allow our artists plenty of time for illustrating the final tales. So the last Sherlock Holmes story for the present will be "The Adventure of the Six Napoleons" in the Household Number for May—and the series will resume in the Household Number for October with "The Adventure of the Three Students."

THE FIRST OF MAY ("MOVING DAY") will also be in a sense moving day for the WEEKLY—perhaps not so much a moving day for us as a settling into more permanent places of some of our household furniture. The editorials will occupy the place of honor, as they do now. The "Story of the Week" is to be restored. We believe that what our readers desire in this department is what might be called a continued story from week to week of the world's news. It is to be our earnest endeavor, as this department is gradually improved, and typographical difficulties surmounted, to bring it nearer and nearer to the news. For this reason, in order to shorten the time required to print these news pages, we have decided to remove the pictures from them and print the latter by themselves on other pages of the WEEKLY. When this department is in shape, we mean that it shall give our readers a comprehensive and compact survey of the happenings of the previous seven days.

TWO NEW DEPARTMENTS are also to be "moved in" the first of May. The Lion's Mouth, which helped a lot, we believe, in improving the quality of the WEEKLY, is to be restored in another form. And a humorous page is to be added to the WEEKLY called "Life's Little Pleasantries." In the Lion's Mouth, once a month at least, representative men in politics, education, and other fields—college presidents, Senators, scientists, and the like, of national fame—will give expression to personal opinion on topics of contemporaneous public interest. "Life's Little Pleasantries" will also be published at least once a month. It is our present plan to have these departments alternate with the Fiction and Household Numbers each month. Summer is the time for outdoor sport; and it is part of COLLIER'S duty, and pleasure as well, as the National Weekly, to cover everything of national interest to those who love the out-of-doors. The sports of the coming summer months will be fully covered in the pages of the WEEKLY.

NEXT WEEK we will have something to say about the new art features for the summer.

Covers a Greater Area, Enjoys Greater Appropriations of Money,
Will Have Greater Exhibits Than Any Previous Exposition

THE WORLD'S FAIR AT ST. LOUIS

MAY TO NOVEMBER, 1904

The best way to reach St. Louis from New York and New England is without question via the

New York Central or West Shore

6 TRAINS A DAY

RATES FROM NEW YORK WILL BE FROM

$23.25 to $38.80

According to the character of the train and service and time limit of tickets.

Day Coach Excursion Tickets, good only in Day Coaches, will be sold from time to time at rate of $18.00 by the West Shore and $20.00 by the New York Central.

First Coach Excursion by the West Shore May 18th and by the New York Central May 24th.

For particulars inquire of our ticket agents.

For a copy of a beautifully illustrated folder on the World's Fair, send two 2-cent stamps to George H. Daniels, General Passenger Agent, New York Central Railroad, New York

VICTOR

MONARCH RECORD

The New Caruso Records

Just out! The great Italian Operatic Tenor, who has created such a furore in London and New York, is under contract to sing only for the Victor Talking Machine.

Go to the nearest dealer and ask to hear a Caruso record—the perfect reproduction of a magnificent voice.

Victor Talking Machine Co.
Philadelphia
The Original Makers of the Gram-O-phone

Victor Talking Machine

THE FIRST AMERICAN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

A Successful Merchant's Profitable Investment

The Stein-Bloch Company
Wholesale Tailors
Rochester, N. Y., Dec. 1, 1903.

THE MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK,
NEW YORK CITY.

Dear Sirs: I wish to acknowledge receipt of your Company's check for $95,396.50, same being the full cash surrender value of Policy No. 234,411, $50,000.00 upon my life. I also wish to express my thanks for your promptness in the matter, and my appreciation of the liberal dividend treatment accorded me. Dividend declared amounts to $27,396.00, or forty-two per cent. of the premiums paid, which is in itself evidence of the great ability with which the affairs of your company are directed.

For fifteen years I have been insured for $50,000, yet now receive back more in cash than I have paid in premiums. If I had not passed the insurable age, would certainly make a new application for a like amount at this time. Yours very truly,

Nathan Stein
President.

Invest Now—the younger you are the lower the Cost

The Mutual Life

Has Earned More for policy Holders    Has Paid More to policy holders    Holds More for policy Holders than any other company in the world

Business men who know the difficulties of making safe and profitable investments are constantly taking out the newly devised Mutual Investment Policies.

THE MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK, NEW YORK CITY.
RICHARD A. MCCORDY, Pres.

Gentlemen:—I should like to receive (free) information regarding your form of investment insurance described above for amount $_____ My occupation is _____ and Age _____

Name _____ Address _____

CUT OFF AND MAIL THIS COUPON TO-DAY

Collier's No. 25

COLLIER'S

SATURDAY, APRIL 23, 1904

P. F. COLLIER & SON, PUBLISHERS, 416-424 WEST THIRTEENTH ST., NEW YORK; 10 NORFOLK ST., STRAND, LONDON, W. C. 1. COPYRIGHT 1904 BY P. F. COLLIER & SON. ENTERED AT THE NEW YORK POST-OFFICE AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER

JAPANESE INFANTRY WAITING TO ENTER PING-YANG

PHOTOGRAPH BY R. L. DUNN, COLLIER'S SPECIAL WAR PHOTOGRAPHER IN KOREA. PHOTOGRAPH COPYRIGHT 1904 BY COLLIER'S WEEKLY

The picture shows a company of the 14th Infantry resting on the frozen sand by the side of the highway over which they marched 130 miles northward from Seoul. The clumsy native ferry crossing the Tai-Tong River at this point, Son Kion, was helpless for troop transport, and the force was in bivouac while the engineers and sapper companies, and hundreds of Korean coolies, threw a bridge across this approach to Ping-Yang. The bridge-building activity is visible in the background of the photograph. The march of these troops from Seoul to Ping-Yang was made along the ancient road to Peking, which was a quagmire most of the distance, crowded with cavalry, infantry, pack-trains, bullock-carts, and long trains of white-clad natives, burdened with bags of provisions, plodding knee-deep through slush and mud. Freezing by night, stumbling and slipping all day, each soldier carrying sixty pounds of equipment, this infantry column was swept along at a speed of from fifteen to twenty-five miles a day. This heroic advance will be no longer necessary with the ice out of the bay at Chienampo, where troops can be landed from transports and towed in small boats up the Tai-Tong River to Ping-Yang. This important strategic point will be held indefinitely by a large Japanese force to guard the line of retreat from the Yalu, and against a possible Russian invasion of Korea along the great highway

THE UNITED STATES NOW FACES that danger from concentrated power which has produced violence and disintegration in so many lands, and from which it was the special effort of the JEFFERSON-MADISON group among the founders to protect the nation whose course they planned. The danger, not near or great, is yet discernible. It is to be found not so much in personal Executive encroachments, although they are to be regretted as furnishing precedents of evil for more hazardous days; not so much in the increased Executive initiative made necessary by active foreign policies, although this inevitable development is to be scanned with eyes jealous for that individual liberty which it now requires some fanning to keep alive. The danger is to be found in contempt for law among the powerful, which may at any moment breed contempt for law among the masses. Legislators who steal, and the vast corporations of which they are the slaves, form the two greatest dangers to our stability, for they alone furnish a grievance so gross and lasting as to shake the belief that we live under a system essentially just and equal. The anarchy branch of the Democracy to-day would not have grown to its present size without these twin grievances—the corrupt power of concentrated wealth and the subservience of the people's so-called servants. We welcome, therefore, with relief and satisfaction such an incident as Senator BURTON's conviction, which, unless our too complicated legal system fails to work with technical exactness, will give us the spectacle of a United States Senator in jail, where a considerable number of his fellows ought to be. The criminal law should also be executed upon a few of the worst of the law-defying trusts, when the task can be successfully undertaken. The tariff should no longer be made a device for enriching the wealthy at the cost of Filipinos, Cubans, or Americans. If Republicans or real Democrats will take these steps toward common justice between man and man, the faction of violent and ignorant agitation will die for lack of nourishment.

STEERING
OUR COURSE

CVILIZATION IS RULED BY COMMERCE to-day as all of us admit, but just what do we mean by it? Wealth, sufficiently distributed, is an admitted good. Luxury enervates, but there will never be wealth enough to enervate everybody. That any arrangement can be arrived at to check the concentration which leads so easily to abuse would be a hardy thing to say. We must not let legal checks go far enough to diminish the individual, for such government interference would produce just that weakness in point of view and character which, according to many, it is a fault of concentrated industrial power to threaten us with. Average humanity must always turn its main attention to laboring for subsistence. There is an idea abroad that such labor is to-day accompanied with less self-dependence and proper spirit than it used to be, before the age of combinations and machinery. To the forces which supposedly extinguish the individual some would add the labor union, while others would find in union laborers a sense of responsibility and power which decidedly makes for character. The South sometimes congratulates itself upon freedom from union domination, but the aim of the unions is that same human dignity and worth for the sake of which the South is so desperately fighting the negro menace. Our industrialism may, on the whole, diminish individuality, but we doubt it. It diminishes æsthetic appreciation, but probably not character or human understanding. That very original and penetrating individual who now officially guides the Democrats in Congress, Mr. JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS, believes that, while political deals have existed as long as politics, agreement and compromise were once partly made out of the clash of sentiment and are now entirely made from conflicting utilitarian desires. HAMILTON, for instance, got his theory of finance into practice by trading votes with the South, by which Washington became the capital, but in this Southern contention there was more emotion than dollars and cents. We do not pretend to be sure in our own mind, upon this difficult and important question of whether sentiment and the ideal are being withered by utility, but we are concerned enough about it to favor any influences which seem to act as forces to balance the emphasis which a business age and country puts on money.

INDUSTRIAL-ISM AND THE INDIVIDUAL

MR. HILL, ACCORDING TO MR. BRYAN, "lacks the brutal frankness that has given Mr. CLEVELAND most of his popularity." If there is anything on this earth detested by the Nebraska Populist, that thing is GROVER CLEVELAND, and it is something therefore for him to acknowledge Mr. CLEVELAND's honesty, even under the name of brutal frankness. In ascribing to this honesty most of Mr. CLEVELAND's popularity, Mr. BRYAN shows considerable insight into the facts. Mr. CLEVELAND's high reputation is founded less upon what he has actually accomplished than upon the spirit for which he stands. Apart from the Venezuela episode, of which two views are possible, his most notable performances were so unpopular that they split his party and made much constructive work impracticable. His forcing Congress to repeal the SHERMAN Act helped to disorganize the Democrats, although it is a cornerstone of CLEVELAND's fame to-day. His vetoes of pensions were about as unpopular a performance as any President ever undertook, and yet they help to create the large and rugged figure which will stand for CLEVELAND to after times. His career points the truth that a man may do more good after his acts, so to speak, than at the time. "I hold," said BOURKE COCKRAN in Congress recently, "that this disposition to justify almost anything by pleading that Mr. CLEVELAND did it is the highest compliment ever paid to any man in our political history." A President might accomplish more work immediately than was done by Mr. CLEVELAND, and yet fail altogether to leave that image to posterity which may serve as inspiration and ideal. Such is the deepest use of great men, whether they are immediately successful or the reverse. They keep up their country's tone. The feeling for Mr. CLEVELAND to-day represents not a mere liking for security—not mainly that, but rather a longing for the morally ideal, which has, in the course of time, taken refuge in the ex-President. It is not, properly speaking, popularity, in the sense that MCKINLEY, BLAINE or ROOSEVELT has been popular. It is not personal in its nature, but rather the expression of a moral need. To have created such a conception of himself is the best feat that Mr. CLEVELAND has accomplished.

TWO KINDS OF ACCOM-PLISHMENT

THIS COUNTRY IS NOT CYNICAL at heart in politics, although it is often charged with being so, and with lacking moral indignation. The volume of disgust aroused by Mr. HEARST is a proof that we are still far from the moral indifference that marks decay. So real are the shame and displeasure with which the nation sees this agitator's tricks that the result of his adventure is likely to be good. His campaign money, his pandering to every discontent, and his trumpet advertising of himself have taken him as far as he can go. His defeat at St. Louis is likely to be more than a failure to get the nomination. Unless Mr. BRYAN is able and willing to secure some anchor for his lieutenant, Mr. HEARST is likely to sink in power even in his newspaper industry; for failure, like success, is something of a snowball and grows in size by merely going on. We have considerable hope, therefore, that Mr. HEARST's success in calling attention to what he stands for will result in so consolidating and heightening the feeling against that moral debauchery on which the HEARST newspapers have their base, that the young adventurer may be diminished not only in politics, but in the field where he has bought an evil lead. The anger and distress which are now supplanting curiosity and ridicule are a sign of earnestness and principle in the people which we are glad to see, and those emotions, we believe, are aroused fundamentally by the knowledge that in journalism, where Mr. HEARST has given the fullest measure of his nature, he has been mean, self-seeking, and void of any sign of honor or the better life.

INDIGNATION
STILL POSSIBLE

PREFERENCES ABOUT THE WAR are becoming calmer without losing their direction. Without ceasing to admire Japanese dash we have been forced by time and reflection to look upon the situation upon land and sea in a more critical and open spirit. Lack of dramatic incident is conducive to intelligent comprehension, and also to the wish for peace. Another change which tends toward less American hostility to Russia is the word given out in England that the Bear is not to be baited, but rather to be conciliated. London being the world's news centre, any change of tone there is reflected here. Some slight coolness is perhaps being added in the newspaper world by the severity of Japanese censorship contrasted with Russian frankness. These causes, however, big and little, have only modified our feeling, without changing its course, and there is the best of reasons why any large amount of sympathy with Russia is improbable. Not the English press, the Jewish massacres, the abuse of Finns and Poles, cruelty in the Chinese war, or the banishment of liberal thought has done as much to make us think of Russia with hostility as has been done by our diplomatic relations. Since for several years Russia has been steadily our diplomatic opponent in Manchuria, we have been acquiring the habit of regarding her as clashing in interests with ourselves, or, in other words, as being more or less our enemy. We see no reason to expect a change in this regard. Secretary HAY is undoubtedly doing a powerful amount of thinking, as he is likely to be the leader when the time arrives for the world to make terms between Russia and Japan; and there is much more probability of his having to oppose Russian wishes than Japanese. Until some arrangement is perfected by which Russia fails to threaten an exclusive and excluding power in Asia, she will, by necessity be looked upon in America with the hostility always caused by visibly conflicting interests.

HOSTILITY TO RUSSIA

MR. HAY'S FAME as the world's foremost diplomat to-day would never have been acquired but for one of the traits which most distinguished President McKINLEY. It is a peculiar quality, sometimes apart from intellectual brilliancy or depth, although it often goes with the greatest men. It was more characteristic of WASHINGTON than of his greatest successor, STANTON being the only real discovery made by LINCOLN. The first President, to be sure, had the advantage of taking office after an upheaval had tested the ability of men, and it is also fair to say that he made some weak appointments. We do not hesitate to state, therefore, that Mr. McKINLEY was a more remarkable discoverer of men than any other President we have had, and that quality in him may well puzzle his biographers. It was, perhaps, rather instinct than reason or analysis;

A JUDGE OF MEN

the same sensitiveness which made him such a register of public opinion. He reached his final stand upon currency and the tariff less by individual cerebration than by the instinct in him for absorbing results from the best thought about him. He seemed to receive wireless messages from every part of the land, and in judging individuals the same mysterious instinct said, "This is the man who must serve me." HAY, ROOT, and TAFT are merely the three most remarkable of many successful choices unbalanced by one flagrant failure. Mr. McKINLEY was not great at "dramatizing himself." He was loved and he was trusted by the people, but he has not left a distinct concept of himself for succeeding generations. The final picture of him is open to any historian gifted for the task; and such a historian's most attractive material will be the hidden aptitude which made the President so unrivaled in his choice of men.

THE STRENUOUS LIFE came in for some strenuous knocks from a former Governor of New York at the recent dinner of the Periodical Publishers at Washington. As President ROOSEVELT was the guest of honor, Mr. BLACK's remarks were so evidently pointed that he succeeded in creating a painful silence. He began well, with apt epigrams handed out with slow precision, but he soon fell into rhythmic prose, overloaded with imagery, that ended by giving the sense of rhetorical insincerity. He thus failed to produce a sensation where he might have done so, and left instead the impression of an arrow sent astray. He claimed the distinction of being without a harness, of not being bound to a schedule, of being free, in short; but he did not make the impression of being free from malice, although many of his sentences were sympathetically built and true. "Strength without wisdom is like the hurricane speeding unguided across the plain. . . . I think the disposition in the world to-day is to magnify the value of strength and to check the serious and the thoughtful." Of patriotism he sometimes thought that its best significance was on the dead level known as peace. "A work is no greater because done in a hurry. It is far wiser to arrive safely at dusk than to be brought home safely an hour earlier." Mr. BLACK struck a line of thought that opens possibilities of influence for eloquence to-day. Strenuousness has its uses, and measured contemplation has its uses also. Since it happens at the present moment that the strenuous side has been finding much more insistent expression than the side of peaceful, quiet wisdom, the best opportunity lies with the man who can give voice to the calmer, more philosophic and poetic side. The present is the time for him. Russia has one man who speaks for calm with the voice of genius, but Russia alone has such a man in all the world.

AN INCIDENT AT WASHINGTON

QUARRELS AMONG FINANCIERS represent almost the only hope for the public to secure adequate information about the workings of big combinations which are run to fool the people out of money with no recompense, and such quarrels are also the most likely source of evidence against combinations which are merely illegal without being essentially immoral. If only two such men as ROCKEFELLER and MORGAN should begin a deadly struggle in the criminal courts the whole field of high finance would be blown through by a breeze of enlightenment. The bureau presided over by Mr. CORTELYOU at Washington is constantly seeking and gathering information, upon which Congress or the Executive might act, but the chase is a hard one on account of the great astuteness of the quarry. Big financiers seldom use ink when they contravene either morals or the statute law. They would rather incur the slight risk of being cheated among themselves than the probability of balked schemes or punishment if their methods saw the light. "He has no writing," says H. H. ROGERS, of the Standard Oil group of financiers, in a remarkable interview caused by his quarrel with another stock operator, "and from the very nature of his connection with the project he can have none." And Mr. ROGERS added these striking and undeniable words: "As society and the law are constituted, it is an absolute impossibility for a few men to make $46,000,000 profit legally." This amount "was made without putting a single dollar in jeopardy, in a very, very short time, and it represented one and one-half and three times the total capital employed in the transaction." It was possible only by what Mr. ROGERS calls a Trick of Finance, which is the larger equivalent of the shell game still worked upon the strolling farmer. If the facts were on record the money could be won back in court by the cheated purchasers; and such methods, according to Mr. ROGERS, are the very gist of what is called Modern Finance. May there be many more such quarrels, driving other men to be as frank as ROGERS, until finally we find devices by which to treat large confidence men as we treat their petty analogues.

GAIN FOR THE PUBLIC

NIAGARA FALLS received small consideration from the New York Legislature, the bill for their destruction being huddled through along with other "grabs." Action by Congress toward making of the Falls a national park is now more imperative than ever. Asked about his attitude, one of the creatures "interested" replied that the "show" had turned out to be too expensive, and that "sentiment" should not be allowed to stand in the way of "progress." Progress! This individual would doubtless see progress in carving into matches the California trees, two thousand years old, which are, as they have been called, "absolutely unparalleled on this earth." There are unhappily a number of persons in the country who think Niagara and the great trees of California can not readily be valued in terms of money. The attitude of Congress toward the improvement of the City of Washington is perhaps representative of the average indifference toward beauty. A man like Uncle JOE CANNON is a decidedly useful person in his way, but his opinion of a plan approved by the most expert artists in America is worth considerably less than nothing. One of the things which it would be well for us to learn is that beauty is not easily described in dollars, and that to give up any great national beauty that can never be replaced is appallingly sad and undiscerning. Here is a proper field for the so-called patriotic societies, one of which is already at work to save Niagara.

THE PRICE OF BEAUTY

THAT MERE EXPRESSION HAS POWER, entirely apart from the substance behind, is illustrated whenever real eloquence is heard. Sometimes oratory is declared to be out of date. Changed in its nature it certainly is. The gestures and the declamation with which the Fourth of July was once identified are held in less honor than they were. That oratory itself is out of date is most improbable. In England to-day the most effective speakers are not orators, and this fact is the foundation for a frequent generalization that in Parliament now debating power is everything and eloquence is nothing. If a GLADSTONE or a BRIGHT should arise again, the force of oratory would appear in its former splendor. Mr. COCKRAN's speech on the pension order was a rather striking proof of the use of eloquence, for Mr. COCKRAN is known as a weather-cock, and he expressed little beyond what everybody was saying, yet he filled the House with excitement, changed votes, and set people to imagining a House of Representatives as full of eloquence as the Roman Senate in the time of CICERO. Great is the power of words, and Mephistopheles, in GOETHE'S "Faust," sarcastically observes that nothing is so entirely to be depended upon as words. Sometimes they are a two-edged sword. "Running amuck" was a picturesque phrase which was welcomed by the opponents of Attorney-General KNOX, although it will hardly have the consequences of such historic expressions as "Rum, Romanism, and Rebellion." We are still influenced by sound, and ever shall be, fortunately no doubt, for without an interest in form there is an end not only of oratory but of any art.

THE POWER OF WORDS

FROM THE TWO CAPITALS

TOKIO CONTINUES ITS QUIET WORK OF SENDING ARMY AFTER ARMY TO THE FRONT, FULLY RECOGNIZING THE GIGANTIC TASK THAT HAS BEEN UNDERTAKEN BY JAPAN

ST. PETERSBURG LOOKS FORWARD CALMLY AND CONFIDENTLY TO THE CONCENTRATION OF A GREAT ARMY WHICH MUST, THE RUSSIANS BELIEVE, EVENTUALLY CRUSH JAPAN

By FREDERICK PALMER

Collier's Correspondent with the Japanese General Staff

TOKIO, March 15, 1904

WE HAVE RECEIVED the first home papers with accounts of the early days of the war. They convince us of what we had supposed from the first: that New York and London are far more excited over the war than Tokio. Reading the pages and pages of wild accounts, wildly illustrated, a foreign resident exclaimed: "What a devil of a row they are making about it."

It takes imagination for any dweller in this peaceful town to realize that he is in the capital of a nation engaged in the most stupendous struggle of modern times. Last week I wrote that we were still waiting; this week I write the same. Nominally, at least, the correspondents have made a little progress. The General Staff has selected five American and eight British correspondents, who are to proceed to the front as a first contingent. Mr. Yokoyama tells us this morning that we must be ready to start on the 20th. Mr. Yokoyama is our impresario—the contractor who is going to supply us with European food and bring up our transport on the campaign. On the 20th he hopes to have us, our horses, our tents, and our blanket rolls all aboard a small steamer, which will sail under sealed orders. Soon thereafter we shall at least see soldiers in the field.

But many weeks may pass before we see any fighting. The winter campaign, which delighted the fearful fancy of some of the rumor-mongers on the China coast, seems no more in the domain of military practice in the Orient than in the Occident. We know enough to know that the period of preparation is not yet complete. It goes without saying that the navy could strike without a moment's warning. It could be on a war footing without exciting suspicion. The army went as far as it might without making the country's intention clear. Each new development of the situation reveals still others than the first apparent reason for the timeliness of initiating operations as soon as the Nisshin and the Kasuga had left Singapore. A war begun in winter was quite unexpected to the Russian navy, which we now know was thoroughly taken by surprise. A war begun in winter serves the Japanese army, because Japan can make better use of the intervening time before the weather permits actual campaigning than Russia can. With the warm days of April, Japan will be ready to strike on land. Will Russia be ready to receive the blow? Actions will come in as quick sequence and with as little warning as those of the navy.

The city was no sooner empty of one lot of reservists than another appeared. In the last few days we have seen a repetition of the scenes of the first week of the war. Another army has sprung out of kimonos into blouses. Many of the members are veterans. The medals which they wear tell of battles against the Chinese in 1894-95. They will assist to make again the conquest of ground which they once won. Some of them are stooped with hard labor, but, even more than the younger men who have gone before them, they perhaps have the quality which wins victories. They are married, and, of course, being Japanese, have large families.

One incident, not characteristic of all, but, nevertheless, significant of the steel that is in the blood of a race which sacrifices everything to patriotism: When one of the twelve-year men was called, he succeeded in placing all of his children in the care of relatives except one little girl. None could take her. So, doing what seemed to him a mercy and a duty, he cut her throat. It is said that the officers praised him for the deed. According to their view, he loved his child so much that he would not see her suffer, but he loved his country more. Of course, he expects to be killed. His farewell to his family was for eternity. They will boast far more of a father who died in battle than of a father who fought and still lived. There is another story of two men who were missing when the company was lined up for roll-call. (Continued on page 21.)

By JOHN C. O'LAUGHLIN

Collier's Special War Correspondent at St. Petersburg

ST. PETERSBURG, March 22

IN THE UNIFORM of a Cossack General, Czar Nicholas reviewed the other day a regiment of infantry, which swung by the Winter Palace under orders to the Far East. A few minutes later, dressed as a Captain of the Navy, the Emperor drove to the New Admiralty yard and inspected the warships which are being rushed to completion there. It will not be the fault of his Majesty should there not be in Manchuria and Asiatic waters, within the next few months, a military and naval force superior to that of the Japanese. To his officers he must intrust the utilization of the instruments which he is placing in their hands.

These two acts of the Emperor, ordinarily of little importance, brought to mind the question which all St. Petersburg has been discussing since the outbreak of the war: What is Russia's plan of operations? The English journals arriving in St. Petersburg contain the wildest speculation upon what is a simple matter to the Russian strategists, at least so far as concerns the method of effecting Japan's defeat. "First," I was told, "Russia will mass in Manchuria an army superior to the Japanese. She will place in Asiatic waters a fleet superior to that of her enemy. Then Japan will be taught that it is not advisable to thrust war upon a nation that desired peace, and which offered humiliating concessions in the hope of preserving it."

Every military expert knows that the question of men does not concern Russia; it is the question of supplying those finally concentrated upon the battlefield which is causing chief concern. General Kuropatkin has particularly charged himself to look after his army's communications, and his experience as chief of staff in past wars will be invaluable to him in the campaign upon which he is about to embark.

The railroad has its own special guard, and wherever necessary additional troops will be assigned to protect the line. Port Arthur and Vladivostok have strong garrisons, well equipped and armed, and supplied with food. There remain, available for active operations, almost 300,000 men, who have been organized into three divisions—the strongest, of about 125,000, occupying well-fortified strategic positions upon the Yalu River; the second holding a central position between the extreme left of the first division and Vladivostok, which will stop a flank movement from the Sea of Japan, and the third entrenched so as to prevent operations by a force disembarking at the head of the Liaotung Gulf. Among these three divisions are 50,000 Cossacks, incomparably mounted. "Wait till the Cossacks get at them," the average Russian will tell you. "The Japanese can not stand up against them. The Cossacks are as great devils to-day as they ever were. They are armed with fine carbines and long swords, and they will be able to move rapidly. The South African War taught the value of mobility in military operations."

General Kuropatkin recognizes that this army is not large enough. Before he left St. Petersburg he asked for a fighting force of 600,000 men. His request was not fully complied with. He was informed that he should have 400,000 men, with a reserve of 200,000. As rapidly as a single-track railroad will permit, this army is being mobilized in Manchuria. The trains are running regularly, and, for the Trans-Siberian Railroad, smoothly. The maximum estimate of the number of troops arriving daily upon the scene of operations is 6,000. The minimum is 3,000. I should say that an average of 4,000 men are daily being despatched to Mukden or some other convenient point. The larger the army, the greater the quantity of supplies that must be shipped to it, and the fewer the trains that can be sent with troops. Consequently, June will have arrived before General Kuropatkin will have his army at the strength determined upon.

Turning now to the navy, some facts have come to my attention which will have an important bearing upon the future campaign. (Continued on page 22.)

DEPARTURE OF MARQUIS ITO FROM TOKIO

Japan's veteran statesman, Marquis Ito, left Tokio for Seoul on March 15, as a special envoy from the Mikado to the Emperor of Korea. The object of his mission was to induce Emperor Hui Yi to initiate certain much-needed reforms, and also to establish firmly Japan's influence over Korea's foreign policy. Marquis Ito was accorded a distinguished official greeting on his arrival at Seoul, was repeatedly received in audience by the Emperor, and on March 29 returned to Tokio, having reason to feel well satisfied with the results of his visit.

PHOTOGRAPH BY JAMES H. HARRIS, COLLEGE SPECIAL WAR PHOTOGRAPHY, N. Y. PHOTOGRAPH COPYRIGHT 1904 BY ELLIOTT & FRY

THE RUSSIAN BATTLESHIP "RETVIZAN" ON THE ROCKS AT THE HARBOR ENTRANCE, PORT ARTHUR

This vessel was one of the three warships that were torpedoed by the Japanese on the night of February 8, the opening engagement of the war. She was run ashore in a sinking condition, but settled in shallow water and has done service in subsequent engagements, acting as a floating battery. She has been of much assistance in defeating Admiral Togo's attempts to block the harbor entrance. The "Retvizan" was built at the Cramps' shipyard in Philadelphia in 1900, and was one of the best ships in the Russian Navy.

Grand Duke Cyril

Vice-Admiral Makaroff

THE RUSSIAN BATTLESHIP "PETROPAVLOVSK," SUNK AT PORT ARTHUR, APRIL 13

The "Petropavlovsk" was torpedoed by the Japanese during an engagement off Port Arthur. The big battleship was literally lifted out of the water by the force of the explosion. She turned completely over and disappeared. According to some of the reports, she was struck simultaneously by five Japanese torpedoes. Vice-Admiral Makaroff, commander of the Russian navy in the Far East, Rear-Admiral Molok, and over seven hundred officers and men were drowned. Grand Duke Cyril, cousin of the Czar, with five other officers and thirty-two sailors, escaped alive, but all were wounded. Vice-Admiral Makaroff had only recently taken command of the Russian fleet at Port Arthur to replace Vice-Admiral Stark, who allowed the Japanese to torpedo three of his best ships on February 8. He designed the ice-breaker "Ermak," and was Russia's most capable and enterprising naval commander. Grand Duke Cyril is the oldest son of the Grand Duke Vladimir, uncle of the Czar. He is twenty-eight years old and holds the rank of lieutenant in the navy. He is third in the line of succession to the Russian throne. The "Petropavlovsk" was built at St. Petersburg in 1894, and was a modified copy of the British battleship "Royal Sovereign." She was of 11,000 tons displacement and carried four 12-inch, twelve 6-inch, and thirty-four smaller guns. She is the fourth warship lost by Russia at Port Arthur since the beginning of the war.

Next week, Collier's will publish an article by Captain A. T. Mahan bearing on these recent events

BOTTLED UP IN TOKIO WHERE NO ONE HEARS OF WAR

By RICHARD HARDING DAVIS, Collier's Special War Correspondent in Japan

TOKIO, March 21, 1904

IN NEW YORK, the writer was one of the mistaken few who prophesied there would be no war. In Tokio, he is inclined to go further and protest that there is no war. He admits when he was in New York there was a war. War filled the front page of all the morning papers. In the afternoon editions its three letters, in sanguinary pink ink, were writ large from margin to margin. Stocks were affected. Insurance rates became prohibitive. Packing houses were working overtime, and the Missouri mule loomed into a national asset. Every man you met was as intimately familiar with the number of guns in the secondary batteries of the Retvizan and the Shikishima as with the number of his own telephone. Wherever you saw two men talking together it was safe to wager one was saying, "They are a wonderful little people," and that the other was replying, "Yes, but don't forget that in '64 the Rooshian fleet sailed right up the lower bay and saved the Union." There, in New York, war was the only topic. People asked you if you were going to "the front" as jauntily as though "the front" were situated somewhere between Seventy-second Street and Grant's Tomb. When we crossed the Continent, cowboys rode out of an alkali desert to ask what was the latest from "the war." At water tanks in Arizona, and at every one of Fred Harvey's eating houses from Santa Fe to the Pacific Coast, the proprietor kindly warned us against Russian cruisers lying just outside of the Golden Gate. War continued with us right into the heart of San Francisco, where the Bohemian Club gave the war correspondents a noble farewell dinner, and where we proudly displayed our war kits to the bellboys in the Palace Hotel. When the China unloaded 700 tons of "contraband of war," and Japanese crowded the wharf to wave farewells to their fellow-countrymen, who were off to fight, and the San Francisco band played for them "The Girl I Left Behind Me," we all tried to look cheerful and said, as though we liked it, "Well, this is the Real Thing at last."

But somewhere between Honolulu and Yokohama, somewhere in the deepest part of the Pacific, we lost the war overboard, and we have neither seen it nor heard of it since. I do not mean to say that if you go to the War Office here you will not see the sentry, nor do I deny that if you go inside you will see two orderlies. You also will be received by various officials, grave, courteous generals, each apparently doing nothing by himself, in a large bare room hung with a map or two. He apparently has plenty of leisure, certainly enough of it to enable him to be polite. But he has no time to discuss the probability of Japan and Russia being at war. He says there may be a column which some day may leave some place for somewhere and do something, and if you are patient maybe you, too, can go to that place. But that is the only definite information he has to give you this morning, and so, "if you really must be going, I wish you 'good-day.'"

Nor do I say that in the chief street you will not see colored prints of battles, and people looking at them apparently as artistic productions and with respectful interest.

That is all we who are bottled up in Tokio know of the Japanese war.

This morning we thought that at last we had caught them in the act. We woke to find the streets filled with jubilant natives, each waving a flag; the hotel windows were hidden with flags, they fluttered from every jinrikisha. We rushed out to ask eagerly if Port Arthur had fallen, to learn what great battle had been won on the Yalu. The interpreter regarded us with gentle reproach. "To-day is the spring festival," he said. That means that to-day in Tokio every one is rejoicing, because at the Temple of Kawa-saki a plum tree has given birth to a number of blossoms. But then why should the Japanese know anything of this war? They live so far from New York.

BURTON'S CASE

The Senate would like to report adversely, but it's not convenient

THE appeal of Senator Joseph R. Burton of Kansas from the decision of the court which convicted him at St. Louis, will go to the Eighth Judicial Circuit Court and will probably not be taken up by that tribunal until some time next fall. In the meantime, Burton will keep away from Washington. Congress is already on its last legs, so far as this session is concerned, and the convicted Senator will therefore be spared the embarrassment of absents himself for any considerable length of time for no better reason than that his presence there would result in a situation unpleasant alike for himself and his colleagues. Before the beginning of the short session next December there may be developments which will either make his predicament better or worse, and which in either event may stir the Senate to action.

Just at present the Senate does not wish to take cognizance of the Burton case. It does not desire to get the discredited Senator's name on its records. It hopes to be able to maintain an attitude of dignified aloofness and to keep on hoping that Burton will resign, or that something else will happen to obviate the necessity of the Committee on Privileges and Elections acting on his case. It would be very glad, indeed, if Burton's term expired next March, but, unfortunately, it does not. On the contrary, it does not expire until March 3, 1907, and a great many things may happen in as long a time as that. The situation being just as it is, the Senate—that is, the majority—is anything but pleased. The Democrats are complacent, and if given the slightest opportunity would not in the least object to an attempt to make political capital out of the matter.

There can be no doubt of the fact that Burton's conviction does not work automatically to deprive him of

TESTING PHILADELPHIA'S SEPARATE WATER SYSTEM FOR FIGHTING FIRE

Chief Croker of the New York Fire Department, other visiting Chiefs, and the Mayors of Newark and Baltimore witnessed this exhibition of throwing sixteen powerful streams directly from the fire-main whose water supply is pumped at high pressure from the Delaware River. Recent lack of sufficient water pressure in the business districts of New York has aroused agitation for a salt-water fire-main system. After seeing the Philadelphia test, Chief Croker was convinced that $5,000,000 should be appropriated for a similar protective system in the metropolis.

his seat. If he is to leave the Senate he must either resign or be forced out on a report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, adopted by a two-thirds vote of the whole body. Were it not a Presidential year, and were the situation less delicate in other ways—were Senator Dietrich of Nebraska not already before the committee in question, for instance—it is quite likely that a report adverse to Burton would be made, and that it would be adopted; for in his testimony at St. Louis the Kansan intimated that in his dealings with the get-rich-quick concern he represented he was only following the example of older and more experienced Senators. This, naturally, has turned the sentiments of his colleagues against him, and if the time were only ripe they would no doubt be glad to embrace an opportunity to show their resentment.

water-mark rations, to see how little they could eat and work well. Without exception, the members of the squad declared months before their term was up that they were heartily sick of the diet and would resign if they could honorably. One of the squad said philosophically: "The Japs and Russians in the field fighting a hard campaign at zero weather get no meat rations, and so I think that we can stand it a little longer on a vegetable diet at the Yale gymnasium."

It can be said on good authority that Professor Chittenden will not recommend the giving up of meat as an article of diet, although he has been frequently quoted as holding that radical belief. He has decided that: 1. We eat too much. 2. We eat too fast. 3. We would live much longer and do our work better if we ate only half as much meat as we do.

WE EAT TOO MUCH

Conclusion reached by Professor Chittenden after long experiment

FOR eight months Professor Russell H. Chittenden has directed the work of a squad of United States soldiers at Yale. His aim was to discover the most practicable rations for the army under varied conditions and, second, and indirectly, the diet best fitted for the American people, perhaps for the whole race.

Meat disappeared from the menu of the soldiers the day after they reported. Cereals and vegetables formed their food till they departed. At one time their allowance was cut down to see what was the smallest amount soldiers, or, for the matter of that, an ordinary man, could live on and work effectively. There were twenty soldiers when the experiments were started; eleven when they left three weeks ago. Three deserted, one or two went insane, and the rest were sent away, it is said, because they persistently broke training and ate meat. The climax of departures occurred when the soldiers were kept down to low-

A company drilling at its Manila barracks

A guard detail of the crack native soldiery

THE PHILIPPINE SCOUTS OF THE UNITED STATES ARMY ENCAMPTED AT ST. LOUIS

The Scouts, or Philippine Constabulary, as they are called officially, number 7,000 men, in command of Brigadier-General Henry T. Allen, who has the greatest confidence in his little army, which is justified by its record of only 85 desertions in the past year. The Constabulary is both a rural police and fighting force, and the men have shown their pluck and loyalty in many hot skirmishes with ladrones. They enjoy fighting, and desert only where pacification brings monotony of detail duty in barracks.

COLLIER'S

LOUISIANA PURCHASE EXPOSITION

ILLUSTRATED SUPPLEMENT

COPYRIGHT 1904 BY COLLIER'S WEEKLY

FESTIVAL HALL AND THE CASCADES

This is the central feature of the Terrace of the States, an architectural decoration 1,500 feet in length, crowning the crest of a natural amphitheatre 70 feet high. The Hall is 200 feet in diameter, 200 feet high, and seats 3,500 people. The cascades have a fall of 90 feet and forward flow of 300 feet, spreading from a width of 45 feet at the first weir to 150 feet at the final plunge. The total cost of the Festival Hall, colonnades, restaurant pavilions, cascades, and gardens, is about $1,000,000.

The double-page panorama of the Exposition grounds on pages 14-15 was photographed from the top of this building.

COPYRIGHT 1904 BY COLLIERS WEEKLY

THE ELECTRICITY BUILDING

This edifice is 700 feet long by 600 feet wide. The Electricity Building at Chicago was of the same length, but only 115 feet wide

COPYRIGHT 1904 BY COLLIERS WEEKLY

MANUFACTURES BUILDING, SEEN FROM THE WEST SIDE OF THE GRAND BASIN

With a frontage of 1,300 feet and a depth of 535 feet, this building covers fourteen acres

COPYRIGHT 1904 BY COLLIERS WEEKLY

COLONNADE OF THE VARIED INDUSTRIES BUILDING

At Chicago, in 1893, the principal building of the Fair was that of Manufactures and Liberal Arts. At St. Louis the manufactures have a building, with another devoted to the varied industries

THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT BUILDING

For the first time in the history of expositions Americans have no need to blush for the architecture of their national building. Here will be installed the Exhibits exemplifying the many functions of the National Government. The edifice is 350 feet long by 350 feet wide. At Chicago the Government Building was 430 feet long by 350 feet wide.

READY FOR THE GREAT FAIR

A LOOK ROUND THE ST. LOUIS EXPOSITION BEFORE THE GATES ARE OPENED

By ARTHUR RUHL

St. Louis, April 16, 1904

WHEN an exposition has come and gone, and its lath-and-plaster palaces have returned again to dust, it must have left in the minds of those who saw it one dominant and satisfying picture really to have been worth while. The exhibits, of which no human being is able or cares to see half, are carted away and forgotten, those who invested their money count up what they have lost, new inventions make the old ones crude, bigger shows make the old ones small, but the one supremely beautiful picture—the illumination at the Pan-American, with the twilight fading into dusk and the glow of the lamps coming out from everywhere, like music, brighter and brighter, until they swept into an overpowering crescendo of lights; the Court of Honor at Chicago, with the white glory of its stately distances set against blue water and bluer sky—this nothing can destroy.

When the Louisiana Purchase Exposition was planned, the creation of such a "feature" was one of the hardest tasks set for those who had undertaken the work. There was no large body of water at St. Louis, and the land on which the buildings must be raised was mere forest and farm. The problem was finally solved by making a feature of a hill. On this hill, flanked by colonnades, the pivotal building was built. From this central heart the great body spreads downward and outward like a fan, as some have said—perhaps more nearly like the aisles and the semicircular seats of a theatre. The main aisle consists of a series of fountains and cascades which flow and splash between heroic statues down to the level of the main buildings and the lagoon. On either side of this foaming waterway, and sweeping up to the central hall, are terraces of green turf. From Festival Hall you may look down on the plain as from a throne; from almost any part of the plain your eyes can sweep up past the fountains and over the sweet and restful green to the central hall, very much as, on a lesser scale, you may look up the avenues past the fountains to the palace at Versailles. The idea is a noble one and nobly carried out. Whatever of the impression of vastness is lost by the curving instead of the rectilinear arrangement is gained in unity and cohesion, and the physical fact of that solid grass-covered hill, seen through the statues and fountains, and restfully backing up the white Exposition buildings, gives to the whole picture an impression of naturalness and permanence which other expositions have sometimes lacked.

The Picture You Will Not Forget

But this architectural scheme of a crown-jewel building, a descending fountain, and the palaces on the plain, is, so to speak, only the body of the picture without its soul. It is a picture that would be just as appropriate in Paris or in London, whereas the Louisiana Purchase Exposition is something that has a peculiarly personal significance to every American—particularly every American who lives west of the Mississippi. On either side of the crown-jewel building, with the curving arms of the peristyle behind them, and the vast palaces of the Exposition stretched out at their feet, sit the heroic statues of the States. Not New York or Massachusetts, but the States carved out of the Louisiana Purchase—the States which, when the purchase was made, did not exist even in name. When the treaty was signed, a century ago, there was not a State or Territory line from New Orleans to Puget Sound, and here they sit now, these States, come up out of the wilderness, each clothed with a bit of our nation's history, each a daughter of the nation, with an arm to uphold the flag that floats for all of us, and a heart and a soul of her own. Here sits North Dakota, her fresh girlish body, sweetly strong, held proudly erect, her eyes on the horizon's edge; here sits Indian Territory, looking down at her blanket and her pottery, her face pensive, her heart in the past; and here, too, are Montana and Kansas and Wyoming, and the rest. The lights have yet to be turned on at St. Louis, the flowers and shrubbery to mature, the crowds to come, and the fountains to flow. There will be many pictures worthy of remembrance, which can only be guessed at now, but one picture which every Westerner—which every American who has ever really felt his country—will take away with him is already there. And long after he has forgotten that the show is twice as big as Chicago's, when the palaces have been sold for junk and the trees are growing again in Forest Park, he will remember the Fair as he saw it from the central court, with the lagoon and the Purchase Monument behind him, the great palaces stretching away on either side and in front and above—above the lagoon and the green turf and the fountains, looking out over the plain and possessing it—the nation's younger daughters, in all the wonder of their strength and their beauty and their youth.

What the Louisiana Purchase Was

The Louisiana Purchase, of which the St. Louis Fair commemorates the one-hundredth anniversary, was the acquiring by the United States from Napoleon I of France of all the land west of the Mississippi, north of Texas, and, loosely speaking, east of the western slope of the Rocky Mountains. This vast area, out of which have been carved the Indian Territory and Oklahoma, and the States of Louisiana, Arkansas, Missouri, Iowa, Minnesota, Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, Wyoming, the Dakotas, Montana, and part of Idaho, was bought for the absurd sum of $15,000,000. Napoleon was hard pressed in Europe at the time, there seemed to be possibilities that the opposition to him might be carried to the point of attacking the French possessions on this Continent west of the Mississippi, and, finally, on grounds of immediate expediency and as a result of skilful American diplomacy, the First Consul offered to sell this whole priceless territory for 60,000,000 francs. It seems almost incredible now that the knowledge in America of the land west of the Mississippi was at that time so utterly vague that there was strong opposition to Jefferson's plan, and that the price was looked upon by many solid men as exorbitant and the whole scheme chimerical. The treaty was at last signed and the purchase effected on April 30, 1803. This purchase, which gave to the future United States over one million square miles of territory and the full possession of the Mississippi, was the crowning event of Jefferson's Administration.

The Bigness of the Show

As far as size goes, the St. Louis Fair will break all records. With its 1,240 acres, the Louisiana Purchase Exposition is twice as big as the Chicago Fair, four times as big as the last Paris Exposition, and larger than the Columbian Exposition, the Pan-American, and the Centennial combined. The generous people of St. Louis, who allowed a good part of their beautiful wooded Forest Park to be razed to a clay wilderness, on which to build the Exposition, have some reason to think that it is too big. In a general way, the grounds are about two miles long and a mile wide. The main lagoon is 600 feet wide, the lesser "aisles" leading up to Festival Hall are 300 feet wide. The approximate cost of the Exposition will be $50,000,000, of which St. Louis furnished $10,000,000. Thirty-six foreign nations will make displays—France, Germany, Mexico, England, China, and Japan each spending half a million dollars. The United States Government Building has cost a similar amount. The Art Palace, a permanent structure, cost slightly less than one million dollars. The statistics of the main buildings or "palaces" are as follows: Palace of Liberal Arts, 525 by 750 feet, cost $475,000; Palace of Mines and Metallurgy, 600 by 1,200 feet, cost $498,000; Palace of Manufactures, 600 by 1,200 feet, cost $719,399; Palace of Education, 525 by 750 feet, cost $319,999; Palace of Varied Industries, 525 by 1,200 feet, cost $604,000; Palace of Electricity, 525 by 750 feet, cost $399,940; Palace of Transportation, 600 by 1,300 feet, cost $606,000; Palace of Machinery, 600 by 1,300 feet, cost $496,597; Washington University Buildings, cost $1,000,000, used by Exposition; Palace of Agriculture, 500 by 1,600 feet, covers nineteen acres, cost $529,940; Palace of Horticulture, 400 by 800 feet, cost $228,000; Rose Garden, four acres in area, 50,000 rose trees. Live-stock exhibit covers thirty-seven acres of woodland.

Secondary Buildings and Outdoor Shows

The main buildings are only half the show. Wherever possible, the management economized floor space by putting exhibits out-of-doors. Some idea of the necessity of this economy may be gathered from the fact that there were enough applications from breakfast-food manufacturers alone to more than fill all the four miles of aisles in Agricultural Hall. "Life, color, motion, operating exhibits," have been the passwords to the big exhibition halls, and exhibitors have been urged to show the process of manufacture rather than the completed articles. Here are more of the "bigness" figures, taken haphazard from the apparently limitless supply: Largest pipe organ ever built, 145 stops, pipes five feet in diameter; two acres of manufactured foods; biggest natatorium on earth; your linen washed and ironed while you wait; ten acres of roses; a model city and mines in operation; four acres of fresh fruits; stadium seating 27,000 persons; fifteen acres of outside forestry exhibits; ten acres of live game exhibits; hotel inside the grounds accommodating 6,000 guests; four acres of agricultural machinery; more than an acre of butter and cheese; largest engines ever exhibited at an exposition; a floral clock covering a quarter of an acre, with a minute hand (this clock keeps time) weighing over a ton; largest waterfall ever constructed, ninety thousand gallons of water flowing over the cascades every minute; million-dollar Philippine exhibit; 276 national and international conventions—religious, scientific, and otherwise; 396 special events and celebrations, including the quadrennial Olympic games, dur-

- |                         |                               |  |                                  |
|-------------------------|-------------------------------|--|----------------------------------|
| 1. Restaurant Pavilion. | 8. Liberal Arts.              | 14. Kentucky.                          | 20. Ohio.                        |
| 2. Machinery.           | 9. Mines and Metallurgy.      | 15. Michigan.                          | 21. The Cabildo, Louisiana.      |
| 3. Transportation.      | 10. German Government.        | 16. Washington State.                  | 22. Missouri.                    |
| 4. Electricity.         | 11. Restaurant Pavilion.      | 17. New York.                          | 23. Louisiana Purchase Monument. |
| 5. Varied Industries.   | 12. United States Government. | 18. Fisheries.                         | 24. Tyrolean Alps.               |
| 6. Manufactures.        | 13. Texas.                    | 19. Travelers' Protective Association. | 25. Irish International Exhibit. |
| 7. Education.           |                               |  | 29. "Creation."                  |

GENERAL VIEW

THESE PHOTOGRAPHS

THE LOUISIANA PURCHASE EXPOSITION AT ST. LOUIS

PHOTOGRAPHED FROM THE TOP OF FESTIVAL HALL, 316 FEET ABOVE GROUND

THESE LINES, WHEN JOINED END TO END, AT THE DOTTED LINES, FORM A COMPLETE PANORAMIC VIEW OF THE GROUNDS AND BUILDINGS

"THE SPIRIT OF THE ATLANTIC"

By Isidore Konti

ing the period of the Exposition, etc. One has but to remember the exhibits of other expositions, and that the world is a certain number of years older and add a "more so."

The Russo-Japanese Static Drama

Almost dramatic in its reflection of the situation in the Far East is the behavior toward the St. Louis Fair of the two Governments of Russia and Japan. If there had been no exposition this year and a war correspondent writing from Tokio had said, "If there were a world's fair at this moment, this would happen thus," a suspicious newspaper-reading public would have shrugged its shoulders over what it deemed the correspondent's weakness for juggling facts in order to make a telling comparison. Here were these two nations, each having made preparations for a separate government building, in addition to the usual exhibits in the various "palaces." War is declared. Russia temporizes and delays, until the Exposition officials, crowded on every side with applications for space, are well-nigh driven to distraction; and then, a short six weeks before the time for the opening of the exhibition, comes a tardy regret that "on account of the war" Russia must withdraw from participation. Individual Russians have since decided, it is true, to make some sort of a showing, but Russia herself—the vast nation of the Great White Czar—will not, as such, be seen or heard. And what of little Japan, at whose very doors, almost, the war is now being fought? Instead of cutting down her exhibit, Japan increases it rather—fairly rushes into the exhibition business as though it were the sole distraction of an empty holiday. Japan will be on the "Pike," elbowing the other nations in every exhibition hall; and over the hill, beside "Jerusalem," will be such a Japanese village, such tea houses and shrubbery and walks and miniature gardens, and all the rest, as were not even to be seen at the last Paris Exposition, where the Japanese exhibit was, in a way, the clou of the entire show. Whether or not a nation shows better taste in withdrawing from or participating in an exposition when she is at war is a matter of aesthetics which I do not pretend to decide, but purely as an example of shrewdness, of what one might almost call a press-agent's instinct, Japan's action is characteristic and impressive. During all these spring weeks, while the stories of sunken battleships have been coming from the East, the little brown men have pottered about their pretty village, trimming shrubs and smiling over their toy gardens, and all the coming summer you and your sisters and your cousins and your aunts may sip your Japanese tea from Japanese porcelain in a Japanese garden, and live your story-book Japan, while a mile or two away, on the streets of downtown St. Louis, the newsboys are shouting the war extras, and on the other side of the earth the soldiers of the Mikado are fighting and dying for the Empire.

Forty Acres of Filipinos

The most interesting of the outside exhibits, and the largest single exhibit on the grounds, is the forty-acre plot devoted to setting forth the arts, industries, home life, and amusements of the native Filipinos. You enter this exhibit over either of three bridges, the central one of which is a reproduction of the Puente de España over the Pasig River. From this bridge you pass through the Barian Gate into the walled City of Intramuras, and to the Cathedral and public square and markets of Manila. Leaving Manila by the Royal Gate, you jump at once into the heart of the uncivilized Philippines—Moro houses built on poles in the lake, Luzon villages inhabited by Negritos in native lack of costume, Macabebe camps, pearl fisheries, copra raising, and the rest. The Philippine exhibit will cost $1,000,000. One thousand Filipinos will live on these forty acres—200 of them Macabebe scouts (who will police the exhibit), 300 tribespeople from native villages, a Philippine band of 85 pieces, and some 400 other natives who will exhibit their industries and amusements. During the past fortnight or two these sturdy little brown men have been working like bees on the high bamboo stockade which surrounds their reservation. The stockade is built by setting bamboo poles—huge stalks, which have been brought over from the Philippines, as big almost as telegraph poles—on end, side by side, and then binding them into a firm fabric by running transverse poles along on either side of the fence, and binding the whole with thongs of cane. All over the village you might have seen them working these warm spring days, hacking bamboo with their bolos and tying the uprights together, quite as much at home, apparently, puddling about in the mud of Forest Park as in their native hunting grounds. The only clothing they wear is a sort of coat or shirt and a breech-clout, and their firm brown legs are bare to the hips, as nature made them. It is a costume excellently adapted to work in the viscous Missouri mud, and contractors and concessionaires, smeared to the tops of leggings and puttees with the white man's burden of sticky yellow clay, looked on with envy. When the light-hearted Filipinos regain the shelter of their barracks, even the shirt and breech-clout are discarded, as many curious visitors, who have tried to evade the gatekeeper's commands, and to peep into the closed compound, have found to their dismay. There has been much distress in St. Louis of late over rumors of the eccentric diet of some of these Filipinos. The story was started in the St. Louis newspapers that the Igorrotes were being fed on dog meat, of which they are very fond. It is intimated that the rumor was printed by wicked reporters who were not allowed inside the Filipino barracks, and who took this means of getting their revenge. But the Humane Society took the matter seriously at any rate, and vehemently decreed that this barbarity must cease, all of which was meat, at any rate, for the nimble paragrapher.

"Does the butcher heed bossy's moo?" asks one St. Louis paper. "Does a thrill run up and down the spine of the Humane Society whenever that wonderful transition from pig to pork in forty seconds takes place. The sheep bleat in vain. The Humane Society does not hear, for the air is filled with the yelps of sausage in posse noisily asserting the will to live as dogs in esse, the shape decreed by nature herself."

The Exhibition officials assure the tender-hearted

"THE SPIRIT OF THE PACIFIC"

By Isidore Konti

that they need not worry. The diet of the Filipinos at present is altogether conventional, and before the summer is over they doubtless will have succumbed to the hokey-pokey sandwich and popcorn bricks.

The "Pike" and Other Shows

The "Pike" is a sublimated Midway—Coney Island carried to the N'th power. It is a mile long, and there is something doing over every foot of it—as the publicity experts would put it, I suppose, "5,000,000 (SQUARE FEET) 5,000,000 of enlightened and refined enjoyment." There are "villages" of every sort on the "Pike," Wild West shows, and chutes. You can go into "mysterious Asia," ride across the Steppes on the Siberian Railway, go "over and under the sea," look through harem lattices, and witness both "Creation" and the "Here-after." The men who have made the Exposition are not inclined to say much of the "Pike." Their attitude is this—that the thing they want the Fair to stand on is the bigness and the beauty of what might be called the "legitimate" portion; if you demand a Midway, why, here is such a one as was never seen before, but we're not going to become "barkers" in order to get you into it.

The reproduction of the old city of Jerusalem is in the main grounds of the Exposition, and is in a sort of intermediate class between such "legitimate" outdoor shows as the Philippine exhibit and the villages of the "Pike." Jerusalem covers some eleven acres in the wooded section near the Art Palace, and it reproduces the Mosque of Omar, the Garden of Gethsemane, the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, and even the worn pavements and walls of the old city. It will be peopled with natives and camels. There is not space here to consider in detail any of the scores of other "reproductions" and special "features." There is a model city, and a model Indian school, mining camps and fisheries, and every sort of historic building from General Grant's log cabin to the Grand Trianon. The "features" go even into the air, not only in the form of the original Ferris Wheel, but in the form of airship races which are to be contested over an "L"-shaped course on the Exposition grounds.

The Hon. "Dave"

The Hon. David R. Francis, President of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, is the finest exhibit on the grounds. He is a wonder, a worker, and a hypnotizer. There is nothing he couldn't do. If he hadn't been Governor of Missouri, Mayor of St.

(Continued on page 20)

"THE TRIUMPH OF APOLLO," OVER THE MAIN ENTRANCE OF FESTIVAL HALL. By PHILIP MARTINY

COPYRIGHT 1904 BY COLLIERS WEEKLY

MINES AND METALLURGY BUILDING

Covering nine acres, with a frontage of 750 feet and a width of 325 feet. Chicago's Hall of Mines was 700 feet long and 350 feet wide

COPYRIGHT 1904 BY COLLIERS WEEKLY

INTERIOR OF THE TRANSPORTATION BUILDING

This exhibit is but one of many to be seen here and represents the evolution and development of the railways of the world

COPYRIGHT 1904 BY COLLIERS WEEKLY

"THE PIKE,"—THAT PART OF THE EXPOSITION CORRESPONDING TO CHICAGO'S "MIDWAY PLAISANCE"

This feature extends along a boulevard over a mile in length, which will be lined on both sides with elaborate and picturesque attractions

Machinery Hall

Transportation Building

The Pike, in the distance

Varied Industries Building

Electricity Building

VIEW NORTHWARD FROM THE TERRACE OF STATES

THE VARIED INDUSTRIES BUILDING

Covers fourteen acres. The Manufactures and Liberal Arts Building at Chicago, the largest exhibition building ever constructed, covered thirty-one acres

VIEW NORTHWARD FROM FESTIVAL HALL

On the left are the Electricity and Varied Industries buildings; on the right, the Education and Manufactures buildings. The Grand Basin, which is the chief aquatic feature of the Exposition's plan, lies in the center, with the Statue of Peace beyond. From the basin a system of lagoons stretches out among the other buildings. The statuary in the foreground represents physical liberty

A GARDEN NUN

By
LUELLEN TETERS

Illustrated by
THOMAS FOGARTY

MISS LAWSON put on her black straw hat with its bow of black-and-white ribbon, and stepped hesitatingly out on the broad piazza, scanning the sky with a judicious eye. Across the blue expanse drifted some watery white clouds which seemed to be hastening toward an opalescent fortress of nebula far to the west.

She walked thoughtfully down the street, alive to the sensuous thrill of spring in the air; the budding fragrant leafage of the trees scented the soft wind which set a-dancing the prim crimson-laden stems of bleeding-hearts. The gardens by which her steps took her were assuming gayer tints from early budding flowers, which had not feared to dare the departing winter mood and peep timidly out. She leaned over a fence to admire a flaunting pink rose; a woman in a blue calico dress was industriously digging up grubs from the rich black soil.

"How are you, Miss Lawson?" She rose from her cramped position at sight of her. "I saved my first rose for you." Mrs. Cadnor advanced to the gate, holding out the beautiful satiny flower.

"For me? oh, no," Miss Lawson protested, with a faint flicker of color in her pale cheeks. "Here comes your Eugenie; she's young and pretty; just the kind for a pink rose. I wouldn't mind taking that little wax lily neglected over there among those dandelions. You know I'm fonder of lilies than any other flowers. I hated to pull mine to-day for fear some one would want them before night. Widow Allen's daughter is real sick with the fever, they say. You never can tell what will happen, and lilies work up so well in wreaths." Mrs. Cadnor gave her the preferred flower.

"Here's a rose for you, Eugenie," Miss Lawson said to the girl as she joined them. Eugenie was a bit in awe of Miss Lawson; she had an indescribable air of distinction. Even the gray lawn she wore this morning made her pink percale appear cheap and tawdry. "Put it under your chin," Miss Lawson went on merrily, "and somebody will lose his heart in it." The young girl blushed deeper.

Miss Lawson moved on along the old brick sidewalk toying with the white wax lily her friend had given her. Her eyes turned stealthily toward an old quaint red-brick house, whose severe walls were broken by numerous many-paned windows. Purple flags edged the walk leading to a wide piazza, whose high roof was supported by fat, white-painted columns. Some faded rugs were airing on an old stone sun-dial; over the bright green grass straggling wild-wood violets made a blur of blue. "It was such a day as this—when he went away from me, angry," Miss Lawson mused dreamily, with tender eyes. Far back in the years of her youth John Sheldon had declared his love for her. But a lover's doubts had widened into jealousy—for she had not been averse to being acknowledged the village belle—and he had gone away. It was the average chronicle of a woman's heart, only with her the romance had proven abortive and unfinished. In the companionship of her flowers she sought forgetfulness, making them her charges, and spending the most of her time in her sequestered garden. Stately and tall, the villagers were accustomed to see her gray-clad figure moving in and out among the rows of roses and nodding lilies; no man had ever been admitted to her choicest retreat in the rear; here bloomed her rarest posies, shielded from the sun's fervor and screened from the wind's wanton caresses. "She makes me think of those gray-clad Sisters that stay in the convent," some one had remarked; and the title, the Garden Nun, clung to her.

Miss Lawson passed the familiar house, trying to suppress a rush of old memories that assailed her always at sight of it. A girl wheeling a very modern go-cart, lavishly decorated with lace and ribbon, was coming toward her. She knew every villager from infant to centenarian, and she stepped to one side to let the vehicle pass.

"Whose child is that, Nancy?" she asked its nurse, as she stooped over the sleeping infant; the small white face seemed almost smothered by the scented ruffles of its belongings.

"Major John Sheldon come home yesterday," the girl glanced in the direction of the brick house. "His wife died last year. He's brought the baby here to raise in the country air." Miss Lawson grasped the sharp picket railings of the fence with cold, unsteady fingers. His child—and he was here, too. She tried to regain control of herself, and then she suddenly bent low, and, catching the tiny, frail, little hands, raised them to her lips, kissing them hungrily. It was part of the caress that she had faithfully kept for him all those years—when he should return to her. She had never dreamed that he would swerve in his fidelity to her, even if anger had separated them.

"That child is bundled up too much," she said harshly, passing on. She had put quite a distance between them when she abruptly turned around again.

"Nancy," she called softly. The go-cart turned in her direction. "Don't you ever wheel it up my way?" she asked in a trembling voice. "I—I think the shade up there is splendid for it. The air seems fresher. I've got some pretty crocheted slippers I was going to give you. Can't you come up to-morrow morning—for them?" The falsehood tripped on Miss Lawson's unsullied tongue; she was ashamed of her own cupidity.

"It's real kind of you, Miss Lawson. Yes, I can wheel him up to-morrow; he's got to have his milk now. He ain't a bit strong." Miss Lawson watched her enter the gate with a peculiar expression, half envy, half fear, on her face; she mentally followed their progress to the house, for a fringe of trees concealed them from view. A thousand questions filled her mind; she wondered if its father cared for it; she heard his voice call out to the nurse in accents mellowed by time; it impressed her all at once that he was not young as she had always unconsciously thought of him; John Sheldon must be at least forty-five years old. And she had not seen him for nearly fifteen years.

She hastened home, perturbed into unusual excitement. Look where she would, haunting fragments of the past stared nakedly at her; on the bark of the old elm tree in her garden were his initials entwined with hers in blunt lettering.

Overhead the birds were chattering noisily; there was a soft, languorous suggestion of rain in the air; it was the same old familiar scene, the same azure sky, only he and she had changed. And now he had come back—

MISS LAWSON LOOKED DUMBLY DOWN THE ROAD

Hurt pride and joy quickened her breath. In the chaos of her mind two thoughts stood out cruelly. He had returned as the mourning husband of another, and he had not made any attempt to seek her. She went into her cloistered garden, staring with unseeing eyes at the white, passionless faces of her lilies. "I suppose he calls it John—after himself," she mused audibly.

"What did you say, mum?" Her maid's solemn voice called back from a kitchen window where she was rolling pie-crust.

"I was thinking of my new lilies," she said quietly, with an undignified beating of the heart. She retraced her steps to the house, and, going to her room, softly locked the door behind her.

Removing her hat, Miss Lawson stood in front of a mirror, gazing pitilessly at the reflection of herself. Faint lines of suffering lent a wistful expression around her clear, gentle eyes. She could tell the cause of each mark: tears when her mother and father were taken from her; nights of anguish at the loneliness of the old house, when she was left in solitude with her thoughts to taunt her. There had been no answer to her unrest—only the solace of her flowers in her unsunned, sweet-scented garden. Threads of gray showed in the smooth brown hair waved back from her white brow.

"I am an old woman now," she told herself unkindly, covering her face with her hands to shut out the picture. Sharply silhouetted against the colorless past, the trivial little doings and the charm of their love stood out; a thousand treasured remembrances surged over her. Sometimes the careless touch of fingers on a piano, a broken chord, may rouse to life some long dormant bitterness or an old-time joy. Hearing again John Sheldon's voice had evoked from her all of the forgotten tenderness of the past. A strange impulse impelled Miss Lawson to her closet, and, crouching on her knees, her breath disturbed, she took from out a drawer, folded away in sprigs of fragrant lavender and rosemary, a long-waisted, blue-flowered dress, holding it fondly up to her face. Her skin appeared old and sallow beside the pretty color.

"What a fright I should look in it now," she cried, with a sob in her voice. She glanced with a trembling lip out of the window. There was the old cherry-tree with its seat, where he had read to her the "Idylls of the King." The emptiness of her life arose before her; she had had so little; she had been suffering in silence for years, and led the world to think that she was happy. And all the time something within her was crying out in hunger for affection. His child—

Miss Lawson rested her head against the frame of the door and burst into tears.

"Your lunch, mum," her maid was announcing. "An' shall I whip the cream for the berries? Berries don't look purty without some kind of dressin'—just like a school-girl in a sash."

"Yes, yes, Jane," her mistress answered wearily.

Face it from whatever attitude she assumed, the abject loneliness of her life stared back at her; there was a monotony about its slightest routine.

"I suppose the child can play with toys," she was thinking as she drank her tea from a fragile egg-shell cup. "I wonder if it would care for dolls?"

It occurred to her that some of the sawdust creations of her youth were stored away in the attic. To search for them among old relics of schooldays occupied the afternoon. By nightfall Miss Lawson's little parlor was disordered with a conglomerate collection of dishes, rattles, engines, and an old-style wooden cradle. Jane followed her assortment with staring wide-eyed wonder.

"I expect company to-morrow, Jane," Miss Lawson explained calmly.

Her impatience over the arrival of her guests kept her tossing wakefully during the night. She arose early and had Jane cleaning the house before sunrise. Then Miss Lawson went to her choicest flower-beds and relentlessly clipped the finest posies. The morning waxed and midday came, but there was no appearance of the blue-ribboned and lace-canopied go-cart and its small occupant. Miss Lawson tried to crochet, but she was obliged to ravel out her stitches. She endeavored to read, and discovered her book was upside down. Her embroidery gave her no solace, for a half an hour's application at it revealed to her that she had worked a pansy in green silk and its foliage in shades of purple.

An acute disappointment seized her; combating with her pride, she shut herself in her room, restraining a desire to go and see for herself what caused the delay.

Late in the afternoon she went to her closet and took from its sanctuary the blue-flowered dress; with nervous fingers she drew it on, and fitted the long narrow waist under a blue ribbon sash. Following a feminine impulse, she braided her hair and tied it at the back under a blue bow. The mirror gave back a charming picture despite the pale cheeks and tired lines around the mouth. From off the top-most shelf Miss Lawson took down an old hat-box and pulled out from folds of tissue-paper a straw flat, wreathed with bursting pink roses and cornflowers. She felt that it travestied her faded brown hair. There was a white lace veil in a top-drawer; she pinned it over her face, and with the first degree of satisfaction that she had known for years met the admiring eyes of her other self in the glass. It seemed to her that she had grown old only in this last day; the knowledge of passing years had escaped her before. She hastily left the room, feeling guilty, as if caught at some misdemeanor. Before the old mahogany bookcase she paused meditatively, and then she reached up and took out the "Idylls of the King," and opened it again at "Launcelot and Elaine"—where he had left off reading that last day under the cherry-tree—and she placed it face downward on the old seat.

She felt that she had stepped fifteen years back into the past. There was a bouquet of red tulips, his favorite flower, in the hall, in a big willow-ware bowl. On the piazza, his old favorite splint-bottomed chair had been brought down from the attic by the speculative Jane and placed confidentially near hers.

Miss Lawson looked out on the country road as the noise of a buggy sounded; some early great golden-winged flies trembled in dusty bars of light; over the yellowish young grass the afternoon shadows were stretching. There was a flutter of a girl's pink dress in the seat of the vehicle; a man whose slightly gray-tinged hair showed under his hat was driving. Miss Lawson leaned forward to better scan them.

The numbness of despair stole through her, freezing every bit of animation within her. For she recognized Eugenie Cadnor as the girl in the buggy, and the man at her side was Major John Sheldon.

She essayed to rise, but her feet were unsteady beneath her and she sank weakly into the chair. A veritable soul-sickness swept over her. In this silent contemplation the dreariness of the future seemed far more intolerable than the misery of the past; the content which years of resignation had won for her had deserted her in one day. Life at its best had been such a compromise with her that she could no longer cheat herself into a pretence of happiness.

She watched the flight of the buggy with wistful eyes; they were taking the country road down whose sunlit stretches the trees hung a thin light-green canopy, and the shy pink of a few daring wild roses made a riotous dash of color against the gray weather-beaten rail fence.

Miss Lawson jumped with alacrity to her feet, tossing pride to the winds. She had passed the last restriction of conventionality. Opening the gate with a determined click, she walked swiftly down the street, not pausing in the rapidity of her movement until she found herself before the old red-brick house. With a heroism with which she had never hitherto accredited herself, Miss Lawson entered the yard for the first time in years, and with a loudly beating heart she knocked on the panels of the door.

Nancy Stokes, flushed and disheveled, responded. Her eyes opened in surprise at sight of Miss Lawson's girlish appearance.

"I waited all morning, Nancy," the elder woman cried uncertainly. "I just couldn't stand it any longer. Is he sick?"

The girl pointed toward a room at the end of the hall. Miss Lawson followed her over the heavy velvet carpet and entered it. A baby's wicker bed stood in one corner, and on the white silk pillow the child's head showed indistinctly; its eyes were closed in slumber.

"Fever," said the girl, placing her hand on its hot little forehead.

Miss Lawson raised her veil and bent over it, softly kissing it. "Bring me the carriage," she said with determination, "and put him in it at once. That child goes home with me to-night. These walls are damp and musty; the house has been shut up for years. It will kill the child to stay here. Come, be quick about it."

Opposition was futile, for Miss Lawson collected what necessary articles she would need for the time, and before long they were pushing the go-cart up the street and following the walk to her house.

Mrs. Cadnor espied them from her piazza, where she was doing some sewing. She went to the gate to further satisfy her curiosity, staring in consternation at the change in her friend's attire.

"I'm not going to stand by and see this child killed by neglect," Miss Lawson said defiantly, irritated by her neighbor's silence.

"My Eugenie and its father have gone for a buggy ride," Mrs. Cadnor remarked impressively. "I guess the rose you stuck under her chin brought her a lover all right, Miss Lawson. He called that evening and asked us to go to the Ridge with him to-day, but as I was busy putting up gooseberries I let Eugenie go alone. When a man's trying to court, I think we ought to give him all the opportunities we can." At this unconscious explanation of the incident a feeling of relief darted through Miss Lawson.

"I saw them go by," she said quietly. "I think we will have to hurry. It looks very much like rain." Overhead a tiny fleecy cloud was collecting vapors.

the ragged, uneven edges of the clouds growing ominously dark, as if they could not much longer contain their burdens.

Once at home, she took the baby in her own charge and put it to sleep in the old-fashioned wooden cradle, feasting on its little features and trying to trace out a resemblance in every curve. The long lashes fell over the eyes at last, and she left it sleeping softly. A peal of thunder startled her; she ran out in the yard to remove the book from the seat under the cherry-tree as the huge raindrops began to fall, her straw flat, with its decorations of cornflowers and roses, on her head. There was a noise at the gate, and she glanced up to see that a girl in a pink dress followed by a slightly elderly man were approaching her.

Major John Sheldon took a step ahead of Eugenie. "May we take refuge here until the shower is over?" he inquired, with his hand on his hat. "My horse frightens at thunder." Miss Lawson was unable to

A BALLAD OF THE PIKE

BY WALLACE IRWIN

You kin have yer marble buildin's and yer statoots set apart,
Yer Palaces of Industry and galleries of art,
You kin have yer architecture like a fairyland in white
And yer furrin exhibitions, fer I reckon they're all right;
But I'm lookin' fer my money's worth, so when I hit the hike
I'm a-goin' to St. Louis jest to see that durned old Pike.

I want to see the zoo
And the panyrama too.
I want to look at everything I like.
I've heard o' the Plaisance
And the Cairo girls that dance—
Say, I wonder if they'll have 'um on the Pike?

I want to see the furrin cities all along the track,
I want to go through Paris to Jerusalem and back,
I'd like to see the hull of it—I think I'd jest as soon
Take the submarine to Hades and the airship to the moon.
I don't care how I git there, friend, but when I make a strike
It's me fer old St. Louis jest to live along the Pike.

It must be kind o' phoney,
Like an eddycated Coney,
Or a solid mile o' Barnum, if ye like;
And I jest tell you, by jingo,
I'm a-hopin' that I kin go
Fer a week or so to rubber on the Pike.

I'd like to see the Zunis an' the Kunis an' the Japs,
The Moujiks an' the Moslems an' the Romanys an' Lapps;
I don't much care about the names they have, but I must say
It'll be right smart instructive jest to see 'em anyway.
What's the use to cross the ocean and fer weeks or months to hike
When the world in twenty minures can be saw along the Pike?

You kin reach the Polar clime
Fer a quarter, while a dime
Takes you plumb to the equator, if ye like;
You can travel clean to Mars,
An' a ways beyond the stars,
Fer a dollar thirty-seven on the Pike.

I want to see the Filipinos livin' on the plain,
An' the dawnin' o' creation an' the sinkin' o' the Maine,
An' other great inventions, like the Chinee an' the Turks,
An' the men from France an' Borneo a-carryin' their dirks—
Then the cityful o' side shows—there's the kind o' thing I like;
I reckon I'll go busted when I travel down the Pike.

I spend no golden gravel
On yer dinky furrin travel
Or bargain-sale excursions on a bike;
But the time is swiftly nearin'
When I'll be jest disappearin'—
And I reckon you can find me on the Pike.

reply, she bowed her head, speechless, and then she bravely raised her eyes and looked at him; and, as he returned that gaze, John Sheldon felt a subtle flame leap from her soul to his. Out of the dim forgotten past a little mannerism, her way of regarding him, half-wistful, half-roguish, was recalled to him. He extended a hand that shook in spite of himself.

"Surely you are not—" he paused, overcome at the possibility of it, his eyes amazingly traversing her blue-flowered dress and rose-crowned hat. Around the yard his gaze alighted on the "Idylls of the King," on a well-remembered seat. There was his favorite chair near hers on the piazza. An inarticulate cry escaped his lips.

"Yes, I am—" said Miss Lawson softly, but her voice broke.

"I thought you were all gone away—" he continued doubtfully. "They told me you had married; your people had died."

"That was another Mary Lawson, my cousin, who married," she explained tremblingly, "and all the family except me have gone away—to the city. But I wanted to stay here."

Suddenly there arose on the air, in querulous, sharp intonations, the wail of an infant. Miss Lawson blushed a guilty red, an inward perturbation seizing her as she all at once realized the enormity of what she had done; the flagrancy of her actions of the afternoon, in boldly going unsolicited to this man's house and carrying off his child, now gained terrifying proportions to her maidenly conscience. There was no excuse she could offer for her deed as she saw it in this criminating light. Under his quick, piercing gaze at the sound she flushed and turned pale, overcome with a sickening dread of his censure.

"I must go in for a minute," she burst forth in desperation.

"Whose is it?" he asked suspiciously, covering her with a peculiar sweep of his eyes.

"One of my neighbor's—that is—I—I—" she stammered awkwardly, unable to tell him the truth.

"Mary—" he began sternly.
"Wait," she cried breathlessly, eager to prevent any condemning speech; she preferred his honest wrath rather than any criticism as to her evasions. "Don't be too hard on me—I will tell you. It is your child—" She hid her face in the folds of her blue dress.

"Mine?" His countenance expressed the astonishment he felt. Miss Lawson swallowed something that choked in her throat and raised her clear blue eyes without faltering to him, brave in the integrity of her purpose.

"I know I deserve your anger," she spoke rapidly. "I know I did wrong to go there when you were away, and take it. But I was afraid if you knew you wouldn't let it come—The house is too damp and musty for it, anyway. It would kill it to stay there. And I wanted it so badly—" He made no comment on her words; there was a barely perceptible compression of his lips that she did not like.

"Don't blame me too much, John. If you only knew how lonely I have been. Let me keep the child—care for it as my own," she begged. "Unless it has better care it will die; John, I will take such good care of it, and then if you want it after it is well and strong—why, then—I—I'll give it back to you—" They had both forgotten Eugenie's presence at one corner of the piazza.

"I do not see how I can accede to your suggestion," he said harshly. "These staid old villagers would talk, and I— You seem to overlook the fact that I have any affection for the child—I am its father, you know."

Miss Lawson looked dumbly down the road; the rain-drops made little holes in the dust and sent out a fresh pungent odor.

"You are right," she said, biting her lips to keep the tears back.

"There are certain conditions, though—" he resumed slowly. "Look at me, Mary—" She turned her back rudely on him, her chin quivering, her grief seeking the outlet of tears.

"Why, Mary—" he said strangely. A robin caroled over their heads on a locust bough.

"I don't want to give up the child," she sobbed; "I have had so little in my life—nothing to love all these years—"

"Neither have I," he declared emphatically. "The child's mother was left in my care. I thought to gain content by marrying her. Love I left behind me—when I left you, Mary—"

"Don't say that," she cried weakly. The wail of the child rang out again from the house, pitiful and enfeebled. She gave one step toward it, but he caught at the folds of her dress, staying her progress.

"You know the conditions," he cried, his face white, his eyes stormy. "Where my child stays I go. Is it yes or no?"

Miss Lawson's gaze wavered helplessly around her garden walls. Everything before her was endeared to her because of association with him, but the best part of her youth was gone, and the gray desolation of the years back of the present arose in unvoiced protestation against the inclination of her heart. It was too late now.

The baby's sobs sounded, cutting through her and compelling all of her latent sympathy. She could not leave it abandoned to the caprice and whimsical attention of any nurse. Afraid of repenting of her decision, she turned hastily to the father as he stood, commanding and tall, beside her.

"For the child's sake—yes," her tearful voice said.

He grasped her firmly by the wrist, almost hurting her in the intensity of his emotion.

"No, for mine," he demanded with his old-time imperiousness. "For my sake, Mary."

"Oh, you are so cruel," she said, her lips quivering again. But the Major read his answer in her remark, for he stooped and reverentially kissed her.

I WISH that I could meet, face to face, every man who reads this advertisement, and who thinks: "I would like to try that, but there must be a colored gentleman in the woodpile somewhere"—or turns it aside with a shrug that says: "Nonsense, it can't be done."

Fortunately, a few respond. The vast majority of these remain customers of mine. Could I talk it over face to face, I could tell them something interesting about cigars. Could I take them through my factory and show how my cigars are made, of what they are made, and incidentally dissect a few cigars of other makes, these doubting ones would become customers.

My business is manufacturing cigars. I sell the entire product of my factory direct to smokers, by the hundred and thousand, at wholesale prices. It costs me something to sell a man his first hundred; after that he orders of his own volition.

Every cigar I sell is made in my factory. I have standing orders for thousands of cigars, from all quarters of the United States, to be shipped on given days of the month as they come around. Still other thousands are sent to men who order and re-order in lots of one hundred to one thousand. Not one of these men ever heard of me excepting through my business.

My cigars must sell themselves.

MY OFFER IS: I will, upon request, ship on approval one hundred Shivers' Panetela cigars to a Collier's WEEKLY reader, all express charges prepaid. He may smoke ten, and return the remaining ninety, at my expense, if he is not pleased. If satisfied and he keeps the cigars, of course he agrees to remit the price—$5.00—for them within ten days. This applies also to subsequent orders. I simply want to give the cigars a chance to sell themselves.

In ordering, please use business letter-head or enclose business card, and state whether mild, medium, or strong cigars are desired.

My claim is that the equal of my Panetela cigars, which I sell at $5.00 a hundred, is not retailed anywhere for less than ten cents straight, and that no other cigar in the world is sold to the consumer at a price so near the actual cost of manufacture.

My customers are bankers, merchants, manufacturers, lawyers, physicians, clergymen—men who would not buy my cigars at any price unless they were actually good. Another fact, every visitor to my factory buys cigars.

There are no discounts to dealers or clubs. I cannot afford to make a discount on any quantity. I can only hope to succeed by giving my customers a much better cigar than they can procure in any other way at or near the same price. And I do.

Think a moment of the risk I take to make a customer—one-tenth of my cigars (all of them, should some unworthy take advantage of me) and expressage both ways. How can a smoker refuse to try my cigars? Where is the possible risk to him?—Provided, of course, that $5.00 per hundred is not a higher price than he cares to pay. Write me if you smoke. Address: HERBERT D. SHIVERS, 904 Filbert Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

WAR CORRESPONDENCE FROM TOKIO

By FREDERICK PALMER

(Continued from page 8.)

One of them was found. He explained that family affairs had detained him, and he had had no real intention of deserting.

"If that is so," said the officer in charge, "you can prove it by taking your own life."

The man drew his small knife and declared his willingness to plunge it into his abdomen there and then. But hura-kiri is against the law, as well as against the spirit of modern Japan. "Since you want to die for your country, you may," said the officer. "We will take you back into the ranks." These are two of many stories going the rounds, which, if difficult of verification by the foreigner with his limited means, none the less show the temper of the people and the times.

Nothing is more significant of where the news in the home papers comes from than the infrequency and the brevity of the despatches from Tokio. The cable correspondent never saw how his despatches were sent. The authorities cut out whatever they thought undesirable, and, with these eliminations, whether it made sense or not, the despatch was sent. No malignity was intended by this, for Japan is unused to a censorship, being a free country and having none in time of peace. When the cable correspondent pointed out the unfairness of the method, they expressed their willingness to remedy it. An arrangement is to be made whereby the writer may see the elisions, and at least make sense of the message before it is sent. The truth is that there is little to send in Tokio except facts and official reports. You can hear more rumors in an hour in Shanghai than in a week here. All the rumors from every Chinese port are sent by the indefatigable army of news vendors. Never has the world seen so many wild reports as those that appear in the home papers. We here wondered how the sixteen-page morning edition was to fill the space which the importance of the war demanded. Now we understand the secret at the same time that we foresee heavy dividends for the coming year for all the cable companies in the Orient. Probably the spread heads give no one more satisfaction than the officers of the General Staff. Anything that leads to confusion of information serves their purpose—the General Staff working so quietly, so quietly, so quietly.

The Japanese Not Over-confident

What is now most impressive to the foreigner is that the elation of victory has left no aftermath of over-confidence. Before the naval engagements the Japanese asked themselves the question, "What if Russia should win on the sea?" They took all possibilities into consideration. Now that the sea is clear, now that the first premise is assured, they do not look to easy victories on the land. Instead of saying, "We are going to Harbin," they ask the foreigner politely, "Can we go to Harbin?" (In their hearts they may be perfectly sure that they can; for no man has yet fathomed the potentialities behind the Japanese smile.) I have talked with no intelligent Japanese who did not fully realize that the land, not the sea, was the Russian's natural element. The attitude of the officers themselves recalls the remark of an ensign of our squadron at Santiago.

"When I saw the Spanish ships coming out," he said, "I remember thinking that in ten minutes the scuppers would be running with blood. When it was all over I couldn't quite realize that I was still alive."

The Japanese expect carnage in Manchuria; nothing more or less. They are counting upon gigantic battles and heavy losses. They go to their work with the grim determination of one to whom the cost is clear. If they have swept across the railway behind Port Arthur by the first of July, as many of their admirers expect that they will, without an appalling list of dead and wounded, the average officer will be surprised. Perhaps the General Staff will not be. We fancy that Kodama knows all. He knows not only where the landings will be made, but where the battles will be fought. The Japanese officers dressed as Chinese, who are acting as spies, must keep the General Staff informed as to every Russian movement. They can slip back into Korea or Newchwang with their news, and once it is in Japanese territory it flies over a wire held exclusively for Government purposes. It is impossible for a Russian to be a spy in Japan. He can adopt no disguise which will deceive the native. The movements of every foreigner are known. If he is at all suspected he is never out of sight of the police. If he goes on forbidden ground or does a forbidden thing he is instantly warned—with the omnipresent smile, of course. This land of 45,000,000 inhabitants is like a club: Only members can get past the doorkeeper. The intelligence work of the General Staff, like most of the inside history of the war, will never be written. No one knows the names of the three officers whom the Russians hanged for an attempt to dynamite a bridge. No one knows how many others are now playing some hazardous part under the Russian flag. The most romantic and human chapters of the war which are daily being enacted are a sealed book to everybody except four or five responsible men.

Political speculation is common to all capi-

Safety in Slumber

The Safety Folding Bed

is just a bed—it does not imitate any other piece of furniture.

When in use, it cannot close. When folded, it stands against the wall out of the way.

Features possessed by no other bed are: convenience, safety, ease of operation, strength, durability, beauty, perfect ventilation and cleanliness.

The springs cannot lose their strength or elasticity.

Finished in any of ten colors and trimmed in brass or oxidized copper, and nickel.

All the usual sizes, and a "twin bed" for couples who want to occupy separate beds and economize space.

The "Safety" costs no more than poorer ones.

Ask your dealer—insist.

Send for handsome art catalogue No. 7

Safety Folding Bed Co.
Ltd.
Detroit, Mich.

CLOSED

HALF OPEN

OPEN

Do you find it hard to pull the corks out of your ale bottles?

If so write

EVANS' ALE

Hudson, N. Y.

and ask about an easier way to get a drink of ale

$200 A MONTH

Active Man or Woman in each county to exhibit, take orders and appoint agents for Kerosene Oil Gas Stoves for cooking. New and wonderful inventions. Customers never so delighted with our improved burner. Agents coming our way. Enormous demand. Rapidly replace gasless stoves. Absolutely safe. Makes its own gas from kerosene oil. Cheapest, cleanest fuel. Sells at sight. Catalogue Free. Write today.

STANDARD GAS LAMP CO., 161-163 Ontario St., Chicago

GOOD LUCK PIN Sent Postpaid 15c. Oxidized Silver, Ruby or Emerald Eyes. Suitable for all. Hugh Connolly, Jeweler, 23 State St., Detroit, Mich.

THE DOBSON X-RAY Latest Scientific Wonder. Here is an article, large, that will show you. With it the clothes and flesh turn transparent and all the bones can be plainly seen. Just think of the fun you can have with it! Sample in along lot, with catalogue and agents' prices. Two cents, by mail. J. H. PIERCE, Dept. 14, Stamford, Conn.

Shorthand a Mine We loan you a Shorthand machine, teach you Shorthand & Typewriting by Mail, and help you get a position in Chicago at good salary and with pure promotion. For Stem, 1741-1743 Canal, Chicago, Ill.

CALIFORNIA

with its lovely seaside resorts, orange groves, beautiful gardens and quaint old mission towns, is visited every year by thousands of tourists who travel over the

UNION PACIFIC and SOUTHERN PACIFIC

FASTEST TIME
SHORTEST LINE
SMOOTHEST TRACK

Accommodations for all classes of passengers.

E. L. LOMAX, G.P. & T.A.
UNION PACIFIC
Omaha, Neb.

WHY NOT LEARN SIGN PAINTING?

Show-card Writing or Lettering. Separate courses. Only field not over-worked. Thorough and comprehensive instruction by mail at your own home by a teacher with a national reputation. Easy terms. Write today for large illustrated catalogue of particulars. THE DETROIT SCHOOL OF LETTERING, Dept. E, Detroit, Mich. "Oldest and largest school of its kind."

A tire that enhances the value of a good machine.

A fine combination of the essential qualities that promote ease, strength and durability.

Booklet and Art Calendar sent on request. MORGAN & WRIGHT, 17 May St., CHICAGO

NEW YORK DAYTON IN LOUIS SAN FRANCISCO

ALEXANDER & DOWELL

(Established 1857)
Attorneys at Law and Solicitors of

PATENTS

607 Seventh St. Washington, D. C.

An instructive book to inventors and manufacturers on the subject of patents sent free upon request. Ask for book 1. Please cut this out for future reference.

A NEW SCHOOL FOR BOYS

Prepares for college or business. Ages 14-19. Complete scholastic equipment. Faculty of 25. Conducted on board the American Line Ocean Steamship "Pennsylvania" en voyage to the various countries of the world. Capacity 250 cadet students.

The study of the classics, modern languages, history, geography, natural sciences, commerce and art illustrated by graphic object lessons in the places visited. All observation on shore intelligently directed by members of Faculty. Unusual advantages for individual training and instruction.

Organization and discipline like Naval Academy. The development of personal honor and manliness is the aim of the moral training. Two regular physicians on board. A Director of physical culture. Every temptation of life on shore avoided, kindly care and wise oversight ever at hand.

The cruise follows the temperate climate and is laid out on the most approved routes for the avoidance of storms. With no exacting schedule to make the travel will be like a delightful yachting trip. The "Pennsylvania" sails from Narragansett Bay, Rhode Island, September 15 next, voyages 19,000 miles, touching at 50 ports in Europe, N. Africa and the West Indies, returning home in June, 1905.

Attractive features of the equipment are a music room, library, printing presses for the School periodical, dark room and photographic facilities, gymnasium, scientific museums and a ship's band for military and social functions. The Ship is provided with two steam launches and twelve large rowing and sailing cutters. Also tents and full camping outfit.

Cadets are drilled at ship's battery, infantry drill, with boats under sail and with oars, arm and away boats, single sticks, quarters, pitching camp, setting up drill, etc., etc.

The "Pennsylvania" is a safe and comfortable ship rated 1200; 360 feet long, 44 feet beam, 25 feet draught. Equipment includes every device for comfort and safety—heat, light, ventilation, distilled water, cold storage, extensive kitchens and corps of servants. The ship manned by full crew of sailors and mechanics—cadets take no part in operation.

PROSPECTUS FOR 1904-05 ON APPLICATION

NAUTICAL PREPARATORY SCHOOL, PROVIDENCE, RHODE ISLAND, U. S. A.

tails, and we have our share of it in Tokio. After the Foreign Office phase and the naval phase, we come to the political phase in Japan's attitude to Korea. The censor does not allow the use of that naughty word "protectorate." If no Japanese will say that the arrangement is a protectorate, none will say that it is not. The complete occupation of a country by foreign soldiers, its transformation from independence to suzerainty, have been accomplished with a deftness peculiarly Japanese. Yesterday Korea was Korean; to-day it is Japanese. The change seems only a set part of the programme. You may read the Japanese papers in vain for any elation over this masterful piece of policy.

From Masampo to Ping-yang there is absolute peace. The Japanese soldiers have stepped into their places as guardians as softly as a butler into a dining-room. The Koreans accept them as a matter of course rather than as the inevitable. Stripped of all nicely worded Foreign Office statements, the attitude of Japan toward Korea is clear. She means to be the same kind of a friend to Korea that England has been to Egypt. As one of the negotiators in a good bargain, she expects both sides to profit by it. Both will. Korea is redeemed to order; she is set on the pathway to progress. She will have railroads and factories and schools, just as Japan herself has. Within a month her place has been made secure. In the defence of the present régime all the strength of Japan will be sacrificed.

The Emperor's Golden Tooth

The Korean Emperor becomes what the Khedive is in Egypt—the figurehead of a definite, progressive policy. Is this right? In that connection one may only relate the principal subject which occupied the Emperor and his court during this present winter, when his country was in danger. A great scandal was aroused by the fact that, yielding to the fascination of the process and of the prospective yellow gleam in his mouth, the Emperor had had an American dentist make him a gold tooth. The geomancers, upon whose geometrical wisdom the ruler depends for advice, said that the imperial mouth had been profaned. There was only one way to restore the dignity of the royal house and of the empire, and that was to have the tooth removed. The geomancers had their way. Meanwhile, the Emperor of Japan, while considering the advisability of war, war measures, and the raising of a loan, was planning how Korea should be brought into the field of active civilization. This contrast of men and of peoples needs no comment to a people who are educating Filipinos or building schools in Khartoum.

What are Japan's intentions after she has taken Port Arthur? In nothing does she show her hand before the card is called. "Scrupulously, amazingly, exasperatingly correct," was the description of her whole attitude in this war by a none too friendly foreign diplomat. What if she should say to the other nations, after she had driven Russia out of Manchuria: "We have enforced the pledge of an integral China. Now, will you maintain it?" Every item that comes from North China is read here with the intensest interest. At the outset of the war it did not suit Japan's policy to have China engaged, lest Russia might seize naval bases on Chinese territory. With the Russian navy off the seas, what would be the result if the soldiers of Viceroy Yuan Shih-Kai should dispute the re-occupation by Russian troops of the territory south of the Liao River which Russia had already evacuated? How many more trumps has Japan up her sleeve? We who wait in Tokio have learned to be surprised at nothing.

WAR CORRESPONDENCE FROM ST. PETERSBURG

By JOHN C. O'LAUGHLIN

(Continued from page 8)

The assignment of four cruisers to Vladivostok, and the damages sustained by the Retvizan, Czarevitch, and Pallada, rendered the Russian Asiatic fleet inferior to that of Admiral Togo. The Pallada, which was gotten into dock, is again in active service. The Czarevitch, which had a large section of her bottom ripped out by the explosion of the torpedo—the hole is said to have had an area of 178 square feet—is on pontoons in the harbor and can not be repaired in time for the projected fleet operations. Repairs are being pushed upon the Retvizan, which can be considered again as a part of the effective Russian force. There is no truth in rumors circulated abroad that the guns of the Retvizan have been removed and installed in a shore battery. The Russians are consequently inferior to what they were before war commenced by but one battleship and two cruisers—the Varyag, sunk at Chemulpo, and the Boyarin, destroyed by mines, and a few torpedo-boat destroyers. Nevertheless the fleet will not participate in offensive operations, but for the present will remain, undamaged, it is hoped, under the guns of Port Arthur.

Russia believes that Japan's fate will be decided by the new fleet, which is to be formed in the Baltic, and which will arrive in the Far East the last of July or early in August. This fleet will comprise five first-class and three second-class battleships, one armored and five protected cruisers, six auxiliary cruisers, twenty-one torpedo-boat destroyers, and a number of oil ships and colliers. The battleships are the Imperator Alexander III, Orel, Kniaz Suvoroff—all of which are under construction—the Borodino, and the Orskoy, Sissoi Veliky, Navarin, and Imperator Nikolai I, which are in commis-

ROOF LEAK?

Elliot's Durable Asphalt Coating

is about the best investment the owner of a roof can make. Will add at least ten years to the life of a new or an old and leaky shingle, tin or felt roof. Makes rusty tin water-tight and arrests rusting. It is used as a liquid cement on big leaks and stops them absolutely.

Composed of pure Utah Asphalt, prepared Linseed-Oil and Pine Creosote (wood preservative) it prevents decay in new shingles and arrests it in old ones when used as a shingle dip or paint. Imparts no taste to water. Highly fireproof.

Will not soften in summer or crack in coldest weather. A boy can apply it. It is not possible to make a more durable liquid coating. Nothing else so good in salt water atmosphere—200 per cent more durable than pure oil paint. One-half the price. A perfect coating for iron fences, etc.

Made in Black, Dark Green and Rich Maroon. On a trial order we will send, express prepaid to your door, one gallon for $1.00. Sufficient for cementing 100 square feet, or painting 200 square feet. One gallon shingle dip covers 400 square feet shingles both sides. The express charges frequently cost us more than $1.00.

Five gallons or more, 75 cents per gallon, freight paid east of Denver. Guaranteed to be satisfactory or returnable at our expense. Please write for interesting booklet, "History of Asphalt," together with liquid samples free.

ELLIOTT VARNISH CO.,

CHICAGO, 149-151 Fulton St. NEW YORK, 249 Pearl St.

... TRY...

ROOF LEAK?

COLT Acetylene Gas

CARBIDE-FEED GENERATOR
CHEAPEST AND BEST
Complete Gas Plants from $48 to $5,000

More brilliant than gas or electricity. Costs less than kerosene. Satisfactory for any building anywhere.

Write for booklet W1

J. B. COLT CO.,

21 Barclay St., New York

The largest makers of Acetylene Apparatus and Stereopticons.

BRANCHES: Philadelphia, Chicago, Los Angeles

PIANO DO YOU WANT A GENUINE BARGAIN

Hundreds of Upright Pianos returned from renting to be disposed of at once. They include Steinways, Knabes, Fluchers, Steinlings and other well known makes. Many cannot be distinguished from new, yet all are offered at a great discount. Uprights as low as $300. Also beautiful New Uprights at $325, $335, $350 and $360. A fine instrument at $200, many $300 pianos. Monthly payments accepted. Freight only about $5. Write for list and particulars. You make a great saving. Pianos warranted as represented. Illustrated Piano Book Free.

Lyon & Healy

19 Adams Street, CHICAGO
World's largest music house; sells Everything known in Music.

TELEGRAPHY

Thoroughly and quickly taught. Expenses low and can be reduced one-half by working for board. Railroads give our graduates immediate employment and furnish free passes to destinations. We have more orders for operators than we can fill, and give students choice of different railroads in many states. Write for Catalog. We pay railroad fare to Janesville. Valentine's School, Est. 21 Years, Janesville, Wis.

O'Sullivan Rubber Heels are now described as the missing link between wings and shoes. Their buoyancy is due to the elasticity of new rubber. 35 cents and small sum for attaching. Buy of your dealer, or O'SULLIVAN RUBBER CO., LOWELL, MASS.

Apple Automatic Sparker

For Gas Engines, Automobiles, Launches, Etc.
HAS FEATURES FOUND IN NO OTHER
No batteries, no belt, no switch, no commutator trouble. Entirely enclosed, making it dirt and water proof. Easily attached. Send for complete description of this and other ignition apparatus.
THE DAYTON ELECTRICAL MFG. CO.,
125 Belmont Bldg., Dayton, O.

DIVIDEND

PAYING MINING, OIL, TIMBER, SMELTER AND INDUSTRIAL STOCKS making possible LARGE INTEREST AND PROFITS, listed and quoted our specialty. Booklets giving full information mailed free on application.
Douglas, Lacey & Co.
Bankers & Brokers 66 Broadway, New York

WANTED, strong young men to prepare for LOCOMOTIVE FIREMEN.

Also brakemen. Firemen average $45 monthly; brakemen average $125. Brakemen average $60; become Conductors and average $100. Name occupation preferred. Send stamp for particulars.
RAILWAY ASSOCIATION, Box 84, Station B, Brooklyn, N. Y.

ASTHMA (and its cure) CURED. Health restored. BOOK 4 Free. P. HAROLD HAYES, Buffalo, N. Y.

Established 1823

Chickering PIANOS

Illustrated Catalogue sent upon application

CHICKERING & SONS
794 Tremont St.
Boston, Mass.

Official Guide The World's Fair Illustrated

Contains 176 pages. Full Page half-tone illustrations of all World's Fair Palaces, State and Foreign Buildings, Map of World's Fair Grounds, Modes of Transportation, Illustrated with maps. It's the most complete and handsomely illustrated Guide ever published. All about the World's Fair and the City of St. Louis.
25c. (coin) will bring you a copy. Address
Official Guide
488 Railway Ex. Building
St. Louis, Mo.
Agents Wanted
(No sample copies)

Densmore, Official Typewriter of the World's Fair, St. Louis.

Head Office, 309 Broadway, New York.

PHOTO BROOCHES 10c.

Send us any photograph you want copied and we will return it with a beautiful set of four photo-brooches for only 10c. All our Photo-Brooches are exact and perfect reproductions. We send this 25c. sample for only 10c. to introduce our goods and send you Free our large 21 page list of photo-brooches, jewelry, novelties. Agents wanted.

CORONA MFG. CO., Box 1275, Boston, Mass.

World's Fair "Meteor"

The handsomest souvenir of the Greatest Exposition, in World's Fair colors (all) postpaid, 25c. Address W. F. METEOR CO.
354C Century Bldg., St. Louis.

3 Months Free

Send us your name and address and we will send you The Investor's Review for three months free of charge. A great journal of advice for everybody. Fully illustrated. Gives latest and most reliable information concerning industrial, mining, oil and other stocks and enterprises. Knowledge is power. Great opportunities come and go. Great fakes likewise. Get pointed before investing. Write to-day.
INVESTOR'S REVIEW, 1419 Gull Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

$3.00 COASTER BRAKE
Especially desirable for old wheels, as it can be secured on any bicycle hub in place of the ordinary sprocket. Purchased in all sizes. Address
CANFIELD BRAKE CO. CORNING, N. Y.

OUR 31 YEARS'

EXPERIENCE and continued success is a guarantee to you of good quality and fair dealing. WE HAVE NO AGENTS anywhere but sell direct to you, thus saving you the agent's and dealer's profit. We are the largest manufacturers of vehicles and harness in the world selling on this plan exclusively. We ship for examination guaranteeing safe delivery. You are out nothing if not satisfied. Our large illustrated catalogue is free. Send for it.

No. 2014—Five Wheel Horse-Driven Wagon with 14-inch Kelly Cashion Tires. Price complete $102.50. As good as sold for $25.00 more.

No. 401—Five Full Loop Leather Top Phaeton. Price complete $111.00. As good as sold for $30.00 more.

No. 515—Five Canopy Top Swoon with large roomy seats. Price complete $112.50. As good as sold for $30.00 more.

ELKHART CARRIAGE & HARNESS MFG. CO.
ELKHART, IND.

Dr. Shoop's Rheumatic Cure

Costs Nothing if it Fails

Any honest person who suffers from Rheumatism is welcome to this offer. For years I searched everywhere to find a specific for Rheumatism. For nearly 30 years I worked to this end. At last, in Germany, my search was rewarded. I found a costly chemical that did not disappoint me as other Rheumatic prescriptions had disappointed physicians everywhere.

I do not mean that Dr. Shoop's Rheumatic Cure can turn bony joints into flesh again. That is impossible. But it will drive from the blood the poison that causes pain and swelling, and then that is the end of Rheumatism. I know this so well that I will furnish for a full month my Rheumatic Cure on trial. I cannot cure all cases within a month. It would be unreasonable to expect that. But most cases will yield within 30 days. This trial treatment will convince you that Dr. Shoop's Rheumatic Cure is a power against Rheumatism—a potent force against disease that is irresistible.

My offer is made to convince you of my faith. My faith is but the outcome of experience—of actual knowledge. I know what it can do. And I know this so well that I will furnish my remedy on trial. Simply write me a postal for my book on Rheumatism. I will then arrange with a druggist in your vicinity so that you can secure six bottles of Dr. Shoop's Rheumatic Cure to make the test. You may take it a full month on trial. If it succeeds the cost to you is $5.50. If it fails the loss is mine and mine alone. It will be left entirely to you. I mean that exactly. I don't expect a penny from you. Write me and I will send you the book. Try my remedy for a month. If it fails the loss is mine.

Address Dr. Shoop, Box 9021, Racine, Wis.
Mild cases not chronic are often cured by one or two bottles. At all druggists.

STUDY LAW

Leading Law School
In Correspondence
Instruction
Established in 1892

Prepares for bar in any State. Qualifies theory and practice. Text books used are same as used in leading resident schools. Teaches law at your home. Three Courses—Regular College Course, Post Graduate, and Business Law Course. Approved by the bench and bar. Full particulars free. CHICAGO CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL OF LAW, Reager Block, Chicago

To Owners of Gasoline Engines, Automobiles, Lanchons, Etc.
The Auto-Sparker
done away entirely with all starting and running batteries, their annoyance and expense. No battery switch-boxes, batteries. Can be attached to any engine now using batteries. Fully guaranteed; write for descriptive catalog.
Mottinger Device Mfg. Co.
22 Main St., Peabody, Ind.

U.S. Patent Eye-Glass Guard

Don't Mar Your Nose—No Pressure—Firm—Safe—Easy. Sticks to Any Nose. Will Replace Spectacles. Ask your optician or write BORSCH & CO., 1103 Adams St., Chicago, Ill.

$3 a Day.

Send us your address and we will show you how to earn $3 a day absolutely sure; we furnish the work and teach you free, you work in the locality where you live. Send us your address and we will explain the business fully; remember we guarantee that you can earn $3 for every day's work. Write at once.
ROYAL MANUFACTURING CO., Box 1166, Detroit, Mich.

CIVIL SERVICE

Instructions preparing thoroughly for these examinations. Complete Home Study course, including Shorthand, Penmanship, etc., $5. Catalog Free.
C. C. GAINES, Box 961, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

sion. The Borodino, Alexander, Orel, and Suvareff are sister ships, each of 14,000 tons, 18 knots speed, well armored, and carrying four 12-inch, twelve 6-inch, forty smaller guns, and six torpedo tubes. The Borodino is ready at the New Admiralty yard and was inspected by the Emperor, but her draft is so great that in order to get her out of the Neva it will be necessary to remove her turret guns and install them again at Cronstadt. The Orel, building at Galernii Island, near St. Petersburg, will also receive her guns at Cronstadt. The Alexander and Suvareff are building at Cronstadt. The Slava, of this class, will not be ready for at least a year. While not as speedy as the Japanese Yashima and Fuji, these ships are superior in protection and armament. They are also inferior in speed to the other Japanese battleships, and there is not much difference in their protection and armament. The Oshadaya is of 13,000 tons—about that of the Yashima; her speed is a knot less, and her battery is inferior. The Sissoi Veliky is of 9,000 tons and was built ten years ago. Her armor is partly of the old compound type, and her main battery includes four 12-inch and six 6-inch rapid-fire guns. The Navarin is older than the Sissoi, but is of the same speed—16 knots—and has a main battery of four 12-inch and eight 6-inch breech-loading guns, for which rapid fire may be substituted. The Imperator Nicolai I is of 9,800 tons and has compound armor; her battery comprises two 12-inch, four 9-inch, and eight 6-inch guns, all breech-loaders. The Sissoi, Navarin, and Nicolai are inferior to the Japanese armored cruisers.

The Ships of the Baltic Fleet

There is but one armored cruiser available for the new Russian fleet—the Baltic fleet, as it is called. This is the Dmitri Donskoi, built twenty years ago and partially reconstructed in 1895. The Dmitri Donskoi is only of 5,900 tons, her greatest speed is 15.5 knots, and her heaviest guns are only six inches in calibre. The protected cruisers which will be attached to the fleet will be the Oleg, under construction, of 6,750 tons, 23 knots, and carrying twelve 6-inch and twenty-four smaller guns; Aurora, a sister ship of the Pallada, of 6,630 tons, 20 knots, and eight 6-inch and thirty smaller guns; Svetlana, of 3,828 tons, 20 knots, six 5.9-inch and twelve smaller guns; Jemchug and Sumrud, each of 3,000 tons, 25 knots, and six 4.7 inch and ten smaller guns.

In anticipation of the despatch of this fleet to the Far East, men are being drilled, especially in gunnery, in the Baltic training squadron. "The Japanese are getting plenty of practice by their bombardments of Port Arthur," said an officer to me. "It was this practice that enabled the American squadron to do such effective work at Santiago when the Spanish squadron attempted to escape. Unfortunately, the men of the Baltic fleet will not be under fire until they go into action. For this reason they are required to participate in constant target practice, and the Japanese will not find any green gunners upon which to try their mettle." The commander of the fleet will be Admiral Rojestvensky, a man in whom the Emperor and the naval service have the greatest confidence. It is he who accompanies the Emperor upon all inspections of the ships to be assigned to the Baltic fleet. He does not appear in looks to be more than fifty-three years of age. He is exceedingly quiet and reserved, reminding me of Rear-Admiral Sampson. He gives you a grip of the hand when you approach him that is not soon forgotten, and then listens to what you have to say. He considers a moment, and out jumps the decision. There is no doubt about the mind of the man when he has spoken. His orders will result in his assignment under Admiral Makaroff if the two fleets effect a junction.

The Russians are Confident

This completes the exposition of the Russian forces, and gives an idea of the character of the men who are to direct them. It remains to be seen what use it is contemplated to make of these weapons. This is the absorbing topic of conversation wherever Russian military and naval men meet. The army, filled with courage, is patting itself on the back and telling the navy, in a good-natured way, that it will see that the Japanese are defeated. The navy accepts the banter, but it is determined to avenge the initial injuries sustained by the Port Arthur squadron. The other day I met Baron Persen, who served until recently as naval attaché of Russia in Washington. He will have command of the Jemchug. "In blowing up his ship," he said, "the commander of the Varyag took the only proper course. It is tradition in our navy never to surrender; to go down first. That tradition will be observed." Baron Persen made this statement simply, without any thought of vainglorious boasting, and I accepted his statement as an expression of the views of every other officer who will be attached to the Baltic fleet.

Naturally, it is pure speculation to discuss the plan of operations to be followed. The General Naval Staff and the General Army Staff have been considering this important matter separately and together. "Had the General Naval Staff had its way," I was told by an authority when I first arrived in St. Petersburg, "the Asiatic fleet of Russia would never have been weakened by the detachment of four armored cruisers and their assignment to Vladivostok." This statement is recalled now to show that the General Staff has a just appreciation of naval strategy. But what it has decided upon can not be known in spite of positive statements made by over-anxious correspondents or by subordinate military and naval officers in St. Petersburg who believe that they themselves possess the capacities of a thousand Moltkes and who

Dr. Lapponi

Physician to the Late Pope Leo XIII., and Now Physician in Ordinary to Pope Pius X., Finds

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER

Of "Marvelous Efficacy in Gout, Rheumatism, Gastro-intestinal Dyspepsia, and in all the Various Forms of Uric Acid Diathesis."

Following is an Exact Translation of Dr. Lapponi's Testimonial as Written by Himself:

ROME, August 24, 1903.—In the Hospital of San Giovanni Calibrita (del Fatebene Fratelli) in Rome, directed by myself, I have largely experimented with the natural mineral water placed in commerce under the name of BUFFALO LITHIA WATER and am glad to attest that, by its richness of composition of lithia, it is of marvelous efficacy in cases of Gout, of Chronic, Articular, and Muscular Rheumatism, of Hepatic Congestions and Functional Disorders, of Gastro-intestinal Dyspepsia, of Gravel and Renal Insufficiency, of light Nephritic Affections and of all the various forms of Uric Acid Diathesis.

The same water is also to be recommended highly in the initial processes of Arterio-sclerosis and in obstinate forms of Bronchial Asthma.

May also be used as a good table water. So much I declare for the truth.
(Signed) PROF. GIUSEPPE LAPPONI.

Principal Physician of the Hospital of San Giovanni Calibrita (del Fatebene Fratelli) in Rome, Member of the Academy of Medicine of Rome, etc., etc.

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER is for sale by Grocers and Druggists, generally. Testimonials which defy all imputation or question sent to any address.

Hotel opens June 15th.

PROPRIETOR BUFFALO LITHIA SPRINGS, VIRGINIA

CAUTION

The following Manufacturers and Importers are licensed under the pioneer patent Number 549,160, granted to George B. Selden, dated November 5th, 1895, on

Gasolene Automobiles.

In view of their license agreement they and their agents will not sell, keep on hand or in any manner dispose of or deal in directly or indirectly any unlicensed new or second-hand gasolene vehicles, infringing said Selden patent.

MANUFACTURERS:
Electric Vehicle Co.
Winton Motor Carriage Co.
Packard Motor Car Co.
Olds Motor Works
Knox Automobile Co.
The Haynes-Apperson Co.
The Autocar Co.
The George N. Pierce Co.
Apperson Bros. Automobile Co.
Locomobile Co. of America
The Peerless Motor Car Co.
Standard Motor Construction Co.
Waltham Manufacturing Co.
J. Stevens Arms & Tool Co.
H. H. Franklin Mfg. Co.
Pope Motor Car Co.
Smith & Mabley, Inc.
The Commercial Motor Co.
Berg Automobile Co.
Cadillac Automobile Co.
Northern Manufacturing Co.
Pope-Robinson Co.
The Kirk Manufacturing Co.
Elmore Manufacturing Co.
E. R. Thomas Motor Co.
Buffalo Gasolene Motor Co.
The F. B. Stearns Co.
Pope Manufacturing Co.
Sandusky Automobile Co.
Crest Manufacturing Co.

IMPORTERS:
Smith & Mabley, Inc.
Central Automobile Co.
Alexander Fischer
Hollander & Tangeman
Standard Automobile Co.
E. B. Gallaher
Auto Import Co.
F. A. LaRoche Co.
Sidney B. Bowman Automobile Co.

Both the basic Selden patent and more than 400 other patents owned by members of this Association will be enforced against infringers. Manufacturers, Importers, Dealers and Agents, also Users of unlicensed machines are liable.

ASSOCIATION OF LICENSED AUTOMOBILE MANUFACTURERS
No. 7 EAST 424 STREET, NEW YORK

LEARN TO WRITE ADVERTISEMENTS
Taught by Mail Thoroughly. Taught by the founder of the original school. Taught by an expert manner, enabling you to earn expert salary. Six years' success and hundreds of successful graduates. Large prospectus free on request.
PAGE-DAVIS CO., Suite 17, 90 Wabash Ave., Chicago

SUCCESS SHORTHAND
Taught by mail under the direction of the most successful firm of shorthand reporters in the world. They teach you by mail the same system they use. Write to-day for our book, "Success Shorthand System."
WALTON, JAMES & FORD
Suite 26, 77-79 Clark St., Chicago, Ill.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Widely known as a reliable remedy for bronchial diseases. Afford prompt relief for Coughs and Hoarseness. Avoid Imitations.
H. S. Johnston, Box 71, Stockley, Del.

Suit Made $12 to Measure

Suit Case Free

Fine All-Wool Tailor-Made Cashmere or Worsted Suit

Your Choice of a variety of colorings and weaves, and all the newest patterns just from the woolen mills. We direct special attention to the fabric. The cloth is specially woven from new, high grade wool; it is close woven and the wool is full of "life," so that the cloth is elastic and the garments will hold their shape. Before cutting into the cloth for each suit, the suit pattern is thoroughly shrunk. Our cutters are first-class workmen, who incorporate into the suit the latest style, and take into account the various little differences in build each man possesses. The suit is lined throughout with "Bulle" serge and the sleeve linings are of the celebrated "Powell" silk. All trimmings are the very best, and button-holes are hand-finished. The pants pockets are made of strong drilling, and all the findings are such as only can be secured in the high grade merchant-tailor articles. Our measure and order blank will enable you to take your own measurement accurately, and a perfect fit is guaranteed. We are manufacturers, importers and custom tailors, and guarantee our $12.00 suits to be equal in wear to the best suits you can obtain from your local dealer for Twenty Dollars, while in style and fit our garments are incomparably superior to any but the product of high-priced city tailors.

FREE Suit Case

In order to establish customers throughout the United States, we are giving on the first order received from any one person, a handsome suit case, which we use to ship the suit. The suit case that goes with each suit is most presentable and would cost in your local store from $5 to $8.

A trial is all we ask. You run no risk in ordering from us, as we guarantee absolutely a perfect fit. We do not ask you to pay for the goods before seeing them. We send them by express C. O. D., with the privilege of examination at Express Office, and if the suit is not satisfactory in fabric, finish or fit, you need not accept it; it will be returned to us at our expense. The suit shown in the picture is our No. 251, and is a wearable, becoming suit to most gentlemen. The price is $12.00. It is entirely new, out of the ordinary and very stylish. Samples of cloth that make up nicely in this style are shown in our new catalogue, which contains styles and samples varying in price from $12.00 to $20.00. Our catalogue and

SAMPLES OF CLOTH FREE will be sent you the very day your request for same reaches us. Remember, we have no agents, no branch stores, and no connection with any other clothing concern. Our business has been established 45 years. Write today for samples. Address Meyer Livingston Sons, Dept. 48, South Bend, Ind.

Reference: Citizens National Bank, South Bend, Ind.

We Want Agents for the

OLIVER Typewriter

—the standard visible writer—

in cities and towns where we are not at present represented. An agency for this progressive and up-to-date typewriter carries with it a dignified and profitable position for high class men. We add our agents to achieve success and extend their field as their development warrants. We seek to make it worth while for good men to remain with us permanently.

Previous experience neither essential nor objectionable. The Oliver agency can be carried on in connection with other business in some localities.

If you are the kind of man we are seeking, we will enter into details by correspondence on receipt of your inquiry.

The Oliver Typewriter Co.
149 Wabash Ave.
Chicago, Ill., U.S.A.

Foreign Office:
11 Queen Victoria St.
London, England.

Illinois Central R.R.

DAILY FAST TRAINS

Elegantly equipped with Dining, Buffet, Library, Sleeping and Reclining Chair Cars, from its northern and southern terminals, connecting at its numerous gateways with trains from the

EAST, SOUTH AND NORTH

Particulars of agents of the Illinois Central and connecting lines.

A. H. HANSON, Gen'l Pass' Agent, CHICAGO

Rest AND Comfort

The "Inside Inn"

The Only Hotel Inside the Gates
World's Fair
St. Louis

Cool, clean, quiet. Over 2,000 Rooms—with and without Bath. Dining-room seats 2,500. Splendid service. Rates include daily admission. Save time, money and trouble by living right inside the grounds. Rates $1.50 to $5.50 European, $3.00 to $7.00 American plan. Reservations may be made any time up to December 1.

Write for Booklet.

INSIDE INN, World's Fair Grounds
ST. LOUIS

RHEUMATISM

Tartarlithine

restores worn out organs to their old activities, and is thus the best remedy in those old chronic cases which seem to baffle treatment. It does not disturb the stomach.

Prescribed and endorsed by the leading physicians of the country.

Ask Your Doctor About It

Free sample and our booklet on the cure of Rheumatism sent on request

McKESSON & ROBBINS
76 ANN STREET NEW YORK
SOLE AGENTS FOR THE TARTARLITHINE CO.

Colorado Utah

AND THE

Pacific Coast MISSOURI PACIFIC RY.

BEST REACHED VIA THE OBSERVATION PARLOR GATE
DINING CARS, MEALS A LA CARTE, AND PULLMAN SLEEPING CARS WITH ELECTRIC LIGHTS & FANS

DOUBLE DAILY SERVICE
NO CHANGE OF CARS TO CALIFORNIA
LOW EXCURSION RATES

For further information address
H. O. TOWNSEND, G. P. & T. Agent, St. Louis

STOP FORGETTING!

You can by taking the Dickson Method by Mail.

Simple, inexpensive, easily acquired. Increases business capacity and social prestige by giving an alert, ready memory for names, faces, and details of business and study. Develops with, especially for thought, concentration. Personally conducted by Prof. Dickson, of Chicago Auditorium Conservatory and University of Notre Dame. FREE booklet and trial copyrighted lesson.

THE DICKSON SCHOOL OF MEMORY
711 The Auditorium, • • Chicago, Illinois.

Knowledge of Automobile matters will enhance your Social standing

Automobile Topics

A WEEKLY MAGAZINE of highest quality—entertaining, clever, instructive and superbly illustrated—will keep you posted.

See our Special Departments, entitled TOPICS, SOCIETY, CLUBS, SPORT, UTILITY and BOAT MOTORING.

KEEP ABREAST WITH THE PROGRESS OF THE TIMES

TWO DOLLARS invested for one year's subscription to AUTOMOBILE TOPICS will prove a paying investment. Send name and address for free sample copy To 1440 BROADWAY, NEW YORK CITY.

While You Are Well

You can provide for your future—and your children—at little cost. When you get sick or an invalid, you can't at any cost. "The How and the Why" tells—send for it. We insure by mail.

PENN MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE CO.
921 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia

THE PRUDENTIAL HAS THE STRENGTH OF GIBRALTAR

Two Purposes are Accomplished

by an Endowment Policy. It insures your having a cash sum if you live till the end of the Endowment period. It also insures your family, business or estate for full amount of Policy in event of your death before that time.

The Prudential Insurance Co. of America.

JOHN F. DRYDEN, Prest. Home Office: NEWARK, N.J.

Without committing myself to any action, I shall be glad to receive free, particulars and rates of Endowment Policies.

Send this Coupon for information.

For $..... Age.....

Name.....

Address.....

Occupation..... Dept. Y

Morning, Noon and Night Fast Trains to The West—Via NEW YORK CENTRAL

The culmination of
progressive enterprise

Two-Speed Gear, Coaster Brake Chainless Bicycles

Catalogues free at our 10,000 dealers' stores, or any one catalogue mailed on receipt of 2-cent stamp.

Western Dept. Eastern Dept.
Chicago, Ill. Hartford, Conn.

POPE MANUFACTURING COMPANY

Dixon's Pencil Guide

A book indexing various vocations and giving list of pencils best suited to each—is valuable information for pencil users—free.

Saves Pencil Troubles
Write for one to-day—keep it handy for reference

Department AQ
Joseph Dixon Crucible Co.
Jersey City, N. J.

The Greatest American Novel

By ALFRED HENRY LEWIS, Author of "THE BOSS"

THE PRESIDENT

The first installment appears April 23rd in

THE ILLUSTRATED SPORTING NEWS

Weekly

7 WEST 22d ST., NEW YORK

10 cents a copy

OUR SPECIAL
DOLLAR OFFER

This serial will run about 20 weeks. For $1.00 we will send the numbers containing the story.
This is HALF the REGULAR PRICE.

HOW DEPOSITED IN THE BANK

$75,000.00

IN CASH GIVEN AWAY

To arouse interest in, and to advertise the GREAT ST. LOUIS WORLD'S FAIR, this enormous sum will be distributed.
Full information will be sent you ABSO-LUTELY FREE. Just send your name and address on a postal card and we will send you full particulars.

World's Fair Contest Co.
108 N. 8th Street
St. Louis, Mo.

The Cloud
Chin Belt

Removes and prevents the unsightly double chin and
the lines around the nose and mouth.
A scientific and practical appliance that accomplishes its purpose by strengthening the muscles and preventing the flesh
from sagging. Worn while asleep, perfectly comfortable.
Price, 50 cents. $1.00. Illustrated booklet free on request.
Money refunded if not entirely satisfactory.
Miss Cloud, 203 So. 13th St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Jiu-Jitsu

Jiu-Jitsu is the Japanese method of Physical Training.
Jiu-Jitsu has been practised for 2500 years.
Jiu-Jitsu means "muscle-breaking."
Jiu-Jitsu is easily learnt.
Jiu-Jitsu gives power over an adversary that counts for more than strength.

For full information see H. IRVING
HANCOCK'S timely book

Japanese Physical Training

FOR MEN FOR WOMEN FOR CHILDREN

3 volumes. Illustrations from life
Each $1.35 by mail if not at your dealer's
Send for Illustrated Circular

G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS

19 West 23d Street NEW YORK

A Chance Courtship

is a story of an unconventional love match, well told and beautifully illustrated. The small picture above only suggests the real charm of these illustrations. As a bit of readable fiction the story is well worth writing for. It is contained in a handsomely bound book of 128 pages, a portion of which is devoted to the attractive mountain and lake resorts along the Lackawanna Railroad. It is a book you will like to see. It may be had by sending 10 cents in postage stamps to T. W. LEE, General Passenger Agent, Lackawanna Railroad, New York.

Ready for the Great Fair

(Continued from Page 16)

Louis, President of the Merchants' Exchange; and Mr. Cleveland's Secretary of the Interior, he could have gone into the show business, backed the late Hon. P. T. Barnum into a siding, and closed the switch. He stands six feet and over in his patent leathers, and he could successfully run a three-shell game with his fingers while he was addressing the Lord Mayor of London on the subject of international brotherhood. It is seriously believed in St. Louis that the heart of the Hon. "Dave" Francis is bigger and stronger than that of the average man, else how could it pump to his sleepless body and perpetually active brain the blood that enables him to do more work than any other living man and never turn a hair? The trip which the Hon. "Dave" Francis made to Europe in the interest of the Fair will go down in history as one of the great achievements of modern times. Mr. Francis spent nineteen days abroad, appearing before and captivating nearly all the crowned heads. During his crowded career Mr. Francis had never taken the time to acquire a mastery of the French language, but at the banquet given to him in Paris he knew it would be desirable to reply in French. What to do? Write the speech and have it translated. No sooner said than done, and when the time came for the special Exposition envoy to reply the Minister of Commerce and his colleagues were electrified and completely anesthetized by a Circassian spell of purest Parisian. King Edward took one look at Mr. Francis and at once offered him the Queen's Jubilee presents as an exhibit for the Exposition. Emperor William talked with Mr. Francis for an hour, and then presented him with "Die Grundaugen des neunzehnten Jahrhunderts," with his autograph on the fly-leaf. More than this no man could ask. The hypnotic methods employed by Mr. Francis were communicated by a process of contagion or osmosis to his colleagues who have carried them to the four corners of the earth. By them were the perilous privations of Tibet attained, King Menelik charmed, and the Sultan of Morocco induced to "come down" to the extent of a camel caravan loaded with silver. "Take the money," the Sultan said, "but for goodness' sake make that man stop writing me letters."

The Genesis of the Show

It is now believed by many people that as far back as 1893 the embryo of the present show had found lodgment in the Hon. David R. Francis's brain. In that year Mr. Francis moved his family to Chicago. He attended the Exposition almost every day, unnoticed by the crowds, who little recked that beneath that glossy top hat were already beginning to revolve the wheels that were to set the present stupendous show in motion. As the idea grew, the Hon. "Dave" Francis grew with it. It is as easy for him to think on a fifty million dollar basis now as it was for him to swing his way through fifteen million dollar levels a few years ago. The Hon. "Dave" is in his office in the Administration Building every day now, and there he will remain until the close of the Fair, toiling without fear and without reproach of reward, and, as one of his local biographers says, "as approachable and genial as if he were umpiring a ball game for a lot of neighborhood schoolboys." The Hon. "Dave" Francis is a wonder—a diplomat and a dynamic giant.

Lovely Woman and the Fair

The eternal feminine at the Exposition is embodied in the Board of Lady Managers. The eternal question which the average citizen has put whenever this vague body is mentioned is: "What do the lady managers manage?" "Well," replied one cynical individual to whom I put this question, "they manage to spend about $100,000 for entertainment of something, and goodness only knows whom they're going to entertain." But this was from a hard-worked man and a cynical one. The Board of Lady Managers was created by act of Congress, and selected by the National Commission appointed by the President. Mrs. Daniel Manning, of Washington, D. C., is president of the Board. Miss Lavinia Egan, of Shreveport, Louisiana, the secretary of the Board, upon whom much of the routine work of the Board falls, is a journalist by profession. Her best work has been done as foreign correspondent. She has made a careful study of the effects of the expositions, and has attended every exposition since the Philadelphia Centennial. Through our diplomatic representatives in foreign countries the Board of Lady Managers has done a great deal of the work of general exploitation, of interesting woman-kind all over the world in the Exposition, and giving them to understand the recognition which women were to receive at St. Louis. The entire Physics Building at Washington University, which is included in the Exposition grounds, has been turned over to the Board, and here reception-rooms have been fitted up for the use of women during the Exposition, and here conventions and banquets will be held. By far the most significant function of the Board of Lady Managers will be the part it will play in making up the juries of award. A committee on awards, of which Mrs. Frederick M. Sanger of Little Rock is chairman, has been appointed, and it will be the duty of this committee to select one woman on every jury of awards that considers exhibits which, in part or in whole, are woman's work. Just how freely this provision is to be interpreted has not yet been fully worked out, but of the entire number of juries which will pass on the Exposition exhibits probably 200, at least, will be women. This is "recognition" such as women have never received at any previous world's fair.

Baron Speck von Sternburg

German Ambassador to the United States

SAYS OF

Mr. Francis E. Leupp's book

"The Man Roosevelt"

"No young man who is preparing to boldly face the strife of life—resolute to do his duty manfully—in his fight to reach the goal of true national greatness, can choose a better companion than Mr. Leupp's book 'THE MAN
ROOSEVELT.'"

Price $1.25 net, $1.37 Mail

PUBLISHED BY D. APPLETON & CO.

436 Fifth Avenue New York

UP AND DOWN THE PIKE

This March Two-step is irresistible; has dash, life and go. is full of melody—new, bright, catchy.
The above or any of the following music, full size, best paper, handsome printing, illuminated title pages, sent post paid on receipt of price if your dealer doesn't have them.

Kitty O'Neil Waltzes—Florence Chapin One of the famous waltzes of the day. Played everywhere.
May Flower Waltzes—by Van Alstyne. Author of "Naxos." Very popular.
Queen of the Flowers Waltzes—Another beautiful number by Van Alstyne.
Kitty O'Neil—Florence Chapin. This is the "Song Queen" of the day. Whistled and sung everywhere.
Out Where the Willows Roll High—A distinctly great baritone or bass song by Petrie, writer of "Asleep in the Deep."

The Miller—Another splendid song for bass or baritone by Petrie.
Down in Tennessee—A ballad. Beautiful both in words and music.
When My Golden Hair has Turned to Silver
Gray—Edward Stanley a gem of the year.
I Remember—One of Petrie's most beautiful songs for alto or baritone.
Changeless the Love of the Master—Magnificent sacred song by Petrie, two keys—high and low voice.

Any of the above for $20, any three for 60c, any six for $1.00, postage paid; you will also receive a 48 page catalogue containing thermos and list of over fifteen hundred pieces priced from 10c up.

FRANK K. ROOT & CO.

Music Publishers.

266 Webster Avenue,
Chicago.

76 Fifth Avenue,
New York.

Earn a Bicycle

taking orders from sample wheel furnished by us. We want an Active Agent in each town.
Large profits. Price for special offer.

Highest Grade $8.75 to $17

1904 Models. Hodgehorns. Punctureproof tires and best equipment. 1903 and 1901 Models. Best

Make $7 to $12

500 Second-hand Wheels

All Makes and Models. $3 to $8

good as new

Great Factory Clearing Sale at daily factory cost.

We Ship on Approval without a cent down, and allow TEN DAYS FREE TRIAL on every bicycle. Any wheel not satisfactory returned at our expense. Write at once for catalogue and our special offer.

AUTOMOBILES, TIRES, Sewing Machines, Sundries, etc., half usual prices.

Mead Cycle Co., Dept. 53-F, Chicago

Blue Grass Virginia Farms

We have for sale large and small farms, country estates, colonial mansions, timber and fruit lands. Hunting preserves, and rice lands among the Sea Islands of Georgia. Our beautiful catalogues, "Virginia and the Carolinas, Illustrated," contains complete descriptions, photographs of buildings and landscapes. 25c.

SOUTHERN FARM AGENCY, 720 Main St., Lynchburg, Va.

LE PAGE'S PHOTO PASTE

IN JARS AND TUBES

Dries quickly—never discolors the print. Very strong—corners will not curl up. Invaluable for photo or general use. Largest bottle now on the market for 5 cents. In bulk for large users, carton work, etc.

Russia Cement Co., Gloucester,
Mass. Mfrs. of
LE PAGE'S GLUE

THE STRONGEST
in the World

Don't Drink Typhoid!

Our Leader-FILTER and Cooler combines all good points of all good filters with special new features. Gurs is Nature's own method of filtering. 30 to 35 gals. daily.
Dirt, germs or disease cannot possibly pass through cylinder. Write for descriptive price list. We sell direct at FACTORY PRICES.

THE ZIEGLER-NICKS CO.

230 N. 3rd St. Toledo, Ohio

Reduced Rates on Household goods to or from Colorado,
California, Washington and Oregon. Write
Sokins Household Shipping Co.,
274 Washington Street, Chicago.

A Postal Gets This Book

READ MY FREE OFFER:

I will send you my latest book (illustrated above) free.

I will diagnose your eye trouble free.

I will give you my professional opinion and advice free.

My book is the result of years of study of eye diseases. It contains information of great value about proper care of the eyes, diet, baths, exercise, etc.

Tells of many cures I have effected with my dissolvent treatment.

Tells how you can cure yourself at home of blindness resulting from—

Cataract, Optic Nerve diseases, Granulated Lids, Pannus, and all other causes.

My diagnosis will be based upon answers to a series of carefully arranged questions I will ask you, and my wide experience and success in treating all manner of eye trouble.

My professional opinion and advice will be absolutely honest and unbiased. Perhaps my book and advice will enable you to cure yourself without taking treatment.

You are welcome to all I can do for you in this way, and are in no way obligated to me, nor will you be to any expense unless you find it necessary to take my treatment.

I WANT you to carefully read all the letters I publish here. These are only a very few, but I can furnish you many thousand, if you should desire them. I also wish you to write these people personally, enclosing stamp to insure reply.

Cured of Cataracts

WHIGVILLE, OHIO, Feb. 12, 1904.

Dr. Oren Oneal, Chicago, Ill.:

DEAR DOCTOR—For seven years I have been afflicted with Cataracts. I was so blind that I could not tell a man from a woman. I could not see to read or sew. I have just taken three months' treatment, and now can read and sew and see objects very plainly, and my eyes are sound and well.

I write this testimony for the benefit of others. If it had not been for this wonderful cure I would have been blind. I can not say enough in its praise. You may use this in all your leading publications. Very truly yours, MRS. ELIZABETH ROSSITER, Whigville, O.

Bad Case of Granulated Eyelids Cured in Five Weeks

TOULON, ILL., Feb. 2, 1904.

Dr. Oren Oneal, Chicago, Ill.:

DEAR DOCTOR—When I began your treatment for my eyes, they had been granulated for several years. The balls were badly bloodshot, the lids swollen, and they itched, burned or smarted all the time. A great deal of the time it was impossible for me to read by lamp light.

Now, after using your treatment five weeks, all these troubles are gone. My eyes feel comfortable and appear natural, and I can read every evening until bed time without any trouble. Very truly yours, GEORGE W. DEWEY.

WHAT I HAVE DONE FOR OTHERS.

I have restored sight to thousands in all parts of the world.

I have cured them in their own homes.

I have succeeded where all others have failed.

I have done all this with mild, harmless medicines, which are my own discoveries, and known to no one but me.

I have never made a promise I did not fulfill, and I have never caused the slightest injury or suffering.

Any one of the following people will be glad to tell you how I cured them. Many had been afflicted for years and had been given up as incurable by others:

Mrs. S. C. Willard, Libertyville, Ill., cured of Cataracts; William Cronoble, Winslow, Ill., cured of Cataracts; Mrs. E. M. Cooper, Ridgeway, Minn., cured of Stenosis of Tear Duct; Mrs. Herman Burdick, Richland Center, Wis., cured of Hemorrhage of the Retina, which had blinded her; Albert J. Staley, Hynes, Los Angeles County, Cal., cured of Cataracts; Mrs. C. H. Sweetland, Hamburg, Iowa, cured of Paresis of Optic Nerve; Mrs. Emma I. Carter, Tenstrike, Minn., cured of bad case of Granulated Lids and Optic Nerve Paralysis of 22 years standing; Mrs. A. P. Rifle, 78 Niagara St., Buffalo, Cataracts.

READ this letter from the publishers of THE WOMAN'S MAGAZINE.

DEAR SIR—Replying to your inquiry in regard to the advertising of Dr. Oren Oneal, we beg to state that although we have carried the advertisements of Dr. Oneal in our magazine for some time and that these advertisements have been very large (some of them occupying a full page) and unquestionably a great many of our million and a half readers must have done business with the Doctor, yet we have never received a single complaint from any of them. In our opinion, this is the best possible evidence that Dr. Oneal does exactly as he says. As we absolutely guarantee the reliability of every advertiser in our magazine, and offer to make good the loss of any subscriber, sustained through being mistreated by any advertiser in the magazine, our readers always notify us very promptly if there is any reason for a complaint against any advertiser. Very truly yours, THE WOMAN'S MAGAZINE. (Signed) E. G. Lewis, Pres.

Inflamed Eyes, Cataract and Film

NAVASOTA, TEXAS, Dec. 16, 1903.

Dr. Oren Oneal, Chicago, Ill.:

DEAR DOCTOR—I saw your ad. in the "Frank Leslie Magazine," and as I had been suffering so much with Inflamed Eyes, Cataract, and Film, with great pain and soreness in the eyeball, concluded I would try your treatment, which I did for two months. I am glad to say I feel no pain at all now, and my eyes are strong. I feel very thankful for your kindness and treatment.

Respectfully, MRS. ANNIE R. FOSTER.

I want the name of every person in the world who has any form of eye trouble.

If you are not afflicted send me the name of a friend who is.

WHAT I CAN DO FOR YOU.

I can cure you if you have any sight remaining. I have been able to restore sight to thousands who had been blind for years, but I would have to know all about your case before promising to do this.

I can give you some excellent advice, and I promise that you will never regret it if you write me.

I can tell you exactly what is the matter with you, if you will answer the questions I shall ask, and tell whether you need treatment, or whether all you need is some simple home remedy and proper care.

I am devoting my life to what I consider a good work, and I am glad to help anyone who is in any way afflicted.

I don't ask you to send me any money. Just get my book and advice.

My ability is vouched for by thousands of patients I have cured; my responsibility and integrity by the fact that this and many other of the highest class publications in the country have carried my advertising for years. They will tell you they never heard a complaint that I did not keep my word.

Granulated Lids and Optic Nerve Paralysis

TENSTRIKE, MINN.

DR. OREN ONEAL—I cannot express in words how I appreciate your kindness, sympathy and honest treatment after suffering twenty-two years with granulated eyelids and paralysis of the optic nerve—blind most of the time. The severe treatment that so many eye doctors gave me left my eyes in a bad condition. In fact I had lost all hopes of any help, until some one read to me one of your advertisements. I felt that God had pointed it out to me. Now I can see and feel happy and I owe it all to Dr. Oneal's Dissolvent Method.

MRS. EMMA I. CARTER.

Bad Case Cataracts Cured

109 Fisguard St., VICTORIA, B. C., CANADA, Dec. 2, 1903.

Dr. Oren Oneal, Chicago, Ill.:

DEAR DOCTOR—I am indeed thankful that I have heard of such a man as Dr. Oren Oneal. About six months ago the sight in my left eye grew very dim, and I discovered that Cataract was the trouble. After reading your book about your wonderful Dissolvent Treatment, I made up my mind that no knife should ever touch my eye. My eye has been wonderfully helped, and I am thankful to say that I can see better now than I have ever done before. I pray that your treatment shall be a blessing to many more who may have the same trouble.

Wishing you much success, I am,

Very truly yours,

MRS. JOHN LITTLE.

My book and advice will not cost you anything nor in any way obligate you, and may be the means of saving your sight.

Write to me now. Address

OREN ONEAL, M. D.

Suite 219, 52 Dearborn St., Chicago, U.S.A.

If it isn't an Eastman, it isn't a Kodak.

DRAWN FOR THE EASTMAN KODAK CO. BY FREDERIC REMINGTON THROUGH COURTESY COLLIER'S WEEKLY. COPYRIGHT 1904 BY COLLIER'S WEEKLY

"THE CORRESPONDENT"

In war as in peace
The Kodak
is at the front

In Cuba and the Philippines, in South Africa, in Venezuela, and now in Korea and Manchuria, the camera most in evidence is the Kodak.

The same qualities that make it indispensable to the correspondent make it most desirable for the tourist—simplicity, freedom from dark-room bother, lightness combined with a strength that resists the wear and tear of travel.

Take a Kodak with you to the St. Louis Exposition. There will be no charge for the admission of 4x5 (or smaller) Kodaks to the grounds.

Kodaks, $5.00 to $97.00

1904 Catalogue at all dealers or by mail.

EASTMAN KODAK CO., Rochester, N. Y.

"THE MAN INSIDE THE CLOTHES"

The man who has worn Kohn Brothers' Fine Clothes need not be told that we dress you as well as your merchant tailor, for half the money. He knows it. You don't. You should. You take no chances. Every garment guaranteed "as represented or money back." We illustrate on this page our Summer Suit. A Summer Coat made with the "K. B." Shoulder and permanent front. Suits from $10 to $20.

Ask your dealer for Kohn Brothers Fine Clothes. Look for our label—insist upon having it. Write for illustrated booklet No. 5, "The Clothes a Man Should Wear," a story of good clothes, when and how to wear them. If your dealer does not sell Kohn Bros. clothing, write us and we will give you the name of one who does.

KOHN BROTHERS CHICAGO

IN MAY

—and all the time—

PETTIJOHN

IS QUEEN OF CEREAL FOODS

Pettijohn, freshly cooked, as all cereals should be, is so deliciously mellow, so tempting, so inviting that it pleases everyone—always.

The full flavored flakes of Pettijohn satisfy the most delicate and exacting taste; they whet the edge of the duldest appetite.

To save one third on the cost
Of your House Furnishings

Send for Our
CONSUMERS' BENEFIT CATALOGUE

Address Dept. 5
AMERICAN CEREAL CO., CHICAGO

LEARN TO WRITE ADVERTISEMENTS

"The original school you hear so much about."

A Record No Other Correspondence School Has Equaled

In the Year 1897 the founders of the Page-Davis School originated the system of advertisement writing—taught the first class ever formed—and placed the profession on a legitimate basis, proving that it could be successfully taught just as law and medicine are taught. Read page 9 in our prospectus for full details.

In the Year 1902 the students of the Page-Davis School signified their entire approval of the course of instruction by giving Edward T. Page, their instructor, a banquet in New York City. Read page 29 in our handsome prospectus for full details.

Early in the Year 1903 the students gave the Page-Davis Company a beautiful loving-cup as a mark of their appreciation, not only of the instruction received, but of the continual interest manifested in their welfare by the Page-Davis Company long after their graduation. Read page 30 in our handsome prospectus for full details.

Later in the Year 1903 the United States Attorney called Edward T. Page into the United States Court to appear on the stand as expert, and give his opinion as to the instruction necessary to qualify a man for advertisement writing. (Read other literature sent free giving full details of the report.)

These four incidents in the life of this great institution, each marking a mighty step forward in its wonderful progress, are, after all, only of secondary importance, compared with the individual success of the individual students.

Taught Thoroughly by Correspondence

Do You Realize the Full Significance of These Facts to You?

We are glad to have you ask us what has the Page-Davis Company done, what our students are doing, and what we can do for you. We will answer promptly and completely, if you write to us for our large prospectus mailed free.

Page-Davis Co.

Suite 19, 90 Wabash Ave., Chicago

????????????

THE
EQUITABLE
HENRY B. HYDE
FOUNDER

J. W. ALEXANDER
PRESIDENT

STRONGEST
IN THE WORLD

J. H. HYDE
VICE PRESIDENT

DO YOU KNOW

that you can buy 5% Gold Bonds on instalments—and have them insured while you are paying for them?

A good investment for you—if you live. A splendid protection for your family—if you die.

Opportunities for men of character to act as representatives.
Apply to GAGE E. TARBELL, 2nd Vice President.

Send this coupon, or write, for particulars

THE EQUITABLE LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY of the United States
120 Broadway, New York Dept. No. 24

I would like to receive information regarding Gold Bond for $.....
issued to a person aged ..... years.

Name.....
Address.....

DEAFNESS CURED

A Device That Is Scientific, Simple, Direct, and Instantly Restores Hearing in Even the Oldest Person — Comfortable, Invisible, and Perfect Fitting.

190-Page Book Containing a History of the Discovery and Many Hundred Signed Testimonials From All Parts of the World — SENT FREE.

The True Story of the Invention of Wilson's Common Sense Ear Drums Told by Geo. H. Wilson, the Inventor.

I was deaf from infancy. Eminent doctors, surgeons and ear specialists treated me at great expense, and yet did me no good. I tried all the artificial appliances that claimed to restore hearing, but they failed to benefit me in the least. I even went to the best specialists in the world, but their efforts were unavailing.

My case was pronounced incurable!

I grew desperate; my deafness tormented me. Daily I was becoming more of a recluse, avoiding the companionship of people because of the annoyance my deafness and sensitiveness caused me. Finally I began to experiment on myself, and after patient years of study, labor and personal expense, I perfected something that I found took the place of the natural ear drums, and I called it Wilson's Common Sense Ear Drum, which I now wear day and night with perfect comfort, and do not even have to remove them when washing. No one can tell I am wearing them, as they do not show, and, as they give no discomfort whatever, I scarcely know it myself.

With these drums I can now hear a whisper. I join in the general conversation and hear everything going on around me. I can hear a sermon or lecture from any part of a large church or hall. My general health is improved because of the great change my Ear Drums have made in my life. My spirits are bright and cheerful; I am a cured, changed man.

Since my fortunate discovery it is no longer necessary for any deaf person to carry a trumpet, a tube or any other such old-fashioned makeshift. My Common Sense Ear Drum is built on the strictest scientific principles, contains no metal, wires, or strings of any kind, and is entirely new and up to date in all respects. It is so small that no one can see it when in position, yet it collects all the sound waves and focuses them against the drum head, causing you to hear naturally and perfectly. It will do this even when the natural ear drums are partially or entirely destroyed, perforated, scarred, relaxed or thickened. It fits any ear from childhood to old age, male or female, and aside from the fact that it does not show, it never causes the least irritation, and can be used with comfort day and night without removal for any cause.

With my device I can cure deafness in any person, no matter how acquired, whether from catarrh, scarlet fever, typhoid or brain fever, measles, whooping cough, gatherings in the ear, shocks from artillery or through accidents. My invention not only cures, but at once stops the progress of deafness and all roaring and buzzing noises. The greatest aural surgeons in the world recommend it, as well as physicians of all schools. It will do for you what no medicine or medical skill on earth can do.

I want to place my 190-page book on deafness in the hands of every deaf person in the world. I will gladly send it free to anyone whose name and address I can get. It describes and illustrates Wilson's Common Sense Ear Drums and contains bona fide letters from numerous users in the United States, Canada, Mexico, England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, Australia, New Zealand, Tasmania, India, and the remotest islands. I have letters from people in every station in life—ministers, physicians, lawyers, merchants, society ladies, etc.—and tell the truth about the benefits to be derived from my wonderful little device. You will find the names of people in your own town and state, many whose names you know, and I am sure that all this will convince you that the cure of deafness has at last been solved by my invention.

Don't delay; write for the free book to-day and address my firm—The Wilson Ear Drum Co., 1732 Todd Building, Louisville, Ky., U. S. A.

THE STORE OF THE ACTRESS
SIEGEL COOPER & CO.
SIXTH AVE. 6TH FLOOR NEW YORK CITY, N.Y.

NOTICE:—The New York firm of Siegel Cooper Co. has no connection with any other mercantile establishment in the United States. All orders must be sent to us direct, 6th Ave., 10th and 11th Sts., New York City, N. Y.

No. 819 95 Cts. WAIST No. 821 $2.95

No. 823 This is one of the most attractive and popular waists brought out this season. It is made of San Perino Lawn, cut extra full and long. The entire waist is side plaited and artistically trimmed with beautiful Irish crocheted lace insertion and medallions. Sleeves, Cuffs and Stock Collar are marked and finished in a superior manner. Price $1.25

No. 821 "The Palm Beach Waist" made of pure white Japanese silk of superior quality. Fastens on shoulder and under arm, has a round yoke of beautiful all-over Irish crocheted lace, finished with two crocheted lace medallions around the lower part. Yoke is the same front and back. Same style of lace forms the stock collar which is attached. Waist is tucked in front and has the new stylish sleeves as shown in illustration. Sleeves 29 to 42. Our special price $2.95

SKIRT No. 825 $5.00

No. 829 $2.75

No. 825 This Handsome Dress Skirt of Voile, woven good, giving a wide, graceful flare, trimmed with five clusters of tall, dark silk bows; each cluster contains five of these bows. Made with inverted plait back. Black or blue, 20 to 27 inches waist 28 to 44 inches long in front. We guarantee a perfect fit and absolute satisfaction. Price $5.00

No. 827 This Ready-to-wear black straw braided hat is made of black straw braided with two gilt buttons and velvet ribbon trimming on both sides of brim. The front of the crown is finished with a stylish pompadour. The pompadour is made of ribbon and straw-ribbons. A very effective and stylish hat for street wear or for traveling. Price $1.45

THE STORE OF THE ACTRESS
SIEGEL COOPER & CO.
SIXTH AVE. 6TH FLOOR NEW YORK CITY, N.Y.

The G&J Tire
"The make with a Reputation"

It has quality in its construction and years of experience in detachable tire making back of it, and are receiving more favorable comment to-day from makers and dealers everywhere than all other makes combined.

A postal with your name and address will bring you free our booklet giving practical information of interest to you. Address Dept. E
THE G. & J. TIRE CO., Indianapolis, Ind.

NOW DEPOSITED IN THE BANK
$75,000.00
IN CASH GIVEN AWAY

To arouse interest in, and to advertise the GREAT ST. LOUIS WORLD'S FAIR, this enormous sum will be distributed. Full information will be sent you ABSOLUTELY FREE. Just send your name and address on a postal card and we will send you full particulars.

World's Fair Contest Co.
108 N. 8th Street
St. Louis, Mo.

COLLIER'S WEEKLY BINDER
Postpaid $1.25

The OCULARSCOPE
FREE

Get Your Glasses at Wholesale

Examine your own eyes without an oculist. Send for our "Ocular Scope," the latest invention of the 20th century. SENT FREE, with our beautiful illustrated catalogue of spectacles and eyeglasses. MAIL ORDER ONLY. Good to-day.
GRAND RAPIDS WHOLESALE OPTICIANS
414 Houseman Bldg., Grand Rapids, Mich.

The culmination of progressive enterprise

Two-Speed Gear,
Coaster Brake
Chainless
Bicycles

Catalogues free at our 10,000 dealers' stores, or any one catalogue mailed on receipt of 2-cent stamp.

Western Dept. Eastern Dept.
Chicago, Ill. Hartford, Conn.

POPE MANUFACTURING COMPANY

First Place Fixed

In all the genial offices of hospitality, and not less for cheer and comfort, strength and health

Hunter
Baltimore
Rye

holds the first place fixed. Its perfect maturity, purity and flavor secure the lead.

It is particularly recommended to women because of its age and excellence.

Sold at all first-class cafes and by jobbers.
WM. LANAHAN & SON, Baltimore, Md.

DEAF?
Well, Listen!

The deaf are immediately able to hear ordinary conversation by the Magnetic Otophone Sound Waves, which penetrate the deafest ear. A wonderful scientific invention, which restores hearing and banishes head noises. Guaranteed Invisible, Effective, Comfortable, and Harmless. Not an ear drum or trumpet. Compare it with other devices, and be guided by your intelligence. Deafness is no longer a hopeless condition. Book FREE.

OTOPHONE CO.
1602 Arch St., Dept. C, Philadelphia, Pa.

A Chance Courtship

is a story of an unconventional love match, well told and beautifully illustrated. The small picture above only suggests the real charm of these illustrations. As a bit of readable fiction the story is well worth writing for. It is contained in a handsomely bound book of 128 pages, a portion of which is devoted to the attractive mountain and lake resorts along the Lackawanna Railroad. It is a book you will like to see. It may be had by sending 10 cents in postage stamps to T. W. LEE, General Passenger Agent, Lackawanna Railroad, New York.

POND'S EXTRACT

The Old Family
Doctor

CURES

Burns, scalds, bruises, cuts, sprains, wounds, lameness, soreness, neuralgia, rheumatism, sunburn, bites, stings.

STOPS

Nose bleed, toothache, earache, bleeding lungs, hemorrhages and all pain.

Sold in sealed bottles with buff wrappers.

ACCEPT NO SUBSTITUTE

WE PARALYZE COMPETITION

$2.80 for our full size FULLMAN Sleeping Coach, equipped with the latest improved sleeper attachments, automobile steel gear, heavy rubber tires, rubber bath caps, safety latches, etc. for our 1904 FULLMAN Folding Go-Cart as described in our Big Free 1904 Catalogue. Don't buy a carriage until you get our latest 1904 FREE Catalogue; also our Great Free Book explaining how Co-operative reduces the prices of everything. Money refunded if goods are not fully satisfactory. WRITE TODAY. Cash Buyers Union.

First National Co-Operative Society
47 E. Cash Buyers Bldg., CHICAGO

DO YOU HAVE YOURSELF? If so send $1.00 for the wonderful new RADIUMITE RAZOR STRIP (The Strip The Razor). Sold under Dollar Back Guarantee. Makes shaving easy and a comfort. Doubles the value of your razor. Agents wanted. Write for terms. W. F. McCLARKE & CO., Fort Jones, Calif.

EDITORIAL BULLETIN

COLLIER'S WEEKLY

P. F. COLLIER & SON, PUBLISHERS

New York, 416-424 West Thirtieth Street; London, 10 Norfolk Street, Strand, W. C.; and The International News Co., 5 Breams Buildings, Chancery Lane, E. C.

Copyright 1904 by P. F. Collier & Son. Entered at the New York Post-Office as Second-Class Matter.

Vol. XXXIII No. 5

10 Cents per Copy

$5.20 per Year

New York, Saturday, April 30, 1904

CONTENTS

HOUSEHOLD NUMBER FOR MAY

The May Pole. Cover Design . . . . .	Drawn by Jessie Wilcox Smith	Page
Off for School. Frontispiece. . . . .	Drawing in Color by W. T. Smedley	7
Editorials . . . . .		8-9
Appreciation of Conditions in the Russo-Japanese Conflict . . . . .
Illustrated with Photographs and a Map. Capt. Alfred T. Mahan, U.S.N. . . . .		10
The Occupation of Ping-Yang by the Japanese. Photographs . . . . .	R. L. Dunn	11
Marking Time in Tokio . . . . .	Richard Harding Davis	13
Special War Correspondence from Japan . . . . .
With the Japanese in Korea . . . . .	Frederick Palmer	13
Special Cable Despatch from Chemampo, Korea . . . . .
To the Front with the Russians . . . . .	J. F. J. Archibald	13
Special Cable Despatch from Newchwang, Manchuria . . . . .
The Return of Sherlock Holmes . . . . .	A. Conan Doyle	14
VIII.—The Adventure of the Six Napoleons. Illustrated by F. D. Steele . . . . .
In the Same Boat . . . . .	Double-page Drawing by C. D. Gibson	16-17
Books and Plays . . . . .	Norman Hapgood	18
Headpiece by Maxfield Parrish. Illustrated with a Photograph . . . . .
The Wakeful Princess. Poem . . . . .	Oliver Herford	19
Illustrated by the Author . . . . .
A Russian Colony in America . . . . .	E. W. Thompson	20
Illustrated with Photographs . . . . .
Photographing Through Animals' Eyes . . . . .	W. F. Watson	23
Illustrated with Photographs . . . . .
The Old-Time Menagerie . . . . .	Charles H. Day	25

Some Forthcoming Art Features

THE ART STAFF OF Collier's is already universally admitted to include the most representative American artists. Mr. Gibson's double pages, Mr. Remington's paintings in color, Mr. Smedley's Household frontispieces, and the exquisite covers by Mr. F. X. Leyendecker have set a new standard in periodical illustration, as will readily be conceded.

MR. MAXFIELD PARRISH, with whose heading for "Books and Plays" in this number our readers are familiar, will devote nearly all the month of May to the permanent arrangement and decoration of the pages of Collier's. Beginning in November, Mr. Parrish will draw exclusively for Collier's, and we can promise that no American publication will have a more distinguished decorative artist on its staff.

MISS JESSIE WILCOX SMITH, the charming delineator of child-life, who designed the cover for this number, will also, beginning the first of June, draw for us only. Miss Smith will contribute the covers for our Household Numbers, and in addition a series of illustrations in color for Stevenson's "A Child's Garden of Verses."

OTHER WELL-KNOWN artists whose work will find prominent place in Collier's during the summer are Mr. Frank Brangwyn, R.A., the famous English marine painter, who is at work on three covers for Collier's; Walter Appleton Clark, who will describe and picture in Collier's the great international automobile race to be held in Germany in July; A. B. Frost, André Castaigne, Louis Loeb, and Albert Sterner.

WE HAVE BEEN HIGHLY pleased at the recognition by art critics and the public at large of the wonderful work Mr. Gibson has contributed to Collier's. We confess some self-satisfaction over the splendid confutation of the charge that Mr. Gibson could only draw "society" pictures and "the Gibson girl." This week's double alone would stamp him as the greatest depicter of character and the surest draughtsman of our generation.

DURING THE SUMMER months Mr. Gibson's double-page drawings will be a feature of Collier's. They will not all be of any one kind, or on any one subject; they will deal with all classes of people, and all sides of human nature. We know from the drawings we have now in hand that Mr. Gibson has never expressed himself in happier vein than in these latest pictures.

WE ARE OFTEN ASKED for proofs of the pictures that appear in Collier's. While we do not make a business of selling these proofs, we shall be glad to furnish them on reasonable terms to such of our subscribers as will address the Proof Department.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—Subscribers when ordering a change of address should give the old as well as the new address, and the ledger number on their wrapper. From two to three weeks must necessarily elapse before the change can be made, and before the first copy of COLIER'S will reach any new subscriber. All subscriptions commence with the date of the first copy received.

A good library is collected piecemeal: a book here, another there, as our tastes dictate. It's a growing proposition. So should the bookcase be; it should grow, unit by unit, as the books increase, like the "Elastic" Bookcase. It's the original, handsomest, and only perfect sectional bookcase made. Has furnished with or without drawers. Carried in stock by dealers in principal cities, or direct from factory, freight paid. Send for

Catalog C-104

The Globe-Wernicke Co. 380-382 Broadway, NEW YORK. 224-226 Wabash St. CHICAGO.

Canadian Factory Stratford, Ont.

Nominate your choice— Presidents

are being made. "Light-weight" 2 ounces; medium and heavy. 50c all stores or by mail for choice patterns.

President Suspenders are guaranteed—absolute satisfaction, a new pair or your money back.

THE C. A. EDGARTON MFG. CO.
Box 306 Shirley, Mass.

SELF-CULTURE is the Golden Key to Success in Life. "What the World Wants" tells how to multiply your ability by awakening neglected powers, stimulating latent energies and developing resources before undreamed of. Over 300 pages, 35c. Our larger work, "Scientific Self-Culture," (over 250 pages) $1.15. "Moore's Marvelous Memory Methods," 175 pages, $1.00. Money back if not more than satisfied. Descriptive literature free. Address: Dept. C, W. 54, Self-Culture Society, Chicago, Ill.

BIG POULTRY MAIL
Send us 10 cents and we will put your name in our Poultry News Directory, which goes to poultry publishers, breeders, supply houses, etc., who will send you FREE samples of their goods, services, seeds, etc., and you will get. We will also send you at once our big POULTRY PAPER and also our 64 page GUIDE TO POULTRY RAISING—all for 10 cents. Send gold. POULTRY DIRECTORY CO., Dept. D, 249 Dearborn St., CHICAGO.

EDUCATED CLOTHES

THE term aptly describes Kuppenheimer creations. Avoiding the time-worn methods of construction, we have struck into the field of thought and educated skill. The result is clothing of intelligence—in keeping with the advanced thought of the period, and impelling the same respect as development in any other form of necessary commodity.

THESE SPRING OVERCOATS

THE "TOPPER" and "BEVERLY" bear all these admirable characteristics, hence may be classed as educated. At all leading retail establishments. Free upon request our "Review of Spring and Summer Fashions," Vol. XIII.

B. KUPPENHEIMER & CO.

America's Leading Clothes Makers

CHICAGO NEW YORK BOSTON

There are many white soaps, each represented to be just as good as the Ivory; they are not, but like all counterfeits, lack the peculiar and remarkable qualities of the genuine. Ask for Ivory Soap and insist upon getting it.

Wool Soap

Toilet and Bath

The Race for Cleanliness

Safety in cleanliness is largely a matter of soap. There never is any doubt as to the genuine worth in a cake of Wool Soap. Always good and pure.

Crown Princess Toilet Soap is the acme of scented soap excellence.

SWIFT & COMPANY, U. S. A.

W. & J. SLOANE NEW YORK

FINE INTERIOR WOODWORK AND DECORATIONS, CLASSIC
FURNITURE, UPHOLSTERY FABRICS, CARPETINGS, AND RARE ORIENTAL RUGS

BROADWAY AND NINETEENTH ST.

dependence and self-respect. Men who are injured in acts of service executed with conspicuous bravery are usually cared for, if they need it, and their families are likely to be provided for, if they are killed. To us it seems a pity to have natural valor made self-conscious. The very phraseology of the document rather makes us writhe. The word hero is easily rendered cheap. "The heroes and heroines are to be given a fair trial, no matter what their antecedents." "A finely executed roll of the heroes and heroines shall be kept displayed in the office at Pittsburg." Mr. CARNEGIE is a practical man, who has spent his life wrestling with the material world and getting the better of it. It sometimes happens that when men whose lives have been a hand to hand fight with material circumstances express their sentimental side, they do not do it as well as men in whom sentiment has been more spread over their ordinary activities. They have somewhat the same disadvantage that another kind of man might experience if he undertook casually to manufacture steel. But if Mr. CARNEGIE is not always inspired in the objects to which he devotes his money, he is at least accomplishing much good by spreading the idea that obligations are created by great wealth, and that fact also helps to make the public lenient with his errors.

INDUCEMENTS TO BE HEROIC

ADMIRAL TOGO'S BRILLIANCY, accuracy, and daring, in tempting Russian vessels out of their refuge into deadly traps have led to generous, or at least impartial, acknowledgment throughout the world that Japan to-day probably surpasses any country on earth in death-dealing proficiency with modern naval engines. As no nation could be more calmly brave, so none could have shown a higher grade of strategy. They make a brilliant use of the wireless telegraph while Russia impotently decrees against it. With what dashing qualities of mind and nerve these upstarts, as the Russians are still calling them, have set the pace for Europe and America! How much food for anxious thought they are giving to experts whose reasoning has taken so little account of anything beyond the measurements of battleships. The wars between Japan and China and between the United States and Spain were tame in naval lessons compared with performances in the Yellow Sea, where the mysterious Asiatic mind has been solving the problem of destroying a sheltered fleet before reinforcements could be sent from

JAPANESE LEADERSHIP

Europe, and without the loss of ships that could not be spared even on a most favorable exchange. Russia may yet come out victorious or on even terms, for the whole land problem is as unknown now as the naval problem was on the day before the first assault; but each thing that has thus far happened has put Japanese military spirit and intellect further to the front. "God is with us," the Russians keep on saying, and they talk with sincere and earnest pride of what they intend to do. "I will dry the soldier of Japan upon my bayonet and send him home by mail," remarks the Russian patriot, and a Russian paper in Port Arthur has the taste to say that "in this utterance the whole greatness of the Russian nation finds expression." The Japanese say nothing about the preferences of Deity. They expend no rhetoric on the hazard of the future. They do not exalt unduly the ordinary acts of bravery. Their soldiers and sailors expect no reward more mercenary than death. When money payment became the preoccupation of the Roman legions, the Roman Empire was in decline. Watching the startling deeds of this young and ancient people, we must hold, in many ways, our judgment in suspense; but among the few comments that we can safely venture is the admission that, whatever their resources and staying power may be, they are leaders in the art of war.

VERESTCHAGIN'S INFLUENCE WAS GREAT upon the ideas of his time, not because of technical or strictly artistic superiority, but because of the vividness with which he saw and depicted the cruel and realistic sides of war. His life, his death, and the nature of his mind were all dramatic. General SHERMAN is related to have called VERESTCHAGIN the only painter who portrayed war as it really is, and what war meant to SHERMAN now has a world-wide vogue that makes it almost a household saying. To VERESTCHAGIN as to SHERMAN war was hell. The American general criticised favorably the Russian pictures for the accuracy of knowledge and observation shown in such details as the attitudes of the slain. It costs a lifetime to know one thing well, and VERESTCHAGIN spent his life studying that activity which he censured and deplored. When he was painting the battlefield of San Juan Hill, and later also, he spoke of knowing all warfare except battles on the sea, and added that he wished to behold a sea fight before being mustered out. "I must hurry, though," he said, "for my beard is growing white." Hence his presence on the ship that steamed out to meet the Japanese and entered the trap from which the bold and enlightened admiral, the serious, spiritual painter, and some eight hundred private men were never to return. He has shown Sepoys blown from cannon mouths, he has shown the long, dark trenches of the dead, and he was preparing to report faithfully the latest horrors of warlike skill when all his work was ended and he was numbered among those victims he had so often drawn. His reputation is higher than that of many men of finer art, because he had a message to the world, and one function of the artist is to think. Primarily, he is to master the language of his special craft, but with that, in the greatest artists, goes something for the world at large, and it was in this half of the complete artist's composition that VERESTCHAGIN was strong.

VERESTCHAGIN'S DEATH IN BATTLE

A BILL INTRODUCED IN CONGRESS this session provides that not more than eighty thousand immigrants shall be admitted into the United States in a year from any one country. If such a scheme is practicable, as it would seem to be, it would discriminate in a way satisfactory to those who regret the vast new stream from southern Europe. Germans, Irishmen, and Scandinavians would come in as freely as before. The check would come on Italy, Russia, and Austria-Hungary, which now furnish the bulk of immigrants and show the greatest increase. Any day immigration as an issue in politics may be acute. England, which has so long been untroubled by her small number of unwelcome guests, now seems likely to adopt measures of restriction, the Royal Commission on Alien Immigration having recommended some excluding measures. Of the two principles, generous welcome and precaution, either is capable of over-emphasis. "Mankind," said MOMMSEN, shortly before his death, "can not do without either patriotism or international sympathy. To define the boundary between the two, one must be either satanic or divine. Being neither, I decline the task." The wise old historian waved aside a question which in Germany was academic, but which in America to-day grows every year more practically insistent. We solve the Chinese aspect almost unanimously, although, if Japan becomes Asia's victorious leader, Chinese exclusion may one day be far less easy. At present the American feeling is so strong that China seems to have made a diplomatic error in bringing the subject up again, although it may possibly be part of her embryonic policy of so conducting herself as to gain the place of a nation with which it is necessary to treat on more or less equal terms. Meantime Congress and the country become more and more inclined to call a halt on southern Europe, the only influential opponents of more restrictive laws being certain steamship companies.

THE COMPOSITION OF OUR RACE

"ANY ONE CREATING WILD RUMORS," observes a Viceroy of China, "calculated to alarm or produce doubt in the people's mind will be beheaded." Thus do some potentates encourage the quiet life, and fight against that spirit of the age which was described by WORDSWORTH when he spoke of "the increasing accumulation of men in great cities, where the uniformity of their occupation produces a craving for extraordinary incident, which the rapid communication of intelligence hourly gratifies." WORDSWORTH did not live to see the telephone, by which each of us is constantly chatting with all the world and the farmers are able to get a little of the excitement which was once confined to cities. We are all very busy nowadays, even if we do nothing except look and listen. The press is the greatest aid to this intensity of life, for by it we live everywhere at once. Probably it makes for happiness, this distribution of the world's doings to every corner of the earth, and if it brings its disadvantages so does every other boon. The course of wisdom is not to give up the newspaper, or the telephone, but to strengthen the contrasting sides of life; to keep alive our love of solitude and nature, of great books and quiet thought; to cultivate repose; to take the world but as the world, with all its strenuousness and bustle—master of its pleasures, not their slave. Spring is with us now, and happy are those who are able to seek woods or fields with the opening of the buds; for nature, with her large, mysterious genius, has not her equal as a preacher of simplicity. Among the books which go on and on, because there is an unending want of them, is a little volume called "Power Through Repose," a treatise which is excellent in itself and which strikes at the centre one of the greatest needs of our American nature.

EXCITEMENT AND REPOSE

VICE-ADMIRAL SKRYDLOFF

Recently in command of Russia's Baltic fleet and now assigned to command the Czar's fleet at Port Arthur

RUSSIAN TORPEDO BOATS AND DESTROYERS AT PORT ARTHUR

The two dark vessels in the foreground are torpedo boats, while the white craft in the distance are the destroyers "Ka," "Skat," and "Kasanka." They are lying in the inner basin near the drydock

REAR-ADMIRAL PRINCE UCHTOMSKY

Temporarily in command of the Russian fleet at Port Arthur since the death of Admiral Makarov on April 13

Appreciation of Conditions in the Russo-Japanese Conflict

By Captain Alfred T. Mahan, U.S.N.

This is the second of a series of articles under this title to be contributed exclusively to Collier's by Captain A. T. Mahan, U.S.N., author of "The Influence of Sea Power on History," who was a member of the Naval Advisory Strategic Board during the Spanish-American War, and is a recognized authority, the world over, in matters pertaining to naval strategy. The first article was published in Collier's for February 20

Copyright 1904 by Collier's Weekly

Between the date of writing this article, April 11, and the day of going to press, April 16, the Port Arthur fleet has undergone the disasters which have fixed public attention. These have for the moment materially affected the general naval situation, but it is questionable whether they have modified it decisively. Neither have they changed the leading factors which constitute the particular military problem, nor the fundamental principles of war applicable to its discussion. As in purpose the article is devoted to such discussion, the writer proposes to let it go as it first stood; annexing a brief estimate of the bearing of recent events upon the issues. He believes, indeed, that the first treatment will receive apt illustration from the subsequent occurrences.

TWO MONTHS have now elapsed since Japan in the current war dealt her first startling blow. The news was transmitted over the world, with a promptness which guarantees that since then nothing conspicuous in the way of exploit has occurred. This is by no means to say that nothing of an important or even of a decisive character may not have been accomplished. Much patient obscure progress underlies all achievement of serious purpose; and the successive steps by which advance is made may each be of greater consequence than the final act which proclaims success attained. Nevertheless, there is substantial practical truth in the proverb, Finis coronat opus. The efforts of both parties to the present war have doubtless been incessant since the torpedo attack off Port Arthur, and it is certain that, had any further definite gain crowned either, the world would have been taken into the confidence of the winner.

It is therefore safe to assume that, whatever progress may have been made, it is as yet only progress—not attainment; and for that reason prudence may forbid its divulgence, because revelation might preclude or impair eventual success. But none the less, through these weeks of expectation, there have been accumulating indications, scattered along the daily issues of the press, which warrant some tentative conclusions as to present conditions and future purposes, helping to guide the intelligence of men without technical military knowledge in estimating the probability and bearing of the various contradictory reports which have already reached us. Such may be expected to arrive in accelerated confusion as soon as active operations begin to develop into direct collision. A correct appreciation of leading factors and of principles involved will therefore be useful.

Nothing has as yet occurred to shake the opinion, which I believe is universal among military men, that the command of the sea remains the dominant factor in the war. The water communications of Japan exceed by far in copiousness those of Russia by rail, and, therefore, up to the extent of her resources in men and money, Japan possesses this definite superiority, initial and continuous, upon the necessary field of war—Korea and Manchuria. Unless Russia can reverse or substantially modify this maritime condition, her inferiority must endure until Japan has sent forward her last reserves or exhausted her treasury. On the other hand, the known action of Admiral Togo at Port Arthur shows that Japan is not satisfied with the degree of maritime preponderance so far established. There is no other way of accounting for the reiterated efforts to block the entrance to the port, or for the repeated bombardments of the Russian works. While I am aware that some naval officers differ from me, I believe the great majority hold the opinion, practically universal among army men, that only under very rare conditions can ships assault land works without the probability of incurring greatly more damage than they can inflict. Much of our Navy Department's policy in the Spanish war was dictated by this view, and nothing that there occurred suggested any reason to doubt its substantial accuracy.

It is fair therefore to infer that Togo's bombardments have aimed, distinctly and chiefly, at injury to the Russian vessels, whether directly by projectiles or indirectly by facilitating the sinking of hulks in the harbor mouth. It is reported that the guns of the fleet outrange those of the batteries. If so, substantial immunity for the ships may be obtained by taking a distance which their guns can cover, while those of the enemy can not; but, granting this, there remains the extremely costly expenditure of ammunition, at elevations which make precision of aim out of the question, and, more serious by far, the accumulating strain upon the guns. The life of a modern rifle cannon of large calibre, measured by the number of rounds it can safely fire, is short. Money will replace ammunition, whether spent to good effect or bad; but to replace great guns, the strength of which is impaired, means expenditure of time, possibly critical, during which the ship is lost to her fleet.

It is clear, therefore, that to seal up the Port Arthur fleet is an object deemed of necessity so urgent as to justify measures which are not only extreme in character, but of very doubtful—though always possible—success. This may be due to either of two principal causes. First, however damaged by the first torpedo attack—we do not yet know certainly just what this effected—there still remains a force in Port Arthur which constitutes a recognized danger; a "fleet in being," according to the definition of that phrase before given. In corroboration of this possibility, Mr. Angus Hamilton, the author of a recent widely noticed book on Korea, affirms in the April number of the "Fortnightly Review" that the dock at Port Arthur will receive the battleships, even with the increased immersion due to injury. Admiral Yamamoto, Japanese Minister of Marine, is quoted as saying in the House of Representatives, March 25, that at least double the enemy's strength was required to blockade Port Arthur successfully. "The last report," he added, "showed that the Russians had afloat four battleships, five cruisers, and ten destroyers, from which it must be inferred that the work of repairing the damaged ships was being effectually carried on. The last attack had enabled the Japanese to observe the enemy's actual strength." Russia has no uneasy popular assembly to ask questions; but under the same date her Minister of Marine, Admiral Avellan, told the correspondent of a newspaper of her ally, France, that "the Retvizan, Czarevitch, and Pallada would be ready in a fortnight"—say April 10—"to resume their places in the fighting line." These combined utterances, of the two men on either side most likely to know, indicate conditions under which a temporary absence, disability, or mistake of the Japanese admiral may afford the hostile division, though inferior, the chance to strike a telling blow; for instance, at a large division of Japanese transports. This would be particularly the case if, as now commonly surmised, the Japanese should attempt an important, even though secondary, line of operations by Newchwang. In such case their line of sea communications must pass through the Straits of Pechili, only fifty miles wide, close to the extremity of the Liao-tung Peninsula, where Port Arthur is. The day after the statements just quoted, March 26, the local despatch boat of the London "Times" met, thirty-five miles from Port Arthur, "five Russian battleships and cruisers."

THE REGION OF ACTIVE HOSTILITIES IN ASIA
From a map published by the Royal Geographical Society of London

JAPANESE INFANTRY BREAKFASTING OPPOSITE PING-YANG

FIELD ARTILLERY WAITING TO CROSS THE BRIDGE OVER THE TAI-TONG RIVER

THE OCCUPATION OF PING-YANG BY THE JAPANESE, MARCH 1

PHOTOGRAPHS BY R. L. DUNN, COLLIER'S SPECIAL WAR PHOTOGRAPHER WITH THE JAPANESE ARMY IN KOREA

The frontispiece of last week's Collier's was a photograph of the sappers and miners building a pontoon bridge over the Tai-Tong River, so that the main army might cross and occupy Ping-Yang. The present pictures were taken by Mr. Dunn after the bridge had been completed and as the infantry began to pass over it into the city. The Japanese made Ping-Yang one of their principal military bases in Korea and pushed on toward the Yalu from there. Mr. Dunn was about to start with this advance when he wrote from Ping-Yang, March 6, as follows: "Expecting to leave to-night for the north, so pictures for a few days will be delayed, as they have to come back here (Ping-Yang) by messenger on foot, then travel to Seoul on foot, a distance of two hundred and fifty miles or more. Half the messengers leaving us are turned back by the soldiers, or rather put to work to carry their luggage. It almost drives one to distraction to figure how to get stuff out from here. Money transactions are worse than anything. The Korean money is now taken exclusively, even at a higher value than the Japanese yen; every day there is a change in value; and money worth $500 one day is worth in another city next day only $400—sometimes less. My expenses are very high. I have to have four horses in order to get about—two saddle and two pack—one saddle horse for my interpreter, and two coolies to see to the horses. The feed for the horses costs a lot, as everything is at war prices. One bar of soap yesterday cost 500. gold. Traveling ahead as I do in order to get good pictures, and of scenes not to be made by other photographers for several weeks yet, is very trying. All the roads are completely blocked and there is no place to sleep. We travel over frozen rice fields and ice-covered mountains, sleeping anywhere we may happen to be, nearly freezing every night, but I am getting the stuff ahead of others and I am willing to keep pushing on. The Japanese army does not know what to think of my pushing ahead with them without any credentials; but I understand there are many press men in Tokio doing no work and unable to get away. I am going to keep ahead and get results of the first land fighting." The first detachment of American and European newspaper correspondents to be officially allowed to enter Ping-Yang was landed there April 15, six weeks after Collier's photographs of the Japanese occupation were made.

The expression is ambiguous as to whether five battleships and attendant cruisers are meant, or a total of five vessels; but their appearance and the temporary absence of the Japanese fleet, encountered next day, illustrate conditions.

The Baltic Fleet as a Factor

Again, there may very well be truth in the reported purpose of Russia to send to the East the remaining ships of the Baltic Navy. The Russian Minister of Marine has lately stated that by the end of August he hopes this division will have passed the Straits of Gibraltar, and that it is now waiting only for the completion of five ships, which will doubtless be hastened to the utmost possible. It is known that work upon them is being driven, night and day, Sundays and holidays. The operation will present no military difficulty. It is simply a question of coaling; far from insuperable, especially in summer. So long as the Port Arthur division has a navigable exit left to it, the main Japanese fleet can not venture far away, and therefore can not molest this external movement until it comes well within its radius of rapid action, measured from the position necessary to watch the port. When that occurs, the Russian divisions, though separated, will be so far within mutual supporting distance as to constitute a grave perplexity to their concentrated opponent; to whom, if united, they may be decisively superior. The Japanese, undoubtedly, would begin with the twin advantages of concentrated force and interior position,—between their two enemies,—and these they may preserve by judicious choice of station; but it is more easy to use the word "judicious" than to apply it in action. In the supposed case the Japanese admiral must be so near Port Arthur that its squadron can not give him the slip, yet not so near that the approach of the outside division can receive timely help from that within. To find such a comfortable position is quite as difficult as it sounds, especially in these days of wireless telegraphy. Moreover, granting success in meeting and beating the outside division alone, the consideration remains that, if this makes vigorous resistance, victory may be to the Japanese almost as disastrous as defeat. Nelson's notable remark concerning possible mishap to an inferior British detachment, in 1805, is as applicable now as when he made it. "This I freely ventured, that, by the time the enemy had beaten our fleet soundly, they would do us no more harm this year." The destruction of the outgoing Baltic squadron might possibly be compensated by leaving that of Port Arthur master of the situation. This calculation is obvious enough to a military man, and I am not surprised, the second morning after writing it, to find in the press the announcement that it is seriously entertained by the Russian authorities.

The Truth is Hard to Get At

Much of all this is necessarily contingent on factors not to be known certainly. No one, for instance, can affirm the present condition of the torpedoed Russian ships, or vouch for the accuracy of the asserted Russian expectation that the Baltic fleet will sail in July. Neither foe nor neutral is entitled to expect the whole truth of a military situation to be disclosed by the officials interested. I am not engaged in prophesying, but in submitting, for those who have had no occasion to study the principles of war, such considerations as may facilitate their judgment upon circumstances as they develop, or reports as they arise. For instance, this importance of the Port Arthur division in the eyes of the Japanese, evidenced by their actions, in my judgment throws appreciable light on the probability of their intention to move in large force by way of Newchwang, in support of that which I conceive must remain their main line of operations—by way of the Yalu River. To neutralize Port Arthur is essential to the Newchwang movement, and the character of their persistence gives color to the view that it has this for its ultimate object. The map shows that the two advances, by Newchwang and the Yalu, can support one another only by the distraction—the "diversion"—they impose upon the enemy. The Russians, resting on the railroad from Port Arthur to Mukden, and extending their front of operations thence to the Yalu, would occupy, relatively to the separated Japanese armies, the concentrated interior position which the Japanese admiral in the former instance would have between the two Russian squadrons. As the larger part of the whole Russian army would be at liberty—subject to the general conditions of the field of war—to turn in either direction, each of the supposed Japanese armies must be strong enough to maintain itself against such an attack, and to this end must have secure the communications which the Port Arthur fleet menaces.

The apt use of such a central position, between the two divisions of a superior enemy which thought to inclose him, gave Bonaparte the brilliant successes of his Italian campaign of 1796, the beginning of his fortunes. Holding one in check by small numbers, the resisting power of which was increased by utilizing the accidents of the ground, he threw upon the other the mass of his force. This method applies at sea also, but with qualifications; for ships, especially modern ships, are so readily disabled, and with such difficulty and delay repaired, that the party of the centre may well be so damaged in his first encounter as to be in no condition for new offensive action till too late to affect the fortune of war—as Nelson said. Also, at sea accidents of the ground are exceptional; therefore disparity of numbers counts for much more.

From these considerations, fundamental in war, it will be clearly inexpedient for Japan to divide her land force between the Yalu and Newchwang, unless there is reasonable certainty that she can place and maintain in each troops enough to act offensively—advance—against more than half of the Russian total; and also resist—act defensively with success—for an appreciable time, in case the enemy should succeed in turning largely superior numbers upon one division alone. That the Japanese believe they can do this seems probable from their action, as far as it transpires, and notably from their obstinate persistence in the endeavor wholly to eliminate the Port Arthur fleet as a factor in the campaign. This done, they could regard with equanimity the approach of any squadron that can be sent from the Baltic for two years hence. Their line of communication to Newchwang would then be not only probably safe—it is that now—but decisively safe, with the security requisite to so critical an operation as advance in force from there would be.

Russia's Weakness in Manchuria

The various estimates of relative strengths, weighed in the balances of physical probability, and allowing for national bias on the part of those making them, tend continually to confirm the expectation of Russian numerical inferiority when the land campaign shall open. Incidental French mention inclines me to accept the calculations of a German military journal. Starting from the assumption of 133,000 Russians in the Far East, when the war began, and using German experience of rail transportation, the conclusion is that by April 20 there may be 233,000 available. This is much less than the first disposable force of Japan, and includes those that must be detached from field operations to garrison posts, like Port Arthur and Newchwang, and to protect lines of communication. Japan at first will be little hampered by such needs. Her communications are the care of her navy until successful advance shall have given them a land extension, and she begins with no bases out of reach of her ships' guns. On the other hand, the 133,000 Russians assumed constitute just so much start in point of land force, and time will be needed for overcoming this inequality.

I think these calculations sound, and they tend to confirm the inferences deducible from such information as leaks out. Together, they show that Japan keeps steadily in view that the main point of interest in her contention is Korea, and that the principal danger to her military action at present is Port Arthur, because of its fleet. These localize her action. Consequently her troops as yet are steadily pushed into Korea, and there only; landing at various points, because advance—as yet to the Yalu—is more rapid by several ways than by one. The distance of the Korean coast on one side from Port Arthur, and on the other their indispensable line of communication—the railroad between Port Arthur and Harbin—and, most vital of all, Port Arthur itself, thereby depriving the enemy not only of the ships within, but of the naval base. This needs to be effected before the Baltic fleet can arrive.

The Importance of Newchwang

Here the importance of Newchwang becomes evident: incidental to which is the speedy paralyzing of the Port Arthur squadron. Newchwang is so close to the railroad that its occupancy alone will almost stop movement and starve the port; but, on the other hand, the latter threatens the existence of a Japanese army there dependent upon communications by sea. Togo's squadron can probably assure these for some time, but whether long enough for the entire transportation, and to maintain the subsequent advance until Port Arthur falls, is more doubtful. Doubt will disappear if the Russian squadron be neutralized.

Newchwang being only fifty miles from the point where the main road from the Yalu meets the railroad from Port Arthur to Harbin, the movement thence would be of that turning character of which so much was heard during the Boer War. Striking at the enemy's communications with the railroad, it compels him at once to fall back from the Yalu over a hundred miles of rugged and elevated country, abandoning a series of defensive positions, from which otherwise he must be driven by successive frontal attacks, involving heavy loss. The continuous inpouring of troops toward the Yalu indicates that this is the Japanese main line. The persistency of Togo at Port Arthur indicates, probably, that they recognize and wish to secure the collateral advantage at Newchwang.

The most recent advices tend to show that Russia, recognizing this value of Newchwang, has pushed a very large part of her available force to the neighborhood of the place. This, of course, must modify Japanese action, though in what sense can not be foreseen; for it involves the personal equation of their judgment of the matter. The essential point for the observer to remember is, that the railroad from Mukden to Newchwang, and the high ground east of it,—of from 2,000 to 5,000 feet elevation,—between it and the Yalu, constitute together the central position of defence occupied by the Russian army. According to its dispositions, as estimated by the Japanese, their sea power enables them to accumulate on either side force in excess of that there opposed to them. It has been suggested that, Russia having drawn her force prematurely to this quarter, has probably weakened her position about Vladivostok, and that Japan may utilize the opportunity to strike there.

The Yalu is the Strategic Centre

To me it appears that such a movement would be militarily eccentric; that the objects of the war centre from the Yalu to Newchwang, this being, in fact, the region demanded of China by Japan, in 1895; that the seaboard, from the Yalu westward, being much lower than the central range occupied by the Russians, may admit of successful flanking movements by the main Japanese line advancing from the Yalu, supported by close co-operation of the cruisers; and, finally, that to attack Vladivostok now leaves Port Arthur safe and its fleet in being.

It will be observed that, despite his evident recognition of the vital importance of destroying the Port Arthur squadron, and notwithstanding the brilliant success of his first torpedo surprise against a fleet lying at an open anchorage, the Japanese admiral has not attempted to send his torpedo flotilla inside of Port Arthur, as was apparently expected by those who contrasted the outside attack with the refusal of the United States fleet to send torpedo boats inside of Santiago. It may also be inferred, from his frequent disappearances, that he does not keep his fleet in a uniform position or within easy striking distance of the ten torpedo vessels inside the Port. Recognizing that upon the battle fleet turns the fortune of a war vital to his country, he evidently proposes to spare no precaution nor stratagem to ensure that it shall not risk injury, unless with the fair chance of greater injury done the enemy. Apparently, also, the Russian torpedo vessels have made no serious effort to molest a battle fleet of whose precise position they are at a particular moment ignorant, but which they know to be picketed and covered by vessels of their own type. It is too early for conclusions; but so far the fair inference seems to be that the "irresistible torpedo" is a game, like another, at which two may play. Upon it certain limitations may be presumed from the mere fact that in two months nothing more has been done by it, notwithstanding the fact that all depends upon the relative force of the two battle fleets.

April 16.—The immediate effect of the events of this week—the sinking of the Petropavlovsk, and disabling of the Pobeda—is to augment the local Japanese naval preponderance, probably to the extent of being for the time irresistible. Originally weaker, successive losses have deprived the Russians of almost all capacity for offensive action until their strength has been restored by repairs and reinforcements. If necessary for other

THE WRECKED RUSSIAN BATTLESHIP "CZAREVITCH"

This photograph was made in the roadstead of Port Arthur on the morning after the war vessel was injured by the explosion of a Japanese torpedo beneath her water-line. The crippled ship is being towed fore and aft, as her engines were disabled and some of her compartments flooded. The "Czarevitch" was struck at midnight, February 8, in the first attack made by Admiral Togo's fleet, which also put out of commission the battleship "Retvizan" and the cruiser "Pallada."

from Vladivostok, combined with the presence of the two Japanese naval divisions before either, adequately secures the transports. When sufficient numbers to hold the line defensively shall have reached the Yalu, military occupation of the desired territory—of the peninsula in their rear—will be established.

What Japan Must Accomplish

This done, the time for offensive action arrives. The Yalu held, there arises necessarily the question of defeating the enemy's armies, gaining possession of objects, the Japanese may now feel able to detach from their battle fleet; they at all events can send vessels into port by ones or twos, for refit or refreshment—no slight advantage. The whole maritime tension is for them relaxed; they have a period of free hand. But if the Russian ships can be docked, this condition may be temporary. The essential features of the situation are not revolutionized. The only permanent modification so far is the battleship sunk, for battleships are not built within the probable duration of this war.

From the past energy and promptitude of the Japanese, it is to be expected they will recognize this opportunity to be transient, and will use it to the utmost. Japan is essentially on the defensive, both from the nature of her objects, in close continental contact with an overpowering land power, and from the inferiority of her ultimate resources. What she has gained has been by superior preparation, superior force at the point of action, and prompt initiative. On the same conditions only can the weaker hope for final victory.

These are eternal and permanent requirements of war. Inferiority in each has wasted the Russians in detail. Their enemy has thereby gained further delay, the primary and constant need of the weaker, and it is fairly to be expected that in the immediate future she will act with the vigor which marked her first movements. The necessity remains, as from the first, for her to possess quickly the naval base of her opponent, and to occupy so much territory as by proper fortification and dispositions she can with her numbers hope to hold. Then will come the supreme test of the victor; whether a just weighing of conditions, estimate of powers, can impose moderation in purpose, and call a halt before overreaching the limits of safety.

COLLIER'S FIRST CABLEGRAMS FROM THE FRONT

ALL READY FOR ACTION IN NORTHERN KOREA

By FREDERICK PALMER

Special Cable Despatch from Collier's War Correspondent with the First Japanese Army of Invasion.—Chenampo, Korea, via Seoul, April 17

AFTER two months of inaction at Tokio, I am at last in the field, following the main Japanese army that is marching to Wiju and the Manchurian border. Along this highway, leading from Chenampo to Salinkan, signs of war and of the passage of many thousand troops are scarcely more visible than were military preparations in Japan. All signs are peaceful. The only indication that the army is somewhere ahead is the long lines of coolies, Japanese and Korean, bearing rice from the depots and transport to feed the troops on the road. Thousands of these coolies and small carts maintain the line of communication unbroken, with the military discipline and system that extends to every detail of the field organization. The roads are in the throes of the spring thaw, but their difficulties have been exaggerated so far as blocking the advance is concerned.

The whole fighting strength of the Japanese army is actually at the front with all necessary supplies, prepared for decisive operations. Everything observed along this route, as I hasten toward Wiju to join the army I hope soon to see in action, goes to show the clean-cut preparedness of the Japanese army of invasion for great feats.

Besides the characteristic military efficiency now seen at close range, Japan has used the last two months also in making her influence dominant throughout Korea by peaceful measures. The people have been won over until their co-operation is spontaneous. Japan has policed the country with small posts widely scattered. I have traveled twenty miles without passing one of these few outposts guarding the line of communication. Security for supply trains, peace, and confidence among the populace have been attained by other means. In the path of this great army, moving by forced marches in winter weather, there are no burned villages, no plundered houses, no fugitive peasantry.

There has been no license or disorder among the troops. They have left no stories of loose discipline in their wake. The head men of the Korean villages tell me that the conduct of the individual private soldier has been exemplary. All supplies taken en route are paid for at native market rates.

Hostile critics said the Japanese were on their best behavior in the Peking relief operations when co-operating with the allies, but that in their own campaigns, away from foreign scrutiny, they would wage brutal and uncivilized warfare. This is flatly contradicted by their march through Korea. Their advance has been as smooth and orderly as that of a British column in India, the organization as efficient in every way.

The natives are on their little farms making the fields ready for spring cultivation, already sowing crops of oats. They are unconcerned about war or passing armies which have not yet troubled them. In the summer months the farming regions of northern Korea will furnish great quantities of food supplies for the Japanese bases. The Japanese officers scattered along the route in charge of the military posts and transportation organization have been notably courteous and hospitable to the party of traveling war correspondents with their troop of servants and pack animals. The head men of the Korean villages have taken the cue from the military and hasten to place at our disposal whatever comforts and luxuries of accommodation their modest means can offer. It is slow work getting on at best, made more uncomfortable by the fear that the first great clash may come somewhere close to the Yalu before the advance guard of the correspondents' army can join the General Staff.

Meantime we are passing through a Korea that has been keenly and subtly made Japanese in two months—a country conquered by kindness, fair treatment and a nice skill in handling public and private opinion.

RUSSIA MAKES RULES TO GOVERN WAR CORRESPONDENTS

By JAMES F. J. ARCHIBALD

Special Cable Despatch from Collier's War Correspondent with the Russian Forces in the Field.—Yingkow (Newchwang), Manchuria, via Tien-tsin, China, April 17

THE Russian Government has just granted permission to seven foreign war correspondents to join the main army and the General Staff in Manchuria. Scores of applicants have been on the waiting list for two months. Of the seven fortunate enough to be allowed to proceed to the front immediately, two represent French newspapers, one is an Italian, two are English correspondents. I am the only American representative in this party, and am enrolled as the officially accredited correspondent of COLLIER'S attached to the headquarters of the General Staff.

The regulations issued for our conduct in the field are extremely lenient. It was expected that, in the suppression and censorship of news, the Russian authorities would be more radical even than the Japanese. The stipulations made are no more than those expected to be observed with any European army, and are less restrictive than those of the British in South Africa. Legitimate news will not be blocked even when it tells of Russian reverses. This is in line with the policy recently adopted at St. Petersburg.

The first rule for war correspondents says that they must not interfere in any way with the preparations for war, or the plans of the staff, or divulge military secrets of advantage to the enemy, such as actions in which forts are damaged or guns lost.

Rule two forbids the criticism of members of the General Staff, Corps, or Division Staff, and limits the report of an engagement to a simple statement of fact.

Rule three forbids the transmission of unconfirmed information about the enemy, such as rumors of victory or threatening movements, which may cause public uneasiness in Russia.

Rule four commands the correspondent to obey all orders received and to be careful in fulfilling instructions to the letter.

This manifesto orders the higher military authorities to turn back all correspondents without credentials. Those given permission to join the forces are in honor bound to observe the regulations, with the penalty of expulsion without warning for any violation. They can go anywhere in the field, and are barred only from the Russian fleet.

Newchwang has been steadily prepared, fortified, and filled with troops in readiness for the enemy. It is believed here that Japan intends to attempt landing with a large force. The latest disaster to the navy has deepened this expectation, now that it is known that the Port Arthur fleet can not interfere with the enemy's plans of invasion. The loss of the battleship Petropavlovsk and the death of Admiral Makaroff have spread a feeling of philosophic depression among the Russian staff and troops, but have only strengthened their determination to revenge with the army what has befallen the navy. M. Pavloff, formerly Russian Minister at Seoul, has been appointed diplomatic agent on the staff of the Viceroy. We are ordered to leave for the front Wednesday.

MARKING TIME IN TOKIO: THE TEMPLE OF DAISHI

By RICHARD HARDING DAVIS, Collier's Special War Correspondent in Japan

The Japanese War Office has issued a war correspondent's pass to Mr. Davis, and has assigned him to the Second Column. Until this takes the field, Mr. Davis will write of events in the Japanese Capital

KOBO DAISHI is a Japanese saint. Once while in China he carved an image of himself and threw it into the China Sea. It floated all the way to Japan, where it was caught in the net of a fisherman. When the fisherman found what he had caught he was happy and built a shrine for the image and worshiped it. The image performed so many miracles that soon people from all the coast made long pilgrimages on foot to kneel at its shrine. They still make the pilgrimages, but as now Japan is modern they no longer need to walk. Instead, on the 21st of each month the railroad runs special trains to Kawasaki, and the pilgrims are carried to the shrine in electric cars.

Of all the twelve festivals, the one on March 21 is the most important, and on that day a great bazaar starts a mile away and advances with two rows of fluttering banners to the very steps of the temple. Indeed, so close does the fair encroach upon the shrine that the priests who are selling prayers inside are interrupted by the men outside who are selling musical tops.

And those who came to worship remain to play.

Outside the temple is a great double-decked gate, and still nearer a covered well, a square stone tank fed from a spring. On the edge of the tank are wooden ladders, and before he says his prayers each pilgrim stops at the well to rinse his mouth and bathe his hands. Gay banners of various colors, and covered with texts, hang above his head. These he uses as towels. The temple itself is a low massive structure, squatting on the great steps like a monster turtle. Its beams are of giant size. In comparison, the timbers of an old wooden battleship would look as though they had been cut by a scroll saw. The temple is virtually a single square hall open at the sides, except for screens, and divided by screens and carved railings. At the entrance to the temple at the top of the stone steps is an oblong wooden trough, covered by a gridiron of wooden bars. Pilgrims who wish to pray, or to give thanks for prayers already granted, as they enter, throw copper money into this trough.

Inside the porch, and under the roof of the temple shutting off the view of the shrine, were a row of tables, behind which stood priests vending prayers.

To the stranger their manner suggested less the priest than the alert and obliging salesman. So professional was their bow when they handed one a prayer that one rather expected to hear them ask, "Will you take it with you, or shall we send it?" They offered prayers of every variety and did so great a business that the priest who burned candles was forced to sell the same candle to many different worshippers. And although as soon as he lighted a candle he snuffed it out again, he was soon far behind, and by nightfall many prayers, though paid for, were still unuttered. Other prayers were sold after a fashion that suggested a well-known game of chance. Behind the priest were rows of what looked like private letter-boxes in a post-office, each with a number. The pilgrim paid for his prayer, and the priest by shaking a box he held shot out a rod. He read a number on the rod, and from the letter-box that bore the corresponding number took a printed paper. It told the pilgrim at once whether his prayer was answered and what his future fortunes might be. Those of the pilgrims who wished to pass beyond the prayer tables and draw nearer to the shrine left their sandals with busy young men, who checked the shoes with large wooden tablets. Rid of their sandals, the pilgrims were free to walk upon the mats before the shrine. Those who wished to smoke did so. Those who had brought their children allowed them to run off with the other children and play hide-and-seek around the altar. In spite of the incense, the dim light, the golden images, it was difficult to realize that one was in a place of worship. The copper coins echoed from the coffin-like troughs or were smashed violently against the shrine, paper prayers wrapped around other coins hurtled through the air like shuttlecocks, the children's voices as they played hide-and-seek rang delightedly, and the peremptory clapping of hands as each pilgrim endeavored to attract the attention of the saint to his own particular prayer was as incessant as it was insistent. And in the moat around the temple great goldfish, when the children clapped their hands, rose out of the vasty deep and leaped into the air for sugar cookies.

THE FIRST STORY BY A. CONAN DOYLE AND ILLUSTRATED BY STEELE

THE ADVENTURE OF THE SIX NAPOLEONS

This is the eighth story of the new Sherlock Holmes series, which began in October. The preceding Adventures were those of The Empty House, The Norwood Builder, The Dancing Men, The Solitary Cyclist, The Priory School, Black Peter, and of Charles Augustus Milverton. During the summer months the publication of this series will be suspended, to be resumed in the autumn, the next story, "The Adventure of the Three Students," to appear in the Household Number for October, dated September 24. There will be twelve stories in the completed series.

IT WAS no very unusual thing for Mr. Lestrade of Scotland Yard to look in upon us of an evening, and his visits were welcome to Sherlock Holmes, for they enabled him to keep in touch with all that was going on at the Police Headquarters. In return for the news which Lestrade would bring, Holmes was always ready to listen with attention to the details of any case upon which the detective was engaged, and was able occasionally, without any active interference, to give some hint or suggestion drawn from his own vast knowledge and experience.

On this particular evening Lestrade had spoken of the weather and the newspapers. Then he had fallen silent, puffing thoughtfully at his cigar. Holmes looked keenly at him.

"Anything remarkable on hand?" he asked.

"Oh, no, Mr. Holmes, nothing very particular."

"Then tell me about it."

Lestrade laughed.

"Well, Mr. Holmes, there is no use denying that there is something on my mind. And yet it is such an absurd business that I hesitated to bother you about it. On the other hand, although it is trivial, it is undoubtedly queer, and I know that you have a taste for all that is out of the common. But in my opinion it comes more in Dr. Watson's line than ours."

"Disease?" said I.

"Madness anyhow. And a queer madness, too! You wouldn't think there was any one living at this time of day who had such a hatred of Napoleon the First that he would break any image of him that he could see."

Holmes sank back in his chair.

"That's no business of mine," said he.

"Exactly. That's what I said. But then when the man commits burglary in order to break images which are not his own, that brings it away from the doctor and on to the policeman."

Holmes sat up again.

"Burglary! This is more interesting. Let me hear the details."

Lestrade took out his official notebook and refreshed his memory from its pages.

"The first case reported was four days ago," said he. "It was at the shop of Morse Hudson, who has a place for the sale of pictures and statues in the Kennington Road. The assistant had left the front shop for an instant when he heard a crash, and, hurrying in, he found a plaster bust of Napoleon, which stood with several other works of art upon the counter, lying shivered into fragments. He rushed out into the road; but, although several passers-by declared that they had noticed a man run out of the shop, he could neither see any one nor could he find any means of identifying the rascal. It seemed to be one of those senseless acts of Hooliganism which occur from time to time, and it was reported to the constable on the beat as such. The plaster cast was not worth more than a few shillings, and the whole affair appeared to be too childish for any particular investigation."

"The second case, however, was more serious and also more singular. It occurred only last night."

"In Kennington Road, and within a few hundred yards of Morse Hudson's shop, there lives a well-known medical practitioner, named Dr. Barnicot, who has one of the largest practices upon the south side of the Thames. His residence and principal consulting room is at Kennington Road, but he has a branch surgery and dispensary at Lower Brixton Road, two miles away. This Dr. Barnicot is an enthusiastic admirer of Napoleon, and his house is full of books, pictures, and relics of the French Emperor. Some little time ago he purchased from Morse Hudson two duplicate plaster casts of the famous head of Napoleon by the French sculptor, Devine. One of these he placed in his hall in the house at Kennington Road and the other on the mantel-piece of the surgery at Lower Brixton. Well, when Dr. Barnicot came down this morning, he was astonished to find that his house had been burgled during the night, but that nothing had been taken save the plaster head from the hall. It had been carried out and had been dashed savagely against the garden wall, under which its splintered fragments were discovered."

Holmes rubbed his hands.

"This is certainly very novel," said he.

"I thought it would please you. But I have not got to the end yet. Dr. Barnicot was due at his surgery at twelve o'clock, and you can imagine his amazement when, on arriving there, he found that the window had been opened in the night and that the broken pieces of his second bust were strewn all over the room. It had been smashed to atoms where it stood. In neither case were there any signs which could give us a clue as to the criminal or lunatic who had done the mischief. Now, Mr. Holmes, you have got the facts."

"They are singular, not to say grotesque," said Holmes. "May I ask whether the two busts smashed in Dr. Barnicot's rooms were the exact duplicates of the one which was destroyed in Morse Hudson's shop?"

"They were taken from the same mold."

"Such a fact must tell against the theory that the man who breaks them is influenced by any general hatred of Napoleon. Considering how many hundreds of statues of the great Emperor must exist in London, it is too much to suppose such a coincidence as that a promiscuous iconoclast should chance to begin upon three specimens of the same bust."

"Well, I thought as you do," said Lestrade. "On the other hand, this Morse Hudson is the purveyor of busts in that part of London, and these three were the only ones which had been in his shop for years. So, although, as you say, there are many hundreds of statues in London, it is very probable that these three were the only ones in that district. Therefore a local fanatic would begin with them. What do you think, Dr. Watson?"

"There are no limits to the possibilities of mono-

Holmes had just completed his examination when the door opened mania," I answered. "There is the condition which the modern French psychologists have called the 'idée fixe,' which may be trifling in character and accompanied by complete sanity in every other way. A man who had read deeply about Napoleon, or who had possibly received some hereditary family injury through the great war, might conceivably form such an 'idée fixe,' and under its influence be capable of any fantastic outrage."

"That won't do, my dear Watson," said Holmes, shaking his head, "for no amount of 'idée fixe' would enable your interesting monomaniac to find out where these busts were situated."

"Well, how do you explain it?"

"I don't attempt to do so. I would only observe that there is a certain method in the gentleman's eccentric proceedings. For example, in Dr. Barnicot's hall, where a sound might arouse the family, the bust was taken outside before being broken, whereas in the surgery, where there was less danger of an alarm, it was smashed where it stood. The affair seems absurdly trifling, and yet I dare call nothing trivial when I reflect that some of my most classic cases have had the least promising commencement. You will remember, Watson, how the dreadful business of the Abernethy family was first brought to my notice by the depth which the parsley had sunk into the butter upon a hot day. I can't afford, therefore, to smile at your three broken busts, Lestrade, and I shall be very much obliged to you if you will let me hear of any fresh developments of so singular a chain of events."

The development for which my friend had asked came in a quicker and an infinitely more tragic form than he could have imagined. I was still dressing in my bedroom next morning when there was a tap at the door and Holmes entered, a telegram in his hand. He read it aloud:

"Come instantly 131, Pitt Street, Kensington, Lestrade."

"What is it, then?" I asked.

"Don't know—may be anything. But I suspect it is the sequel of the story of the statues. In that case our friend the image-breaker has begun operations in another quarter of London. There's coffee on the table, Watson, and I have a cab at the door."

In half an hour we had reached Pitt Street, a quick little backwater just beside one of the briskest currents of London life. No. 131 was one of a row, all flat-chested, respectable, and most unromantic dwellings. As we drove up we found the railings in front of the house lined by a curious crowd. Holmes whistled.

"By George! it's attempted murder at the least. Nothing less will hold the London message boy. There's a deed of violence indicated in that fellow's round shoulders and outstretched neck. What's this, Watson? The top steps swilled down and the other ones dry. Footsteps enough, anyhow! Well, well, there's Lestrade at the front window, and we shall soon know all about it."

The official received us with a very grave face, and showed us into a sitting-room where an exceedingly unkempt and agitated elderly man, clad in a flannel dressing-gown, was pacing up and down. He was introduced to us as the owner of the house, Mr. Horace Harker of the Central Press Syndicate.

"It's the Napoleon bust business again," said Lestrade. "You seemed interested last night, Mr. Holmes, so I thought perhaps you would be glad to be present, now that the affair has taken a very much graver turn."

"What has it turned to, then?"

"To murder. Mr. Harker, will you tell these gentlemen exactly what has occurred?"

The man in the dressing-gown turned upon us with a most melancholy face.

"It's an extraordinary thing," said he, "that all my life I have been collecting other people's news, and now that a real piece of news has come my own way I am so confused and bothered that I can't put two words together. If I had come in here as a journalist I should have interviewed myself and had two columns in every evening paper. As it is, I am giving away valuable copy by telling my story over and over to a string of different people, and I can make no use of it myself. However, I've heard your name, Mr. Sherlock Holmes, and if you'll only explain this queer business I shall be paid for my trouble in telling you the story."

Holmes sat down and listened.

"It all seems to centre round that bust of Napoleon which I bought for this very room about four months ago. I picked it up cheap from Harding Brothers, two doors from the High Street Station. A great deal of my journalistic work is done at night, and I often write until the early morning. So it was to-day. I was sitting in my den, which is at the back of the and the bad. The stage, however imperfect the mirror which it holds to nature, reflects the general trend, and the drama changes with science and religion. Alteration in conventions, as lights, scenery, soliloquy, are superficial, but such a change as suppressing the old-time villain springs from the heart of modern thought.

Literature in Farce

THE average farce of France or America offers little excuse for thought or ink. German farces of the day are less attenuated, more full of life. Ours make a little go a long way, whether, in plot character, comic idea, or situation. To analyze any farce I have seen this season would be disastrous to peace of mind and self-respect, excepting "She Stoops to Conquer," which happily does not need analysis. The Ben Greet Company deserve our thanks for producing it. The acting, as a whole, was somewhat less than fair, but Miss Matthison's Kate was full of charm. Goldsmith was an enormous liar, a person abounding in good humor, versatility, and imagination, who became an author by profession at thirty, wrote a great novel at thirty-six, his first play at forty, and "She Stoops to Conquer" at forty-three, thus going through an evolution not uncharacteristic of literary men. If he was "an inspired idiot" we might imagine he would be the ideal man for farce, and "She Stoops to Conquer" would be perfect of its kind, if to its cheerful abundance it added a more technical logic and instinct for the stage. Lawless and awkward though it be, it is surpassed as farce in modern literature by Molière and Shakespeare only. No art requires a richer temperament than farce, in player and in author. The farce actor par excellence in our country to-day is May Irwin, and she has never found her author. Her mere existence should bring to light some genius able to create a woman Falstaff.

An Englishman on Chicago Humor

ANDREW LANG is a purist, and, moreover, he is old. His view of American humor is in no sense representative, for among the English generally the most popular American writing has been our humor. A recent violent review of George Ade by Mr. Lang is more absurd, if not more amusing, than anything which Mr. Ade himself has written. Present American humor is largely built upon the metaphors of common experience. Mr. Ade is often comprehensible even when his slang is pure invention, because its origin is clear. He pushes his method very far, is frequently less humorous than peculiar, and is often overloaded in manner; but the gist of Mr. Lang's objection is that Mr. Ade is writing about a life of which Mr. Lang is ignorant and exultant in his ignorance. "It is not my design," he says, with fine scorn, "to go to Chicago in this present state of being, and, if I know myself, only a powerful medium indeed could summon me thither from the next world. One learns with regret that brandy and alcohol are 'paraphernalia,' which means 'that which a bride brings over and above her dower.' Why should a bride bring not only alcohol, but brandy also?"

Could pedantry go further? Mr. Lang would have difficulty in finding a modern dictionary in which paraphernalia does not have the derived meaning of equipments. Mr. Ade remarks of an English tourist that "the clothes he wore evidently had been cut from a steamer rug by his mother, or some other aged relative suffering from astigmatism," whereupon Mr. Lang indulges in the retort that "the nature of a steamer rug is not obvious, for perhaps 'steamer' is American for some entity not known here by that name," which is really almost too stupid even for Mr. Lang. He then admits that his countrymen have their "peculiarities": "We usually wear evening dress at public dinners, and we do not march down Piccadilly in round felt hats and frock coats." Note the "march," a favorite word in sarcasm of the heavier kind. To Mr. Lang wearing a round hat on Piccadilly is little short of déshabillé, and wearing a round hat with a frock coat anywhere is worse than a crime. It is a vulgarity. I was walking once in Hyde Park, wearing a sack coat and round hat, when I met a leading English author. He came as near as possible to cutting me. The next day, attired in a hat of shining silk and a coat to correspond, I met the same individual, was hailed as a long-missed friend, and hurried straightway into his social world. That author was not Mr. Lang, for there are many such. Our present critic is equally serious about clothes and vocabulary. He is wroth because he never heard of a one-night stand; but is Mr. Lang's innocence of theatre talk the fault of Mr. Ade? Baseball metaphors make him very indignant, as they seem to him a combination of cricket and Rugby football; and to seem to mix up two recognized British sports is as bad almost as to wear a hat that is not English. Mr. Lang seems to be like his countryman of the anecdote, who said French was a queer language. "Just think," said he, "they speak of 'bread' as 'pain.'"

"But," explained his friend, "it sounds queer to a Frenchman to hear us speak of 'pain' as 'bread.'"

"Yes," hesitatingly admitted the Englishman, "but then, you know, it is bread."

Of this old story Mr. Lang needs reminding. I wish he would obtain and study McCutcheon's new book, "Bird Centre Dialogues." The "dialogues" are free from slang, and although they are in no way wonderful they are full of a fidelity in detail which would give the English critic much information that he lacks. The text is funnier than the pictures, but the whole is infused with that good-humored, laughing observation which is characteristic of Chicago and the humor of the West.

Another Englishman's Objections

UNIMPORTANCE is the salient feature of Sir Philip Burne-Jones. "Dollars and Democracy" lays claim to distinction from the run of hasty tourists' books, on the plea of Sir Philip that he stayed a year among us, under what he calls very fortunate conditions. Of some travel sketches we feel that the author might have produced a better volume could he have spared another week. Of Sir Philip we may say at least that he has done his best, and that time would not enlighten him nor custom cure his infinite stupidity. With the title of his book I have no quarrel, for money does count too much in our country, and it is wholesome to be reminded that it does. Mr. Lang would doubtless agree with the observation of Sir Philip that "for an American to speak of an English accent is like a singer who habitually sings flat commenting on some one else who is singing in tune! It's absurd." It is not, however, for any over-solemn provincialism that Sir Philip is remarkable, but for the utter commonplace of all he says. Part of what he writes is true, part is false, and true or false it matters not.

One Time there lived (that is to say
If half a crust of bread a day
And sleeping on a bed of hay
May so be rated)
A Gentle Youth who tuned his lay
To all the Metres of the day,
But was not, I regret to say,
Appreciated.

In Market-place or Public Way
He read his ode or sang his lay,
As was the custom of the day,
But none suggested
A Laurel Wreath or Crown of Bay:
Instead, one morn, to his dismay,
While spouting forth a Tragic Play
He was arrested.

In Irons he was led away,
And, by a Justice stern and gray,
For blocking up the Public Way
He was indicted.
Then, since he had nowith to pay
The Fine (a trifle anyway),
To leave the town without delay
He was invited.

He was arrested.

There was no choice but to obey—
He left the town at break of day,
Yet still his heart was brave and gay;
Fate could not queer him.
For was it not the month of May,
Were there not flowers beside the way,
And little lambs to sport and play,
And birds to cheer him!

He journeyed on for many a day;
The Peasants gave him Curds and Whey;
For aught I know the Fairies may
Some food have found him.
At night he slept beneath a Bay
Or Laurel Tree, and I dare say Dreamed he was Laureate, and they Were twined around him.

Indeed his only trouble lay
In this, that, tho' his spirits gay
And gentle Heart and winning way
Charmed and delighted
All whom he met, yet, strange to say,
To hear his verses none would stay—
Even the Peasants ran away
When he recited.

But he was not the sort that say,
"Oh, woe is mine—alack-a-day!"
He lived for Hope and in some way
Was bound to find it.
"What matter! Let them go," he'd say;
"Each to his taste—henceforth I'll play
And sing to Birds alone, for they Don't seem to mind it."

And so he journeyed many a day,
Till now at last his darkening way
Lies thro' a forest dim and gray,
Yet, nothing daunted,
Though hoary branches bar the way
And twisted roots his steps betray
And ghostly voices seem to say
The place is haunted,

Singing a Carol blithe and gay,
He presses on, nor does he stay,
Until at last the light of day
His sight surprises.

Even the Peasants ran away.

And now a little winding way
Leads, through a meadow pink with May,
To where, not half a mile away,
A Palace rises.

He wandered on, his thoughts astray,
Framing a little Roundelay
And weaving garlands of the May (For whom not guessing),
Until before him suddenly
There loomed a gateway grim and gray
Whose dark doors yielded to the sway
Of his light pressing.

And lo! a garden gleaming, gay
With flowers in dazzling array
And fountains flashing silver spray
And bowers shady;
And on an emerald bank there lay
A creature fairer than the day,
Yet sadder than a moonlight ray—
A wondrous lady.

Abashed the Poet turned away,
When a low voice entreated, "Stay!
Read me that little Roundelay
I heard you singing."
It was as though upon him lay
A spell that forced him to obey,
And he recited it straightway
In voice clear ringing.

A dreamy, languid, far-away
Expression dims her eyes as they,
Like violets at droop of day,
Are closing—closing.
The Poet ends his Roundelay,
And turns to hear what she may say,
And finds to his complete dismay
The Princess dozing.

Then rose a cry: "She sleeps! Hurray!
The Princess sleeps! Oh, joyful day!
The spell is broken—Rise, I pray,
Oh, sweet song-maker."
'Twas the King spoke, "Arise, I pray:
I make you Laureate this day;
My daughter's hand, too, by the way,
Is yours—don't wake her."

"I make you Laureate this day."

Piotr Verégin, Russian

Threshing Wheat with Rollers

Piotr Verégin, American

A RUSSIAN COLONY IN AMERICA

LIFE AND MANNERS OF THE DOUKOBORS, WHO ARE MAKING GOOD CITIZENS IN CANADA

By E. W. THOMPSON

THE Slavonic word Doukobor means spirit wrestlers. It particularly signifies a sect of Russian peasants, some nine thousand of whom are settled in the western territories of Canada. The term was first derisively applied by a Bishop of the Greek Church while the Doukobors lived in the Milky Waters country of the Crimea. They showed humor by accepting it cheerfully as a verbal badge. To describe them as Quakers, teetotalers, vegetarians, anti-tobaccoists, communists, and professional philanthropists would not be far wrong. Their principal tenet is that the spirit of Christ or Conscience dwells in all men. From this they both reason and act logically. They have no organized church, no clergy, no worship more formal than occasional meetings at dawn for devotional singing, bowing profoundly to the Christ in each, and such remarks as the older may vouchsafe. They respect the Scriptures, but do not make a fetish of the Bible. So catholic are they that no Christian opinion appears disagreeable to them. Many entertain peculiar regard for the Virgin Mary and duly certified saints. The others say, in effect, "Oh, that's all right." They believe the Christ spirit resides in Mohammedans, Buddhists, and even in pagans. It is a go-as-you-please religion, except in requiring all to do as they would be done by.

Making Russian Embroidery

Their teetotalism comes of straight reasoning. Christ being within, it must be wrong to put into the mouth aught that may cloud the spiritual, or move the bodily part to evil. Nevertheless, a Doukabor occasionally imbibes. If the effect be obvious, his brethren leave him to remorse on the first offence. Next time they remonstrate gently. After his third lapse they afflict him much with regretful advice. Did he fall again they would give him the cold shoulder. Among them public opinion must be potent beyond the Keeley Cure, since no Doukabor has been four times intoxicated.

In general they eschew tobacco, but do not think smoking very wrong in certain of the old who used the weed before the Doukabor reformation. Still these indulged ancients feel that the vice should not be too openly practiced. Passing through the Doukabor villages last December, I was occasionally invited to bestow tobacco on invisible fathers, grandfathers, grandmothers, aunts, or uncles. They always wanted it for a poultice. A Fort Pelly storekeeper alleged that "the Douks" often bought tobacco on the sly. It is little more than twenty years since many of them not only smoked openly, but drank vodka, danced, fought on sufficient excuse, served in the Russian army, and were generally profane. The reformer who induced them to forsake such vanities was Piotr Verégin, then a youth.

Piotr, an educated man, appears a disciple of Tolstoi, though somewhat original. The reformation was founded partly on his discovery that Doukobortshi of old had been vegetarians who didn't go in for any naughty fun, much less for fighting or military service. Because he successfully advocated harking back to the primitive, Russia's Government could think of nothing better to do than send him summarily to Siberia. A good many of his chief associates were similarly exiled. This confirmed the Doukabor majority in his views, for these gentle beings are obstinate in righteousness. Because they made a bonfire in 1896 of all their privately owned guns, a paternal Government sent more to Siberia, and turned the rest out of their Caucasian villages. Far removed and destitute, they suffered much until rescued by the united efforts of certain Russian, English, and American philanthropists, aided by Canada's Government. Reaching their present lands in 1899, they were there three years before Piotr Verégin was liberated after sixteen years' exile.

Possibly that monstrous punishment did Piotr good. If he went to Siberia a dreamy religionist, he emerged at forty with his wisdom teeth completely cut. A more politic administrator could not have been provided for his people. Finding that they had wasted 1902 in religious controversies, he composed their differences by creating an executive council. He appointed the foremost of one side to certain calming practical business, and intrusted equally important affairs to leaders of the other. These men have recently purchased wisely more than $100,000 worth of goods and stock. The money came out of $250,000, brought back to Piotr by the Doukobors whom he sent forth during 1903 to work on railways and among the surrounding population. In the villages he left barely enough men to grow food for a year. The purchased machinery and implements will enable the Doukobors to show up in agriculture. In Russia they were skilful farmers.

Their vegetarianism is not from dislike of animal food, but because flesh can not be obtained without killing. Eggs, butter, milk they devour abundantly. No fish, because fish live. They do not reflect that eggs are alive. The chick's right to existence begins, for them, when it chips the shell. Pigs they do not raise: they scorn proposals to cultivate foredoomed porkers for profit. Tears come into their eyes at the thought of butchering. At the visitor's avowal that he would not think it wrong to sacrifice all the edible animals in America if thus he could save one beloved human life, Simeon Reiban, a shrewd young Doukabor, fluent in English, held up hands astounded. Every animal, he declared, glorifies God by its existence. Its right to live is as clear as any man's. If Simeon's mother seemed at the point of death, and he were assured by a doctor that chicken broth would save her, he would not credit the assurance, since no doctor could diagnose the will of God. Doukobors have no doctors. Simeon's mother would say that if God willed her to die she would die glorifying Him, and not as an accomplice in the sin of killing a chicken. Not even rats should be destroyed, though it was proper to stop up their holes to save one's goods. Did they die in consequence, that would be God's will, as He could give them other exits to food if He chose. Killing cattle would be almost the unforgivable sin. Dumb creatures, after long supplying men with milk, were entitled to old age in good pasturage and comfortable shelter. Their calves were equally sacred. Whenever Doukabor herds should, by natural increase, become too numerous for Doukabor lands, the excess should be given to needy people who would promise not to kill them or their increase. If they failed to keep faith, that would be their sin. Simeon shrank from no question. He was bewildered only by the contention, novel to him, that vegetarians are essentially cruel to edible animals, inasmuch as, by abstention from meat, they prevent the existence of beasts that would otherwise be raised for the butcher! He soon rallied and declared that, too, was according to the will of God. Yet this fatalist would not admit that man could not kill except by God's will. The inward Christ of any man always objected to his taking life. This Doukabor readiness in meeting subtleties doubtless indicated much discussion in the villages.

A Doukabor Bakehouse

It is through their fondness for abstruse speculation that these sectaries are liable to religious vagaries. Late in October, 1902, eighteen hundred of them made a pilgrimage of two hundred and twenty miles on an opinion that Christ would reveal himself distinctly to those who should obey His injunction to leave all and follow Him. In May, 1903, another set of dreamers, including many women, old and young, assembled for a naked procession under persuasion that they were in the state of innocence of Adam and Eve before the fall. Early last autumn another group set about burning harvesting machinery by virtue of a contention that the employment of mechanical devices for purposes which human members can perform tends to blasphemy. Except for such absurdities, the Doukobors are orderly, industrious, and most charitable. They have frequently presented neighboring ne'er-do-weels with oxen, food, assistance in plowing, seeding, harvesting, and other matters.

Every village has its bath-house, where all inhabitants are steamed and doused once a week. It is a considerable cabin of two main rooms. One is for clothes washing, hot water being supplied from a great iron caldron let into the furnace of brick that heats the oven in which steam for the adjoining bath-chamber is generated. This oven is filled with stones, over which water is thrown through a little door when they are very hot. The steam rushes out through an orifice near the ceiling of the bath-room, where the temperature would be intolerable if bathers were not plentifully supplied with water. After having been rubbed and smartly whipped by oak twigs on which leaves have been cured, bathers descend to the floor and get a cold shower. Such a bath-house could be constructed anywhere for three hundred dollars,

Doukobors in Holiday Dress

EDUCATIONAL

Camp Oxford

Send your boy to
OXFORD, ME.
J. H. Caldwell, A. E.

Waban School
Summer Camp

A home school for boys.
J. H. PILLSBURY, Principal
Waban, Mass.

THE MISSES ELY'S SCHOOL
For Girls.

General and College Preparatory
Courses. Large recreation grounds.
Riverside Drive, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City

NEW YORK, Clinton (3 miles from Ulster).
Clinton Preparatory School 15 Boys
Prepares for any college. Boys 10 to 14 years at time of entrance preferred. References: Bishop Huntington, Bishop Whitehead, 4 College Presidents, J. B. Wheeler, A. M., Prin.MISS SAYWARD'S SCHOOL for girls, in charming, beautiful suburb of Philadelphia. Delightful home, modern building recently enlarged, college preparatory and special courses, musical department, out-door sports. Develops character, mind and body.
Miss S. J. Sayward, Prin.Michigan College of Mines
F. W. McNAIR, President
Regular Summer term opens June 15th. For Year Book, giving list of graduates and their occupations, apply to President or Secretary.
ROCHESTER, MICHIGANArmitage School: For Girls
Half hour from Philadelphia. College Preparatory and Finishing Courses. $750-$900 per year. Address THE SECRETARY, Wayne, Pennsylvania.WASHINGTON COLLEGE
For Young Ladies. Located within the National capital. Charming park of 10 acres. Preparatory, certificate, college courses. Music, art, elocution. Send for catalogue. F. MENEFEE, President, 3d & T Sts., N. E., Washington, D. C.Ward Seminary For Young Ladies
Nashville, Tenn.
40th year. Faculty 30. Seminary and Special Courses. College preparatory. Boarding pupils limited to 100. An ideal Christian home. Complete appointments. Excellent facilities. Mild, agreeable climate. For catalogue address J. D. BLANTON, L.L.D., Pres.Haverford College
In a suburb of Philadelphia. Admission by examination only. Expenses, $400 to $900. For information, address THE SECRETARY, Haverford, Pa.TELEGRAPHY Stenography, etc., thoroughly taught. EASTMAN trains for practical work. Positions for all graduates. Complete Home Learner's telegraph outfit, $1.50. Shipment made by mail at $1.00. Catalogue free. C. C. GAINES, Box 961, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.The Gilman School for Girls Also Called
The Cambridge School
Advantages of Greater Boston without the drawbacks of city life. Resident Pupils, $1,200.
ARTHUR GILMAN, A. M., Director, Cambridge, Mass.BOYS' SUMMER CAMP
"Wildmere" in the Maine Woods
The kind of vacation that does good. Ten weeks in the Sebago Lake Region. Mountain climbing, canoeing, fishing, all the sports that boys love. Coaching trip through the White Mountains. Supervision and companionship of college bred leaders and masters. Special tutoring if desired. Fifth season begins June 30th. Write for booklet.
IRVING L. WOODMAN, Ph. D.
Lawrenceville School, Lawrenceville, N. J.Winthrop College
ROCK HILL, S. C.
Fourteen Courses: Normal (5), General Literary (5), Stenography, Dressmaking, Millinery, Book-keeping, Music, Kindergarten, Industrial Studies, Manual Training, Degrees, B. A., L. L. B. A. - 45 officers, teachers and assistants, 180 students. Expenses of session of nine months $60.00 to $144.00. Session begins in September. For Catalogue, address
President D. B. JOHNSON, Rock Hill, S. C.ROYALTY PAID ON SONG-POEMS
We arrange and popularize.
PIONEER PUB. CO.
523 Baltimore Building
CHICAGO, ILL.TELEGRAPHY
Taught quickly. Can't fill demand for operators. Established 1874, endorsed by official Western Union Telegraph Co. Total cost: Tuition (telegraphy and typewriting), board and room, 6 mos. course, $87. This can be reduced. Catalog free.
DODGE'S INSTITUTE - VALPARAISO, IND.HOME MAKING PRACTICAL LESSONS
BY MAIL
Under teachers in ten leading colleges giving course in Household Economics.
Illustrated Announcement F sent free on request.
American School of Household Economics
2323 Armour Avenue, Chicago, IllinoisTELEGRAPHY
Thoroughly and quickly taught. Expenses low and can be reduced one-half by working for board. Railroads give our graduates immediate employment and furnish free passes to destinations. We have more orders for operators than we can fill, and give students choice of different railroads in many states. Write for Catalog. We pay railroad fare to Jacksonville.
Valentine's School, Est. 22 Years, Jacksonville, Wis.SAVE YOUR OLD CARPETS
Have them worn into Handsome Reversible Rugs. Silk Portieres from Silk Rugs. Rag Rugs from Woolen and Cotton Rugs. Send for Pamphlet C. D. S. RUG & CARPET MFG. CO., Hoboken, N. J.

but Doukobors are perhaps the only working-folk in America who possess them.

To their strict abstention from flesh, prairie chickens bear silent testimony. They stare from the turfed roofs of the cabins, strut among the domestic fowls, regard passing human beings as of no more account than cattle, and much less dangerous than Doukobor dogs. Along the trails through the Russian tract of some twenty-five miles square these beautiful grouse, usually shy of man, scarcely trouble to get out of his horse's way. If any outsider comes to shoot at them, the people rise up and drive the birds beyond his reach, without one unkind word to him.

A somewhat formal politeness prevails among these people. On meeting they make obeisance to one another by a peculiar bow, with the left foot advanced, the body inclined toward that side, and the head respectfully bent. A visitor may suspect that a reverential habit of mind accounts for their heads being usually worn on the bias, as well as for the forward contraction of their broad shoulders. Further observation attributes this to bad tailoring by the women. They fashion the blouses of men and growing boys too narrowly in the upper front, as if to square accounts for the liberal bulging of their own garments. Except Ivan Makortof, ninety-two years old, who was in his youth a soldier, few well-set-up Doukobor men were seen. Ivan is still erect as on parade. He drills the boys and girls in singing psalms and hymns, some of which are said to be sixteen hundred years old.

Doukobor women wear no corsets. They are expert in sewing, embroidery, and lace-making. All the tasteful ornamentation of their shapeless garments is made by their skilful fingers. They are fond of being photographed in their finery, which might bring high prices in New York, though they seldom use the finer threads for lace-making. They wear starched and ornamented caps within doors and small head-shawls in the open. They decorate the whitewashed interior of their cabins by curiously artful arrangements of crude-colored advertising cards, from which the letters are cut away. Usually their faces have the placid look of rest, but often, in talk, they shine with happiness. Some are comely and beautiful in a large way. Cleanly and dressy in their peasant fashion, they are never neat except in their best clothes. At work, in cabin or field, they wear old garments, often torn and not always patched. In winter they wear outdoors vast cloaks of sheepskin with the wool inside, and appear additionally widened as by numerous petticoats. At all seasons they carry heavy burdens of water, two pail-fuls, hung at opposite ends of a neck yoke. Theirs is most of the rough work about the houses and much of that in the fields. Though they serve and stand back when the men are at table with strangers, and generally seem to regard the males as privileged vessels, their attitude appears maternal and not inferior. That they direct affairs a good deal is evident when Doukobors are seen in a Canadian town. There the men commonly follow the striding women meekly, watch them buying at the stores, and carry away the heavier parcels.

The men include many skilful mechanics. Some fashion anvils, hinges of excellent workmanship, and varied decorative iron-work. Others cut remarkable scrolls for gable-boards; carve and paint curious chairs, window trimmings, and door posts; mold the bodies of sleighs with laborious art, and beautify them with elaborate reliefs in wood. All alike aid in building great clay stoves of many flues, which heat their cabins gently and thoroughly. They quickly learn to use machinery, and have cleverly adapted the engines of steam threshers to milling purposes. Next year some villages will employ steam plows by way of sparing their horses and oxen. In 1902 several villages turned their domesticated beasts loose to enjoy complete freedom, while the owners drew wagons and plows. This excess of tenderness caused the Canadian authorities to round up the beasts and sell them as strays. Other Doukobors bought them in. The money was credited to a Doukobor aid account. Since then the liberationists of cattle have endured their share in the sin of owning and working quadrupeds.

Except hallooing and singing of anthems there are no Doukobor amusements, though a boy did admit that he had once played ball. Any sort of pilgrimage might relieve such monotony.

The Doukobors live in some sixty villages, about forty being closely bunched in the southeast corner of Saskatchewan and the northeast corner of contiguous Assiniboia. Each village is supposed to consist of forty "homesteaders," men over eighteen years entitled to one hundred and sixty acres of land. Some villages lack their quotas. From every collection of cabins they farm the appertaining land. Crops, cattle, work-horses, fuel, implements in general, are owned by the Mir, or village commune. Houses, furniture, clothing, stoves, belong to the home. Thus the family and the individual are free to exercise ingenuity in various ways. The greater commune, which includes separate colonies of villages within easy reach of one another, owns built, stallions, flouring mills, and similar plant of general service. They have bought some movable threshing-machines lately, which will relieve men and horses from the labor of traveling over dispread straw wheat with wooden rollers cleated diagonally, and also relieve women from kneeling to thump flaxseed from the straw with pounders. To a few villages is allotted the task of grinding flour for all. Others maintain stallions and beasts of common service. Each village has its cattle-house, sheepfold, and stable in charge of special persons. A Doukobor teamster or plowman does not groom or feed his horses. The whole system appears flexible and efficient. It is supervised by elders empowered by common consent. There is no formal

The JAMES MEANS SHOE FOR MEN

is sold by leading retailers. If YOUR retailer cannot supply you, read the offer which we make to you below. It is unprecedented in the history of the shoe-manufacturing industry

THE RETAIL PRICES OF THE
JAMES MEANS SHOE ARE UNIFORM
THROUGHOUT THE U. S., NAMELY

$2.50 and $3.00

A postal card request will bring to you our illustrated pamphlet describing the large variety of styles, all of which are easily within your reach.

RUSSIA CALF-BLUCHER OXFORD
TAN COLORED - SINGLE SOLE. POPULAR LAST
THE IDEAL SHOE FOR SPRING & SUMMER
PRICE DELIVERY FREE IN U. S.
$3.00

GOODYEAR WELT
JAMES MEANS' SHOE
MODEL NO. 2540

MODEL NO. 2581

MODEL NO. 2584

CHROMATE LEATH BLUCHER NEW YORK LAST
PRICE DELIVERED FREE IN U. S.
$3.00

VICI KID BAL
SINGLE SOLE CIVITAS LAST
EXCEPTIONAL VALUE
PRICE DELIVERY FREE IN U. S.
$2.50

THE ABOVE TRADE-MARK IS STAMPED ON SOLES OF EVERY PAIR, BEARING FOR PAGE 100 A GUARANTEE OF A CENTURY.

Our Extraordinary Offer The above cuts show three immensely popular styles of the James Means Shoe. Where not obtainable of dealers, we will send, delivery charge prepaid, to any post-office or express office in the United States on receipt of $2.50 or $3.00 as indicated. See directions for ordering. No delay in filling orders.

We can fit you accurately. We inaugurated this system and we had it in successful operation for years before any other manufacturers thought of reaching out to the consumers.

MAIL ORDERS—Directions for Measuring—Take a sheet of paper and place it on the floor. Place your foot upon it, and then, with a pencil held upright, mark the shape of your foot on the paper (see Fig. 1). In doing this, press the pencil firmly against your foot all around. Then take the best fitting shoe you have and mark the shape of that on the paper in the same way. Then take a tape measure, or a narrow strip of paper, and measure carefully where you see the lines in Fig. 2. I doing this, let the tape touch at all points without drawing it tight. Be accurate; measure each foot, stockings on. You are now prepared to make out your order.

Directions for Ordering—Take a sheet of ruled letter-paper and number the lines from 1 to 15. Then fill in as follows: 1. Your name. 2. Street and No. 3. Post-office. 4. Express office. 5. County. 6. State or Terr. 7. Model No. and description of shoes wanted. 8. Amount of your remittance enclosed. 9. How many pairs ordered?—Now the foot measurements follow: 10. Top. 11. Heel. 12. Instep. 13. Width. 14. Ball. 15. Toe. Enclose diagrams of your foot and shoe with the above.

TERMS, CASH WITH ORDER. Remittances may be in any of the following forms: Post-office order, express money order, or bank draft. If none of these are within your reach send money by registered letter. In that case protect coins carefully by wrapping.

MAKERS OF THE JAMES MEANS SHOE FOR MEN
CHARLES A. EATON CO., BROCKTON, MASS

Blasius

So sincere is our belief in The Blasius, so confident are we that it will most perfectly satisfy your desire for a thoroughly artistic piano, that we will willingly send The Blasius from the factory on trial, if no store in your locality has it.

Persons to suit your convenience can be arranged for something on account when you decide to keep the piano, then regular installments thereafter. Your old piano will do for part settlement.

Write at once for further particulars. We will send price, engraving of the new styles, with full description, and opinions of owners of The Blasius.

1608 Chestnut St. BLASIUS 250NS Philadelphia

PENDLETON INDIAN ROBE

$4 to $15 Express Prepaid

Made of the finest Eastern Oregon Wool, in absolutely fast colors, in the latest, most attractive Indian patterns, these popular robes have become a necessity in the well-ordered home.

The color combinations and designs are thoroughly Indian and are furnished up by the tribes themselves. The Indian is the best judge of a blanket, always buys the best. That is why we ship thousands in the Reservations every year. They are used in homes everywhere for slumber robes, veranda wraps, couch covers, trunk and box throws. Their bright, striking colors will be a welcome addition to any corner, "den" and college room, while their satisfying warmth is a boon to the invalid, the convalescent, the traveler, the camper.

Send for FREE catalogue "C," with illustrations of the various patterns and the robes as they are. Robes returned if not perfectly satisfactory.

PENDLETON WOOLEN MILLS, Pendleton, Oregon
Dealers, write us for discounts.

Buy from Our Factory
SAVE A THIRD

Our plan of selling direct to user cuts out two profits and saves a third on retail prices. Our assortment of carriages and harness is larger than any dealer can show you. We guarantee all our goods. We are bona-fide manufacturers—not a commission house. Send for our free illustrated catalogue.

THE COLUMBUS CARRIAGE AND HARNESS CO., Columbus, Ohio

$500 Given Away

Write us or ask an Alabastine dealer the particulars and free sample card of ALABASTINE, the Sanitary Wall-Coating. Never runs or scales. You can apply the mix with cold water. Not a chemical preparation, no acid, no water glass preparation. Buy Alabastine in 5-lb. packages, properly labeled, of hardware, drug and paint dealers. Write on demanding and our artists' ideas free.

Alabastine Co., 103 Water St., N. Y., or
Grand Rapids, Mich.

LOCKE ADDE

ONLY $5.00
ADDI. HITCHCOCK
NEW YORK, N.Y.

Send for FREE catalogue "C," with illustrations of the various patterns and the robes as they are. Robes returned if not perfectly satisfactory.

PENDLETON WOOLEN MILLS, Pendleton, Oregon
Dealers, write us for discounts.

COMFORT SWING CHAIR

The Comfort Swing Chair

rests you all over. You can sit in it, lie in it, or swing in it, as you please, always with genuine comfort. It conforms to the shape of the body, supporting perfectly your head, back and feet. Every part of the body is in easy position, from sitting to full reclining, it is made equally comfortable. You just relax and take complete rest. You sit in the Comfort Chair as in any ordinary chair, and if you wish to recline, just stretch yourself out as far as you like, and the chair moves as you do. Requires no effort on your part. All perfectly simple and entirely automatic. The Comfort Chair can be placed anywhere, no hooks, trees or posts being necessary for support. Can be moved about as any other chair and occupies but little space. Three Comfort Chairs can be placed in the space necessary for one hammock. Folds very compactly when not in use. Guaranteed strong and durable. Suitable for heavy or light occupant. Made of black enameled steel and fancy colored canvas. YOU CAN SEE IT BEFORE YOU BUY IT. Write us for information and full particulars. Sold by furniture and hardware dealers and in department stores everywhere. If you do not find it in your city write us at once. If preferred, we will ship subject to examination, guaranteeing to refund purchase price if not satisfactory. Sent upon receipt of price, $2.50, you pay freight, or $4.00, we pay freight if in the U. S. east of the Rocky mountains, north of North Carolina and New Mexico.

Haggard & Marcusson Co., 423 S. Canal St., Chicago

Used by the Royal Families and Smart Hotels Throughout Europe

CEREBOS

TABLE SALT

NOURISHES

Used like plain salt for table and kitchen. Contains wheat phosphates wanting in white bread owing to the removal of the bran.

Send for sample, enough for the family

"CEREBOS," 78 Hudson St., NEW YORK

MEN'S Flexo Garters

fit perfectly, hug the limb comfortably without binding, never let go of the hose, never tear them, last longest, look neatest—are best garters.

Sold by all dealers. Insist on Flexo, and if the dealer hasn't them, send us his name and size and we will see that you are supplied. Flexo Garters in five heavy ribbed silk elastic—Price, 50c.

A. STEIN & CO., 268 Fifth Ave., CHICAGO

The Silent Door

Avoid the nerve-racking slam of the screen door. Stop its banging and jarring. In 300,000 homes where the

"DIME" Screen Door Check

is used, the slam of the door is never heard. The rubber bumper first checks the door, then allows it to close softly. At your hardware or housefurnishing store or by mail for 10 cents.

Address: Caldwell Mfg. Co., 5 Jones St., Rochester, N. Y.

Hastings Tables

FITTED WITH THE Tyden Lock

are guaranteed never to spread at top or bottom (locks INSIDE the pedestal—to lock at top ONLY is useless). 30,000 sold by us in last three years—all giving satisfaction.

Our "Book of Designs"

showing the very latest patterns of pedestal dining tables sent free on request. Hastings Tables are sold by leading furniture dealers.

HASTINGS TABLE CO.
Dept. D Hastings, Michigan.

SQUABS

sell for $2.50 to $4.00 a dozen; whole and restaurant charge 75 cents to $1.50 an order (serving one squab). There is good money breeding them; a flock makes country life pay handsomely. Squabs are raised in ONE MONTH; a woman can do all the work. No mixing feed, no slugs, labor, no young stock to attend (parent birds do this). Send for our FREE BOOK, "How to Make Money with Squabs," and learn this rich industry. Plymouth Rock Squab Company, 289 Atlantic Avenue, Boston, Mass.

The hygienic influence and correction of carriage acquired through wearing O'Sullivan's Rubber Heels receives the recognition of the medical fraternity. When you need a lift on your heels ask your dealer to put O'Sullivan's Rubber Heels on. 35 cents and small sum for attaching. All Dealers, or O'SULLIVAN RUBBER CO., LOWELL, MASS.

election. Piotr Verégin, general treasurer, is required to account to an assembly from all the villages. He makes a voluntary report to the Canadian Government.

Because the Doukobors object to registering births, deaths, and marriages, holding these to be their private concern, some suspect them of looseness in morality. But no sign of this was visible to me. The faces were of clean consciences. It is true that much immorality might occur if the Doukobors were not what they profess to be. Their marriages are informal, the bond is not regarded as sacramental, and they think divorce should occur whenever the married find themselves linked in unhappiness. But the marriages are all love matches. There is no temptation to wed for social position or wealth where all are equally well off and in perfect equality. The system succeeds. Doukobor marriages last. There has been, according to Simeon Reiban, but one divorce among the nine thousand Doukobors in Canada.

The people are so hospitable that each village entertains all comers gratis, and so honest that any Canadian store or bank considers the word of "a Douk" as good for all he ever seeks of credit. Did they live in a flowery land of continuous summer, without mosquitoes or malaria, their Utopia might closely resemble the conventional sketch of Paradise. It is not, however, certain that many outsiders would wish to reside there long after having got in. Most of us are unfitted for conditions so simple.

□ □

$5,000 for a Short Story

WITH a view to secure not only the finest work of already famous story-tellers, but to encourage and develop younger writers in the field of fiction, COLLIER'S WEEKLY offers the following prizes for original short stories by American writers:

- A First Prize of $5,000
- A Second Prize of $2,000
- A Third Prize of $1,000

There are absolutely no restrictions as to the kind or treatment of stories. Every manuscript will be judged upon its individual merits. The stories may be of love, adventure, business, in fact anything, and they may depend upon plot, style, character, or atmosphere. It is the hope of the Editor to get the best of every kind.

I. The author must be an American by nationality or residence. As the object of the Contest is especially to bring out American fiction, we have made this condition, using the word American in its broadest sense and to include anybody residing on this continent as well as American citizens residing abroad.

II. There is no limit to the number of stories any writer may submit. That is, it is quite possible for one author to submit a dozen stories, win all three prizes, and have the remaining nine stories accepted for publication in the Weekly at five cents a word.

III. Stories may be of any length whatever, from the very shortest up to 10,000 words. The preferable length for use in the Weekly is from 5,000 to 7,000 words, but this will have no bearing on the award of prizes.

IV. All manuscript must be typewritten, laid flat, or folded in its envelope—in other words it must not be rolled. It must not be signed, but accompanied by a plain sealed envelope inscribed with the title of the story and containing a card or slip of paper with the writer's full name and address written on it. Under no circumstances must there be any word or indication on this envelope or on the manuscript itself or any matter sent with the manuscript that would divulge its authorship. No one will know who are the authors of the prize-winning stories until the judges have selected the three best manuscripts. The envelopes with the corresponding titles will then be opened, but not until then.

V. As one of the objects of this competition is to secure as many good short stories as possible, the Editor reserves the right to purchase any of the manuscripts which have failed to win a prize, but which he considers suitable for publication in the Weekly. All such stories will be paid for at the rate of five cents a word, except in the cases of authors whose recognized rate is higher than this amount, in which instance the author's regular rate will be paid.

VI. The copyright of the three stories winning prizes is to vest absolutely in COLLIER'S WEEKLY. All other stories which fail to win a prize, but are acceptable for publication in the Weekly, will be paid for at the rate of five cents a word for the serial rights only.

VII. All MSS. must be mailed on or before June 1, 1904. That is, although a story may reach us a week later than this day, should the envelope bear the post-office stamp with the name of the starting-point and the date of June 1, 1904, or any date previous to that, the MS. will be considered eligible for the contest.

Every story will be carefully read and considered, but the awards having once been made, the greatest despatch possible will be used in returning manuscripts to their authors.

The following gentlemen have consented to act as judges: HENRY CABOT LODGE, United States Senator from Massachusetts; WILLIAM ALLEN WHITE, Author and Journalist; WALTER PAGE, Editor "World's Work."

All MSS. should be addressed,

SHORT STORY CONTEST, COLLIER'S
416 West 13th Street, New York City

Postage for their return should be inclosed in the envelope containing the author's name.

Ivers & Pond PIANOS

Viewed either from an artistic or a mechanical standpoint, piano-building has never reached a higher standard than in the latest models of Ivers & Pond pianos. We want seekers for the best in piano-forte construction to know how superlatively fine both musically and mechanically Ivers & Pond pianos are, and to invite critical tests of tonal effects with the few other pianos in the first class, when the superiority of the Ivers & Pond will be apparent. They stand in tune twice as long as the average piano.

HOW TO BUY. If no dealer sells them near you we can apply you from Boston. We make a personal selection, ship on approval, to be returned at our expense for railway freight both ways if unsatisfactory, and sell on these payments in small cash payments and balance in 12, 18 or 24 equal monthly installments. Old pianos taken in exchange. A personal letter, list of cash and time prices if you will write. Send for catalogue.

IVERS & POND PIANO COMPANY
137 Boylston Street, Boston, Mass.

RICH'S FAMOUS JULIA MARLOWE SHOES

Made With and Without The "Elastic Instep"

Have No Equal for Comfort and Grace

Thousands of Testimonials from wearers and dealers

WRITE FOR ILLUSTRATED STYLE BOOK

The Rich Shoe Co.
MILWAUKEE WIS.
DEPT. G.

"P. S." Tooth Brush

Has a flexible handle. Ask for the "P. S." (Prophylactic Special)—an improvement on the best. You can't realize its comfort without trial.

3 sizes—Adult's, Youth's, Child's—at all dealers or by mail. Always sold in the yellow box. Leaflets mailed free, describing "The Prophylactic Family"—tooth, hair and nail brushes.

FLORENCE MFG. CO., 110 Pine Street, Florence, Mass.

SUCCESS SHORTHAND

Taught by mail under the direction of the most successful firm of shorthand reporters in the world. They teach you by mail the same system they use. Write to-day for our book, "Success Shorthand System."

WALTON, JAMES & FORD
Suite 26, 77-79 Clark St., Chicago, Ill.

Increase Your Income

Learn profitable poultry raising. Our success in teaching it has been phenomenal. The family are practical poultrymen and experienced teachers. Tremendous opportunities for those who begin NOW. No other investment brings such large and sure returns. Write to-day for illustrated booklet fully describing various courses.

COLUMBIA SCHOOL OF POULTRY CULTURE, Box 615, Waterville, N. Y.

Learn Drawing

Highest salaries paid to artists and draftsmen. We teach writing, but drawing and illustrating of all kinds; 18 courses in Cartoons and Comics, Newspaper Illustrating, Commercial Designing, Mechanical, Architectural, Sheet Metal, Engineering, etc. Our method is easiest and tuition less than a week's salary. We guarantee satisfaction and thorough instruction at your home or return tuition. Write for particulars stating course you wish to study. ACRE SCHOOL OF DRAWING, 516 Nassau Street, Kansas City, Mo.

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES

Promptly relieve Coughs, Hoarseness, Throat and Lung Troubles. Sold in boxes only. Avoid imitations. See the Signature of Dr. J. C. Brown on every box.

JELL-O

IT IS A GOOD PLAN

to have a few boxes of Jell-O on hand for an emergency. It is a delicious dessert and is prepared in two minutes. A pint of boiling water and a 10-cent package of Jell-O and you have a dessert that everyone likes. Whipped cream or any kind of fruit can be added if desired.

Flavors—Lemon, Orange, Strawberry and Raspberry. At Grocers, everywhere, too.

New Book of Recipes with colored illustrations sent free. Address

THE GENUINE PURE FOOD CO., Le Roy, N. Y.

PHOTOGRAPHING THROUGH ANIMALS' EYES

FIG. 1.—Photograph of a house-fly made with the crystalline lens from the eye of an ox.

By WILLIAM FRANKLIN WATSON
Illustrated with Photographs by the Author

It is a well-known fact that the eye of an animal is an optical instrument resembling in its plan a photographic camera, the lens being analogous to the camera lens. It is double convex and focuses the images of objects upon the sensitive back wall inside the eye, just as the camera lens focuses images upon the sensitive plate within it.

A consideration of these facts first suggested the possibility of removing the crystalline lens from the eye of a recently killed animal, mounting it in a camera, and using it to make photographs. After a large number of experiments this has been accomplished. Fig. 1 is the photograph of an ordinary house-fly, which was made by the crystalline lens taken from the eye of an ox. The natural lens was simply mounted in a camera in the place of the ordinary camera lens.

This experiment was extremely difficult on account of the softness and delicacy of natural lenses. They had to be handled with camel's-hair brushes, and only a small percentage of those mounted were found uninjured and capable of producing perfect photographs. In these experiments a few lenses were found imperfect owing to the growth of cataracts, which rendered portions of such lenses opaque.

The perfect crystalline lens is a very beautiful object, being entirely colorless and transparent. It refracts light strongly and is capable of producing very perfect images upon the photographic plate. As it magnifies considerably, it can be used for a class of work which is intermediate between ordinary photography and microscope photography. The scientist can readily get photographs of very small objects by combining the microscope with the camera, and can, of course, get photographs of quite large objects by the usual methods of photography. But to get good photographs of a fly or a spider is not so easy, because those objects are too large for the microscope and too small for the camera lens. But crystalline lenses of certain kinds seem to have just the magnifying power suitable for work of this kind.

It seems possible that further experiments with crystalline lenses from different eyes may more fully demonstrate their usefulness and lead to important practical results, especially if some method can be found for hardening those lenses while still permitting them to retain the exquisite beauty of form and transparency which they had while in the eye of the living animal.

FIG. 2.—Corneal lenses from the eye of a house-fly

The eyes of higher animals are generally very much alike and are all constructed upon the same general plan. But an examination of the eyes of lower forms of life reveals wonderful variations and peculiarities. Some of those have but one eye, while others have a very large number, and there is, of course, a great difference in the size. The largest eye that has ever been known was possessed by an ancient extinct reptile known as the ichthyosaurus. Its eyes were from twelve to fourteen inches in diameter. Some small organisms have to content themselves with eyes that are almost no eyes at all. These

The trade mark of quality.

$24.00

Mermod & Jaccard's Special Offer for the Month of May

This splendid 14K solid gold gentleman's watch, 32 size, newest style open face, thin model with inside cap, Mermod & Jaccard's well known "Constant" 15 jewel movement; a handsome and accurate time-keeper, an ideal watch that you cannot purchase anywhere else at such a low price. Guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction, by a house with a 75-year record for honorable dealing. Sent anywhere prepaid on receipt of price, or C. O. D. for examination. Beautiful monogram engraved free.

This price is for May only

FREE—Mermod & Jaccard's latest 328 page Catalogue. It is an indispensable guide for those who appreciate the beautiful and demand good values.

Mermod & Jaccard Jewelry Co., Dept. G, St. Louis

"Lowest price house in America for fine goods."

Deerfield Water

Retains its sweetness indefinitely in any climate—that is one sign of its purity! Whether it be still or carbonated, taken clear or mixed with wine or liquor—the result is healthful and the taste memorably delicious.

The Deerfield
Water Company
Deerfield, Ohio

Write for Booklet

Dr. Graves Tooth Powder

Unequaled

Pure and refreshing. Removes tartar and prevents decay. Gives the teeth a snowy whiteness and the sharply defined appearance of perfect cleanliness. Leaves a perfume of purity to the breath.

3 Ounce Metal Bottle 25c 8 Ounce Metal Bottle 50c

SOLD EVERYWHERE

A Trial Bottle FREE on request

Dr. Graves' Tooth Powder Co., Chicago, Ill.

MENNEN'S BORATED TOILET POWDER

A Positive Relief
For

PRICKLY HEAT,
CHAFING, and
SUNBURN, and all ailments of the skin.

Removes all odor of perspiration. Do- lighted after Shaving. Sold everywhere, or mailed on receipt of 25c. Get Mennen's (the original). Sample Free.

GERHARD MENNEN COMPANY, Newark, N.J.

Rider Agents Wanted

One in each town to ride and exhibit a sample bicycle. Write for sample order.

HIGHEST GRADE
1904 MODELS $8.75 to $17

Coaster Brakes, Heliograph, Pneumatic Tires and best equipment.

1903 and 1904 Models $7 to $12

Best Makes

500 SECOND-HAND WHEELS $3 to $8

All makes and Models good as new.

Great Battery clearing sale at half factory cost. We ship on Approval without a cent deposit and allow 10 DAYS FREE TRIAL on every bicycle. Any wheel not satisfactory returned at our expense.

EARN A BICYCLE taking orders from a sample wheel furnished by us. Our agents make large profits. Write at once for catalogue and our special offer. 450 BICYCLES, wiring machines, tires, sundries, etc., half usual price.

MEAD CYCLE CO., Dept. 53-F, CHICAGO

Patents, Trade Marks, COPYRIGHTS, etc.,

Solicitors

Address MUNN & CO. of Patents.

Office of the SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN

361 Broadway, New York.

Branch Office: 625 F St., Washington, D.C.

Hand-book Sent Free on Application.

LEARN LAW AT HOME

Prepare for success at the bar, in business or politics, by mail, in the original school, founded in 1890. Successful graduates everywhere. Approved by bar associations, law colleges, and courts. College Preparation and Business Law. Liberal terms. Special offer now. Catalogue free. Syracuse Correspondence School of Law, 222 Niagara Building, Detroit, Mich.

GREIDER'S FINE CATALOGUE

of Standard bred poultry for 1904, printed in colors, fine chromo, suitable for framing, illustrations and descriptive text. Given seasonable prices for stock and eggs, tells all about poultry, their diseases, etc., etc. This book only 10 cents. R. H. GREIDER, Rheims, Pa.

Servant Question

— you'll settle it so far as the Washing and Cleaning are Concerned by Supplying Yours With

Pyle's Pearline

The work will be done well — easily — safely and you'll have a

Grateful Servant

VOSE PIANOS

Established in Eighteen Hundred and Fifty-One

The Unvarying Superiority of Vose quality, maintained for more than half a century, has made vose pianos

Impregnable in their Musical Supremacy

By our easy payment plan, every family in moderate circumstances can own a VOSE piano. We allow a liberal price for old instruments in exchange, and deliver the piano in your house free of expense. You can deal with us at a distant point the same as in Boston.

Send for Catalogue and full information.

VOSE & SONS PIANO CO.
160 Boylston Street, Boston, Mass.

The Leonard Cleanable Refrigerator

LINED WITH
Genuine Porcelain Enamel

Find on sheet steel. You can not break, scratch or corrode this wonderful lining. It will last forever, sweet and clean. Ridding objectionable odors of meat material, case of oak with quarter round panels. Hand polished golden brist, nickel trimmings, eight walls with mineral wool insulation. This style $27.50. Freight paid as far as the Mississippi and Ohio Rivers. We sell direct where we have no agent. Satisfaction guaranteed. Send for booklet showing other styles from $6.25 up and free sample of our wonderful lining. Beware of imitations made with white paint.

The Grand Rapids Refrigerator Co., Grand Rapids, Mich.
7 Ottawa Street.

Learn to Be a Nurse

No other profession known to woman's calling offers as many advantages and attractive features as that of a trained nurse.

Do You Want to be Independent?
Do You Want to Better Your Condition?

If you do, then write to me to-day for my booklet which fully explains my method of positively and successfully graduating you as a thorough trained nurse. The demand for Trained Nurses is large—the work pleasant and more profitable than any other profession open to women. Start at once taking my course.

Write for my FREE booklet and personal letter of advice to-day.
Mrs. Harriet Tuckey, Professional Nurse, 207 1/2 practical experience, Box 13544, Milwaukee, Wis.

SPIM SOAP

Babies
Laugh

They are happy and their skins are like velvet. We wish to send you photos of

FOUR HUNDRED
BABIES FREE

they tell the story of Spim Soap, also, Spim Ointment 50c, postpaid.

THE SPIM CO., 16 Knox Avenue,
C. B. Knox, Pres., Johnson, N.Y.

PENN MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE CO.

You can't give your children their happy childhood twice; but you can make sure that, in case you die, they won't have to face the world-struggle in poverty.

Send for booklet, "The How and the Why." We insure by mail.

PENN MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE CO.
401 Chestnut St., Philadelphia

The Fox Is KING

Simply because it excels every other typewriter in mechanical construction.

It is the only typewriter that is abreast of the times in improvements.

Make a critical examination of the FOX, compare the TOUCH, the KEY DIP, the CARRIAGE ACTION, the SPEED, the TYPE BAR and HANGER, making possible perfect alignment at all times.

Compare these particular features with the best typewriter you know and you will see why the FOX is rapidly displacing other machines wherever it is shown.

It is money saved to use the best, besides ever so much more satisfactory.

We will gladly place a FOX in your office for trial and comparison free of charge. Send for catalogue—it's free.

FOX TYPEWRITER CO., LTD.

470-570 N. Front Street, GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

Branches and Agencies in Principal Cities. Liberal Arts Building, World's Fair.

1904
Light Touring Car
Two Models
1904 Tonneau

HAYNES

Light Touring Car, $1,450

"An automobile must be very good or it is no good."—SIMEON FORD.

You buy FUN or TROUBLE.

In seventeen Contests the Haynes car has been declared the very best. That's proved. That's official.

You take no chances with the Haynes car. You buy FUN.

It is the oldest make—the only perfected car in America. That's why it has proved the best. We would like to send you the catalogue.

TONNEAU, $2,550, with top and front glass, two Solar No. 1 gas headlights, two Dietz Regal oil lights, tail light, horn with tube and full equipment. $2,450 without top and front glass.

LIGHT TOURING CAR, $1,450, having much the same outward appearance as our famous Runabout of 1903, but of higher power and capacity and distinctly a powerful touring car—not a Runabout—the most highly developed car of its type—the perfected product of the oldest makers of motor cars in America.

HAYNES-APPERSON CO., Kokomo, Ind., U. S. A.

THE OLDEST MAKERS OF MOTOR CARS IN AMERICA

Branch Store: 1420 Michigan Avenue, Chicago

Members of the Ass'n of Licensed Auto. Mfrs.

REPRESENTATIVES: New York, Brooklyn Automobile Co., 66 W. 43d Street; Brooklyn, Brooklyn Automobile Co., 1430 Fulton Street; Los Angeles, J. A. Rosentee; Buffalo, Buffalo Auto. Exchange, 401 Franklin Street; Toledo, O., Toledo Motor Car Co.

EDISON GOLD MOULDED RECORDS

HERE'S THE FUN—But when you buy cheap records and know you are losing the pleasure that those who use EDISON GOLD MOULDED RECORDS are having—when you have to apologize to your friends for imperfect results—Where's the Fun?

TRADE MARK
Thomas A. Edison

New Records every month—send for latest catalogue.

I. C. S. Language courses taught by EDISON PHONOGRAPHS.

THE EDISON PHONOGRAPH

NATIONAL PHONOGRAPH COMPANY, ORANGE, N. J.
NEW YORK, CHICAGO, SAN FRANCISCO, LONDON.

WILLIAMS' SHAVING SOAP

To Shave or Not to Shave!

Every man should shave—or be shaved. It looks better and is better for the health—so the doctors say.

But in order to shave with ease, comfort and safety, there's only one soap and that's Williams' Shaving Soap. Unless you use that, it's better not to shave.

Here is one of the greatest generals the world has ever known, who as long as he shaved, always used Williams' Shaving Soap.

Cut out and unite Figures 1 and 3, and they show him shaven as he appeared during his second term as president of the United States. Figures 1 and 2 united, show him with a full beard.

OUR OFFER

To any one sending us the correct name of this famous General, with a 2-cent stamp to cover cost of mailing, we will forward, post-paid, a most useful and ingenious pocket tool, called the Triplet, a key-ring, letter-opener, paper-cutter and screw-driver combined, and an article that every man and boy will find many uses for every day.

Williams' Shaving Sticks, Shaving Tablets, Toilet Waters, Talcum Powder, etc., sold everywhere.

Write for Free Booklet, "How to Shave."

THE J. B. WILLIAMS CO., Dept. 8, Glastonbury, Conn.

The Florsheim SHOE

Style
No. 1802

Bench Made

They are cool. An essential point that the "Florsheim" bench made, hand finished Oxford has. No slipping or rubbing at the heel. It meets the requirements of the most exacting.

"A shoe just like your custom shoemaker used to make."

FREE—Send today for our booklet, "The Florsheim Way of Foot Fitting." Shows facts of interest to every shoe wearer. Also full information where you can buy the "Florsheim" Bench Made Shoe.

FLORSHEIM & COMPANY
Chicago, U. S. A.

MOVING PICTURE MACHINES

Stereopticons. You can make BIG MONEY.

Entertaining the Public. Nothing affords better opportunities for men with small capital.

We start you, furnishing complete outfit and explicit instructions at a surprisingly low cost. The Field is large comprising the regular theater and lecture circuit, also local fields in Churches, Public Schools, Lodges and General Public Gatherings. Our Entertainment Supply Catalogue and special offer fully explains everything. Best Free CHICAGO PROJECTING CO., 235 Dearborn Street, Dept. 156. CHICAGO, ILL.

DON'T RISK A PENNY GET WELL FIRST

For 30 years I've been a physician. I have treated nearly two million cases. Surely you'll admit that such experience must have taught me some certainties.

And, all that I know of disease and cure, all that I have proven to be worth knowing—is condensed into my six books for the Sick. Write for a free copy to-day.

They tell of my great discovery that practically all diseases can be permanently cured through the Sympathetic Nerve.

Not the nerves we feel with, see with, hear with, but the inside nerves.

It is these that unconsciously operate the vital Organs,—the Heart, Liver, Kidneys, Brain, etc.

When the inside nerves get run down, that Organ which is weakest in the body loses its power to act properly.

It then throws its work upon the other Organs. These Organs in turn, become affected through over work, and so, scarcely any case is found without complications.

I proved it useless to doctor the individual Organs themselves while the Nerve-power to fully operate them was lacking.

Sedatives temporarily deadened the pain, but increased the distress afterwards.

Tonics revived the drooping powers, only to insure relapse so soon as the stimulus was withdrawn.

Of what use to hourly move ahead the hands of a watch if its mainspring be seriously weakened?

There is but one sensible thing to do, viz.,—stiffen up the mainspring.

That is what my, now famous, prescription—Dr. Shoop's Restorative—does.

It acts directly upon the Sympathetic Nerve Centers just as steam acts in an Engine.

It provides, through these inside nerves, the power to make the weakest organ do its duty.

It enables weak organs to cast off their clogging waste matter, and to repair their worn tissues.

It runs the human mill, at full capacity, till that mill produces enough new material to keep itself running without further help.

So sure am I of this Restorative—that I authorize certain Druggists everywhere to supply it on a month's trial, to practically all who write me for that privilege.

To supply it at my expense if it fails to benefit, at your expense if it cures.

The cost is but $5.50 for six bottles, including my professional help during treatment. Could anything better prove my faith in this system, than this voluntary test?

Could anyone furnish you better grounds for confidence?

You should get my book, which tells how to cure diseases permanently.

Write for it today,—now,—you can't get well too soon.

Just specify which of the six you need.

Book 1 on Dyspepsia. Book 4 for Women.

Book 2 on the Heart. Book 5 for Men (swelled).

Book 3 on the Kidneys. Book 6 on Rheumatism.

Address Dr. Shoop, Box 723, Racine, Wis.

P. S. Simple cases often yield to one bottle of Restorative. All druggists carry it.

But all druggists do not supply it on a month's trial. You must write to me for that.

are called "eye-spots," and they are merely spots of irritable nervous substance, which seem to be scarcely capable of enabling the little creatures which possess them to distinguish light from darkness, much less to discern objects.

Insects' eyes generally present a conspicuous appearance, as in many species they cover both sides of the head. Those two organs are frequently called eyes, but in reality they are compound eyes, being made up of hundreds, or sometimes even thousands, of minute single eyes. In many insects those individual eyes can be distinguished by close observation without a microscope, as they give to the eye masses a granular appearance. These regular divisions on the surface are generally six-sided in outline and they are called facets. The number of facets of individual eyes possessed by different insects varies greatly. The common house-fly has about 4,000 and some beetles have more than 25,000. In Fig. 2 is shown a very small portion of the eye of a house-fly, considerably magnified. This illustration shows the regular arrangement of the six-sided facets which constitute the surface or cornea of the eye.

FIG. 2.—Multiple-image picture made with beetle's-eye lenses

Into the small space of a beetle's eye are crowded hundreds of facets. And yet each one is a perfect lens which is capable of producing the image of an object. This aggregation of lenses, when in the natural, curved position, will not produce separate images of an object, but they are believed to produce, in some way, one image only in the eye of the insect. And yet if the cornea is removed and spread flat upon a glass slip, all the images which the different lenses produce will be separate and distinct. These images are far too small to be seen without a microscope. But with this instrument they are clearly visible, and if the microscope is combined with the camera it is possible to make a multiple-image photograph, showing hundreds of pictures of the same object all exactly alike. The multiple-image photograph, Fig. 3, was made in this way. To produce the negative for this picture required exceedingly careful adjustments, delicate lighting, and most exact focusing. A special developer was required for the plate, and the utmost care was needed in its manipulation in order to bring out the details.

□ □

THE OLD-TIME MENAGERIE

It was not so long ago that showmen exhibited stuffed beasts and traveled by night that the public might not "see the elephant"

By CHARLES H. DAY

THE first elephants seen in the United States were exhibited in tavern barns, moving from town to town in the night, to prevent the inhabitants from "seeing the elephant" free of cost. The earlier circus managers leased their animals from importing speculators. Turner, who toured principally in the East, added a menagerie to his outfit in 1844, leasing an elephant and six cages of animals from James June. In 1847 Turner increased the attraction by exhibiting a hippopotamus made out of leather. As Turner was originally a shoemaker, perhaps he manufactured the fake beast himself. As late as 1872, George F. Bailey & Co. toured New England and the Middle States with a caged stuffed giraffe in their collection of "wild beasts." In 1881 the Turners, sons of the original Turner, purchased their animals, and it is claimed that they were the first managers in this country to do so. They were followed by "Old" John Robinson and Jerry Mahie, who also found ownership more profitable than paying a treasury-drawing percentage.

Percentage like interest was an eater, as exemplified by the firm of Thayer & Noyes, who during the Civil War leased a menagerie of the Van Amburgh party of showmen, who were large importers and in a single season received in percentage from Thayer & Noyes the full value of the animals leased.

As early as 1837 the desire to monopolize existed as it does to-day. June, Titus, Angevine & Co. of the Zoological Institute attempted a Morganic operation in the combination of all the tent-show exhibitions, but all the sheep did not come into the fold as contemplated, and the panic of 1837 prevented the completion of the plan. About that time General Rufus Welch and Caleb Weeks, who refused to be absorbed in the menagerie merger, sailed for Africa, and with the aid of John Clayton, a Scotchman of Cape Town, were fortunate in securing

Let's Speak Frankly

Those who think they can afford it, pay the "advertised price." These who are not sure, investigate and calculate the cost. For example: take a typewriter. $100 is the "standard price"—well advertised. Yet we all know there is not one hundred dollars worth of value in any machine provided equal merit can be had at a less price. Waste has no place in the scheme of success.

The Chicago—$35

is the best machine at any price, and in purchasing it you save $65. Write for the reasons why.

CHICAGO WRITING MACHINE CO.
95 Wendell St. Chicago, Ill.

Diamonds on Credit.

3/8 CARAT FINE PERFECT STONES

#44. 72¢ DOWN 42¢ PER MONTH

AN HONEST OFFER TO HONEST PEOPLE. Our special credit price of $14.00 for a 3/8 ct. perfect diamond will not afford a further temptation. Try our merit. Be kind to your wife. We would not fail to shorten the price still more. You might meet with a better offer elsewhere—until we tested our price is lower than that of any other responsible dealer doing business on our plan. Ask us to supply you with an opportunity to prove our honesty. Let us send you a 3/8 ct. stone set in 14 kt. solid gold ring. If it meets with your entire approval, pay $7.00 down and $4.00 per month, until the balance is in monthly payments of $1.00 each. If you're interested in our plan, send line of post, and we'll send you a 3/8 ct. stone set in 14 kt. solid gold ring.

Herbert L. Joseph & Co.
Largest Diamond and Watch Credit House in America,
148 N. State Street, Chicago.

W. L. DOUGLAS SHOES

$10,000.00 REWARD will be paid to anyone who can prove that W. L. Douglas does not make and sell more men's $3.50 shoes than any other manufacturer in the world.

The reason W. L. Douglas $3.50 shoes are worn by more men in all stations of life than any other make is because they hold their shape, fit better, wear longer and are of greater value than any other $3.50 shoe.

2,473,464 PAIRS OF FINE SHOES WERE MADE AND SOLD BY W. L. DOUGLAS IN 1903.

"For years I could not believe it possible to make a first-class shoe for $3.50, until at last I tried a pair of your $3.50 shoes. I am now convinced that W. L. Douglas $3.50 shoes are the best in the world for the money."—Albert L. Brown, with Knax, the Hatter, New York.

W. L. Douglas High-Grade Boys' Shoes, $2.00 and $1.75.

Douglas uses Corona Coltskin in his $3.50 shoes. Corona Colt is conceded everywhere to be the finest patent leather yet produced.

Fast Color Eyelets Used Exclusively.

W. L. DOUGLAS, 154 SPARK STREET, BROCKTON, MASSACHUSETTS.

THE SMITH PREMIER TYPEWRITER

A KEYSTONE TO BUSINESS SUCCESS

Send for our booklet which explains why

THE SMITH PREMIER TYPEWRITER CO.
Executive office—Factory
247 Broadway N.Y. Syracuse N.Y.
Branches in all large cities

ABSOLUTE PURITY

IN KITCHEN UTENSILS—FREEDOM FROM POISON is hereby guaranteed

1520 KINDS

The Blue Label on every piece proves our statement.

When you buy Kitchen-Ware, buy AGATE NICKEL-STEEL.

LALANCE & GROSJEAN MFG. CO.
New York Boston Chicago

Are You Chained To The Wash Tub

We can sever the chain

FREE TRIAL

Freight prepaid. No money or promise of any kind required. Use it for 30 days; then if you do not wish to purchase, return it at our expense. We pay the freight both ways. Unlike all other washers, the "1900" sends the water through the clothes and washes them absolutely clean in six minutes with no wear or tear on the garments or the operator. Perfectly adjusted Ball-Bearings do the work for it as for the bicycle—make it work with little effort. IT IS ABSOLUTELY FREE TO YOU FOR 30 DAYS. Write to-day for full information and Catalogue.

"1900" WASHER CO., 125 D Henry Street, BINGHAMTON, N. Y.

The "1900"

BALL-BEARING FAMILY WASHER

Whether a housekeeper does her own washing or not, the worry and work connected with "Blue Monday" literally chain her to the wash-tub. Let us send you

LAUNCH-SAIL PARTIERS FREE-20¢ brings 64 p. illustrated catalogue. & ROW-20¢ set of working instructions and illustrations.

BROOKS BOAT MFG. CO. STA. C BAY CITY, MICH.

All Children

are on their feet too much. Prevent this by giving your boy or girl the Irish Mail

"It's Geared" Develops all the muscles symmetrically, overtaxes none. Lightest, most scientific vehicle for children. "They can't stop." Absolutely safe; very strong, rubber tread. Write for Illustrated booklet of "Irish Mail" Book Co., FREE. The Standard Mfg. Co., 4942 Irish Mail St., Anderson, Ind.

BUILD YOUR OWN BOAT

BY THE "BROOKS SYSTEM"

1674-1684. Exact size PATTERNS of every piece. Complete INSTRUCTIONS. Each step plainly ILLUSTRATED. Expert PATTERNS $5.50—once necessary, hundreds have built this boat. Working spare time, at a total cost of $100.00. Boat patterns of all kinds and sizes, up to 100 ft. in length, at prices from $5.00 up. We also build complete COMBINATIONS of boats and launch down frames. LAUNCH-SAIL PARTIERS FREE-20¢ brings 64 p. illustrated catalogue. & ROW-20¢ set of working instructions and illustrations.

BROOKS BOAT MFG. CO. STA. C BAY CITY, MICH.

*Sweet Spring full of sweet days and roses,
A box where sweets
compacted lie.*

—George Herbert.

*Spring opens wide
Her casements now,
And winged blossoms
Perch on every bough.*

—Old Rhyme.

Like a Glimpse Through the Window of Spring

NABISCO SUGAR
WAFERS

As sweet as honeyed blossoms; as exquisite as nectared fruits; as delicate as the fragrance of the opening buds.

A confection to be served alone or with dessert; at the luncheon or dinner; with a sherbet or ice; with beverage or fruit. The crowning touch to the afternoon tea or tete-a-tete luncheon. To be had in the following flavors:

Vanilla, Chocolate, Lemon, Orange and Mint.

NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

HIGGINS & SEITER

Twelve Inch
Genuine American
Cut Glass Vase
$3.00 (See Cut)

If you would like to be thoroughly well informed as to

China and Glass

with a view to obtaining it from the largest collection in the world, at

"1/4 Less Than Elsewhere" send for our Catalogue 14 N.
carrying more than a thousand illustrations. "Serving a Dinner," an elegant brochure by "Oscar," of the Waldorf-Astoria, also sent free to those really interested.

W. 21st & W. 22nd St., N.Y.
(near 9th Avenue)

Buy China and Glass Right
FINE CHINA, RICH CUT GLASS.

AS BUILT IN FLORIDA

KEITH'S A magazine devoted to Building, Decorating and Furnishing the Home. 20 new designs monthly and photos of best examples in the U. S. $1.00 per year.
Full of Suggestions and Practical Plans. A Dime will prove it!

Des. No. 644 as built in Iowa—Cost $4500

Our latest issues of plans, giving views, plans, etc., are:

- |                                      |                                    |
|--------------------------------------|------------------------------------|
| 108 Studios of Home, City, $1.00    | 128 City, $1000 to $2000, $1.00 |
| 118 Brick & Concrete Houses, 1.00    | 142 " $2000 to $2500, 1.00       |
| 28 Studios & 2 Apts. Houses, 1.00    | 145 " $2500 to $3000, 1.00       |
| 30 3 1/2' Houses, Plans, Apts., 1.00 | 151 " $3000 to $4000, 1.00       |
| 67 Cottages, less than $2000, 1.00  | 148 " $4000 and up, 1.00          |
| 12 Cottages $200 to $1200, 1.00    | 17 Modern Schoolhouses, 1.00       |
| 119 " $1200 to $1000, 1.00         | 21 Modern Churches, 2.00           |

A Two Family House like this makes a fine investment!
THE KEITH CO. (Est. '98), 124 Lum. Ex., Minneapolis, Minn.

No More Bald Heads

The Evans Vacuum Cap is the only logical method by which baldness is prevented. It is not an experiment but has been in use for two years and the satisfaction derived from it is sufficient proof of its merit.

STIMULATION without IRRITATION
as produced by the Vacuum method, gives new life to the scalp, prevents hair from falling and makes new hair grow on bald spots where the roots still possess life. The exhilarating effects of the Cap, if used merely as a massage, make it almost indispensable after being once tried. Our patrons write us that the Cap, while producing the good effects of hand massage, is devoid of the irritating results of rubbing. We guarantee the Cap and would ask those interested to write for our free booklet.

EVANS VACUUM CAP CO.
Fullerton Building, St. Louis
Chicago Office, 119 Dearborn New York Office, 1800 B'way

Photography Pays

Our school prepares you for the best position. We fit you for the highest salaries. Women earn as much as men. Salaries range from $15.00 to $80.00 a week. All classes under personal instruction of Prof. A. A. LeClear. Send for Free Booklet, telling about our course. All graduates have good positions.

National School of Art Photography
108 Monroe St. Grand Rapids, Mich.

Petaluma Incubators

and brooders are the oldest and most reliable machines on the market today. Devices purely scientific and sure. Catalogue FREE.

PETALUMA INCUBATOR COMPANY
Box 102, Petaluma, Cal. Box 102, Indianapolis, Ind.

Never Cut A Corn

It is dangerous. Our plaster will give safe and instant relief. Hailed Glycerin. Five for a dime, fifteen for a quarter. Not sold by doctors. Samples Corn Cure, 1906 Walnut St., Phila.

STARK TREES

best by Test—78 Years
LARGEST NURSERY
FRUIT-BEARING TREES. We CASH
WANT MORE SALESMEN. PAY Weekly
STARK BROS., Louisiana, Mo.; Danville, N. Y.; Etc.

the first giraffes seen in this country. In 1843 he exhibited at Cadiz, Gibraltar, Malaga, Algiers, the Balearic Islands, Genoa, and Marseilles, returning home by the way of Pernambuco, arriving on American soil in the spring of '44.

Frank Donaldson, a posturer and general performer, speaking of his experience with the first of the Turners in the early forties, refers to Tim Turner riding a principal act and Nap Turner riding and driving four horses. Donaldson is further quoted as saying: "Hotel rates were thirty-seven and a half cents a day, and it was no uncommon thing to see liquors placed upon the table free of charge, and the performers, upon leaving the dinner-table, presented by the landlord with a 'choice Principee'—two for a cent—and they were good cigars, too."

In the later forties and the early fifties, Raymond & Van Amburgh had a considerable corner in the menagerie business, having three exhibitions touring: The Eastern, Raymond & Driesbach's "Kid Glove" Show; Western, Van Amburgh & Co.'s Great Moral Exhibition; Southern, Raymond & Co.'s Native American Menagerie of seven cages, "not a foreign animal in the collection except a monkey." In 1868 they joined forces with P. T. Barnum, and were proprietors of Barnum, Van Amburgh & Co.'s Great Golden Menagerie, Longworth's Menagerie and Circus, Herr Driesbach's Menagerie and Floating Palace, sharing with Spaulding & Rogers, owners of the unique water amphitheatre afloat on the waters of the Mississippi. Messrs. Van Amburgh, Driesbach, and Longworth were "lion kings," their performances in the "iron-bound den" being a sensation of the day.

Elephants Brought from Ceylon

Seth B. Howes began the organization of a large show in 1850, and invited P. T. Barnum to join with him in the importation of a herd of elephants from Ceylon. Barnum was favorable to Howes' project, but as he had $50,000 tied up in a deposit to guarantee the American tour of Jenny Lind, the Swedish Nightingale, he had no money to invest. Howes shrewdly admitted the already famous Barnum to partnership, thus ensuring the success of the enterprise. A small bark called the Rogatta was chartered, and a member of the Howes family was sent out to Ceylon, returning after eleven months with eleven elephants, one of the herd dying on the voyage. All of the elephants were small except Canada, a large fellow of unsavory reputation, afterward owned by Adam Forepaugh, and known as Romeo. Romeo was finally put to death while upon one of his vicious and destructive rampages. The elephants, counting expenses, cost Howes & Co. the very moderate sum of $11,000. During the seasons of 1852 and 1853 the proprietors were P. T. Barnum, Seth B. Howes, and Lewis B. Lent, afterward of the New York Circus on Fourteenth Street. The title of the exhibition was P. T. Barnum's American Museum and Menagerie, and the great drawing powers were the name of P. T. Barnum, Tom Thumb, and the ten elephants. The active management devolved upon Mr. Lent. The advertising of the show was in the Barnumesque, as Phineas was handy with the pen and liberal with the press. Barnum was a teetotaler, and made a great deal of capital out of his temperate habits.

Barnum and Howes also imported a giraffe at an expense of $15,000, but it was not the first of these delicate animals seen here, as announced in the small bills and large advertisements. Out of revenge for the fib, the giraffe died early, as did half a dozen others that Barnum in vain attempted to acclimate. Howes & Co. brought out the first hippopotamus, afterward disposing of it to Sands, Nathans & Bailey, who quickly turned $50,000 in profits in exhibiting the "river horse" in connection with their circus and menagerie. The Bailey of the firm was George F. Bailey, who married a Miss Turner, a daughter of one of the exhibitors of the previously referred to leather "Behemoth of Holy Writ." The Sells Brothers of Columbus, Ohio, were the first managers to exhibit a pair of hippos, male and female.

Florida's First Circus

"Old" John Robinson, in 1824, organized a circus under the title of "Robinson & Eldrid's Great Southern Circus." Robinson was a rider and Eldrid was a clown, both experienced performers. Their announcements were headed, "Southern men, Southern women, Southern horses, and Southern enterprise against the world." Up to 1850 they toured the South-land winters. Adding a menagerie of eight cages, Robinson & Eldrid exhibited in Florida as early as 1845, being the first tent show to enter the State, and it is the boast of the Robinson family that the "Old" John Robinson Circus and Menagerie was the first of any consequence to visit Texas. In 1842 Connecticut by legislation, secured by John Robinson and other tent-show managers, removed a prohibitory law against that "immoral affair" the circus. Robinson & Eldrid quickly took advantage of the removal of the embargo, and as a pledged concession, "the ladies riding with the show wore long dresses, and the gentlemen knee breeches instead of trunks, puffed and frilled shirts instead of tight shirts." Subsequently, the Nutmeg State enacted a prohibitive measure against the tent shows, but by some hocus-pocus the bill was stolen and never received the Governor's signature.

John Lowlow, for a lifetime a clown under the management of "Old" John Robinson, referring to the performances at Hartford, Connecticut, after the removal of the ban, says: "In the city of Hartford the show gave four performances in one day, using as a lot the City Commons, the menagerie forming an excuse for many of the Church people to attend."

I. C. S. Building St. Louis Exposition.

Erected to exhibit the International Correspondence Schools' system of training by mail. These schools, in twelve years, have enrolled over 650,000 students. They have enabled thousands of men and women, tied down in poor paying positions, to advance in place and salary. The accounts of the rise of some of these students read like romance. You can qualify for promotion or more profitable occupations; young people can qualify to commence work at better salaries than if they started without training. Courses cost from $10 up. Textbooks furnished free. ($100 forfeit to anyone failing in our Drawing Course that studies as directed.) The first step toward success is to fill in and mail to us this coupon.

DO IT NOW.

International Correspondence Schools Box 1198, SCRANTON, PA.

Please send me your booklet, "1000 Stories of Success," and explain how I can qualify for the position before which I have marked X.

Advertising	Stenographer
Show Card Writing	Steam Engineer
Window Trimming	Electrical Engineer
Mechanical Drawing	Mech. Engineer
Architectural	Civil Engineer
Illustrating	Surveyor
Carpet Designing	Mining Engineer
Wall Paper	Architect
Bookcover	Building Contractor
Civil Service Exam.	Sanitary Engineer
Chemist	French
Textile Mfr.	German
Bookkeeper	Spanish
	Photograph

Name _____
Street and No. _____
City _____ State _____

PETER'S

THE ORIGINAL
Swiss Milk
CHOCOLATE

There are many kinds of Swiss Milk Chocolate, but only one
PETER'S

"Irresistibly Delicious."

FREE SAMPLE and illustrated booklet, "AN ASPECT OF HONEY BLANC," write
LAMONT, CORLISS & CO., Importers,
Dept. 2 75 Nelson St., New York.

FOR EATING
ONLY

It's the Hair—not the Hat

That makes a woman attractive

Therefore thoughtful women begin early to carefully cultivate their hair, with beautiful, soft, and lustrous hair may be enjoyed all through life.

Seven Sutherland Sisters'
Hair Grower
and Scalp
Cleaner

Are ideal hair preparations. The Sutherland Sisters' Hair Grower is a perfect shampoo, while the "Grower" keeps the scalp in perfect health. No better can be found.

Sold by Druggists
Everywhere

CROOKED SPINES MADE STRAIGHT

If you are suffering from any form of spinal trouble, you can be cured in your own home without pain or discomfort. A wonderful anatomical appliance has been invented by a man who cured himself of spinal curvature. Its results are marvelous. It is nature's own method. It has never yet failed. The old methods of torture are doomed forever. The scientific and medical world leaped at the cures being effected. Physicians in hospitals and in private practice are endorsing it. The new discovery relieves the pressure at the affected parts of the spine, the spinal cord is invigorated and strengthened, the cartilage between the vertebrae expands and the spine is straightened.

There is bright hope for all, no matter how long you have suffered. We have strong testimonials from every state in the Union. The appliances are being sent all over the world. Each one is made from individual measurements and fits perfectly. There is positively no inconvenience in wearing. We guarantee satisfaction or refund your money at the end of thirty days trial. Write for free booklet giving full information and list of references.

PHILO BURT MFG. CO., 63 4th St., Jamestown, N. Y.

BABY'S TOILET

A baby's skin—the most delicate texture in all this world, and the most easily injured.

So sensitive is it that a mistake in the baby's bath, an alkali soap, for instance, is fatal to its health and beauty. The safest soap to use is

RESINOL SOAP

Mild and kindly in effect, it immediately restores the skin to its original sweetness and purity, promptly curing milk crust, scald head, itching, chafing, itchy eczema and other childish ailments of the skin.

Resinol Soap makes the mother's complexion nearly as smooth and brilliant as the baby's skin. Prevents blackheads, pimples, chapped hands, feet, dandruff, and other skin troubles. It does this because it contains the same medicinal properties as are found in the world-famous Resinol Ointment.

Sold by druggists everywhere. Samples are free.

RESINOL CHEMICAL COMPANY

BALTIMORE, MD.
U. S. A.

Great Britain Branch:
87 New Oxford St., London, W. C.

RACYCLE
BUILT TO CLIMB HILLS WITH PUSHES 27% EASIER
SELF-OILING THROUGHOUT

THE SURVIVAL OF THE FITTEST
The RACYCLE's supremacy was achieved by its being the only wheel on which the power is applied between wide-spread bearings, thereby giving the rider the same speed results with one-third less work. The 1903 racing champions of Japan, Cuba and New Zealand all won their trophies on RACYCLES. Write for Racycle 1904 Catalog. SENT FREE. THE RACYCLE CO. & MFG. CO., MIDDLETOWN, OHIO, U. S. A.

A SWELL AFFAIR

STOPS Toothache Instantly

Dent's Toothache Gum not only stops toothache instantly, but it cleanses the cavity, removes decay, and removes offensive odors caused by decay. It is easy to apply; will not melt in the mouth; will not dry up or spill; in the bottle it will keep for years; stays where put; most economical—no waste.

DENT'S Toothache Gum

Will stop the ache whether there's a cavity or not. It is especially valuable as a preventive of toothache. Don't wait until the tooth aches, get a bottle of DENT'S now and keep it in the house. Used by leading dentists. Sold by respectable druggists, but only by mail on receipt of price. Be sure it's DENT'S. Dent's Gum cures toothache, pain and warms—the druggists do not sell it.

C. S. DENT & CO., DETROIT, MICH.

RED TOP RYE

GOOD WHISKEY

It's up to YOU

FERDINAND WESTHEIMER & SONS
CINCINNATI, O.
ST. JOSEPH, MO. LOUISVILLE, KY.

Learn the Truth

Do you know that the main cause of unhappiness, ill-health, sickly children, and divorce is admitted by physicians and shown by court records to be ignorance of the laws of self and sex?

Sexology

ILLUSTRATED
Contains in one volume
Knowledge a Young Man Should Have,
Knowledge a Young Woman Should Have,
Knowledge a Father Should Have,
Knowledge a Mother Should Have,
Knowledge a Husband Should Have,
Knowledge a Wife Should Have,
Knowledge a Young Man Should Have,
Knowledge a Young Woman Should Have,
Knowledge a Mother Should Have,
Knowledge a Father Should Have,
Knowledge a Husband Should Have,
Knowledge a Wife Should Have.

By WILLIAM H. WALLING, A.M., M.D.
New Edition, Enlarged and Illustrated. Rich Cloth Binding. Full gold stamp. $5.00.
Write for "Other People's Opinions" and Table of Contents, also 100-page illustrated catalogue of books of sex—FREE.
PURITAN PUB. CO., Dept. W, Philadelphia

Skin Diseases

Eczema, Salt Rheum, Pimples, Ringworm, Itch, Acne or other skin troubles, can be promptly cured by

Hydrozone

Hydrozone is endorsed by leading physicians. It is absolutely harmless, yet most powerful healing agent. Hydrozone destroys parasites which cause these diseases. Take no substitute and see that every bottle bears my signature.

Trial Size, 25 Cents
At Druggists or by mail, from
Prof. Charles H. Harkins 59 H Prince Street
New York

FREE Booklet on the rational treatment of Diseases sent free.

ASTHMA Cured in stay CURED. Health restored. BOOK 4 Free. P. HARRISON HARRIS, Buffalo, N. Y.

THE ADVENTURE — of — THE SIX NAPOLEONS

(Continued from page 15)

"The busts!" cried Lestrade. "Well, well, you have your own methods, Mr. Sherlock Holmes, and it is not for me to say a word against them, but I think I have done a better day's work than you. I have identified the dead man."

"You don't say so?"

"And found a cause for the crime."

"Splendid!"

"We have an inspector who makes a specialty of Saffron Hill and the Italian quarter. Well, this dead man had some Catholic emblem round his neck, and that, along with his color, made me think he was from the South. Inspector Hill knew him the moment he caught sight of him. His name is Pietro Venucci from Naples, and he is one of the greatest cutthroats in London. He is connected with the Mafia, which, as you know, is a secret political society, enforcing its decrees by murder. Now you see how the affair begins to clear up. The other fellow is probably an Italian also and a member of the Mafia. He has broken the rules in some fashion. Pietro is set upon his track. Probably the photograph we found in his pocket is the man himself, so that he may not knife the wrong person. He dogs the fellow; he sees him enter a house, he waits outside for him, and in the scuffle he receives his own death wound. How is that, Mr. Sherlock Holmes?"

Holmes clapped his hands approvingly.

"Excellent, Lestrade, excellent!" he cried. "But I didn't quite follow your explanation of the destruction of the busts."

"The busts! You never can get those busts out of your head. After all that is nothing; petty larceny—six months at the most. It is the murder that we are really investigating, and I tell you that I am gathering all the threads into my hands."

"And the next stage?"

"Is a very simple one. I shall go down with Hill to the Italian quarter, find the man whose photograph we have got, and arrest him on the charge of murder. Will you come with us?"

"I think not. I fancy we can attain our end in a simpler way. I can't say for certain, because it all depends—well, it all depends upon a factor which is completely outside our control. But I have great hopes—in fact, the betting is exactly two to one—that if you will come with us to-night I will be able to help you to lay him by the heels."

"In the Italian quarter?"

"No, I fancy Chiswick is an address which is more likely to find him. If you will come with me to Chiswick to-night, Lestrade, I'll promise to come to the Italian quarter with you to-morrow, and no harm will be done by the delay. And now I think that a few hours' sleep would do us all good, for I do not propose to leave before eleven o'clock, and it is unlikely that we shall be back before morning. You'll dine with us, Lestrade, and then you are welcome to the sofa until it is time for us to start. In the meantime, Watson, I should be glad if you would ring for an express messenger, for I have a letter to send, and it is important that it should go at once."

Holmes spent the evening in rummaging among the files of the old daily papers with which one of our lumber rooms was packed. When at last he descended it was with triumph in his eyes, but he said nothing to either of us as to the result of his researches. For my own part, I had followed step by step the various windings of this complex case, and though I could not yet perceive the goal which we would reach, I understood clearly that Holmes expected this grotesque criminal to make an attempt upon the two remaining busts, one of which I remembered was at Chiswick. No doubt the object of our journey was to catch him in the very act, and I could not but admire the cunning with which my friend had inserted a wrong clue in the evening paper, so as to give the fellow the idea that he could continue his scheme with impunity. I was not surprised when Holmes suggested that I should take my revolver with me. He had himself picked up the loaded hunting crop which was his favorite weapon.

A four-wheeler was at the door at eleven, and in it we drove to a spot at the other side of Hammersmith Bridge. Here the cabman was directed to wait. A short walk brought us to a secluded road fringed with pleasant houses, each standing in its own grounds. In the light of a street lamp we read "Laburnum Villa" upon the gatepost of one of them. The occupants had evidently retired to rest, for all was dark save for a faint light over the hall door which shed a single blurred circle on to the garden path. The wooden fence which separated the grounds from the road threw a dense black shadow upon the

Elliot's Durable Asphalt Coating

is about the best investment the owner of a roof can make. Will add at least ten years to the life of a new or an old and leaky shingle, tin or felt roof. Makes rusty tin water-tight and arrests rusting. It is used as a liquid cement on big leaks and stops them absolutely.

Composed of pure Utah Asphalt, prepared Linseed-Oil and Pine Creosote (wood preservative) it prevents decay in new shingles and arrests it in old ones when used as a shingle dip or paint. Imparts no taste to water. Highly fireproof.

Will not soften in summer or crack in coldest weather. A boy can apply it. It is not possible to make a more durable liquid coating. Nothing else so good in salt water atmosphere—200 per cent more durable than pure oil paint. One-half the price. A perfect coating for iron fences, etc.

Made in Black, Dark Green and Rich Maroon. On a trial order we will send, express prepaid to your door, one gallon for $1.00. Sufficient for cementing 100 square feet, or painting 200 square feet. One gallon shingle dip covers 400 square feet shingles both sides. The express charges frequently cost us more than $1.00.

Five gallons or more, 75 cents per gallon, freight paid east of Denver. Guaranteed to be satisfactory or returnable at our expense. Please write for interesting booklet, "History of Asphalt," together with liquid samples free.

ELLIOTT VARNISH CO.,

CHICAGO, 149-151 Fulton St. NEW YORK, 269 Pearl St.

... TRY ...

Roof Leak?

$37.50

Bath Room Outfit

COMPLETE AND BRAND NEW

as shown in illustration, consisting of BATH TUB of graceful shape, seamless and solid white porcelain enamel, one piece of cast iron, wide roll rim with fittings complete.

WATER CLOSET, sanitary, works perfectly, grand wood seat and tank, with up-to-date appliances, nickel plated, all complete.

MARBLE LAVATORY with graceful porcelain bowl and nickel plated trimmings, complete in every particular and handsomely finished.

THE ENTIRE OUTFIT is of strictly new material and as good as anything on the market costing twice as much. The connections can be easily made.

$37.50 is all that it will cost you complete, properly packed, f.o.b. Chicago.

PLUMBING MATERIAL We carry an immense supply at lower prices than anywhere else. We buy our goods at Sheriff's and Receiver's Sales.

Send FREE CATALOG No. 162 in Plumbing Material, Household Goods, Pipe, Wire, Pumps, Machinery, etc.

CHICAGO HOUSE WRECKING CO.

35th and Iron Sts., Chicago

SHORT HAND IN 30 DAYS

WE GUARANTEE to teach our course in Short Hand complete in 30 days' study of 3 hours each. No rote learning; no penmanship; no shading, dots, or dashes. No long list of words to be written. Easy, simple, speedy method. Students in high-grade positions. Employers pleased. Lawyers, doctors, literary folk, club women, can now acquire shorthand with ease for use in their callings. No need to spend months, as with old systems. "Ray's System," 20th century wonder, is the best. First lessons sent free with testimonials, booklets, etc. Write to-day.

CHICAGO CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOLS
(Incorporated) 16 National Life Building, Chicago, Ill.

PATENTS

NEW BOOK MAILED FREE

Tells all about Patents and How to Obtain them. Tells What to Invent for Profit. Contains lists of Mechanical Movements Invaluable to Inventors. O'BRIEN & BUCK, Pat. Attys., 619 11th St., Wash., D. C.

Be Your Own Boss!

MANY MAKE $2,000.00 A YEAR

You have the same chance. Start a Mail Order Business at home. We tell you how. Money coming in daily. Enormous profits. Everything furnished. Write at once for our "Starter" and FREE particulars. C. W. KROGER CO., 155 Washington Street, Chicago, Ill.

ASTHMA

It won't cost you a cent to learn how it can be immediately relieved and permanently cured at your own home.

Address, Frontier Asthma Co. (Dept. A) Buffalo, N. Y.

inner side, and here it was that we crouched. "I fear that you'll have a long wait," Holmes whispered. "We may thank our stars that it is not raining. I don't think we can even venture to smoke to pass the time. However, it's a two-to-one chance that we get something to pay us for our trouble."

It proved, however, that our vigil was not to be so long as Holmes had led us to fear, and it ended in a very sudden and singular fashion. In an instant, without the least sound to warn us of his coming, the garden gate swung open, and a lithe, dark figure, as swift and active as an ape, rushed up the garden path. We saw it whisk past the light thrown from over the door and disappear against the black shadow of the house. There was a long pause, during which we held our breath, and then a very gentle creaking sound came to our ears. The window was being opened. The noise ceased and again there was a long silence. The fellow was making his way into the house. We saw the sudden flash of a dark-lantern inside the room. What he sought was evidently not there, for again we saw the flash through another blind and then through another.

"Let us get to the open window. We will nab him as he climbs out," Lestrade whispered.

But before we could move the man had emerged again. As he came out into the glimmering patch of light we saw that he carried something white under his arm. He looked stealthily all round him. The utter silence of the deserted street reassured him. Turning his back upon us, he laid down his burden, and the next instant there was the sound of a sharp tap, followed by a clatter and rattle. The man was so intent upon what he was doing that he never heard our steps as we stole across the grass plot. With the bound of a tiger Holmes was on his back, and an instant later Lestrade and I saw him by either wrist and the handcuffs had been fastened. As we turned him over I saw a hideous sallow face, with writhing, furious features, glaring up at us, and I knew that it was indeed the man of the photograph whom we had secured.

But it was not our prisoner to whom Holmes was giving his attention. Squatted on the doorstep, he was engaged in most carefully examining that which the man had brought from the house. It was a bust of Napoleon like the one which we had seen that morning, and it had been broken into similar fragments. Carefully Holmes held each separate shard to the light, but in no way did it differ from any other shattered piece of plaster. He had just completed his examination when the hall lights flew up, the door opened, and the owner of the house—a jovial, rotund figure in shirt and trousers—presented himself.

"Mr. Josiah Brown, I suppose," said Holmes.

"Yes, sir, and you, no doubt, are Mr. Sherlock Holmes? I had the note which you sent by the express messenger, and I did exactly what you told me. We locked every door on the inside and awaited developments. Well, I'm very glad to see that you have got the rascal. I hope, gentlemen, that you will come in and have some refreshment."

However, Lestrade was anxious to get his man into safe quarters, so within a few minutes our cab had been summoned and we were all four upon our way to London. Not a word would our captive say; but he glared at us from the shadow of his matted hair, and once, when my hand seemed within his reach, he snapped at it like a hungry wolf. We stayed long enough at the police station to learn that a search of his clothing revealed nothing save a few shillings and a long sheath knife, the handle of which bore copious traces of recent blood.

"That's all right," said Lestrade as we parted. "Hill knows all these gentry and he will give a name to him. You'll find that my theory of the Mafia will work out all right. But I'm sure I am exceedingly obliged to you, Mr. Holmes, for the workmanlike way in which you laid hands upon him. I don't quite understand it all yet."

"I fear it is rather too late an hour for explanations," said Holmes. "Besides, there are one or two details which are not finished off, and it is one of those cases which are worth working out to the very end. If you will come round once more to my rooms at six o'clock to-morrow, I think I shall be able to show you that even now you have not grasped the entire meaning of this business, which presents some features which make it absolutely original in the history of crime. If ever I permit you to chronicle any more of my little problems, Watson, I foresee that you will enliven your pages by an account of the singular adventure of the Napoleonic busts."

When we met again next evening Lestrade was furnished with much information concerning our prisoner. His name, it appears, was Beppo; second name unknown. He was a well-known ne'er-do-well among the Italian colony. He had once been a skilful sculptor and had earned an honest living, but he had taken to evil courses and had twice already been in jail—once for a petty theft and once, as we had already heard, for stabbing a fellow-countryman. He could talk English perfectly well. His reasons for destroying the busts were still unknown, and he refused to answer any questions upon the subject; but the police had discovered that these same busts might very well have been made by his own hands, since he was engaged in this class of work at the establishment of Gelder & Co. To all this information, much of which we already knew, Holmes listened with polite attention; but I, who knew him so well, could clearly see that his thoughts were elsewhere, and I detected a mixture of mingled uneasiness and expectation beneath that mask which he was wont to assume. At last he started in his chair and his eyes brightened. There had been a ring at the

How Money Grows

IF YOU CAN SAVE 33c A DAY, I CAN TELL YOU HOW TO INVEST IT WHERE IT WILL GROW IMMEDIATELY AND RAPIDLY.

If you are able to save 33c a day or $10 a month, I would like to send you some information that I know will interest you—information that may be worth hundreds of dollars to you.

I offer you as a reader of Collier's Weekly an opportunity to become virtually a partner in an old established and very profitable business by paying in only $10 a month.

The business is as staple as wheat. It has been established for ten years and has been making money—more each year—ever since.

The business now amounts to $1,250,000 a year, and is steadily growing. Last year it paid 17 per cent in dividends, and is expected to pay even more this year.

The interest in this business which you can secure by paying in $10 a month will entitle you to the full percentage of profit which the business earns.

In addition to this you will have the privilege of buying the goods at wholesale prices in any quantity at any time. You will have a voice in the management of the business and you will have an opportunity to know at all times just how the inside affairs are conducted.

In fact, the knowledge which you may acquire from a connection with this great industrial enterprise will help you greatly in your other business dealings. It may be the means of opening up to you many money-making possibilities which you are now unable to see.

Don't waste any time or money on uncertain mining propositions or businesses which promise to pay dividends some time in the future. Invest in a business which is safe and sure and profitable now.

I will send you free, upon request, complete information concerning the business, its management, sales, finances, etc. Everything is open and above board, and I do not want you to invest a single dollar until you have the complete story about the business and my reasons for making you this offer.

You will have an opportunity to make any kind of an investigation you desire. It will not be necessary to take my word for anything. You will find an abundance of proof for every statement made.

You will be interested, too, in reading the letters from the several hundred people who have already accepted this opportunity. I will send you these and some interesting literature if you fill out and mail to me the coupon.

I will also send you free my new book, "How Money Grows," which is full of valuable information. Do it now.

W. M. OSTRANDER

162 North American Building, Philadelphia

Send me full particulars about how I can acquire a profitable business interest by paying in $10 a month.

Name, _____

Address, _____

W. M. OSTRANDER

INVESTMENT DEPT.

162 North American Bldg., Philadelphia

HALL'S VEGETABLE SICILIAN HAIR RENEWER

Here are three of the secrets you may easily find in each bottle: Gray hair is always restored to its original color, always. Falling hair is checked. And the hair grows long and heavy.

If your druggist cannot supply you, send $1 to E. P. Hall & Co., Nashua, N. H.

WHITE GASOLINE MARINE ENGINES

SAFETY demands a marine engine that is absolutely reliable, certain and prompt in starting. White Gasoline Engines are guaranteed to start readily and run satisfactorily under all conditions of weather, and to be free from defects in material and construction. They are of the four cycle type and are designed for long and heavy service. Each engine is fitted with a sensitive ball governor, solid propeller with reversing gears held in engine bed, early and late spark, self cleaning igniters, glass gasoline feed cup showing supply and working of fuel. Distillate and cheap grades of oil may be successfully used. Minimum vibration and noise and no disagreeable odor.

Catalog sent upon request—also estimates on complete launches. Special Catalog of Stationary and Portable Engines for general ranch purposes.

GLOBE IRON WORKS CO.
P.O. BOX 143 MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

"KUNSTADTER"

Heavy Gold Plate 50¢
(Guaranteed Three Years) Link Button

ANTIQUE ROMAN GOLD, heavy plate, with brilliant sparkling setting that cannot be distinguished from a genuine diamond except by experts, can also be used with either Opal, Pearl or Turquoise in place of the diamond. "Kunstadter" stamped on the bar. We are advertising the merits of the Kunstadter Buttons in the leading publications of this country, and are making a Special Offer on a sample pair to anyone who cannot secure the Kunstadter brand from his clothing or dry-goods dealer.

Every "Kunstadter" button is guaranteed. Our guarantee means that if the button does not last three years in perfect condition we give a new pair FREE. We have 78 different designs. Lever back turns either direction, which prevents breaking and allows slipping through cuffs without injuring buttonholes. We will send illustration of 72 styles on request.

Send name of your dealer and enclose 30 cents (stamp will do). Be sure to mention Style 23, shown above in this lined case; we ship post paid.

KUNSTADTER BROS.

234-238 Adams Street CHICAGO

The Economy of Jap-a-Lac

JAP-A-LAC will put a beautiful, glossy, durable finish on any kind of furniture, wood-work, metal-work, doors, closets, picture frames, enameled beds, etc. It stains and scratches at one operation and remains follows the brush. It comes in twelve colors, and clear, for any finish desired—Oak, Cherry, Mahogany, Walnut, White, etc. If you have never used JAP-A-LAC, mention this periodical and send us ten cents to cover the exact cost of mailing, and we will send you free a sample can of any color JAP-A-LAC you desire. On request we will send free, booklet, color card, and sample of wood, showing model floor finishes.

THE GLIDDEN VARNISH CO.
Makers of High-Grade Varnishes, Dept. P,
1042 Williamson Bldg., Cleveland, Ohio

I. W. Harper Rye.

"On Every Tongue."

For gentlemen who appreciate quality; for the weak who need to be strengthened; for the careful physician who requires purity; for every body who knows a good thing. Sold by leading dealers everywhere.

BERNHEIM DISTILLING CO., Louisville, Ky.

Daily Ease

It's the little things about a man's clothing that make or mar his comfort. Garters, for instance, are small things, but to be comfortable they must be right.

BRIGHTON Flat Clasp GARTERS

For men are "right" garters—they fit right—feel right and wear right. They snap on and off easily, yet always secure. Never bind, pull, rub or slip. Just comfortable, just right. Made of one piece pure silk web with ticked trimmings, and cost only 50c. At stores or by mail.

POWERS SUSPENDER CO., 715 Market St., Philadelphia.
Makers of Pioneer Suspenders.

"THE GRAND RAPIDS" KITCHEN CABINET

$3.00

Built on bones—of hard wood—body of beautiful white maple—natural finish—top of closely grained white wood—size top 36 x 45 inches—26 compartments—double sanitary metal flour bin. Card index drawer for recipes. Drawer for sugar. Cupboard in top for cereals and dry foods—in bottom for vinegar, condiments, etc. Hand made pastry board and meat board of white wood with maple end pieces. The best kitchen cabinet on the market. $3.00 down and $1.00 per month for 3 months. Shipped on receipt of first payment. Write for our illustrated Catalog showing the Grand Rapids Kitchen Cabinet. Send today.

FREE—A handsome hard maple rolling pin for pastry to any one who suggests any accepted additions to this cabinet.

Grand Rapids Kitchen Cabinet Co.
1001 Marshall Street Grand Rapids, Mich.

FACTORY TO HOME $10 PREMIUMS GIVEN WITH $10 ORDERS

of Laundry and Fine Toilet SOAPS, EXTRACTS SPICES and BAKING POWDER
Premiums consist of Couches, Morris' Chairs, Beds, Tables, Desks, Stoves, Musical Instruments, Ice-cream makers, Silverware, etc. In fact, through the Lockwood Soap Co. you can furnish your entire home FREE. Send your name and address at once for beautifully illustrated Premium Book and full information regarding our club plan and 30 days' Free Trial Order.

1 of 100 Premiums LOCKWOOD SOAP CO. Dept. 539 Kansas City, Mo.

DON'T SHOUT! The "Morley"

makes low sounds and whispers plainly heard. A miniature Telephone for the Ear—invisible, easily adjusted, and entirely comfortable. Over fifty thousand sold, giving instant relief from deafness and head noises. No case of deafness that cannot be benefited. Write for booklet and testimonials. The Morley Company, Dept. 60
19 South 14th St., Philadelphia

$3 a Day. Send us your address and we will show you how to earn $3 a day absolutely sure; we furnish the work and teach you free; you work in the locality where you live. Send us your address and we will explain the business fully; remember we guarantee that you can earn $3 for every day's work. Write at once. ROYAL MANUFACTURING CO., Box 1196, Detroit, Mich.

HAIR Latest Creations of HUMAN HAIR

Send postpaid on Approval Extra short sleek wavy hair, absolutely perfect, made of finest quality and to match any ordinary shade, 2oz. 22 in. $1.00. Natural curly Pompadour $2.00. All other goods in proportion. Send as a sample of your hair (not near the roots) and state size. If you are not delighted with our goods WE WILL SEND POSTAGE FOR RETURN. If you are, THEN send us the price. Our catalogue, beautifully illustrated—Free. PARIS FASHION COMPANY Dept. 54 182 State St., Chicago

PARKER'S HAIR BALSAM

Cleanses and beautifies the hair. Promotes a luxuriant growth. Never Falls to Restore Gray Hair to its youthful color. Cures scalp diseases and hair falling. 50c. and $1.00 at Druggists.

bell. A minute later we heard steps upon the stairs and an elderly, red-faced man with grizzled side-whiskers was ushered in. In his right hand he carried a large old-fashioned carpetbag, which he placed upon the table.

"Is Mr. Sherlock Holmes here?" My friend bowed and smiled. "Mr. Sandeford of Reading, I suppose," said he.

"Yes, sir. I fear that I am a little late; but the trains were awkward. You wrote to me about a bust that is in my possession."

"Exactly."

"I have your letter here. You said, 'I desire to possess a copy of Devine's Napoleon, and am prepared to pay you ten pounds for the one which is in your possession.' Is that right?"

"Certainly."

"I was very much surprised at your letter, for I could not imagine how you knew that I owned such a thing."

"Of course, you must have been surprised; but the explanation is very simple. Mr. Harding, of Harding Brothers, said that they had sold you their last copy and he gave me your address."

"Oh, that was it, was it? Did he tell you what I paid for it?"

"No, he did not."

"Well, I am an honest man, though not a very rich one. I only gave fifteen shillings for the bust, and I think you ought to know that before I take ten pounds from you."

"I am sure the scruple does you honor, Mr. Sandeford. But I have named that price, so I intend to stick to it."

"Well, it is very handsome of you, Mr. Holmes. I brought the bust up with me, as you asked me to do. Here it is!" He opened his bag, and at last we saw placed upon our table a complete specimen of that bust which we had already seen more than once in fragments.

Holmes took a paper from his pocket and laid a ten-pound note upon the table.

"You will kindly sign that paper, Mr. Sandeford, in the presence of these witnesses. It is simply to say that you transfer every possible right that you ever had in the bust to me. I am a methodical man, you see, and you never know what turn events might take afterward. Thank you, Mr. Sandeford; here is your money; and I wish you a very good evening."

He carried a large old-fashioned carpetbag

When our visitor had disappeared Sherlock Holmes's movements were such as to rivet our attention. He began by taking a clean white cloth from a drawer and laying it over the table. Then he placed his newly acquired bust in the centre of the cloth. Finally he picked up his hunting-crop and struck Napoleon a sharp blow on the top of the head. The figure broke into fragments and Holmes bent eagerly over the shattered remains. Next instant with a loud shout of triumph he held up one splinter in which a round dark object was fixed like a plum in a pudding.

"Gentlemen," he cried, "let me introduce you to the famous black pearl of the Borgias."

Lestrade and I sat silent for a moment, and then with a spontaneous impulse we both broke out clapping as at the well-wrought crisis of a play. A flush of color sprang to Holmes's pale cheeks, and he bowed to us like the master dramatist who receives the homage of his audience. It was at such moments that for an instant he ceased to be a reasoning machine and betrayed his human love for admiration and applause. The same singularly proud and reserved nature which turned away with disdain from popular notoriety was capable of being moved to its depths by spontaneous wonder and praise from a friend.

"Yes, gentlemen," said he, "it is the most famous pearl now existing in the world, and it has been my good fortune by a connected chain of inductive reasoning to trace it from the Prince of Colonna's bedroom at the Dacre Hotel, where it was lost, to the interior of this, the last of the six busts of Napoleon which were manufactured by Gelder & Co. of Stepney. You will remember, Lestrade,

The Diamond Dye Annual SENT FREE

Mrs. P. T. Crowell says:

The Diamond Dye Annual has been worth a hundred dollars to me already.

Mrs. H. L. Ames says:

It is invaluable, full of surprising helps and hints for the home and wardrobe.

A Glimpse at the Contents of "The Diamond Dye Annual." The same dye you would use for coloring a dress, a waist, skirt, or some old ribbon, may be used for tinting photographs, or painting miniatures, or coloring Easter-eggs. You may also colorize for walls and ceilings—wood, with dye from the same package, you may change the color of your porcelains. The trimmings for your new cloth costume, so hard to match in stores, may be brought into perfect harmony by the easy use of Diamond Dyes. And, still from the same package, you may use the dye to paint flowers on a fancy costume, or to give a fresh, clear color to a white cloth.

You may dye hanks, and ruffs, and basket straw, just as the Indians do; for, though you may not know it, the Indian basket-maker uses Diamond Dyes, and so others. You may paint on velvet with Diamond Dyes—on leather, or china, or silk, or Liberty silk, or bolted cloth. Simply send your name and address on a postal to Diamond Dyes 139 College St. Burlington, Vt.

Easy to Dye with Diamond Dyes Easy to color any thing with Diamond Dyes

All colors—Only 10 Cents a package AT ALL DRUGGISTS THE WELLS & RICHARDSON CO. Manufacturers BURLINGTON, VT.

Remington

Every Remington Typewriter Lasts.

Therefore Remington Supremacy Lasts.

Remington Typewriter Co. 327 Broadway, New York.

DWIGGINS Climate-Proof

Fences are the standard for parks, lawns, cemeteries, etc. Double galvanized steel wire throughout offers perfect resistance to climatic changes. Durable design—light, graceful. Catalogue FREE, shows a variety of styles 10c. to 50c. a ft. DWIGGINS Wire Fence Co., 52 Dwiggins Ave., Anderson, Ind.

U.S.A. Liquid Pistol

Will stop the most vicious dog (or man) without permanent injury. Perfectly safe to carry without danger of leakage. Fires and recharges by pulling the trigger. Loads from any liquid. No cartridges required. Over 10 shots in one loading. All dealers, or by mail, 50c. Rubber covered holster 5c. extra. PARKER, STRAIN & SUTTON, 224 South St., New York, U. S. A.

You Can Make $3 to $10 a day sitting glasses.

Our 34p. FREE EYE BOOK tells how. We give complete instructions for testing eyes, fitting glasses, and furnish all goods. Write for our book and letters from some of our successful representatives. JACKSONIAN OPTICAL COLLEGE, (Chartered) 630 College Building, Jackson, Michigan

"The Best" Skirt Supporter

Holds the skirt up and the waist down. Easily adjusted. No sewing required. Send 25 cents in stamps. Satisfaction guaranteed. Agents wanted everywhere. THE SMITH NOVELTY CO., 427 Gardner Bldg., Toledo, Ohio Peach Trees 4 to 6 ft., 3 cts. 5 to 6 ft., 2 1/2 cts. Circular free. Trees kept dormant between May 1st to 1st if desired. R. S. Johnston, Box 71, Stockley, Del.

COLLIER'S

SATURDAY, MAY 7, 1904

P. F. COLLIER & SON, PUBLISHERS, 418-424 WEST THIRTEENTH ST., NEW YORK; 10, NORTOLK ST., STRAND, LONDON, W. C. 1. COPYRIGHT 1904 BY P. F. COLLIER & SON. ENTERED AT THE NEW YORK POST-OFFICE AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

A LONE BENEDICT OF SUNAN

PHOTOGRAPH BY E. L. SUNN, COLLIER'S SPECIAL WAR PHOTOGRAPHER IN KOREA. COPYRIGHT 1904 BY COLLIER'S WEEKLY

The young man in white is fourteen years old and is the only married man left among the male citizens of Sunan, in Korea. This town is about twenty-five miles north of Ping-Yang on the road to Wifu, and was occupied by the Japanese early in March. The able-bodied inhabitants were set to work by the Transport Department, but most of the old people, women, and children betook themselves to the hills—not being familiar with the ways of modern armies. This young man's wife, aged twenty-five years, fled with the rest, abandoning her husband, who remained at Sunan and kept in close touch with the Japanese commissariat.

THE REPUBLICANS ARE FRIGHTENED, a little, undoubtedly, by Democratic success in bringing the coal-trust question before Congress and giving sharper point to the criminal side of the SHERMAN ACT. The Democrats, on the other hand, are somewhat bothered by this issue also, as it is now the leading pretext for the disruption of their party, or for a line of division between Democrats and Populists. Normally, if party lines were clear, the trusts ought to be a neat fighting ground, the Republicans defending and the Democrats attacking them; but neither party is prepared for such division. Since MARK HANNA boldly defended trusts on Mr. BRYAN's challenge and led the way to easy victory, the Republican party has been changed, partly because the trusts have become more outrageous, partly because Mr. ROOSEVELT, although a devoted Republican, is democratic in sympathy, the opposite of plutocratic, and has taken the most effective steps yet accomplished against these great combinations. The Democrats, on the other hand, are unprepared for rational attack, partly by Mr. ROOSEVELT's seizure of the strategic position, partly by fusion with the Populists, who go so far that they make a wise advance more difficult. If the Republican party were represented by the commanding "little group" of the Senate, or by another HANNA, and the Democratic party by such men as WILLIAMS, the issue would be distinct and the fight a hot one. With the only successful trust curber a Republican and President, and the Democratic party full of mad-dog policies, in which extremes are always chosen because they make more noise, it is impossible to draw this line. The tactical advantage gained by the Democrats on the coal-trust resolution is not great enough to force into the guise of trust-defender a party led by ROOSEVELT.

THE TRUSTS
AS THE ISSUE

IF MONEY CAN MAKE A CANDIDATE for the highest office in our free government, why not go to the top and start a boom for ROCKEFELLER? Think what a boom he could purchase if only he could be persuaded that political advertisement would be worth the price that he could pay. He could afford a ROCKEFELLER club in every village in America. He could buy a dozen times seven newspapers and keep them all busy printing his name in green and crimson ink. He would be the real thing. A few millions spent in advertising would seem like a still, small voice if ROCKEFELLER should once properly turn his billion into sound. Nor does he lack other qualifications for the place. If Mr. HEARST, for instance, can claim to be a newspaper trust all by himself, Mr. ROCKEFELLER is greater in the combination line also. In holiness, too, he seems to our unbiased vision at least the equal of his rival. One of our readers writes indignantly that "no man in the Christian era" is to be compared for good work with Mr. HEARST, and others draw analogies which our sense of reverence renders it impossible to quote. Against this spiritual exaltation of the one citizen, however, we pit the long religious history of the other. Mr. HEARST, as we have magnanimously declared, is competent to pay the salaries of able men, and it has been suggested that a substitute candidate be found in Mr. BRISBANE, in whom resides the majority of his chieftain's brains. It would be more logical to choose a man who surpasses Mr. HEARST in that power which is his very own, namely money. We wish to be as fair as if conviction were an emotion foreign to our nature, and it is on the ground of logic purely that we launch a boom for the richest man of all.

WHY NOT
ROCKEFELLER?

THE VALUE OF PARTY GOVERNMENT is not an open question. It is the only method of government by the people's will. The value of extreme partisanship is another and entirely disconnected question. "I am, as you all know," says Mayor GEORGE B. MCCLELLAN, "a believer in partisan government. I may go further and say I am a believer in Democratic partisan government. But the moment that a partisan administration gains power, it is its duty to forget politics in serving the interests of the entire community." If Mr. MCCLELLAN is able to live up to that last principle, he is likely to loom large in public affairs for many years to come. The president of one of our large universities has been recently praising party feeling at the expense of non-partisanship, and a similar strong expression was brought out in Congress from Senator BAILEY by the attack on President ROOSEVELT's civil service record. To defend the principle of using the people's offices as fodder for party workers is a sorry deduction from a belief in the necessity of party government. Extremes in partisanship are closely allied to the corruption which is a blot upon the working of our political system at present. As far as the President is concerned, his record on this whole party matter is an excellent one. The attempt to prove that he had been unfaithful to his lifelong civil service record ended in conspicuous failure, and in many important aspects of his work he has shown himself the Executive not of one party but of the whole people. We hope, by the way, that his attitude on the amended LODGE and ADAMS Consular bills will be emphatic. In no department of public work is the spoils system more inappropriate than in the consular service. Undoubtedly, the LODGE bill, in its unamended form, in which it was intended to take the consular service out of politics, was in harmony with Mr. ROOSEVELT's views. It happens that the office of Consul-General of the United States at the City of Mexico is now vacant. There is a tradition that that office "belongs to Missouri." Could there be any greater absurdity than to treat as a political plum an office which exists for the sake of protecting the interests of all Americans, and especially the fifteen thousand who reside in Mexico and the $500,000,000 of American capital invested there?

THE VICTORS
AND THE SPOILS

ONLY THREE GREAT NATIONS in all of history have stood out from the rest for their ability to rule, and each of those three has been distinguished also by its instinct for stable law. The two qualities are inseparable. Roman law was the first triumph of jurisprudence and Rome was the first nation to show a genius for government abroad and at home. Rome lived for centuries and fell, leaving many lessons to succeeding nations. The one great contribution to law since that day has been made by England, which also has been the one country to prove a genius for self-government and for the government of others. We have inherited English law, and, in spite of a population as mixed as any in the world, we have had the power to govern ourselves and to reduce the heterogeneous masses to the Anglo-Saxon type. In governing dependencies we are untested, but the first experiments give promise. The important thing, however, is the ability to keep a stable and free government at home. When we see a faction basing its agitation on impatience of the law, we feel a possible danger to this sure-footed inheritance from the country of political freedom and perennial vigor. Mr. BRYAN said at Chicago that "it is as important to have judges who sympathize with the people as to have judges learned in the law." When "sympathy" takes the place of fidelity to the law, the basis of our civilization will be endangered. "The people" in this country are supposed to be all the people, and it is not for the judges to make class discriminations. There are wrongs to be remedied, some by legislation, some by the executive departments, but the courts are to have an eye singly to what is law, if we are to succeed in government as England has succeeded. "Free institutions," says HERBERT SPENCER, "can be properly worked only by men each of whom is jealous of his own rights and also sympathetically jealous of the rights of others—who will neither himself aggress on his neighbors in small things or great, nor tolerate aggression on them by others." An essential to working out this spirit, jealous of individual liberty, is a free, independent, unbiased judiciary, and nothing has weakened Mr. BRYAN more than his menace to the courts.

THE GIFT OF GOVERNMENT

THE AMOUNT OF SALARY or wages is frequently treated in connection with the pension question, as it was, for instance, when the letter carriers were endeavoring to induce the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads of the House of Representatives to take steps toward increasing their recompense. We should much rather see conditions improved in any ordinary employment by an increase in salary or wages than by an extension of the pension system. Every cent that can be paid to labor, up to the point where only so much goes to capital as will reconcile it to the risks of industry, is a nearer approach to righteous distribution. The highest wages possible to any business are a matter of mere justice, and high wages make for self-respect and better standards of living. Pensions, on the other hand, in ordinary cases too much resemble alms. Pensioner is not a sturdy word. For cases of actual injury, whether in battle for the Government or in a factory in private employment, a pension is the only possible mode of recompense, because the accident can not be foreseen, and there are special employments where retirement on a pension has its justification. In ordinary cases, however, money that can be afforded for pensions might much better be given as salary. Providing for old age is a wholesome need, and a man ought not as a matter of course to be supported because he has grown old. In one of those incisive, cheerful cartoons in which American newspapers abound, we notice Mr. CARNEGIE appealed to for help by a henpecked husband, a commuter who is tired of riding on trains, a man who has lived two decades with his wife's mother, an over-questioned hotel clerk, and others weary of fortune's buffets and caprices. The pension system runs easily to all extremes. Pensioners should be kept as few as, justice being done, they can be. Wages, on the other hand, should be kept just as high as by any economic device is possible.

WAGES AND PENSIONS

THE YELLOW PERIL IS BUT ONE of many which afflict the heated imagination, or which entertain the excitement-loving mind. From a prominent organ of thought in Naples we learn that "the terrible Yankees wish to seize the entire globe." When we have pierced the Isthmus, seized the commerce of the Pacific, and made of that ocean a lake, "the poor Atlantic will be no more than a ditch," and "as to the Mediterranean, by Bacchus, it will be reduced to the condition of a basin in which children sail toy vessels under their nurse's eye." Europe, decrepit, in this view, faces "the yellow peril on one side, the American peril on the other," and possibilities more remote threaten from Africa and from South America, to say nothing of the Slav. Alertness to approaching danger, consciousness of a crumbling world, seem keenest among the so-called Latin nations, which began to practice these qualms some years ago apropos of Anglo-Saxon strength. Each race and nation identifies its own cause with that of "civilization." To the Japanese and Chinese the menace is from the barbaric West, and the situation is like that in the later centuries of the Roman Empire. The Anglo-Saxons think they and progress are inseparable and one. The Slav sees in himself the herald of a brighter day. The Latins, while they admit loss of relative brute power, assume as an axiom that in their races reposes what is best in human thought, in art, and civilized refinement. To a mind detached from prejudices of race, these conflicting perils are but guesses at the unknown, indulged in partly to lend spice to current news. They have, nevertheless, deeply affected serious minds, and among those who have used the yellow peril to support vast armaments in Europe have been men of such different and distinguished understanding as the philosopher RENAN and our foremost naval authority, Captain MAHAN. Japan is now applying to the white peril a similar line of argument.

PERILS
EVERYWHERE

PROPHECY IS DANGEROUS, even for the best informed, and lurid errors are more frequent than accurate foretellings. Once in a while, however, something is said which later gives the world some ground for believing in, the ability of great minds to guess the future. Japan's use of torpedoes recalls the prophecy of ERICSSON about the temporary nature of the ironclad system in the invention of which he was a pioneer. He invented the monitor, yet he prophesied before he died that heavily armored ships would have their day, giving place to a system based upon the torpedo and the submarine. A still more brilliant prophecy is connected with the engineering feat which the United States is now facing on the Isthmus. It was in 1827 that GÖRKE said he should be surprised if the United States missed the chance to get into her hands a work which would connect the Gulf of Mexico with the Pacific, with incalculable results to the entire civilized and uncivilized human race. In calculating this result of American conditions, GÖRKE said that in thirty or forty years the young nation would have populated the areas west of the Rocky Mountains, whereupon important commercial towns, favored by nature's creation of safe and roomy harbors, would carry on a large trade between the Orient and the United States. Coming events cast their shadows before, but seldom are the shadows read so accurately. The history of prophecy on the whole, even with the most penetrating intellects, is more fairly represented by NAPOLEON's estimate of the few years to elapse before Europe would be either Cossack or Republican,—a prophecy which, like many others, showed intelligence, but happened to be wrong.

BRILLIANT
FORESIGHT

THE POSITION OF A KING is particularly adapted to diplomacy of the modern sort, which consists less in trickery than in reason and conciliation. Placed outside of factions and beyond many of the temptations and confusions which beset his ministers, the monarch is assuming a new and attractive rôle in history. EDWARD of England is not the only royal diplomat. The King of Italy and the Emperor of Austria are responsible for much of their national diplomacy, and even the Emperor of Germany, tactless as he often is, is busily and sometimes successfully engaged in diplomatic tasks. When BISMARCK was succeeded by the young and self-willed Kaiser, many prognosticators foresaw in the change an ebb in German influence, but the Kaiser has done so well that when he is ill the world, with all its criticisms, is seriously concerned. His omniscience, to the modern eye, is farcical. He gives laws to painters, and in his absence his representative hits upon the plan of accepting paintings which are brown and rejecting those where green predominates. The Kaiser is now reported to be occupying himself with designing a memorial card of the Herero war. With all his minor absurdities, however, his presumptuous judgment and fierce mustaches, he counts on the Continent of Europe more than any other single man, and counts on the whole for the power of Germany. His errors are neutralized and corrected, and his talents and intentions are helped enormously by his position. Monarchs to-day have lost much of their power for evil, and seem actually to be increasing their power for good. A king now is a hard-working official, the advantages of whose position are used, on the whole, in directions where they do most good. It is for reasons of utility and convenience, as much as from surviving sentiment, that the approval of monarchy is so strong in England and the desire for a Republic is practically non-existent. Apparently, all monarchs will become constitutional, but in that condition they are likely to be useful as far ahead as we can see.

ADVANTAGES OF A MONARCH

COMPLIMENTS TO AMERICAN EDUCATION swarm in the report of the MOSLEY Commission from Great Britain, and some of them are well deserved. Mistakes, however, in such a survey are inevitable. Of President BUTLER of Columbia, for example, it is said that he "is not only a man of great learning and high academic attainments, but possesses the initiative and organizing capacity that are required in a railroad president or chairman." This passage, occurring in a contrast between the educational systems of the two countries, is somewhat misleading; for, from the English idea of a college president, Mr. BUTLER would not be called a man of great learning, and undoubtedly he would not claim to be. His is an executive nature, and in that is typical of the American as contrasted with the British type of college president. Mr. MOSLEY goes on to speak of President ELLIOT, who is certainly the leading university figure and influence in this country, a large and notable man, an innovator, and the head and front of the movement which has carried the day in American academic education, but not a great scholar, as the English would understand that term. There has been talk, now and then, of having two presidents for each university, one of the American and one of the English type, one administrative mind and one more concentrated on the teaching side, and just now there is a rumor that Chicago University is considering some adaptation of the English system of dividing a university into separate colleges, each separate in spirit, and each small enough to feel the influence of its head. In the lower grades we have little to learn from England, but in higher education the case is not so clear.

ABILITY AND SCHOLARSHIP

SCIENCE HAS TAUGHT US that heat and light, formerly viewed as less connected, are embodiments of a single force, one capable of transformation into the other form; and no law of nature has a nearer and less forced analogy to the human mind. As heat and light are two great creative facts of the natural universe, so they are of human life. Without heat there is no growth. This power it is, working in all living things, that

"Swells, and mellow, and matures,
Paints, and flavors, and allures,
Bird and brier inly warms,
Still enriches and transforms."

and light, from the time when man first thought, has stood for what was most divine, being closely identified with creation and with Deity by MILTON as by the simplest thinker who ever dressed in skins and rubbed two sticks to capture fire from heaven. Ardor of temperament, force of character and will, is one side of human elevation, as the other is the pure white light of understanding. If we have elaborated this figure of speech to-day, it is not from love of metaphor or idle pleasure in spinning out comparison, but because we think often of the wisdom, in this day and country, of translating as much heat as possible into light. Energy we have, in volume unsurpassed, and the vastly larger part is turned into practical accomplishment, in various forms of strenuous life. Whatever part of our abundant force is turned to intellectual vision, to art, pure science, and the spread of poise and taste, will be profitably transformed.

HEAT AND LIGHT

AN INTERNATIONAL MOTOR-BOAT RACE AT MONACO

These fragile craft, driven by high-powered automobile engines, are only from twenty-five to forty feet long, yet they have attained a speed of nearly thirty miles an hour, or as great as that of a torpedo-boat destroyer six or eight times the length.

The procession passing through Warrington, led by Admiral Barker and his staff

Bringing the bodies ashore from the launches of the fleet

FUNERAL OF THE VICTIMS OF THE "MISSOURI" EXPLOSION, AT PENSACOLA, FLORIDA, APRIL 14

All the ships of the fleet were represented in the line of march, with 5,000 men in line. Pensacola suspended all business for the afternoon.

THE AUTOMOBILE MAKES NEW RECORDS FOR HILL CLIMBING

In the second annual contests of the Massachusetts Automobile Club at Boston on April 13, both steam and gasoline machines were driven up steeper grades at higher speed than ever before accomplished. Several crack foreign cars were beaten by American climbers. Thirty cars competed before 6,000 spectators. The grade was from five to fourteen per cent, the course a fifth of a mile long. The winning times averaged sixteen seconds.

SHALL JINGOISM BE PERMITTED TO STARVE HOME DEVELOPMENT?

By JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS

Copyright 1904 by Collier's Weekly

Mr. Williams, as minority leader, is the unchallenged head of the Democratic party in the House, unrelentingly watching every move on the legislative chessboard, and aggressively fighting for the principles of which he has been a lifelong champion. He has represented his State in six Congresses, and on every important question that has been debated in Congress since he assumed his seat has won distinction for the profoundness of his study, the clearness of his expositions, and the soundness of his reasoning.

PERHAPS the first and primal necessity of a government is self-defence. Independence is to a nation what life is to an individual. Every government, therefore, ought to spend money enough to provide and maintain in a condition adequate for self-defence its two great combative branches, the army and the navy. The relative importance of the two will be governed largely by the geographical situation of the country itself. An army is of more importance to the nations of Continental Europe than a navy, because they are separated from one another by imaginary map lines, by rivers easily crossed, or by ranges of mountains which are at least traversable.

On the contrary, it has been the good fortune of the English-speaking race to enjoy either insular or continental isolation. This has been, perhaps, the greatest one factor in its development. Great Britain is surrounded by water, and it is palpable, therefore, that her most important armed defence is a navy. New Zealand is an island, Australia is a continental island or an island continent—both phrases have been used to describe her situation. British South Africa, bounded by water on three sides and by the desert and the wilderness on the other, has almost perfect protection from land attack.

The United States of America is protected by three thousand miles of ocean on one side, by twice as many miles of another ocean on the other and, owing to the military weakness of its southern neighbor, need fear no attack by land save along the northern border, and there need fear none, if, in the insolence of conscious power, it does not provoke it. Thus it happens fortunately for the English-speaking race that each farmer and each mechanic has not been compelled—as in France, Germany, Russia, and Italy—to bear upon his shoulders the person and equipment of a soldier; nor has it been necessary in the countries occupied by that race to take out of the fields of industry and put into the non-productive field of war immense numbers of men.

Our Land and Sea Defences

It is difficult to ascertain the precise number of the present army of the United States, though it is approximately 65,000, and the present annual appropriation to support it is $77,000,000. Our experience has proven that a rough calculation of a thousand dollars to the soldier is a fair one for army expenditures in time of peace. Up to the outbreak of the Spanish-American war we got along well with an army of 25,000 men. It was the best army—man for man and gun for gun—on the surface of the earth. It formed a nucleus around which to gather and train armies of almost any size.

I am not going to enter into the question of our present naval expenses. The messengers from Athens to the Oracle of Apollo at Delphi brought back the answer that "the best defence for Athens was wooden walls." The wise men construed this to mean ships, which were then built of wood. The advice of the Oracle was heeded—Salamis, the destruction of the Persian fleet, and the retreat of the Asiatic hordes thereby necessitated, followed. It is always better, when the geographical situation permits it, to meet an enemy at sea and sink him, rather than to meet him on land, and, after more or less devastation and manslaughter, to overcome him there. The people of the United States, therefore, if they are going to err on either side—parsimony or extravagance—in building and maintaining a fleet, had better err on the side of extravagance. It is better still, however, to err on neither side. There is no danger of this, if those in authority will keep in mind the fact that the aim and end of a government like ours is defence and not offence, home development and not foreign aggrandizement, a broad and happy and industrious people, busy in the marts of commerce, in shop and field, and not a narrow, proud, and conquering people, kept employed in the never-ending work of accretion of territory by conquest.

Our present navy, conservatively and moderately increased from year to year, and adequately meeting changing conditions of naval architecture and warfare, is sufficient for all the purposes of a great, free, home-keeping people, the ultimate aim of whose government is the development of intelligent and righteous and industrious manhood and womanhood. I am one of those who believe that an army of 25,000 men, with a coast defence of 10,000 more, is ample to meet all probable—perhaps I had better say all possible—land enemies, when it is remembered that we have back of this a splendid national guard, better equipped and better disciplined than ever was the case in the history of our country, and back of that yet an army of reserve consisting of our sturdy, well-fed, intelligent, and independent people, accustomed to think and to act, and, as to a sufficiently great proportion of them, perfectly habituated to the use of arms and of horses. While self-defence is, as I have said, perhaps the primal necessity for any people, it is after all merely a necessity, a necessary evil, and every dollar devoted to that purpose over and above what is necessary is a dollar unnecessarily and unjustly subtracted from the sum total of production and productive force. It is a bad day for any people, when they become flag-crazy, when they forget that the only soldier worthy of admiration is the citizen soldier, who fights in defence of the liberties, or the independence of his country, or the rights of manhood. It is a bad day in the history of any country when military expenditures, beyond the limit of what is reasonably necessary for self-defence, begin to starve home development and check historic evolution which ought to go on unchecked in accordance with the traditions and ideals of the highest, and therefore the freest, civilization. Every dollar devoted to the army takes a dollar from something good in itself and not a necessary evil, whether it be from increased facilities for transportation, readier intercommunication, public buildings, efficient internal administration, schoolhouses, churches, commerce, manufactures, or agriculture.

Consider for a moment what could be done by the annual expenditure for rivers and harbors and canals, as one item alone, of the amount of money now unnecessarily expended for the maintenance and equipment

JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS

Representative from Mississippi and Democratic Leader in the Lower House of thirty odd thousand soldiers over and above what the history of our own country has proven to be amply sufficient for purposes of self-defence—an annual saving of thirty-five or forty millions of dollars. The average appropriation for rivers and harbors is about $17,000,000. We have an overflowing treasury, and yet the excuse is made that, because of threatened deficit, under an extravagant government, works of this sort must either stand still or cease to go forward.

Where We Need New Canals

Water transportation is the great bridle of railroad extortion. Take your map and look at it; I have not time to go into detail. Consider the benefits of a canal connecting the Delaware with the Chesapeake, the Chesapeake with Albemarle Sound, Albemarle Sound, by connecting sounds, with Pamlico, thence to Beaufort Harbor, escaping rough seas, cheapening freight, and giving an interior line of harbor defence. Consider the benefits of a canal across the peninsula of Florida; a canal going out from the Mississippi River at or near Memphis, Tennessee, to the nearest point upon the Tennessee River; a canal from the Great Lakes to the Mississippi; a canal across the Isthmus, connecting the two great oceans and virtually making the Mississippi and all of its tributaries empty into the Pacific! Consider the immense benefit that will accrue from the irrigation of the public lands by the United States Government and their sale for the cost of making them irrigable to home-seekers. Is not making the desert to bloom like a rose a better thing than training a lot of independent and intelligent citizens to the simple duty of a soldier's obedience in an unneeded army, and educating a lot of officers to hope for war in order to obtain promotion? Consider the question of a possible increase of commerce by a great pan-American railway, finishing out the links in existing railway systems so as to complete an overland road from New York through Peru and Bolivia to Chili, and under the Andes on to Buenos Ayres! Remember the immense possibilities of commerce along lines of longitude across isothermal lines, facilitating the easy exchange of products of divers climates as well as of diverse soils!

There is never enough money to do everything with, not even when the doer of things is a fabulously wealthy country like the United States. Every dollar appropriated for one purpose is a dollar taken away from some other purpose. Not only do immense armaments starve home development in so far as the Federal Government is an agency of that development, but remotely it starves home development in so far as the States or individuals are the appropriate agencies for it. Every dollar that unnecessarily falls into the till of the General Government, to be unwisely and unnecessarily expended by that Government, is a dollar taken from some taxpayer in some State, who is thereby deprived of the opportunity to use it for better education, better shelter, warmer clothing, more books, more music, more pictures, more flowers, or more of something else tending to material, intellectual, aesthetic, or moral welfare. It is also a dollar less left with which to pay town, county, or State taxes, for good roads, good schools, good bridges, improved sanitation, or to answer some other public purpose good in itself.

I do not believe that I hazard criticism from any intelligent man when I say that the United States, with a sufficient navy and 35,000 soldiers, 10,000 of them trained in the heavy artillery work of the coast defences, growing every day in resources, in wealth, and in the respect of the world, would have no cause to fear a war from any nation on the surface of the earth, unless that war came about from American "jingoism," from bullying and carrying chips on our shoulders, daring somebody to knock them off, or else from an imagined necessity of holding in continued subjectivity alien, hostile, and non-assimilable people.

Our Lessening Need of a Large Army

It is frequently said that the more populous we grow the larger ought to be our army, and there are those who have a percentage theory of self-defence, one soldier to each 1,000, or each 5,000 or each 10,000 citizens. The contrary is true—the more populous we grow the greater our reserve forces and the smaller the army that we need for international purposes. The American Republic needed an army, and a large army, for defensive purposes more during the period from the date of the recognition of its independence down to 1815 than it needs now or will ever need again. If we are going "to go a world-powering," of course that is a different question. If we are going to surrender our traditional ideas as to what government was made for and adopt the Roman idea, or the Russian idea, or the Macedonian idea, then, of course, all I have said goes for naught. If we are going to take all the little islands of the seas and hold them with a mailed hand, whether their people will or not, and make for ourselves "stepping-stones around the globe," justifying it by the hypocritical pretence of "bearing the white man's burden" or having a commission to civilize the earth according to the American standard, with a Bible and a dollar in one hand and a sword in the other, killing people to make them trade with us, or to guard or preserve "spheres of commercial influence" instead of building up our own waste places and gradually getting ready for the accomplishment of the old American dream of a magnificent continental sovereignty and hemispheric hegemony, then what I have said goes for naught. My premises have been taken out from under me.

As long as we stand for the reasonable possibilities and just hopes of our continental position, availing ourselves of the God-given boon of ocean defence, there is no temptation upon the part of any one to attack us. What little temptation we furnish to the greed of the world to-day, increasing occasions of war, consists of our possession of the Philippine Islands and possibly Hawaii. I do not believe that I hazard just criticism in saying that the possession of the Philippines alone doubles the number of ships to be necessarily built and maintained by the United States. Every outlying possession weakens us in a self-defensive war against any strong power. If we are to "girdle the earth with stepping-stones," each stepping-stone will require a garrison, and almost each one will require a naval station. Why can not we learn the old lesson, the lack of learning which has destroyed so many great and vigorous peoples before us;

"Tied down by race and creed and land and station, Go learn to find thy strength—in limitation?"

Our manifest geographical limitation is the North American Continent, the Gulf of Mexico, and the Trans-Isthmian Canal.

GENERAL BARON KAULBARS ADDRESSING THE SURVIVORS OF THE "VARIAG" AND "KORIETZ" UPON THEIR ARRIVAL IN RUSSIA

THE HOME-COMING OF THE CHEMULPO CREWS

By JOHN CALLAN O'LAUGHLIN, Collier's Special War Correspondent at St. Petersburg

ST. PETERSBURG, April 10, 1904

WHEN the survivors of the Variag and Koriets arrived in Russian territory, M. de Plehve, the Minister of the Interior, raised the prohibition against patriotic demonstrations. The removal of the lid permitted an outburst of feeling not less intense than that I have seen in other countries in time of war. The people became almost delirious with patriotic exultation, and they were roused, it should be noted, not by returning conquerors, but by men who, however gallant their conduct, had suffered complete defeat.

Thus the welcome given by Russia to her first heroes of the war with Japan has more than passing interest. It is a substantial indication of the depth of the feeling of the Russian people in connection with the Far Eastern conflict, and it must be regarded as an event of political importance which foreign nations can not afford to disregard. Public opinion has no influence upon the policy of the Czar, but the emergencies of war demand a united people, and the attitude of the hundreds of thousands who took part in the ovations to the Chemulpo fighters has shown the Government, according to its declarations, that it need have no fear of internal strife while the war is in progress.

Everything emanates from above in the Land of the Bear. His Majesty presses a button, his Ministers respond to the signal and pass it to their subordinates; the latter act and then the people move. The Czar's view of the conduct of his sailors was shown by their decoration with the coveted Cross of St. George. News of the honor done them was cabled to Captain Stepanoff and his subordinates when they reached Suez. Upon the arrival at Constantinople of the steamer Malaya, which was bringing them home, the Unspeakable Turk, with courteous disregard of the valor of her passengers, held her in quarantine for twenty-four hours. Russia chafed at the new delay.

Odessa Makes a Holiday

For weeks Odessa, the industrial centre of the Black Sea, and one of the most imposing cities of the Empire, prepared to receive magnificently her war-stained countrymen; and by Odessa I mean not only the Christian but the Jewish population as well. It not infrequently happens in Russia that the police will send flags to a resident with instructions to decorate and afterward submit the bill. No such notification was necessary at the Black Sea port. The beautiful Nicolas Boulevard, lying above the sea, was transformed into a Court of Honor. Venetian masts stood with almost the regularity of telegraph poles on both sides of the street. Flags fluttered from the windows of magnificent palaces and less striking buildings, and triumphant arches bearing the inscription "To the Heroes of Chemulpo" stretched across the thoroughfare. Lavish as were the decorations of the Boulevard and other less prominent streets, they had little of the character of those which mark national festivities in the United States. They bore the imprint of powerful Russia and were arranged with Crimean art.

The city was ready for the fête when a salvo of great guns, fired by the Alexander battery, announced that the Malaya had appeared upon the horizon. A cheer from the waiting people crowding the quay on that brilliant April day testified their gratification at the approach of the men who had fought for them and for the common flag. A second salvo, and at the signal a fleet of steamers and yachts, loaded with passengers, whose shouts almost drowned the martial strains of the bands accompanying them, began the forward movement toward the incoming ship. In the lead was the launch of the commandant of the port, and by his side was a mysterious parcel which he carried with him when he boarded the Malaya. After exchanging greetings with Captain Stepanoff and his men, he opened the parcel and took from it the crosses of St. George. "My instructions," he said, "are to deliver these decorations before you arrive at the port."

Welcomed by Military and Religious Functionaries

As soon as the Malaya tied up to the dock Captain Stepanoff passed down the gangway to receive the greetings of General Baron Kaulbars, commandant of the Odessa Military District, and other distinguished military, civil, and religious functionaries. The scene was brilliant and picturesque. The man, so modestly dressed, was the recipient of honors offered by those priests in robes made of cloth of gold sweeping to the ground, by the military and naval officers garbed in gorgeous full-dress uniforms, and by civic officials less showily but none the less strikingly clothed. Near by soldiers and marines were drawn up, with arms at present, and behind them was a cheering mass of people, who looked at Stepanoff and then past him to the deck of the Malaya, where were standing the men who had fought with him. After the official words of welcome were exchanged Stepanoff returned to the ship, and, giving the order to his 258 followers, marched at their head down the gangway. All wore the uniform of the British navy, which had been supplied by the English man-of-war Talbot immediately after the battle. A third salvo of great guns welcomed them to shore, and the massed bands of 20,000 troops played together the national anthem, "God Save the Czar." To the granite stairway, which leads from the port of Odessa to the city, the survivors marched through two lines of saluting sailors and soldiers. At the foot of the stairway the military gave way to young students of the universities, standing side by side and forming two rows, which stretched past the bronze statue of the Duc de Richelieu, at the head of the stairway, down the Nicolas Boulevard. Before the Richelieu statue were gathered representatives of the Church, the Municipality and the District Administration, who welcomed the survivors to the city. Here the latter received a blessing and reverently kissed the cross. The procession then turned into the Nicolas Boulevard, where 200,000 people joined in a roar of welcome. Not satisfied with this demonstration, the people swept through the lines of students and police and seized the survivors, bearded men pressing their lips upon bearded cheeks with an enthusiasm that would have been the better understood by an American had the objects of the caresses been fair young girls. Some of the people's heroes were hoisted upon brawny shoulders and carried in this fashion, and crowds struggled and shoved to get near enough to touch the hands of the men whom they were worshipping. Somewhat rumpled, but thoroughly pleased by the rough attentions showered upon them, the survivors reached the City Hall, where a pavilion had been erected and where they were received by the City Fathers. The latter offered bread and salt to Captain Stepanoff upon a silver platter inscribed: "Welcome to Odessa to the heroes of the Variag and Koriets, whose deed astounded the world."

For twenty-four hours Odessa feasted and gave free rein to her frantic enthusiasm for her guests. Then the latter, in the auxiliary cruiser Nicolai II, proceeded to the military port of Sebastopol—the sturdy resistance of which in the Crimean War will be duplicated, if necessary, Russians say, at Port Arthur. A torpedo boat flying the signal, "Welcome to the Brave," was first sighted from the Malaya. Slowly came into view the whole of the Black Sea fleet, from its masts flying the flags that Russian men-of-war always hoist when going into action. The thunderous roar of cannon afloat and ashore intermingled, and the faint echo of the cheers of the military, the nobility, and the people came across the water. The survivors answered with a loud hurrah, which was caught up by the sailors of the fleet and thus carried to the shore.

Skrydloff Gives Stepanoff His Medal

Sebastopol's reception was more of a military character than had been that of Odessa. The temper of the people had been shown at the latter port; the attitude of those gathered at Sebastopol indicated the feelings of the military. The Russian stronghold was not as gorgeously decorated as Odessa had been, but its welcome was not a whit less hearty. Vice-Admiral Skrydloff, commanding the Black Sea fleet, who had commanded the Pacific Squadron, warmly embraced Stepanoff. "In the fight," said the latter, "I did not forget your orders and instructions. We lost, but we fought as hard as we could, and we did not give up our ships." That night at a banquet, Skrydloff took from his breast the St. George's cross, gained in the Russo-Turkish War of 1878, and pinned it upon Stepanoff. "I have worn that cross for twenty-six years," he said, "and here in Sebastopol, whose soil is rich with the blood of Russian heroes, I give it to you, another hero, and wish you happiness and health."

But a portion of the crews of the Variag and Korietz were brought to Russia by the Malaya. The remainder came home two weeks later via Marseilles. When the survivors were reunited they were ordered to St. Petersburg. Immense crowds greeted them along the route. At Moscow they were given an ovation such as had not been exceeded probably by any previous demonstration in that old capital. St. Petersburg decorated in their honor, troops gave them a military reception, and the people let loose the enthusiasm pent up by long waiting. The welcome of the nation was crowned by an audience granted by the Emperor to the officers and men of the sunken ships.

Gifts of money, of jewels, of clothing were showered upon the survivors by the Emperor, the nobility, and the peasantry. The sailors and soldiers who are fighting in the East, and those who remain at home, were shown the depth of the nation's gratitude, and they may expect like treatment if they, too, dare bravely for the honor of the flag.

MARKING TIME IN TOKIO: THE WAR DOGS DINE OUT

By RICHARD HARDING DAVIS, Collier's Special War Correspondent in Japan

The Japanese War Office has issued a war correspondent's pass to Mr. Davis, and has assigned him to the Second Column. Until this takes the field, Mr. Davis will write of events in the Japanese Capital.

TOKIO, March 29, 1904

EACH time the War Office here announces that the advance of the army has been again postponed, those terrible dogs of war, the war correspondents, cry "havoc," and try to slip their chains. And the answer of the Japanese officials to their demand that they instantly be shown "battle, murder, and sudden death," is to invite them to a garden party. This is supposed to soothe the correspondents, and to satisfy the proprietors of their papers at home, who are sending them rich drafts and singing sadly, "It's All Going Out, and There's Nothing Coming In."

A few nights since the members of Parliament gave a dinner to the military attachés and the war correspondents, at which they asked us to be patient. As a sop, diplomatically administered, and intended to reconcile us to being bottled up in Tokio, it did not altogether carry its purpose, but as an effort of hospitality, as a dinner of ceremony and, in so far as it illustrated the courtesy and thoughtfulness of the Japanese, it was a charming success. It also is interesting, when one compares it as an entertainment with one that would be given to strangers in Washington by our own members of Congress.

We went to the dinner in jinrikishas, each with an accordion-plaited paper lantern bobbing fantastically in the night like a giant firefly, and stopped at a house that glowed among the surrounding trees, not from any windows, as it had no windows, but through its walls. It glowed most brilliantly through a square low doorway in which stood many little girls in gray kimonos with glistening black hair, worn à la Pompadour, and who bowed and rubbed their knees with their open palms, continually shifting from one stockinged foot to the other, and bowing and bowing again. They took away our shoes and gave us big woolen slippers, and then led us down corridors and along outer galleries into a room which ran the length of the tea house. It was covered with mats. Not with what we call mats, but with what is more like a mattress with a piece of fine matting sewn on its top. These mattresses were sunk between broad grooves of beautifully polished wood, and with the wooden beams formed the floor on which we walked, the floor on which we sat, the floor from which we ate. When strangers to Japan object to removing their shoes, and walk with boots upon a Japanese mattress, they shock their host just as thoroughly as it would shock an American hostess to see her visitor stamp with his boots upon the lid of her piano or on her damask tablecloth.

The room of the tea house was bare of all furniture, and even of ornaments, save the decorated screens that formed the walls and the decorated beams that supported the decorated ceiling. The room was its own ornament. The panels on the walls were of native woods of great beauty, and on some in bas-relief were carved flowers, dragons, and landscapes. It was like feasting in an enlarged glove box. From time to time one of the nesans, as they call the little girls who serve the dinner, would push back a paper screen with its squares of glistening black lacquer, and we could see outside swinging from the balcony cherry-red lanterns, and beyond them the chill spring moonlight and the black pines of Shiba Park. We sat on flat cushions of crimson silk, each with his back to the wall, in a long row that stretched around the room.

When we had last seen our hosts, when the Mikado addressed them in their House of Parliament, they were in our evening dress. Now, they wore their national costume; the skirts of cloth, silk, or brocade, and, folded over the chest like an abbreviated bathrobe, the kimono. There was no brilliant color in any of the costumes. They all were gray, brown, black. The room was heated by braziers of brass set in wooden boxes and filled with hot ashes over which the Japanese passed their hands continually, as though performing an incantation.

A Japanese dinner begins at the end with the sweets, and then starts over again with soup. A nesan placed in front of each guest a box filled with cakes, candy, and sugared fruit. The guest is not supposed to eat this, but to save it until the dinner is over, when he packs whatever parts of the dinner he has not eaten in the box and carries the box home. After the little girl had explained with much shaking of her head that we must not eat the sweets, she brought us a tiny lacquer table that stood about six inches from the floor, a blue and white bottle filled with saki (which tastes like warm sherry), a saucer of salt and mustard, a saki cup, a bowl in which to rinse the saki cup before we offer it to any one with whom we wish to drink a toast, and a pair of chopsticks. Soup followed on a lacquered bowl, then hot fish, and, on a gridiron of glass rods, raw fish. The soup and the hot fish were as deliciously cooked as at the oldest and best of Paris restaurants, but the raw fish was a novelty which even the bravest military attaché and the politest correspondent dared not attempt. After that the dishes no longer came in courses, but were placed at the same time in rich profusion upon the tiny tables. Many with which we were familiar were so served that we failed to recognize them, and other dishes we thought were those we knew at home we ate in blissful ignorance that they were not. Some kidneys I especially welcomed. "Ah!" exclaimed one of the polite hosts, "I see you like very much our devil fish." I had seen devil fish in the aquarium at Naples, but I never before had hungered for one. Of course, the chopsticks were baffling, and of how many other breaches of etiquette we were guilty one blushes to guess. The next night I dined after the European fashion, and when I saw how adroitly the Japanese officers at the dinner followed it, I was amazed at our temerity of the night previous. For the first time I became conscious that the customs of our table are full of pitfalls. As some one has said, the Romans were able to conquer the world because they did not have to stay at home and learn their own language.

But no one of the Japanese members of Parliament made any sign that we were not eating with perfect

The geisha is—but, no, in this peace-ridden city, so far removed from "wars and the rumors of wars," where the coming of the cherry blossoms is the one event of vital interest, the geisha becomes a subject of too serious moment to be wasted in a paragraph. It must be saved for another steamer day.

MR. HEARST AND THE VIOLET

The statesman resembles that modest flower in his attempt to shrink from view

THE personally conducted campaign of Mr. W. R. Hearst for the Democratic Presidential nomination is unique in that the statesman for whom it is being exploited has thus far been to the general public only a name. Mr. Hearst makes no speeches; no one knows what his ideas may be except, perhaps, the men whose brains he has hired to run his newspapers. He is a member of the House of Representatives, but he is rarely seen there, and he has never made a speech on the floor of the House. His maiden speech was made on April 23 to the House Judiciary Committee, which had called on Mr. Hearst to appear before it to explain one of his resolutions. Mr. Hearst read his explanation to the committee in the committee's chamber. The curiosity of the House as to whether Mr. Hearst could make a speech was therefore not gratified. During the five months that Mr. Hearst has served as a member of Congress, and during 108 days of actual Congressional sittings, the activity of Mr. Hearst, Representative of the Eleventh New York District, may be summed up in this way:

Speeches delivered	0
Incidental remarks on the floor	0
Motions or points of order made	0
Reports submitted	0
Petitions and papers presented	0
Resolutions introduced	1
Bills introduced	5

In those five months and more, extending through the extra session and the succeeding regular session to April 14, Mr. Hearst's record as to attendance, compared with the records, respectively, of Representative William Sulzer of New York, and the Democratic leader in the House, John Sharp Williams of Mississippi, has been as follows:

Whole number of roll calls from Nov. 9 to April 14	35
Hearst recorded as voting yea or nay	0
Hearst recorded as "not voting"	35
Sulzer recorded as voting yea or nay	29
Sulzer recorded as "not voting"	6
Williams recorded as voting yea or nay	31
Williams recorded as "not voting"	4

No report has ever been circulated in Washington that Mr. Hearst was prevented from attending the sessions of the House on account of illness or accident. He represents 228,000 constituents—more than the combined population of Arizona and Nevada—and he has made no explanation of his legislative inactivity.

By those who have come into close contact with Representative Hearst in Washington he is described as being exceedingly sensitive in the presence of strangers. The debates on the bills he has introduced—concerned entirely with the trusts and labor conditions—have been carried on by a so-called Hearst coterie in the House, including Representative Livernash, from San Francisco, a former employee of Hearst's "Examiner," and Representative Hughes of New Jersey. During these times he sits low in his chair, on the "small" of his back, and issues whispered instructions to the half dozen men who follow his lead. Since his name has been mentioned prominently as a possible candidate for the Executive chair, Congress has observed Hearst with interest. It has been discovered that he takes absolutely no interest in any sort of legislation that is not directed against trusts or is not meant directly to affect the condition of labor. When the discussion leaves these topics Hearst leaves the floor. He is a member of the Labor Committee of the House, and attends its meetings with regularity.

Though Representative Hearst is reputed to be shy, and when politics is introduced into the conversation he becomes uneasy and seeks a chance to get away, his newspapers are not at all reluctant to spread his name and achievements. A table, showing the number of times Mr. Hearst's name appeared in an April issue of the New York "American," illustrates this fact:

Page	Display Type	Ordinary Type
Editorial	4	24
Second News	3	19
Third News	10	17
Fourth News	5	35
Sixth News	13	54
	35	145
Total for the issue		179

On April 18, Mr. Hearst had secured 32 delegates pledged to vote for his nomination at the Democratic propriety, though we must surely have shocked them. Many of the Americans and English could not understand that the little girls who knelt in front of them were not to be admired and complimented, but were there simply as waitresses. And when the Japanese heard their guests address them as "Maimie" and "Maude," they must in their artless Japanese way have congratulated themselves that when they determined to copy us they knew where to stop. Of course, it is very hard for the visitor to take the little nesans as seriously as they take themselves. The whole situation is unfamiliar. We do not often sit cross-legged, while quaintly dressed handmaidens kneel and bow before us. To the gallant American the occasion seems to demand that the least he can do is treat the young lady as one of the guests. As a matter of fact, one is supposed to treat her with every politeness, even if you speak Japanese, to discuss the food with her, and to give her the saki cup that she may drink with you, but it does not follow that you need necessarily address her as "Good-morning, Carrie."

WAR CORRESPONDENTS ON BOARD THE STEAMSHIP "CHINA"

Reading from left to right, standing: H. S. Hales, London Daily News; John Fox, Jr., Scribner's; Richard Harding Davis, Collier's; L. F. Lawton, London Express; C. Hagerty, Associated Press; Paul Cowles, Associated Press; Ashmead Bartlett, London Express; T. F. Millard, N. Y. World; I. C. Balet, Petit Journal, of Paris. Sitting: Frederick Whiting, London Graphic; L. E. Johnson, Scripps-McRae Syndicate; M. H. Donohue, London Chronicle; R. V. de Laguerre, Paris Figure.

Our hosts probably knew we did not offend with knowledge, and the little girls themselves accepted invitations to drink, and did drink, after a most polite ceremonial, and, when our chopsticks refused to work, and we spilled our food, shivered and giggled with delight, and covered their eyes with their hands.

After the dinner and the speeches, they gathered up the sweets and wrapped the boxes we were to carry home in napkins.

And then they cleared the floor for the geisha girls.

Looking west on Front Street; the fire was checked at the buildings in the left foreground

Wellington Street, in which the fire started, spreading immediately to both sides of the street

RUINS OF THE FIRE IN TORONTO, WHICH ON APRIL 19 SWEEPED FOURTEEN ACRES, WITH LOSSES OF $14,000,000

The area destroyed was in the wholesale and retail business district, and included all the principal warehouses. Starting in a factory in the early evening, the fire was beyond control in less than an hour. One hundred and fourteen buildings were destroyed in eight hours, 250 firms were put out of business, and 7,000 people thrown out of employment. Fire engines were sent from Buffalo, Hamilton, and Montreal, by special trains. Only one life was lost. The total insurance was found to be $7,000,000.

Convention in St. Louis in July. New Mexico furnished 6, Ohio 6, Rhode Island 6, South Dakota 8, Kansas 6. New York alone, which has instructed for Judge Parker, will send 75 delegates. Besides the robustly optimistic Hearst newspapers—the San Francisco "Examiner," the Chicago "American," the New York "American," and his journals in Boston and Los Angeles, California—few newspapers have treated his candidacy seriously. Perhaps the most representative of these few is the "Flickertail Flicker," of Goodrich, North Dakota, which announced in its issue of April 14, in large type: "It looks like Hearst!" Goodrich is in McLean County, forty miles east of Turtle Lake. The county is credited with having a population of 4,791.

THE TRAGEDY OF THE "MISSOURI"

Naval experts had already feared that rapid-fire contests were passing the danger point

BARRING the terrible loss of life, the most deplorable feature of the awful tragedy on the battleship Missouri is that the exact cause of the accident will never, probably, be discovered. With the prospect that the reason for the ignition of the powder must remain an awesome mystery, the uncertainty surrounding the lives of officers and men when engaged in target practice will necessarily have an effect upon them that may, for some time at least, decrease their efficiency in firing ordnance. Many theories have been advanced to account for the explosion in the Missouri's after turret, but only one has any considerable number of supporters. This, put in its most general form, is that haste growing out of enthusiasm to make a record for rapidity in firing was responsible for the igniting of the several hundred pounds of powder in the partially loaded gun and the turret which protected it. The Navy Department is more deeply interested in this aspect of the matter than, perhaps, in any other; for the reason that trophies, cash prizes, and increases in pay were offered by the Department to stimulate the efforts of officers and men to establish records in both accuracy and rapidity of fire at target practice. The Missouri was at target practice when the tragedy occurred, but the Bureau of Navigation has announced that unofficial information shows that the Missouri's guns were being fired at a very slow rate, only half as rapidly, in fact, as the big guns of the Alabama were fired during her previous target work. The Alabama managed to load and fire one gun in thirty-eight seconds while on the target range, and in drill with dummy shells and charges this same gun established a record of thirty seconds between shots. On the Asiatic Station an even better record was made by the battleship Wisconsin, which managed to load and fire a 13-inch gun in actual target practice in just thirty seconds. This quick loading and firing excited much comment in naval circles, and even before the Missouri catastrophe conservative officers had expressed the opinion that the danger point had been reached in efforts to make records for rapidity. They contended that to load and fire a gun within the time taken by the Alabama and the Wisconsin, it was necessary to open the breech too soon after a charge had been detonated, and to have the new charge held too near the breech for safety, ready to shove into the gun immediately. But although the exact cause of the affair on the Missouri may never become known, it appears to be certain that the loss of life in the handling-room below the turret would not have occurred if a considerable quantity of powder had not been piled up there ready to be sent to the turret at the word, to assist those engaged in loading and firing the gun to do their work with the greatest rapidity. Had there been no desire to do fast firing, the necessity of keeping any considerable quantity of powder or any powder at all in the handling-room would presumably not have existed. The indications point to the conclusion that an attempt was being made to fire the gun as rapidly as possible, and that an extra supply of ammunition was ready in the handling-room to be sent quickly to the turret. When the powder in the gun was ignited, the resulting flame flared back through the open breech and set fire to the powder that was ready to supply the rest of the required ammunition. Pieces of cloth and powder fell through the aperture of the ammunition hoist and brought about the explosion of the powder in the handling-room. The window of the magazine was open, and the wonder is that the ship was not blown up and sunk.

THE FIGHT FOR BILL HOAR'S LIFE

Ten fathoms below the daylight, a diver, caught by suction, waited hour by hour for death

NOT even the sinking of the Petropavlovsk and the tragic death of the Russian Admiral stirred newspaper readers in the neighborhood of New York more deeply than the story about one man, which filled parallel columns at the same time—the story of the hopeless fight to save the life of Diver Bill Hoar. It was a fight that was fought for two days before hope was completely given up, and it was known that Bill Hoar had died with his boots on, caught fast by suction in a huge waste pipe, ten fathoms below the surface of the water back of the Boonton dam, Boonton, N. J.

Hoar, who was a big, powerful man and a veteran diver, had gone down to adjust a huge wooden ball which was to fit into the opening of the waste-pipe, and stop the flow of water while a break in the valve was being repaired. He was caught by the enormous suction at the bottom of the reservoir, his foot was whirled in between the ball and the opening of the pipe, and no power that might be exerted above could draw him away. For hours and hours, all day, all night, the men at the air pumps on a raft at the surface kept pumping. Signals came up from time to time, growing fainter as the hours wore on. The pressure at such a depth is tremendous, and few divers can endure it for more than a few hours.

THE PAGE MURDER MYSTERY

Another baffling case added to New England's long list of curious and puzzling murders

NEW ENGLAND'S criminal cases, especially its murder cases, from the time of the famous Webster-Parkman trial down to that of Lizzie Borden at Fall River, have been notable for their peculiar features. Just now the curiosity of Massachusetts and especially of Boston is aroused over the murder of Miss Mabel Page, and the trial of the man who has been arrested for the crime. The Page family is highly respected. The Pages lived on Commonwealth Avenue, with a summer home at Weston, an aristocratic suburb. The family met with financial reverses, were compelled to sell the city home and retire to Weston. The family consisted a month or so ago of the father, aged over seventy; the daughter Mabel, about forty years of age, and one son, Harold, who has a position with a railroad company in Boston. Mr. Page had been in town one day in March and returned about two o'clock to find a note on the table from the daughter telling him that Harold had met with an accident, had been taken to the Massachusetts General Hospital, and she had gone to see him. He went upstairs, and there found the body of his daughter lying full on her face. She was partly dressed and was evidently about to leave the house for Boston. There were knife wounds in the throat and blood was on the floor. Mr. Page at once sent word to his son, who was in his office as usual, and to the medical examiner of the county. Massachusetts has no coroner, and the duties of medical examiner are very restricted. He viewed the body for a few moments, but made no exhaustive examination, pronounced it a case of suicide, and left with directions for the undertaker. When the undertaker arrived after dark he found deep knife wounds in the back that could not have been self-inflicted, and he sent again for the medical examiner. That official came the next forenoon and was compelled to reverse his former verdict. The murderer had evidently got into the house, purporting to bear a message to the girl that her brother was sick. She had been dressing to go to his side when the villain attacked her from behind and stabbed her many times. After searching clues, the detectives arrested a young man who lives in the neighborhood. The preliminary hearing at Waltham resulted in his being held for the Grand Jury. The Attorney-General of the State took part in working up the case.

SCENE FROM RICHARD HARDING DAVIS'S FARCE "THE DICTATOR"

The play is about a young New Yorker who, believing he has murdered a cabman, flees from his native city, and accompanied by his valet seeks refuge at a small South American port. Here, posing as the United States consul, he becomes involved in numerous revolutions and is finally rescued by an American man-of-war. "The Dictator," which was finished just before Mr. Davis started for Japan as War Correspondent for Collier's Weekly, is now having a successful run at the Criterion Theatre, New York.

of a child who finds its confidence in a superior power has been misplaced. Then he thought of his remaining leaves and ran along the bank, shouting madly. He might as well have called to the sun to stand still. The paddle-wheels kept up their battle against time; the bow which they drove homeward was pointed for the centre of the channel at the bend ahead. The stern passed out of sight and Ippolit sank on a boulder at the base of the mountain wall which closed in Bikka's pasture.

"The hetman did that," he said. "He never gave the order. I shall have to eat hay now, of a truth."

When winter comes in these northern latitudes it comes as quickly as you would turn over the leaf of a calendar. That night and the next the gripping cold bridged the river with ice. When he put his head outside of the lean-to it made him gasp as if a knife had been thrust into his lungs. Again, while he slept, the weather moderated, and morning found the air white with snowflakes, which kept falling until they were waist deep. Then the hazy sun, as cold as steel, revealed the lamplighter's solitude with the sureness of a scalpel.

There were other posts up and down the river which might have had food, but if their watchers had not a visitor would be unwelcome, so unwelcome that he might never awaken from his first night's sleep in a convict's cabin. Leading Bikka, he might set out and travel on his little store of bread until bread and horse and man were exhausted. But this was desertion.

"Ak-h, Bikka, the Little Father who gave me you and gave me my rifle sent me here to light the lamps in the spring. Ak-h, Bikka, we are Cossacks and we obey."

No disloyal thought of the Czar entered his mind. When things go wrong it is the bad men who deceive the Little Father who are to blame. The Little Father loves all his children and he gives them all they have. So, like the simple child he was, Ippolit ate his bread while it lasted, leaving the morrow to itself. When the last crumb was gone and hunger smote him he cleaned his carbine for the hundredth time and slipped a cartridge home. He had only to pull the trigger and he would have meat to last him all winter. But first he would ask Bikka to forgive him. He patted Bikka's nose again and Bikka gave him a push, the big brother's push of fellowship.

"Ak-h, Bikka, that is what thou didst when I asked thee if thou couldst go seventy miles before dawn," he said. "If it had not been for thee, thou wouldst have had no master, and the heathen devils would have killed us all. Thy nostrils were like red coals; thy sweat wet my boots through, and thou wouldst not stop till the seventy miles were done! Ak-h! How the General patted thee! How I rubbed thee down as if thy robe were ermine! If I had thee and Grisha I would like to live. Da, da, we would have a little house for ourselves and a house for thee, and thou wouldst plow and take our wheat to market, and in the long winter evenings Grisha and I would sit by the samovar courting. No, no, Bikka! Thou shalt live! I could not eat thee. Thy flesh would be poison to me. There is hay enough for thee. In the spring they will find thee and me."

He put his carbine against the wall and sank back on his blankets and slept.

III

KHARBAROVSK, the Governor's winter quarters—a town of a dozen frame buildings, four or five brick and two or three hundred log cabins—sits on a bluff at the junction of the two greatest rivers of eastern Siberia. This afternoon the thin columns of blue smoke rising from the chimneys seemed to cut grooves in the still, biting air. The piled-up hummocks of ice on the Amur glistened in the dim light. The boughs of the trees were sprinkled with diamond dust, their trunks pricking the white carpet, with the town anchored in its frigid calm, which seemed as limitless as the ocean. In the streets the snow was packed by the Cossacks, the soldiers, and the few settlers, and by sleigh tracks; for the Governor rode when he went four blocks to church.

Within doors the huge-tiled Russian stoves dissipated their tropical heat evenly throughout the room, and comfort was as permeating as the cold without. The Governor's samovar had ceased hissing; he had drunk his fourth cup of tea, which was stored in sweet peace with caviar, pickles, herring, and vodka. His nose was sinking into the big beard as he slipped deeper into his chair, when he was roused by the noise of quarreling servants. Then Grisha burst into the quiet room on that quiet day, her face as blue and white as the landscape.

"May the hetman freeze to death, with scalding water trickling down his back! May he starve in the sight of food! He has just told me about Ippolit—Ippolit, who saved the garrison! You remember Ippolit and his pony Bikka, Excellency?"

"Da, da, a big boy of a blue-eyed Cossack, stuttering and blushing and looking as if he had grown out of his clothes—da, da—and a scrubby little Cossack pony. Da, da. I wrote to the Minister of War about him, and the Czar is going to send him a medal. You wanted to marry him and you proposed—I know you did, you cunning child! I am going to let you be married in the spring to keep you still, so you won't wake me up afternoons, child."

She had listened while he ruminated in the easy flow of good digestion—listened, digging her nails into the palms of her hands and trying to think what she would best say and do for Ippolit's sake. But when she might speak the torrent of her anger carried her away again.

"The hetman put no food aboard the last steamer for him! He has not a crumb of bread now! What good will medals do him when he is starving? Oh, he is dead! I know he is dead! The hetman has killed him."

Children en masse when the wards of a ruling class are as bothersome as those of the family. They must be borne with, humored and chastised. The Governor was a good father, as fathers of his kind go. Now his wisest smile played on the old face.

"Softly, child. Ippolit had his pony with him, didn't he?"

"Yes, but the pony was Bikka." She knew beforehand what the Governor was going to say and the folly of it.

"A Cossack could not be a Cossack if he did not find a way. Would the Father give him a pony and a caring could have stirred him out of Kharbarovsk till he should go in the comfort of the Governor's cabin aboard the steamer.

"You will do nothing, nothing, Excellency? You will not—" and she was going to say "punish the hetman," but desisted, and a look of cunning took the place of that of supplication.

"You had better clear away the samovar, child." And the Governor sank back into his chair.

When she entered the kitchen, carrying the samovar, the hetman, who had overheard all, was back on the bench from which he had told her the story. When he saw her face he began grinning and swinging his legs. She smiled at him.

"You are a clever man, hetman. You always have your way."

This pleased him. It was a true Cossack tribute to a Cossack.

"I am good at waiting," he said. "You are a wise girl and will marry me."

She shrugged her shoulders.

"I do not have to marry you. No, no, I have to marry nobody. I have my price."

"Ak-h! So many men have found, you beautiful devil."

"Thank you." She came a step nearer, still smiling. In that moment her cunning caught his cunning off its guard.

"If his Excellency's dog team were away for a week, would he know about it?"

The hetman knocked the heels of his boots together and rubbed his hands and leered at the door of the Governor's room.

"If they were absent six days he wouldn't know, but he calls for them every Sunday morning and tells me to keep them in good condition, as he may need them."

"And this is Monday. It will be six days before he calls for them again."

"Da, da, as sure as the clock goes round."

"Clever man! You know everything. You know that Ippolit would never eat Bikka. He would starve first."

"Da, da."

She was at his side now. As she threw back her head and shoulders she looked strong enough to have broken the little hetman in two. But she was bent on displaying her charms, not her strength.

"Ippolit is a great fool, I know. He is not the man for me to marry. You are the man for me to marry. You would take care of a woman."

He sprang to his feet and was going to kiss her, but she put out her hand and pushed him back to his seat.

"Not till I've made my bargain," she said. "I want to see if you are as brave as Ippolit. I have heard that you are not. I have heard that you are not strong; that you can not ride far, that you are afraid of the cold and the ice hummocks, and you make your men carry you pick-a-back over the mountains. I want to save Ippolit because my love made a fool of him and made you send him to Post Number 8. You know I don't care whether I marry you or not. You know I will never marry a weakling. If you will take the dogs and go with me, and if you are strong enough to reach Ippolit's cabin, I will marry you."

"Marry me first and I will travel night and day."

"Marry you first and you would not go at all. I may marry you because I know that you are clever, you Cossack; but I am as clever as you. I will have Varenka come from the Colonel's in my place. She will tell the Governor that I am sick. I will go with you, and if I see that you are not afraid of the cold and hummocks—if you reach Ippolit's cabin—I will be yours. Come!"

She seized his hand in hers with a kind of abandon. She swung him to his feet, using all the ripe charm of her womanhood to play with his senses.

"Come, we are true Cossacks. We will go together!"

The Governor was still deep in his siesta when his sled, behind his team, disappeared over the bluff, leaving a scurry of snow in its path.

Truly Ippolit was not dreaming. There was Bikka in the stall, and none other than Grisha herself was bending over him.

"Ak-h! I will make you some warm soup as soon as the fire is burning. Then I will go back to the hetman. He is a good dog driver; I don't want him to freeze. I left him tied to a tree a mile back, so he did not reach here, and I need not marry him. Some Cossacks are not as cunning as they think."

GRISHA HERSELF WAS BENDING OVER HIM

bine unless he knew how to use them? I have been long in Siberia, my child. Ippolit will not be the first Cossack who has dined off his pony. Pony meat is not bad. Bikka was fat, as I remember, and he will last Ippolit until the first steamer up in the spring. Long before you came to Siberia, child, when I was on General Kopsky's staff, one of our garrisons on the Manchurian bank ate Chinese. They were quite healthy in the spring, too. Da, da, da."

The Governor nodded his head with his affirmatives. This was one of his favorite stories. It showed the hardihood of the Cossacks. He never thought of the Cossacks as human beings, but as devils whom the State might call in and lose at will. He looked at the pile of cigarette stumps beside the samovar and lighted the only one that had not been smoked.

"Excellency," said Grisha, "Ippolit is not like the others. He is so simple, such a boy. He is not cunning; he can not lie; he can not contrive. I must contrive for him. That is why I love him. I love him because he does stutter and blush, and because, when he came back from fighting the Chinese, there was not that something terrible in his eyes like the stories the others told."

"Ho-m-m," said the Governor. "Are you telling me of a Cossack or of a baby?"

"Of the bravest Cossack of them all, Excellency. He would die before he would eat Bikka. It was Bikka that carried him the seventy miles, the seventy miles from dark to dawn, Excellency. You will find them both frozen stiff, I know you will."

"Sh-h! You did not know Ippolit when he was hungry."

"Oh, Excellency, your dog team has not been out once this winter. In five days they could go to Post Number 8 and back. Oh, Excellency, Excellency, won't you send them?"

"I may want to use them at any minute myself, child." That was a favorite pose of his. But noth-

NEW YORK AS IT IS

NEW YORK rises in the Tammany Hall District and flows in a northerly direction into the State Legislature at Albany. It is the wealthiest State in the Union, retiring its politicians at a comparatively early age, and supporting them abroad in regal splendor.

In the northern part the bald-headed Adirondacks can be seen, having in course of time been shorn of trees by the unselfish patriotism of the lumberman.

In the south, Brooklyn and Staten Island sleep side by side in the same ocean bed, disturbed only at long intervals by the glad hum of the Jersey mosquito as he rises briskly from the historic meadows of Hoboken.

New York is afflicted with chauffeurs, trolley cars, and after-dinner speakers. Also by the real lady.

Honeymoons are raised in large quantities at Niagara, wads at Saratoga, and family discords between Fourteenth Street and One Hundredth Street.

WISDOM WHILE YOU WAIT

IF the streets were paved with gold there would still be objections raised to the dust.

Misery loves company, perhaps, but society at large does not reciprocate the affection.

The pen-and-ink artist may be classed among those who draw the color line.

When a man is a "good fellow" downtown his wife usually wears her straw hat all winter.

An old woman sometimes evolves into a new woman.

Brevity may be the soul of wit, but there is nothing humorous in a short answer.

Lazy people like to imagine all the world's a stage, so they may ride.

The most brilliant jewel among gems is a sunny disposition.

Dowie certainly proved himself a divine healer.

A man's own tongue betrays him as frequently as he is betrayed by the tongues of others.

The self-made man is not always a well-made man.

Divorce is not an evil when it separates manhood and liquor.

When things go awry, rye is sometimes to blame.

Smoking may be a pernicious habit, but fuming is worse.

The political pot frequently emits unsavory odors.

Frost is a good thing so long as it is impersonal.

When contestants wade into the political pool they usually stir up a quantity of mud.

An immaculate shirtfront frequently poses in lieu of a spotless reputation.

A coconut is not always what it is cracked up to be.

Some men who boast of holding the key to the situation seem compelled to knock.

Many a young woman with golden hair wouldn't dare face the assayer's test.

Inches do not constitute the only measure of smallness.

Vanity causes strong men to appear weak.

WOMAN'S CROWNING GLORY

IT was just before the curtain rose. The great house was crowded. A small, nervous-looking man, with a propitiatory smile on his face, leaned forward from his seat in the centre aisle and whispered something to a tall woman who sat in front of him. There was a momentary silence—like the lull before the storm. Then something happened. A human cyclone was let loose. People shrieked. Everything was in confusion. Ten minutes later, the ushers carried out the nervous-looking man, now hopelessly disfigured, and laid him tenderly in the waiting ambulance. Then it was the manager, with a look of intense sympathy, leaned over the prostrate form, his curiosity no longer able to restrain itself. "Would you mind," he asked, "telling me what you said to that woman?"

Even in his great pain the man shuddered as he feebly replied:

"Alas! I asked her if she would kindly remove her hair."

MODERN BRIGHTNESS

"SHE is very bright!" It was thus that they spoke of her who had been plucked from the kindergarten at the early age of four, and transplanted into the primary; who had gone through all the grades, cantered through college, and remained a monument to her parents' foresight.

"She is very bright."

Nobody in the outside world had seen her give her baby his first bath, or feed him on pseudo-scientific food. Nobody had seen the butcher's or grocer's books, or the servants arrive and depart. Nobody had noticed her husband grow thinner for want of proper nourishment, or detected him as he made out his own laundry list, or paid a professional repairer to sneak into his room once a week and keep the buttons on his trousers. Nobody had noticed the children running loose and wondering why their home was so different from that of the intensely stupid people across the way, who never had time to attend the latest lectures.

But it was a great comfort to them all to have it said of her in the end as in the beginning: "She is very bright!"

ADOLPHUS AND THE LION

By WALLACE IRWIN

ADOLPHUS was a thoughtful child

Who acted as he should,
Self-sacrificing, meek, and mild,
And full of impulse good.

One day when he was eating pie
Beneath the forest tree
A timid Lion passing by
The gentle child did see.

"Adolphus, I am hungeree
And rather faint am I.
Pray be so good as give to me
A morsel of your pie."

"I'm very glad you told me so,"
Adolphus said, well pleased.
"Twill be reward enough to know
Your appetite's appeased."

The Lion ate Adolphus' pie
With all politeness due,
Then pausing with a grateful sigh
He ate Adolphus too.

Then rising with a thankful roar
He sauntered down the plain—
A stronger, better Lion for Adolphus' deed humane.

Herein there lies a moral sweet
Which all who read may find:
Be generous to those you meet—
To animals be kind.

His After-Dinner Cigar—The Envy of the Gang

WASHINGTON NOTES—OF THE FUTURE

SENATOR SMOOT SMYTHE took his wives out for a drive yesterday. The procession formed at the Treasury Building. All had an enjoyable time.

Senator Hiram Harem has chartered the largest hospital in town to accommodate his children, just taken down with the measles. A syndicate of doctors has been engaged.

It is rumored that Senator Abraham Scoot is engaged to three of our leading beauties. A triple marriage will take place in a month or so between Senator Scoot, party of the first part, and the aforementioned ladies, parties of the second, third, and fourth parts.

IN A FEW YEARS

MARTIAN: "Can this be the New York we've read so much about?"

Young Martian: "I think it must be, mamma. See all the people being killed by the cars."

HAROLD AND HIS PA

"SAY, pa, I heard mama talking yesterday about the servant-girl problem. Is that like the problems we have at school?"

"No, not exactly."

"But what is the difference?"

"The problems you have at school, Harold, can all be solved."

"But mama said she thought she had solved this one."

"Oh, yes—but that was yesterday when the new cook came. To-day, when the new cook packed up her duds and lit out to restore the balance of power at the Servants' Agency, your mama doesn't feel that she is any nearer solving this problem than she ever was."

"Oh, my, how funny! Tell me, pa, what is a balance of power?"

"It's very simple, my son, when applied to the servant-girl problem. You see, when you have a cook, which sometimes happens, she has the power. You've noticed that, haven't you?"

"Why, yes, pa. I've noticed that you and ma speak low and act sort of meek and humble. But tell me, what does the cook do with the power when she has it?"

"She turns it on, slowly at first, and then a little more, until the safety-gauge begins to get uneasy and lift up."

"But I don't see where the balance comes in."

"That's because, my boy, you have not yet experienced the joys and sorrows of married life. The balance is what you had at the bank to begin with."

"Then you don't always have it?"

"Oh, no. After you have bought a few dinner sets and paid some agents' fees, to say nothing of car fare and wages, your balance begins to fade away."

"And then do you feel happy?"

"Supremely so, Harold. You laugh and shout, and the glad tears of joy begin to fill your eyes."

"But I can't understand why you should be so happy."

"Simply because, my dear boy, another cook at this moment begins to loom into sight."

"Loom! Where have I heard that word before? Oh, I know. Why, pa, I thought only vessels loomed into sight."

"That's only because you are young, and are not versed in metaphor."

"What is metaphor?"

"Metaphor is transplanting a thought so it blooms in another color, and can thus be seen better. Now you know, Harold, if domestic life were only a dry-land performance, it wouldn't be proper to say that a new cook looms."

"Then, pa, what is domestic life?"

"It is in reality a dark and stormy sea, one on which it is perfectly proper for a new cook to loom."

"And while the new cook is looming, pa, what are you and ma doing?"

"Why, we are sitting on a raft, having been tossed for days without food."

"Without food or drink you mean, don't you, pa?—that's the way it reads in the story-books."

"No, Harold—not this time. This is real life, you know, and one of the peculiar things about it is that without a cook there may be nothing to eat, but there's usually something to drink."

"But are you so much thirstier then, pa?"

"Of course, Harold. Being without a cook always drives one to drink."

"But tell me, pa, about the cook that looms. What does she do after that?"

"It depends, Harold. If she sees your signals of distress, and you have cash enough, she may throw you a line and give you a tow."

"But does she ever tow you into a friendly harbor, pa?"

Hide-and-Seek at Ostrichville
Drawn by E. W. Kemble

"No, Harold, never. This isn't what you are there for. You are there to toss and swear, and swear and toss, and be picked up and dropped by all the cooks that loom."

"What an awful thing, pa. It makes me shudder to think of it. But tell me honestly, don't you think the servant-girl problem will ever be solved?"

"Certainly it will, Harold. When the millennium comes."

"Millennium! Why, pa, what is a millennium?"

"A millennium, my dear unsophisticated little boy, is a place where you don't have to wash your own dishes."

A CASE OF IDENTIFICATION

OUT in the country near New Rochelle lives a shiftless sort of chap, whom we may call Jim Johnson," said Francis Wilson. "At frequent intervals he drives to town and drinks more than he should. Recently some fun-loving loungers unhitched his horse from the wagon, as the patient animal was drawing its sleeping master home, and led it away, leaving the wagon standing by the roadside. After several hours Jim awoke and looked about him in amazement. He gazed at the empty hills and the wagon, and shook his head doubtfully. Finally he soliloquized: "If I'm Jim Johnson, I've lost a horse, and if I'm not Jim Johnson, I've found a wagon."

HIS DAUGHTER'S LOVE

"He must be mine!" The proud patrician American girl expressed in her determined attitude all the pent-up ambition that had so long animated her.

"At any cost," she murmured, "he must be mine!" On the other hand, the Duke never for one moment lost his self-possession. He knew his own worth. In American terms, he was "on to" his own value.

"As for the price," he muttered, "it must not only be a willingness on your part to let me do as I please, but it must be also every penny your father possesses." She involuntarily paled.

"But," she exclaimed, "poor papa has to live. Would

A FABLE

By McLANDBURGH WILSON

THERE was a very learned man
Who had a foolish wish;
He set a mouse-trap on a bank
In hopes of catching fish.

He then went home and all day long
He sat around the house;
With rod and reel and wriggling worm,
He tried to catch a mouse.

The moral of his enterprise
The whole of life will match:
You always should adapt your bait
To what you want to catch.

The Medicine Man at Gooseville
Drawn by E. W. Kemble

you have him come running to you in the future for the price of a night's lodging?"

"Even so," replied the Duke coldly. "And you must decide at once. Otherwise I take the first train for Pittsburgh."

Only for a moment did she falter. Then she raised her hand.

"Go!" she said. "It can never be. Papa must be considered."

The Duke sneered.

"As if," he replied tartly, "he would suffer. Anyway, what difference would this make to him?"

"This," she replied firmly, "it would necessitate his having to live with mother."

THE DIFFERENCE

"I SEE they have made a new rule on the New York street cars."

"What's that?"

"They go by you on the near instead of the far side."

THE TWO-MINUTE TROTTER

By LEIGH GORDON GILTNER

AT THE CLOSE of the racing season of 1902, during which the world's trotting champion did not succeed in lowering his record of 2.02½, a number of practical horsemen expressed themselves to the effect that the trotter which should negotiate a mile in two minutes did not—and probably never would—exist; yet within a year the trick was neatly turned by a five-year-old mare which came unheralded out of the West to lower the world's record and carry off Cresceus's crown.

When Mr. C. K. G. Billings last spring paid (against the advice of his manager) $12,500 for Lou Dillon, the initiated sat up; for while it is well known that this excellent amateur reinsman never races his horses for purses, it is equally well known that he does not court the dust of defeat at matinee events or on the speedway, and the fact that he regarded the Western mare as good enough to add to a stable which already contained at least a dozen trotters with records of 2.10 or better was evidence that he rated her as a speed proposition worth considering. And so she proved. The gallant chestnut has accomplished whatever her owner has asked of her—smashing the world's trotting record; the world's record to high-wheel sulky; the world's record to wagon; lowering the world's record to sulky and to wagon a second time, and, finally, as a fitting climax to a series of brilliant performances, stepping a quarter on the New York Speedway in 25¼ seconds—the most marvelous flight of speed ever exhibited by a light-harness horse.

On August 24 of 1903, that which the scoffer had previously pronounced a Utopian dream, a chimera of the horseman's brain, was realized—in the appearance of the two-minute trotter, when Lou Dillon, "the swiftest lass that ever trod the track," going against her own record of 2.02½, covered the course at Readville in two minutes flat. The pure-gaited chestnut, paced by two runners and driven by Millard Sanders, the man who "made" her, moved over the track so smoothly, so unrestrainedly, so easily, that the spectators scarcely realized that she was trotting in record-breaking time. Yet when the little Western mare, which had never started in a race prior to the previous May, and which twenty months earlier had never looked through a bridle, passed under the wire, Cresceus's record had been cut 2¼ seconds and Lou Dillon was queen of the track in both hemispheres.

Straightway there arose from the old-timers a cry of "adventitious aids," "modern appliances," and "mechanical equipment." They harked back to Maud S. and her high-wheel, steel-tired sulky, rating Lou Dillon's two-minute clip with the aid of rubber tires and a wind shield no faster than that exhibited by Bonner's great mare in 1885.

Cresceus, 2.59½

Accordingly, Lou Dillon was sent after the record of Maud S. (2.08½ to high-wheel sulky). Hitched to a sulky built to order "like the one made for Maud S." by Charles Caffrey, manufacturer of the one used by the Bonner mare in her record mile, the trotting queen stepped a mile on the Cleveland track in 2.05 flat, which, if necessary, could have been cut at least a second. Protest against official recognition of this performance was promptly made by the Messrs Bonner (sons of the late owner of the erstwhile champion) upon the ground that the sulky used by Lou Dillon was fitted with ball bearings, and that the latter followed a pacemaker, while Maud S. accompanied one at her side. An arbitration board composed of representatives of the American Trotting Register Association, the National Trotting Association, and the American Trotting Association, after hearing evidence and argument in the case, made this remarkable finding:

"We find that the performance of Lou Dillon at Cleveland, Ohio, September 12, 1903, in 2.05 to a high-wheel, ball-bearing sulky, with a pacemaker, with a dirt shield in front, was not a record, because the mare had previously performed in faster time, which performance was her record and precludes a slow performance being a record."

"We also find that the performance of Maud S. at Cleveland, Ohio, in 1885, was to a high-wheeled, plain axle, according to rule; that the time, 2.08½, was not only her best time, but the best time ever made up to that date, and was a record."

This illogical and irrelevant decision, which evaded the point at issue and in no way settled the question, proved distinctly unpopular with press and public alike. The discrediting of Lou Dillon's great mile (in despite of the testimony of the manufacturer of both sulkies that the Maud S. sulky was fitted with roller bearings, and that the two vehicles were as nearly as possible alike, except that that drawn by Lou Dillon was somewhat heavier) elicited a storm of protest from horsemen and lovers of the sport all over the country, who were practically unanimous in according to the game little mare the credit to which, a trivial technicality aside, she was officially entitled.

At the Association Track at Lexington, on October 10, this speed marvel, in the teeth of a strong wind, succeeded in reducing the world's wagon record, held prior to that date by herself. Five minutes earlier her strongest rival, E. E. Smathers's great bay gelding, Major Delmar, had cut her wagon record of 2.04½ to 2.03½. But his triumph was brief. The Western mare, driven by her owner, Mr. Billings, stepped out upon the track, settled to her work, as if realizing that her supremacy was at stake, and circled the oval handily in 2.01¾.

The trotting season of 1903 witnessed the smashing of more records than any previous year in the history of the track. Scarcely had Lou Dillon electrified the racing world with her phenomenal performance at Readville, when Major Delmar equaled the feat, trotting a mile in "even time" at Empire City Park. For some years past a spirit of friendly rivalry has existed between those expert reinsmen, Mr. E. E. Smathers (who the day previous to this feat had purchased Major Delmar at $40,000, the highest price ever paid for a trotting gelding) and Mr. Billings, Lou Dillon's owner. Each of these distinguished amateurs had long cherished the ambition to possess the champion trotter, and each had spent money without stint to attain this end. Major Delmar, barred as he is by reason of his low record from all class races, was purchased,

Major Delmar, 1.59½

Lou Dillon, 1.58½

John A. McKerron, 2.04½

The OLIVER Typewriter

The Standard Visible Writer.

The Oliver record has never been equaled.

Ask for Catalogue.

THE OLIVER TYPEWRITER CO.
149 Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.
Principal Foreign Office, 75 Queen Victoria St., London, Eng.

"In One Ear and Out the Other"

A Good Memory Saves Time and Money

Pelman's System of Memory Training

converts a treacherous memory into a reliable one. Gives mind control and mental poise. An easy, simple and scientific method of training. Original and of absorbing interest. Requires but a few minutes each day, and richly repays the time invested. No matter what your life work, the Pelman System will make you more successful. Mr. Pelman's pupils range in age from 18 to 85 years. Taught in six languages.

FREE—Mr. Pelman's book entitled—"Memory Training: Its Laws and Their Application to Practical Life." This book is sent absolutely free, postpaid upon request. Write at once.

THE PELMAN SCHOOL OF MEMORY TRAINING
1434 Masonic Temple, Chicago

LONDON, 4 Bloomsbury Street, W. C.; PARIS, Avenue de Neuilly, 109; MUNICH, Moninger 7; MELBOURNE, 41, P. O. Box 491; DUBLIN, Natal, Lyne Building.

Rhythmic, 2.03 1/4

The blind horse which was the largest money winner on the Grand Circuit in 1903

not as a business proposition, but as a plaything for an owner in a position to gratify his penchant for equine speed, and with an eye to the Memphis Gold Cup (won last season by Mr. Smathers's Lord Derby)—a trophy standing next in importance to the Boston Challenge Cup; and Mr. Smathers, after driving Major Delmar for the first time at Lexington—where he reduced the wagon record to 2.03 1/4—is said to have remarked casually, as he got out of his speed wagon at the end of the exhibition mile, that his new purchase "drove like a very good horse." Major Delmar was with one exception (the blind horse Rhythmic) the largest money-winner on the Grand Circuit last year, having earned something like $20,000—the product of seven victories, one second, and two thirds.

The first two-minute class in the history of the track was trotted at Memphis on October 20, 1903, when Lou Dillon met Major Delmar in a race at a mile for the Memphis Gold Cup. No event in the annals of the trotting horse was ever fraught with greater interest for the racing public; both horses had previously negotiated a mile in 2.00 flat (the world's best record till the day preceding the race, when it was lowered by Crescens to 1.59 3/4); and both horses were to be driven by their owners, amateurs of more than national repute. Horsemen generally conceded to Lou Dillon the greater amount of true speed, but the mare was sensitive and excitable, and a novice at the racing game; while the other contestant, a seasoned campaigner, had, in the language of his owner, "been to the races." Yet such authorities as Geers, Doble, and Salisbury are said to have liked the chestnut mare. While there was no open booking on the event, and while Mr. Billings never stakes one cent on his horses, and Mr. Smathers, who makes no secret of

ROOF LEAK?

Elliott's Durable Asphalt Coating

is about the best investment the owner of a roof can make. Will add at least ten years to the life of a new or an old and leaky shingle, tin or felt roof. Makes rusty tin water-tight and arrests rusting. It is used as a liquid cement on big leaks and stops them absolutely.

Composed of pure Utah Asphalt, prepared Linseed Oil and Pine Creosote (wood preservative) it prevents decay in new shingles and arrests it in old ones when used as a shingle dip or paint. Imparts no taste to water. Highly fireproof.

Will not soften in summer or crack in coldest weather. A boy can apply it. It is not possible to make a more durable liquid coating. Nothing else so good in salt water atmosphere—500 per cent more durable than pure oil paint. One-half the price. A perfect coating for iron fences, etc.

Made in Black, Dark Green and Rich Maroon. On a trial order we will send, express prepaid, to your door, one gallon for $1.00. Sufficient for cementing two square feet, or painting 300 square feet. One gallon shingle dip covers 400 square feet shingles both sides. The express charges frequently cost us more than $1.00.

Five gallons or more, 75 cents per gallon, freight paid east of Denver. Guaranteed to be satisfactory or returnable at our expense. Please write for interesting booklet, "History of Asphalt," together with liquid samples free.

ELLIOTT VARNISH CO.,
CHICAGO, 149-151 Fulton St. NEW YORK, 249 Pearl St.

... TRY...

Roof Leak?

Now Only $4.95 A PAIR

ALLIGATOR FUNCTUREPROOF-SELF-HEALING ROOFING

The Alligator and only Functureproof and Self-Healing Roofing. Nails, tacks, and glue will not let the air out. Fasteners will not become loose. Strong, durable, resistant. Greatest thickness when needed (see it in place). Resists "feet of 2." Sent C.O.D. anywhere, subject to examination—no deposit asked; but we pay express only when such examination order. State of origin of tin and size (see manual). Catalogue Free. THE VIM COMPANY, Sole Manufacturers, State and Lake Streets, CHICAGO.

WE CARPET YOUR FLOOR

Bruxelle Art Rugs

Can be used on both sides, all colors and sizes, in beautiful patterns.

Sanitary, Artistic, Economical

Facile cleaned, warranted to outlast highest-priced carpets. Expressage prepaid. New and enlarged catalogue, showing rugs in actual colors, free. Money refunded if not satisfactory.

SANITARY RUG CO., Inc.
121 Oxford St., Philadelphia, Pa.

STUDY LAW

Leading Law School in Correspondence Instruction

Established in 1893

Prepares for bar in any State. Combines theory and practice. Text books used are same as used in leading resident schools. Teachers law at your home. Three Courses—Bachelor's Degree Course, Post Graduate, and Business Law Course. Approved by the Bench and Bar. Full particulars free. CHICAGO CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL OF LAW, Hepler Block, Chicago

MAKE MONEY

With Pen and Pencil

STORY-WRITING JOURNALISM ILLUSTRATING CARTOONING

Taught by mail. MSB. and Illustrations sold on commission to exclusive publishers and syndicates. Send for either free booklet "Writing for Profit" or "Commercial Illustrating." NATIONAL PRESS ASSN.
54 The Baldwin Indianapolis

INVESTORS

desiring to realize the Large Interest and Profits possible in legitimate Mining, Oil, Timber and Real Estate Investments and Dividend-paying Industrial Stocks, listed and unlisted, should send for our booklets, giving full information, mailed free.

Douglas, Lacey & Co.
Bankers & Brokers 66 Broadway, New York

PHOTO BROOCHES 10c.

Send us any photograph you want copied and we will return it unharmed with an exact copy on one of these pretty ribbon brooches for only 10 cts. All our Photo-Miracles are exact and perfect reproductions. We send this 25c sample for only 10 cts. to introduce our goods and send you Free our large list of prices of photo-miracles, jewelry, novelties. Agents wanted.

CORONA PHOTO CO., Box 1275, Boston, Mass.

O'Sullivan Rubber Heels are now described as the missing link between wings and shoes. Their buoyancy is due to the elasticity of new rubber. 35 cents and small sum for attaching. Buy of your dealer, or O'SULLIVAN RUBBER CO., LOWELL, MASS.

STARK TREES best by Test—75 Years Largest Nursery

FRUIT-BEARING TREES. We PAY CASH WASH MORE SALESMEN

STARK BROS., Louisiana, Mo.; Danville, N. Y.; Etc.

The Curtain Rises On the World by the time of the ELGIN WATCH

Every Elgin Watch is fully guaranteed. All jewelers have Elgin Watches. "Timemakers and Timekeepers," an illustrated history of the watch, sent free upon request to ELGIN NATIONAL WATCH CO., ELGIN, ILL.

A New China Book

An attractive and out-of-the-ordinary contribution to "house beautiful" literature. It is printed in several colors and lavishly illustrated from photographs showing artistic dining rooms, effective arrangements of china, correctly laid tables, trays, etc. The Princess Dinner Set and other dainty pieces are also included in the illustrations. A copy of the "China Book" will be sent free on request to The Taylor, Smith and Taylor Co., East Liverpool, Ohio. Address Dept. H.

DEAF? Well, Listen!

The deaf are immediately able to hear ordinary conversation by the Magnetic Otophone Sound Waves, which penetrate the deafest ear. A wonderful scientific invention, which restores hearing and banishes deafness. Guaranteed invisible, effective, comfortable, and harmless. Not an ear drum or trumpet. Compare it with other devices, and be guided by your intelligence. Deafness is no longer a hopeless condition. Book FREE.

OTOPHONE CO.
1602 Arch St., Dept. C, Philadelphia, Pa.

$1,000,000 For Your Health?

A million dollars is a vast sum of money, and yet there are rich men in this country to-day who would willingly part with that amount if it were possible for them to gain the complete enjoyment of life's pleasures, to be found only in perfect health. Have you been careless of this priceless possession? Have you allowed the advance guard of disease to creep into the stronghold of your vitality?

Pabst Extract

The "BEST" Tonic, rallies the disordered forces of your system, giving them new strength, courage and power to resist illness. It is the life of the barley-grain blended with the juice of the hop blossom; nutritive and restorative in its effect. An ideal liquid food, it creates new blood, replaces the wasted tissues and calms the excited nerves. At all druggists.

Write for booklet. Pabst Malt Extract Dept., Milwaukee.

$1

At last we can give it to you: Just what you have been looking for—A thoroughly reliable Electric Lamp that fits in the vest pocket

If you wish to find a house number at night; if you wish to find an article you have dropped; if you wish to avoid dangerous places in dark streets, just "press the button" and you have an instant, brilliant light. Will give eight thousand flashes, or burn three months with right usage. Price only One Dollar!! Inexpensive to buy and to operate!! Invaluable to physicians, or miners and gas fitters who go in dark places where any other form of light is dangerous. Batteries and bulbs easily detached and renewed when required. Extra battery only 25 cents. Address Department N. Electric Utility Mfg. Co., 114 & 116 East 33d St., New York City

BATES ELECTRIC & WATER MOTOR FANS

ELECTRIC FOR CEILING & DESK. DIRECT CURRENT. WATER FANS FOR DESK & WALL.

HOSE ATTACHMENT. AGENTS WANTED.

Sold Direct at wholesale where we have no agents.

THE BATES FAN CO., DAYTON, O.
PRICES FROM $6.00 UP.

Le PAGE'S MUCILAGE

No gumming to clog neck of bottle—No sediment—will not spoil nor discolor the finest papers. Full 2-ounce bottle, 5c; also half-pints, pints and quarts.

Russia Cement Co., Mass. Mfrs. of Le PAGE'S PHOTO PASTE and Le PAGE'S GLUE STRONGEST IN THE WORLD

PUNCTURE PROOF HEDGETHORN BICYCLE TIRES

TO INTRODUCE WE WILL SELL YOU A SAMPLE PAIR FOR ONLY $4.80

REGULAR PRICE $8.50

STRONG, DURABLE, EASY RIDING, SELF-HEALING NO MORE TROUBLE FROM PUNCTURES

Backed by 15 yrs. experience. Only covered by patents. Bureau of Inventions. No danger from thorns, nails, glass, tacks or nails. Serious punctures like conventional kinds can be instantly repaired. Guaranteed not to become punctured. NOTE the thick tread and puncture proof surface—will reflect any other make. Soft, elastic and easy riding. We will ship C.O.D. on approval with out a cent deposit. If you order direct from this advertisement, sending cash, we will proper express charges. Pump free with each pair.

Send for CATALOGUE—showing all makes and kind of tires, bicycle, motor, motor, trucks, built-up wheels, etc., at half retail prices.

MEAD CYCLE CO., Dept. T-83, Chicago, Ill.

Mr. C. K. G. Billings, owner of Lou Dillon

his fondness for a wager, smilingly rated his bets at "a box of cigars and a basket of champagne." It is understood that the great match race was one of the largest betting propositions ever trotted. But unfortunately what had been anticipated as the event of the age proved "a lame and impotent conclusion"—Lou Dillon taking the race in two straight heats, winning the second, eased up, by eight lengths—time 2.04 3/4.

The day previous to this event Crescens, the ex-champion, who had been generally regarded as having reached the limit of his capacity when he snatched the laurels from The Abbot and set a new world's record of 2.02 1/4, regained the coveted crown by stepping a mile in 1.59 3/4 at the Wichita, Kansas, Track. (This performance was subsequently referred to the Advisory Board, provided to adjudicate disputed records, which, failing to give its official ruling either for or against the record, thereby established it as authentic.) Crescens is a game and gallant horse, the holder of many records, and a fine type of the rugged, enduring racer; but he had been rather relegated to the ranks of the "has-beens," and his triumph was a complete surprise to the racing world. His victory, however, proved a short-lived one. The deposed

Suit Made $12 to Measure 12

Suit Case Free

Fine All-Wool
Tailor-Made
Cashmere or
Worsted Suit

Your Choice of a variety of colorings and weaves, and all the newest patterns just from the woolen mills. We direct special attention to the fabrics. The cloth is specially woven from new, high grade wool; it is close woven and the wool is full of "life," so that the cloth is elastic and the garments will hold their shape. Before cutting into the cloth for each suit, the suit pattern is thoroughly shrunken. Our cutters are first-class workmen, who incorporate into the suit the latest style, and take into account the various little differences in build each man possesses. The suit is lined throughout with "Bull" serge and the sleeve linings are of the celebrated "Fowler" flannel. All trimmings are the very best, and buttonholes are hand finished. The pants pockets are made of strong drilling, and all the fittings are such as only can be secured in the high grade merchant-tailor article. Our measure and order blank will enable you to take your own measurement accurately, and a perfect fit is guaranteed. We are manufacturers, importers and custom tailors, and guarantee our $12.00 suits to be equal in wear to the best suits you can obtain from your local dealer for Twenty Dollars, while in style and fit our garments are incomparably superior to any but the product of high-priced city tailors.

FREE Suit Case

In order to establish customers throughout the United States, we are giving on the first order received from any one person, a handsome suit case, which we use to ship the suit. The suit case that goes with each suit is most presentable and would cost in your local store from $5 to $8.

A trial is all we ask. You run no risk in ordering from us, as we guarantee absolutely a perfect fit. We do not ask you to pay for the goods before seeing them. We send them by express C. O. D., with the privilege of examination at Express Office, and if the suit is not satisfactory in fabric, finish or fit, you need not accept it; it will be returned to us at our expense. The suit shown in the picture is our No. 251, and is a sensible, becoming suit to most gentlemen. The price is $12.00. It is entirely new, out of the ordinary and very stylish. Samples of cloth that make up nicely in this style are shown in our new catalogue, which contains styles and samples varying in price from $12.00 to $30.00. Our catalogue and

SAMPLES OF CLOTH FREE will be sent you the very day your request for same reaches us. Remember, we have no agents, no branch stores, and no connection with any other clothing concern. Our business has been established 40 years. Write today for samples. Address: Meyer Livingston Sons, Dept. 48, South Bend, Ind. Reference: Citizens National Bank, South Bend, Ind.

Lord Derby

queen, down at the Memphis Track, remained to be reckoned with. Within a week her Majesty was heard from; Crescens was again dethroned, and the great daughter of Sidney Dillon was once more the champion trotter of the world. At the Memphis Track, on October 24, Lou Dillon trotted without the wind shield, and under adverse conditions, a mile in 1:58 1/2—an achievement altogether unparalleled in the history of the track. Within the space of a fortnight the Western wonder captured the Memphis Cup, reduced Crescens's record, and trotted a mile to wagon in two minutes flat, setting a new world's mark—a series of performances calculated to justify her trainer's confidence in her quality.

The fastest mile trotted in a purse race during 1903 by a mare was 2:05 1/2, by Fereno; the fastest by a gelding in 2:06 1/2, by Prince of Orange, and the fastest by a stallion in 2:06 3/4, by Rhythmic. All of these fast trotters carry the blood of the great Wilkes—each being by a different son of Baron Wilkes.

A mile somewhere around the two-minute mark was confidently predicted last season for another Wilkes horse, John A. McKerron, 2:04 1/2, which (owned and driven by that prince of amateur reinsmen, Mr. Harry K. Devereux of Cleveland) secured to the Cleveland Driving Club the $5,000 Boston Challenge Cup by winning it three successive seasons. This great son of Nutwood Wilkes has scarcely a superior as a type of the American trotter. He possesses quality, speed, and courage, and, with the exception of Lou Dillon, is probably unequalled for absolute purity of gait by any horse ever raced. His gameness was subjected to a triumphant test the past season, when, laboring under the disadvantage of extreme soreness, resultant from a splint, he trotted his record mile at Syracuse. His necessary retirement before the meeting at the lightning-fast Memphis Track, where he would doubtless have further lowered his mark, is to be regretted. Much is expected of him during the ensuing year.

Unquestionably, matinee racing, essentially the sport of the American gentleman, has done much to foster interest in the performance of the light-harness horse. The construction of speedways in all our larger cities has popularized amateur driving with the wealthy classes, enhanced the value of a good trotter, and given a better tone to harness racing. The owner of a fleet trotter or pacer can now enjoy both the pleasure of driving him on the speedway and of personally piloting him to victory over a company of his peers in a matinee event—conditions largely attributable to the efforts and influence of such distinguished amateurs as Mr. Devereux, Mr. Billings, and Mr. Smathers, who, actuated by the true sporting spirit, have lent themselves and their resources to promoting the popularity of matinee racing throughout the States.

Mr. E. E. Smathers, owner of Major Delmar

Twenty-five years ago Professor William H. Brewer of Yale University made the prediction (based upon a chart tracing the relative speed of the famous trotting horses of the age) that the two-minute trotter would appear in the first decade of the twentieth century. A recent magazine writer has demonstrated scientifically that the ultimate speed limit of the trotter is 6 1/2 seconds to the mile; but arguing mathematically from the

John B. Rogers & Company's Cigars

SIGNIFYING QUALITY, and

THE ROGERS METHOD

SIGNIFYING THE MODERN WAY OF DOING BUSINESS

The keen pleasure that a satisfied smoker feels when in looks, aroma and taste he has the exactly right cigar, is furnished by John B. Rogers & Company to thousands of smokers. The qualities of Havana tobaccos used and the employment only of skilled hand work.

men assures every satisfying feature of merit. The volume of business, of course, endorses the quality, and the fact that these thousands of customers buy their cigars only of John B. Rogers & Company shows how well they are pleased.

OUR GUARANTEE—Every cigar we ship is guaranteed to please you, and if from any cause it does not do so, we will exchange cigars with you or refund your full purchase price. Transportation each way at our expense and no charge for any number of cigars smoked in testing.

No smoker will sacrifice the pleasure and comfort of a cigar that suits him even to accomplish a saving, but by the method first introduced by John B. Rogers & Company, The Pioneers, who first recognized how unnecessary it was for a consumer of good cigars to pay the inbetween profits and expenses, you are able to secure a cigar that exactly fits your taste and brings to you perfect satisfaction and comfort, and still

Save 50 Per Cent.

of ordinary retail prices. Read our guarantee, then make your selection of what you wish, and we will furnish you a better cigar than you are used to smoking and still make this saving for you. Having received this cigar, test it in the quiet of your own home, knowing that your remittance to us is only on deposit until you are thoroughly satisfied. We suggest that you smoke it side by side with any cigar costing at retail twice our price, and if you are not suited as well or better, our guarantee may be applied. If you are a 5 cent smoker, why not, at the same expense, smoke 10 cent cigars? If you smoke 30-cent or better cigars, why not get twice the value and

SAVE HALF YOUR SMOKING EXPENSE?

A Few Suggestions from an Unlimited Variety

	Boxes of 12	25	50	On for 75 cents we will gladly send you an assortment of 37 cigars, each separately wrapped and described, showing four varieties of 10 cent and two for a quarter value; or for 90 cents an equal showing of High-Grade 5 cent and 10 cent values. Send for our catalogue, "Rolled Treasures," which explains everything.
La Persevere, 4 1/2 in. Camellias,	$1.25	$1.50	$3.75
Pisces, 4 1/2 in. Conchas,	1.00	1.75	3.50
Salmetto, 4 1/2 in. Pampas,	.85	1.45	3.25
El Provost, 4 1/2 in. Perfectos,	.85	1.50	3.00
Monart, 4 1/2 in. Caprichos,	.70	1.25	2.50
Fedora, 4 1/2 in. Londres,	.60		2.00

ALL TRANSPORTATION CHARGES PREPAID

We have but one factory, which is a model of sanitary arrangement, cleanliness and system.

"I have enjoyed the Perfectos and have been surprised at the price. I am eager for the box to come and get again the best smoke I have ever had for the money."—Dr. J. C. C. Brown, Dept.

Deliver is expensive. Make out your order to-day, sending name to

JOHN B. ROGERS & COMPANY, "The Pioneers," 142 Jarvis St., Binghamton, N.Y.

$200 CASH FOR LITTLE RHYMES

Can You Write Us One?

This verse won a $50 prize in our previous contest:

"Her smile is of pearl and of coral,
Her hair has a wondrous twist,
Her breath is the breath of the laundress—
She uses Hy-Jen Tooth Paste."

We pay liberally for catchy advertising jingles about Hy-Jen Tooth Paste and we want everyone to compete in our $200 contest. Some of the rhymes which occur to you may be just what we want. It costs you but a few minutes time and a stamp to send them in and bright ideas win from $2 to $50. We don't care for literary excellence or poetical polish—we want little jingles that will stick in the public's memory. For the best advertisement in rhyme containing not more than eight lines, submitted before July 28th, we will give $50 in cash; for the second $25; $10 for the third; $5 each for the next three and $2 each for the next five. Robert John Company (Advertising Agents) will act as judges of the contest. We also reserve the right to purchase from those which do not win a prize, but which we consider suitable for advertising, a sufficient number to make up our calendar of 365 advertising rhymes, with which we shall burn the name Hy-Jen Tooth Paste into the minds of the people. We want to make every one acquainted with the real qualities of Hy-Jen Tooth Paste, which is endorsed by dentists everywhere as the best and safest, the dearest and most agreeable dentifrice made. Get a file, take at your druggist's and try it thoroughly—it has so many refreshing qualities you will be surprised how easy it is to think of a little rhyme about it and it's the simple one that makes a hit in advertising. The richest one wins $50 in this contest. To show that you have used it each competitor must send in the front of the poem, four Hy-Jen Tooth Paste boxes in, along with their rhyme—don't let all that is required. You may send as many different rhymes as you like providing you send one box-ful for each separate rhyme. If your druggist doesn't have Hy-Jen Tooth Paste ask him to get it of his jobber or send us his name and we will send you a package postpaid. Address: Adv. Dept., Hy-Jen Chemical Co., 35 Dearborn Ave., Chicago, Ill.

HY-JEN TOOTH PASTE

Illinois Central R.R.

DAILY FAST TRAINS

Elegantly equipped and with Dining, Buffet, Library, Sleeping and Reclining Chair Cars, from its northern and southern terminals, connecting at its numerous gateways with trains from the EAST, SOUTH AND NORTH

Particulars of agents of the Illinois Central and connecting lines.

A. H. HANSON, Gen'l Pass'r Agent, CHICAGO

EASIER TO ROW u ABSOLUTELY SAFE

Write to-day for free catalogue. 15 foot boat, crated, $29.00

No other boat so desirable for ladies and children.

Mullins Unsinkable Steel Pleasure Boats

Made of steel. Practically indestructible. Air chamber each end. Cannot sink. Cannot leak. Requires no caulking. Ideal boat for family use. Summer resorts, parks. Guaranteed. Will wait five persons in comfort. The modern row-boat for pleasure, safety and durability. W. H. MULLINS, 407 Depot Street, Salem, Ohio

BOOK-KEEPING

Complete business course, single and double entry book-keeping, Business Practice, Bookkeeping, Commercial law, Letter Writing, Penmanship, etc.

TAUGHT BY MAIL

Graduate receive degrees of B. Arch. and M. Arch. and are admitted to positions. Fees cash or installments. Write for advertisement. NATIONAL CORRESPONDENCE INSTITUTE (Inc.), 33-71 Second National Bank Building, Washington, D. C.

Agents Earn $75 to $250 a Month Selling "NOVELTY KNIVES"

Your name, address, photo underneath handles; also embossed lodges, societies, etc. Finely tempered razor steel blades. Big Profits. Good commission paid. Send 3c stamp for great special offer to agents. NOVELTY OUTLET CO., 40, Bar St., CANTON, O.

Fresh Laid Eggs

WE HAVE A PLAN by which we are supplying hundreds of fastidious families with fresh laid eggs delivered at the door at little more than the cost of stale, cold storage eggs. You don't know how delicious eggs can be until you have used "Clover Brand Eggs" fresh from healthy, grain fed fowls. Booklet and Plan FREE. CLOVER BRAND EGG CO., 21 Clover St., TORONTO, MICH.

THE DOBSON X-RAY

Latest Scientific Wonder. Here is an X-ray article, boys, that will please you. With it the clothes and flesh turn transparent and the bones can be plainly seen. Just think of the fun you can have with it! Sample in strong box, with catalogue and agent's prices. Ten Cents, by mail. A. R. PIKE, Dept. 11, Stamford, Conn.

IT DOESN'T WARP

or twist—Sure Hatch Incubator. Mellow, regular heat from copper tank. No disappointment. Free Catalogue B-17. Sure Hatch Incubator Co., Clay Center, Neb., Indianapolis, Ind.

Southern California

For reliable information, enclose five cent stamp to the Chamber of Commerce, Los Angeles, California.

World's Fair "Meteor"

The handsomest souvenir of the Greatest Exposition, in World's Fair colors (silk) postpaid, 25c. Address W. F. METEOR CO., 394-C Century Bldg., St. Louis.

A Chance Courtship

is a story of an unconventional love match, well told and beautifully illustrated. The small picture above only suggests the real charm of these illustrations. As a bit of readable fiction the story is well worth writing for. It is contained in a handsomely bound book of 128 pages, a portion of which is devoted to the attractive mountain and lake resorts along the Lackawanna Railroad. It is a book you will like to see. It may be had by sending 10 cents in postage stamps to T. W. LEE, General Passenger Agent, Lackawanna Railroad, New York.

Rider Agents Wanted

One in each town to ride and exhibit a sample bicycle. Write for special terms. High-class 1004 models $8.75 to $17. Counter Sales, Hedgesboro, Pontiac, Mich. and best equipped. 1000 and 1001 models $7 to $12. 300 SECOND-HAND WHEELS. All makes and models. Good as new. Great factory clearing sale at half factory cost. We ship on approval without a cent deposit and allow 10 DAYS FREE TRIAL on every bicycle. Any wheel not satisfactory returned at our expense. EARN A BICYCLE taking orders from a sample wheel furnished by us. Our agents make large profits. Write or come for catalogue and our special offer. ATTENTION! Bikes, sewing machines, tires, sundries, etc., half usual price. MEAD CYCLE CO., Dept. 53-P, CHICAGO

NOW DEPOSITED IN THE BANK

$75,000.00

IN CASH GIVEN AWAY

To arouse interest in, and to advertise the GREAT ST. LOUIS WORLD'S FAIR, this enormous sum will be distributed. Full information will be sent you ABSOLUTELY FREE. Just send your name and address on a postal card and we will send you full particulars.

World's Fair Contest Co.
108 N. 8th Street
St. Louis, Mo.

LEARN TO WRITE ADVERTISEMENTS

Taught by Mail Thoroughly. Taught by the founder of the original school. Taught in an expert manner, enabling you to earn expert salary. Six years' success and hundreds of successful graduates. Large prospectus free on request.

PAGE-DAVIS CO., Suite 19, 90 Wabash Ave., Chicago

STENOGRAPHY

Book-keeping, etc., thoroughly taught. Instructions for all graduates. Complete Course for Home Study. $5. Catalogue free. C. G. GAINES, Box 961, Poughkeepsie, N. Y., or 119 West 125th Street, New York, N. Y.

STAMMER

Not a cent for instruction or board until cured. Fully reliable. Prospectus FREE. Private instruction. Natural methods. References. 6th year. One hour's ride from St. Louis. Special rates during World's Fair. DODGE SCHOOL, 102 Main St., Brighton, Ill.

LEARN THE SELF

All Chronic diseases treated and the laws taught how to keep well. Write for particulars.

PATTERSON SANITARIUM
315 E. Bridge Street
Grand Rapids, Mich.

ASTHMA

Cured to stay CURED. Health restored. BOOK 4 Free. P. HANCOCK HAYES, Buffalo, N. Y.

NOTES OF PROGRESS IN SCIENCE AND INVENTION

Roots of newly discovered African plant said to yield satisfactory substitute for rubber

NOW that the supply of rubber is getting small, it is interesting to know of a new supply. In the interior of Africa, where the forests have been cleared by fires, a creeping plant, yielding rubber, grows. Curiously enough, the rubber does not come from the stalks of the plant, but is extracted from the roots. These grow to a length of from six to ten yards at a slight distance underground, and at intervals throw up stalks to the surface. These plants are so abundant that the roots form a perfect network, and from six square yards of ground as much as nine pounds of roots have been collected, which on desiccation yield rubber of good quality.

The French Academy of Science is about to investigate the plant with a view to its commercial possibilities as a substitute for the present rubber tree.

A Russian proposes to embalm bodies by pouring around them a film of molten glass

IN order to preserve the features of those who have died, it is proposed by a Russian to embalm corpses by casting around them a solid mass of glass. This would be perfectly transparent, and as no air could get in, the features would be preserved indefinitely. Of course, it is not possible to pour molten glass directly on the body, so it is first coated with a thin coating of so-called "liquid glass," or sodium silicate. This is allowed to harden and forms a protective coating. The body is then put in a mold and melted glass poured around it. When this is hardened we have a solid transparent mass inclosing the body.

The inventor of this process hopes that some day we will have a large museum, filled with the perfectly preserved bodies of the great men of their times for future generations to gaze upon.

Bacteriological action is found to produce disease in plants as it does in animals

EVERY ONE is more or less familiar with our knowledge of the relation of bacteria to animal diseases; relatively few persons appreciate the fact that, as our knowledge of the diseases of plants increases, it becomes more and more evident that many of these are also caused by bacteria. Thus the tubercle disease of the olive and the black rot of the turnip are plant diseases of bacterial origin. Very recently the discovery has been made that many plant gums, gum-arabic for example, are not spontaneous products of the plants where they occur, but are products manufactured by bacteria infesting the plant, the plant in this case acting simply as the culture medium. R. G. Smith, working in Australia, has been able to isolate in pure culture three different species of bacteria which, either alone or growing together, are the cause of gum formation in a number of plants studied by him. He has been able to grow these bacteria on artificial media in the laboratory and obtain a production of gum. Two practical applications immediately suggest themselves. The yield of the valuable gums may be vastly increased by artificially inoculating the proper trees with cultures of the gum-producing bacteria, thus planting bacteria and reaping gum. Moreover, it may prove that we can prepare suitable culture media, and, dispensing with the trees, grow bacteria for gum where and when we please.

New and successful application of electricity in the treatment of internal diseases

RECENTLY an enlarged artery was operated on by applying electricity internally at the diseased point. The current was applied at the aorta, the main artery of the body, in order to reduce an aneurism or enlargement, which extended for some inches, and was about three inches wide. A hollow porcelain needle was introduced into the artery, and fifteen feet of fine gold wire passed through the hollow and allowed to coil up. The outside end of the wire was connected to an electric battery, and the circuit completed by a metallic plate on the patient's back. A current of five milliamperes was sent through and gradually increased to fifteen; this was left on for an hour.

The operation seems to have been successful in attaining its purpose, which was to coagulate the blood at the diseased point. The great danger is that small pieces of the coagulated blood may be carried into some of the small arteries, clogging them and causing death.

A somewhat similar application of electricity was the restoring to life of an infant apparently born dead. At birth there was a slight pulsation of the heart, which grew fainter till there was not a sign of life. Fifteen minutes after birth the electric current was applied, and in fifteen minutes more there were faint pulsations of the heart. When the treatment had been kept up about half an hour, the heart was beating and the infant breathing normally.

TWO SOCIETY WOMEN

"My hair was dry and brittle and falling out in an alarming manner. A friend suggested Crani-Tonic. It has restored my hair to health. It is soft, strong and easy to manage. I have recommended Crani-Tonic to many friends, all of whom praise it."
—Miss JEANIE CUTHILL.
No. 78 East 128th St., New York City. December 31, 1903.

"Crani-Tonic has done so much for me I feel I owe it to my many friends and the public to let them know that after trying everything, Crani-Tonic alone cured my dandruff, stopped my hair from falling and gave it life and lustre."
—ANNA E. DELANEY.
No. 87 Mott St., Brooklyn, New York. April 16, 1904.

OF GREATER NEW YORK WHO ARE WILLING THAT WE USE THEIR PHOTOGRAPHS AND TESTIMONIALS THAT YOU MAY KNOW SOME OF THE VIRTUES OF

Crani-Tonic The Hair Dressing Par Excellence

Used by People of Culture and Refinement Throughout the World
Makes hair grow—stops falling hair—removes and prevents dandruff. Prevents hair becoming coarse and brittle and splitting at the ends. Gives it lustre and that indescribable sheen that makes even the poorest head of hair beautiful. Its application imparts a most delightful sensation to the scalp. Its odor is the perfection of daintiness and its action, though potent, is yet gentle, pleasant and agreeable.

If You have any Trouble with Your Hair or Scalp
you are recommended to explain fully the symptoms of your case, fill out the following coupon and send it, together with a few hairs pulled from the head, or a sample from the daily combings, for microscopic examination. Our physicians will make a careful diagnosis and send you free by mail a full report upon the condition of your hair, with suggestions for home treatment.

CUT OFF HERE AND MAIL TO US TO-DAY

Name in full..... Address in full..... Have you Dandruff?..... Is the Dandruff oily or dry?..... Is your hair falling out?..... Is your scalp tight to skull?..... Does your scalp itch?..... Any scaly eruptions?.....	Mail Coupon and be Convinced
---	--

Crani-Tonic Hair Food is for sale by all Dealers throughout the world. 35 cents, 50 cents and $1 the bottle, or will be sent direct from our laboratories, express prepaid, on receipt of price.

CRANI-TONIC HAIR FOOD COMPANY
826 WEST BROADWAY, NEW YORK

Hot or cold,
Rain or shine,

Jaeger

Underwear

will enable you to enjoy life out-doors as well as in.

In New York alone over 300 physicians wear it.

Can your health afford to disregard such endorsement?

DR. JAEGER'S SANITARY WOOLLEN SYSTEM CO.
New York: 306 Fifth Ave.; 157 Broadway.
Brooklyn: 504 Fulton Street.
Boston: 230-232 Boylston Street.
Philadelphia: 1510 Chestnut Street.
Chicago: 82 State Street.
Agents in All Principal Cities.

CAVES OF CALIFORNIA

California has numerous natural bridges, caves, etc., of no little interest. The Mammoth Cave of Calaveras; the Alabaster Cave; the Crystal Palace Cave, containing a number of subterranean apartments, such as the Bridal Chamber, the Crystal Palace Room, and the Wonderful Music Hall.

The pleasantest, shortest and quickest route to these scenes is via

UNION PACIFIC and SOUTHERN PACIFIC

FASTEST TIME
SHORTEST LINE
SMOOTHEST TRACK

E. L. LOMAX, G. P. & T. A.
UNION PACIFIC
Omaha, Neb.

Does your stomach trouble you
A Thirty-Two page Book Free
"Swinburne's Stomach Philosophy"

Every sufferer from stomach, intestinal or liver troubles should read it. No one need be further ignorant as to what causes the serious complaints or of the only rational scientific treatment positively curing them—for a price has been set on this book—it can be had free. It is the evolution of a lifetime's specialization and close study of these vital organs; what breaks them down; what alone can cure them. Over 5,000 cured patients stand in back of this positive philosophy and declare it is the only method of personal treatment, which in a scientific and rational way produces positive results—quickly. If you will give me a description of your trouble enclosing stamp for my reply (besides this valuable book) I will send you my opinion about your case and tell you how with my scientific individual treatment you can be positively cured without leaving home at all, and in a remarkably short time you will be able to eat anything and digest everything as though you had a new stomach.

Dr. A. H. Swinburne, 803 St. Clair Bldg., Marietta, Ohio

SNORING

and mouth breathing
(no fee)
CURED INSTANTLY
NO DRUGS. Write today to SNOR-O-DONT,
A3, Box 412, Long Beach, California

Lawn Fence

Made of Steel. Lasts a lifetime.
Have no Agents. Sold to user
Wholesale Prices. 7 cts. a sp. Cheaper than wood. Cata log free. KITZELMAN BROTHERS
Box 397 Muncie, Indiana.

GROW TALLER EVERY DAY

You can increase your height from two to five inches by this method

Absolutely harmless, strictly scientific and endorsed by leading physicians

Free book explains it

Results quickly accomplished at home

MR. K. LEO MINGES

"I have increased my height nearly eight inches since began following the Cartilage method. These results are lasting and are a great surprise to my most intimate friends. There is no brainy or guesswork about it. Those who know me before and know me now are wily to swear to this statement. I am interested in those who are short and stunted and I will gladly tell you how I acquired this increased height. There is no pain or inconvenience connected with it. No electricity, drugs or knife used; simply a process which causes the Cartilages to expand and lengthen as bones. Write me and I will tell you how to receive the same benefits which I have received. Tell me your exact height and age and I will give you information that will surprise you. You will also receive my free book which tells all about this remarkable discovery, and it contains the pictures and statements of many who have increased their height on two to five inches. All correspondence will be held strictly confidential, and all letters and books of free in plain envelopes. You can increase your height if you are not over fifty years of age. This method also develops the body proportionately. Write today for the absolute proof. Do not take my word for it, but satisfy yourself. I can prove it to you if you will give me the opportunity." Address: The Cartilage Co., Dept. B234A, Rochester, N. Y.

CEMENT BUILDINGS

Cost Less Than Wood

And one half as much as brick when constructed of Hollow Cement Stone

made in the

Dykema Patent Mold

The manufacture of Hollow Cement Stone is a business with a field, a future, and a profit.

Booklet 15A tells more.

K. Dykema & Son
976 Michigan Trust Building
Grand Rapids, Mich.

When You Visit the World's Fair

GO TO THE

Inside Inn

The only hotel within the grounds, 2,257 rooms with and without baths. Dining-room seats 2,500 people. Absolute fire protection. Close to State Buildings and all chief attractions. Reservations made for any date to Dec. 1. Rates $1.50 to $5.50 European, $3.00 to $7.00 American plan. Address,

INSIDE INN, World's Fair Grounds
ST. LOUIS

Is there Snow on the Moon?

By GARRETT P. SERVISS

SPECULATION is once more rife about the moon. Professor William C. Pickering of the Harvard Observatory is the immediate cause of it.

One of the great sights of the moon, with which every possessor of a telescope is fond of astonishing his non-astronomical friends, is the mountainous district known as the Lunar Apennines. In eccentric grandeur this region on the moon is beyond comparison with any of the great landscape spectacles of the earth. It covers a triangular area of some four hundred miles on a side, situated near the centre of the moon's northern hemisphere, and as the sunshine crawls over it during the long lunar day, with gradually altering inclination of the rays of light, there is brought into view by successive steps a series of Alpine scenes that excite the imagination, and defy at once the pencil of the artist, the skill of the photographer, and the pictorial power of language.

A singular view of the Lunar Apennines, showing them in only one of their rapidly changing aspects, is not enough to convey an idea of their extraordinary construction. The observer should, if possible, watch them during many successive nights, noting the pointed black shadows of the mighty peaks, shortening as the sun rises higher upon them, and finally vanishing, to reappear on the opposite side when the illumination changes from the morning to the afternoon slope (on the moon morning and afternoon are each about a week in duration), and noting also the appearance, disappearance, and reappearance of craters, ridges, pinacles, ravines, and gorges as the contrasting lights and shadows play over them. Far away though they are, on the surface of a foreign globe, the tremendous precipices where the Lunar Apennines suddenly descend to the prairie-like level of the Mare Imbrium (Sea of Showers) produce almost a dizziness of the head for the imaginative observer who, knowing their height and steepness, long gazes upon them.

This wonderful lunar region has recently acquired fresh interest through the asseveration of Professor Pickering's belief that its mountain peaks and slopes are periodically covered with snow. Nobody has studied the moon longer, or more patiently, than has Professor Pickering, and his opinion naturally excites much interest among astronomers, and among all who are accustomed to watch and admire the queen of night, even though they take little interest in the scientific problems she presents. The series of photographs of lunar scenery made by Professor Pickering, and published in the latest volume of the "Harvard Observatory Annals," are unique in the opportunity which they afford for discussion of the actual conditions prevailing on the earth's satellite.

During the progress of the lunar day very remarkable changes occur in the brightness of the landscape. Professor Pickering's interpretation of these changes is that they are due to the deposition and melting away of snow, which not only gathers on the high mountain backs, but during the chill of night forms over the elevated plains also, and, after sparkling for a time in the slowly rising sun, at length disappears. It is to be supposed that the snow mantle, if one really exists, has no great thickness, as the quantity of watery vapor on the moon must be very slight.

The photographs of the Lunar Apennines in the "morning," in the "forenoon," at "noon," in the "afternoon," and in the "evening" certainly show that, if Professor Pickering's theory is not correct, some peculiarity of the moon's rocks, or soil, exists capable of creating the appearance of a white blanket alternately displayed and withdrawn. The spectacle is especially imposing along the crest of the range, where peaks from 16,000 to 21,000 feet in height tower almost perpendicularly over the Mare Imbrium. In the forenoon-light the long gentle slopes on the side opposite the Mare Imbrium show white, while the great vertical cliffs overhanging the Mare are invisible in shadow. But in the afternoon the sun strikes these cliffs full upon their faces and they gleam like glaciers.

The snow theory, however, has not met with universal assent. The English astronomer, Mr. E. Walter Maunder, dissents from it, and holds to the view that the observed changes are simply due to contact between the broken superficies of the steep mountain slopes and the more uniform surface presented by the comparatively level portions, where meteoric dust and tarnished mineral debris cover the ground.

Intimately connected with the question whether there is snow on the moon is the still more interesting question whether there is life there. To this latter Professor Pickering, running counter to the generally accepted opinion, replies that there probably is life. But the indications of lunar animation which he has found do not encourage romantic expectation. They do not relate to animal, and much less to intelligent, forms of life. They concern only a kind of vegetation springing up on low ground at the touch of the sun and perishing with the day that brings it forth.

POPE MANUFACTURING COMPANY

BICYCLE INNOVATIONS

Two-Speed Gear and New Coaster Brake

Greatest improvements since the coming of the chainless

Pope Quality in Every Wheel

EASTERN DEPARTMENT:
HARTFORD, CONN.

"Columbia" "Cleveland"
"Tribune" "Crawford"

WESTERN DEPARTMENT:
CHICAGO, ILL.

"Rambler" "Monarch"
"Crescent" "Imperial"

Catalogues free at our 10,000 dealers' stores, or any one Catalogue mailed on receipt of a two-cent stamp.

A Revelation

Is size, magnificence and beauty, the St. Louis World's Fair will surpass any previous Exposition. Yes, it will be, get the Katy Flyer. Views of all principal buildings reproduced in colors in the lithographer's highest art. The leaves, 4x10, are loosely bound and may be framed. Send 25c to "KATY," Box N 912, St. Louis, Mo.

THE KATY FLYER, the crack trail of the M. E. & T. Ry. - between St. Louis, Oklahoma, Texas and Old Mexico.

KATY FLYER TO OKLAHOMA

GLASS WATER COOLERS

ICE AND WATER SEPARATE

No Germs, Insects, Rust or Dirt.

For sale by all dealers. Write for pamphlet "N" AFFERT GLASS CO., 377 Broadway, New York

Copy Your Letters AFTER

All changes and corrections have been made—NOT BEFORE.

The "Y and E" Rapid Roller Letter Copier makes from one to five good clean duplicates of any letter or paper written with copying ink, indelible pencil or copying ribbon.

Shows EVERY ALTERATION in the original paper.

COSTS $33—BUT it will quickly save its own cost in the expense of letter press or carbon copy supplies which it cuts off.

WRITE FOR SAMPLE OF WORK AND COPIER CATALOGUE No. 306

Yawman & Erbe Mfg. Co.

Main Factories and Executive Offices

Rochester, N. Y.

New York Pittsburgh Washington Chicago San Francisco
Boston St. Louis Philadelphia Cleveland Minneapolis
The Office Specialty Mfg. Co. Ltd., Toronto-Montreal

Holds Medal Award of Famous Franklin Institute

Ask Your Wife

whether she wants to be left alone with the children in case of your death and no money to pay the bills.

Then ask us to send you our book "The How and the Why" that tells how you can provide this money and save at the same time. We insure by mail.

PENN MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE CO.
601 Chestnut St., Philadelphia

MAKES WALKING A PLEASURE

Can be slipped in any shoe or boot without any alteration. Removes the jar on the nerve. A boon to sick and perspiring feet, because it ventilates the shoe. Will outlast a dozen pair of rubber heels. Indorsed by leading doctors. Enjoyed by pedestrians everywhere. Sent postpaid anywhere for 50c. May be returned after a week's trial, if not satisfactory. In ordering state size of shoe.

One agent wanted in each county.

F. E. REICHARDT MFG. CO., ST. LOUIS, MO.

U.S. Patent Eye-Glass Guard

Don't Mar Your Nose—No Pressure—Firm—Safe—Easy. Sticks to Any Nose. Will Replace Spectacles. Ask your optician or write BORCH & CO., 11, 103 Adams St., Chicago, Ill.

Reduced Rates on Household goods from Colorado, Illinois, Washington and Oregon. Write Victoria Household Shipping Co., 15 Washington Street, Chicago.

A Gibson Drawing For 25 Cents

Miniatures (5 1/2 x 7) of Gibson's Famous Collier Drawings, ready for framing, sent postpaid for 25 cents each

Collier's

New York City

The Real Madame Du Barry Her Confessions and Memoirs AT LESS THAN HALF PRICE

FROM Henry of Navarre to and through the reign of Du Barry (whose personal memoirs occupy four of the volumes) this set of books covers the back-stairs-and-kitchen-gossip side of French Court history, much as Guizot covers its outward manifestations. And where so much was set afoot with secret and obscure design, where so little was open and above-board, where boudoir counsels dictated treaties and the wounded vanity of favorites instigated campaigns, where a low-born woman's caprice could send forth the torch to lay waste the half of Europe, it is impossible to comprehend the curious events of history without knowing the intimate details of those underlying causes. It is characteristic of these Memoirs that in dealing with the peculiar affairs which are associated in every one's mind with French Court history of the period, their very simplicity and frankness purge them of all offence.

Special Offer FRENCH COURT MEMOIRS

The undersigned controls a few sets of these personal French Court Memoirs (translated with fidelity into English), which can be secured in complete sets only, at a very low price, and on small monthly payments, if preferred, provided applications be made at once. These few copies are from a limited numbered and registered de luxe edition, bound up to sell at $50.00 a volume. But through a binder's error the leather of the volumes is imperfectly matched; consequently it becomes advisable to dispose of them outside of regular subscription channels, and at a price about equal to the value of the unbound sheets. A booklet fully describing the edition will be sent, together with price particulars, if you sign and send the inquiry coupon at once.

J. B. CHADBOURNE
11 East 14th St.
New York
Please send me particulars—
advertisement in May 24th Collier's.
Name _____
Address _____
You need not enclose money if you enclose Collier's
CUT HERE, AND DO IT TO-DAY

Vacation Questions Answered

When planning your summer vacation, questions will arise which you can not answer readily.

We can tell you what you want to know about Colorado, Utah or California, the wonderful Yellowstone Park, the picturesque Black Hills of South Dakota, or the marvelous Puget Sound country.

It will be our pleasure, if you give us the opportunity, to tell you how to reach any of these points, how long it will take, what it will cost, what you can do and see when you get there, the cost of living, etc.

All these places are quickly and comfortably reached by the Burlington's thro' train and car service from Chicago and St. Louis. If you want to go somewhere for rest and recreation after visiting the World's Fair, write us.

Address the nearest representative of the Burlington Route, or use the following coupon, and the answer will reach you by return mail.

P. S. EUSTIS, Passenger Traffic Manager,
209 Adams Street, Chicago. MM

I want to go to _____ Please send me information about the place, the way to get there, the cost, etc.

Name _____
Address _____

Cream of Wheat

All the elements that give strength to the athlete and health to his admirers are found in

CREAM OF WHEAT

the food that makes strong men, and keeps strong men in condition.

"It makes a dainty breakfast and a delicious dessert"

Your Fortune Told

Not by aid of magic, nor occult science, but the principles of thrift and foresight induced through Life Insurance.
The man who secures an Endowment Policy now lays the foundation of future competence.

The Prudential Insurance Co. of America.

JOHN F. DRYDEN, Prest. Home Office: NEWARK, N. J.

THE PRUDENTIAL HAS THE STRENGTH OF GIBRALTAR

Send this Coupon for information
Without committing myself to any action, I shall be glad to receive free, particulars and rates of Endowment Policies.
For $ _____ Age _____
Name _____
Address _____
Occupation _____ Dept. Y

20TH CENTURY LIMITED—20 Hour Train To Chicago
New York Central and Lake Shore.

There's good bread ahead

Number: Beginning "Slaves of Success," by Elliott Flower

Collier's

FICTION NUMBER

MAY

1904

32 PAGES

The Orchard

PRICE 10 CENTS

The Royal TOURIST
THE PINK OF PERFECTION.

The Good of the Old, The Best of the New

By combining foreign experience and American ingenuity, we produce a practical Touring Car for American roads. Light weight, reliability, comfort, appearance.

Simple in construction, easy to operate. Three speeds and reverse. Sliding transmission with interlocking devices throughout, and beveled geared drive direct on top speed. Force feed lubrication, perfect radiating system, long wheel base, large wheels.

Two cylinder up-right motor, 18-20 horse-power.

Four " " " " " "

Prices Ranging from $2300 to $4000 including Aluminum bodies, Canopy tops, or Limousine types, together with complete equipment.

Beautifully illustrated descriptive catalogue mailed upon request

ROYAL MOTOR CAR CO., 101 Marquette St., Cleveland, O.

DUERR WARD CO., Distributors for New York and vicinity
ILLINOIS MOTOR CAR CO., Distributors for Chicago and vicinity

"The Nation's pleasure ground and sanitarium."

—David Bennett Hill.

THE ADIRONDACK MOUNTAINS

The lakes and streams in the Adirondack Mountains are full of fish; the woods are inviting, the air is filled with health, and the nights are cool and restful. If you visit this region once, you will go there again. An answer to almost any question in regard to the Adirondacks will be found in No. 20 of the "Four-Track Series," "The Adirondack Mountains and How to Reach Them," issued by the

NEW YORK CENTRAL

A copy will be mailed free on receipt of a two-cent stamp, by George H. Daniels, General Passenger Agent, Grand Central Station, New York.

Columbia
LIGHT
12-14 Horsepower

Self-lubricating, two-cylinder opposed motor bonnet. Cylinders 5 x 4 1-2 inches. Bevel Driving pinions and gears as strong as found of twice the weight. All-metal clutch runs Positive controlling levers without notches Easiest of all gasoline cars to operate and

30-35 H. P. Touring Car $4000

Most powerful and efficient car of its weight. Canopy-top, Limousine or Surrey Body to order.

24-30 H. P. Touring Car $3500

The car that holds the Chicago-New York record. Canopy-top or Limousine Body to order.

New Model Electric Runabout $850

Lightest, fastest and most efficient vehicle in its class.

"Elberon" Electric Victoria $1600

In its fourth successful season. Improved this year.

Catalogue will be sent on request; also Special Catalogues of Columbia Electric Town Carriages and Commercial Vehicles.

ELECTRIC VEHICLE CO HARTFORD CONN

NEW YORK: 134, 136, 138 West 39th St., opp. Metropolitan Opera House
BOSTON: 74, 76, 78 Stanhope St. CHICAGO: 1413 Michigan Ave.

Member Association Licensed Automobile Manufacturers.

WEBER PIANOS

A ROYAL TRIBUTE

ALFONSO XIII., King of Spain, on February 29, 1904, issued a Royal Warrant of Appointment to the Weber Piano Company. The selection of the Weber Piano by the Spanish Royal Court for its highest honors is but an additional evidence of the appreciation in which this well known piano is held the world over.

THE WEBER PIANO COMPANY AEOLIAN HALL

362 Fifth Avenue, Near 34th Street
New York

Catalog sent upon request

A Chance Courtship

is a story of an unconventional love match, well told and beautifully illustrated. The small picture above only suggests the real charm of these illustrations. As a bit of readable fiction the story is well worth writing for. It is contained in a handsomely bound book of 128 pages, a portion of which is devoted to the attractive mountain and lake resorts along the Lackawanna Railroad. It is a book you will like to see. It may be had by sending 10 cents in postage stamps to T. W. LEE, General Passenger Agent, Lackawanna Railroad, New York.

ROYALTY PAID ON SONG-POEMS and Musical Compositions. We arrange and popularize. PIONEER PUB. CO. 523 Baltimore Building CHICAGO, ILL.

WHITE GASOLINE MARINE ENGINES

SAFETY demands a marine engine that is absolutely reliable, certain and prompt in starting. White Gasoline Engines are guaranteed to start readily and run satisfactorily under all conditions of weather, and to be free from defects in material and construction. They are of the four cycle type and are designed for long and heavy service. Each engine is fitted with a sensitive ball governor, solid propeller with reversing gears held in engine bed, early and late spark, self cleaning igniters, glass gasoline feed cup showing supply and working of fuel. Distillate and cheap grades of oil may be successfully used. Minimum vibration and noise and no disagreeable odor.

Catalog sent upon request—also estimates on complete launches. Special Catalog of Stationary and Portable Engines for general ranch purposes.

GLOBE IRON WORKS CO.
P.O. BOX 143, MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

SEASHORE, LAKE and MOUNTAIN Resorts of EASTERN & NORTHERN NEW ENGLAND and the MARITIME PROVINCES

Reached by the Boston
AND Maine RAILROAD.

FOR ALL PUBLICATIONS APPLY TO PASSENGER DEPARTMENT, B. & M. R. R.
BOSTON, MASS.
B. & M. R. R. RAILROAD, 100 N. ST., BOSTON, MASS.

Illustrated descriptions of pamphlets (containing complete maps) have been issued under the following titles and will be mailed upon receipt of 25¢ in stamps for each book.

*All Along Shore
Lakes and Streams
Fishing and Hunting
Among the Mountains
Southeast New Hampshire
Southwest New Hampshire
Valley of the Connecticut and Northern Vermont
The Moosuc Country and Deerfield Valley
Merrimack Valley
Lake Umbagog
The Monadnock Region
Central Massachusetts*

SUMMER TOURIST BOOK
GIVING LIST OF TOURS AND RATES, HOTEL AND BOARDING HOUSE LIST, AND OTHER VALUABLE INFORMATION FREE.

COLORADO BIRD'S EYE VIEW FROM MT. WASHINGTON
COLORADO BIRD'S EYE VIEW OF LAKE WINNIPESAUKEE

Portfolios:
NEW ENGLAND
LAKES.
RIVERS OF
NEW ENGLAND.
MOUNTAINS OF
NEW ENGLAND.
SEASHORE OF
NEW ENGLAND.
PICTURESQUE
NEW ENGLAND.
THE CHARLES RIVER TO THE HUDSON.
Will be sent upon receipt of 50 cents for each book.

SENT ON RECEIPT OF 6¢ FOR EACH.

To The Land of The Midnight Sun "Select Cruises"

TO NORWAY AND SPITZBERGEN

Also to Norway, Sweden, Russia, Denmark and Germany, and to the principal Seaside Resorts of Europe during

June, July and August

By Palatial Twin-Screw Steamers.
Superb service. Unsurpassed accommodation. Cruises begin at Hamburg. Duration 14-24 days.

Cost, $62.50 and upward

Send for Programs

ALSO AROUND THE WORLD

First Cruise, Sept. 15, 1904
Second Cruise, Jan. 24, 1905

Duration 4½ months, cost $1,500 and up.
Success assured.
Ports of call not affected by hostilities in the East.

HAMBURG AMERICAN LINE

New York Chicago Philadelphia
St. Louis Boston

A Remarkable Introductory Offer The New University Encyclopedia

Edited by HENRY M. MAC CRACKEN, D.D., LL.D.
CHANCELLOR NEW YORK UNIVERSITY

Complete in 10 Royal Quarto Volumes. Handsomely and Substantially Bound in Half Morocco. Sold only by Subscription

This new University Encyclopedia, which is ready for immediate delivery, contains nearly 8,000 pages, over 75,000 encyclopedic articles and titles, 40,000 geographical references, 16 double-page colored plates in over 100 brilliant designs, 96 new colored maps specially made for this work, 32 full-page plates representing the historical and scientific achievements of the past century, 12,000 biographies, hundreds of new, original and special features, more than 1,000 wood engravings in the text and over 7,000,000 words, more than 300 special contributors and over 5,000 noted specialists from all over the world.

The New University Encyclopedia is written in simple, straightforward English, and contains more information that is reliable and comprehensive than any other reference work ever placed upon the American market. Every department has been prepared by a noted specialist.

We Have a Remarkable Introductory Proposition

for those who desire this latest and most desirable reference work, by which it may be obtained at a very low price and upon very easy terms of payment. To obtain this offer and full information and prospectus of this work, you need only with your name and address, plainly written, to

Send a Post Card

P. F. Collier & Son, 416 W. 13th St., New York.

The Best Books

for all the outdoor season are those of

THE NATURE LIBRARY

Through all the year these volumes bring to their owners increasing satisfaction. Each month, each day, the work opens new fields of interest and fresh sources of enjoyment.

JOHN BURROUGHS, the Eminent Naturalist, says of the volumes:

"While accurate and scientific, I have found them very readable. This library is free from the scientific dry-rot on the one hand and from the misleading romanticism of much recent nature-study on the other. It is a safe guide to the world of animal and plant life that lies about us. And that is all the wise reader wants."

"As necessary as the dictionary and far more interesting"

WE wish to submit a new booklet, which will show better than anything except the books themselves the beauty, authoritativeness, and usefulness of the new edition of The Nature Library.

Doubleday, Page & Company

The World's Work Publishers Country Life in America

34 Union Square, New York City

Does this not suggest the advisability of investigating the fitness for your own library of these

10 Superb Large Volumes

4,000 pages, 10½ x 7½ inches
300 plates in full colors
450 half-tone photographs
1,500 other illustrations and a general introduction by JOHN BURROUGHS

Particularly at this season

when all nature seems calling us out, is this library of the open air most indispensable.

You will incur no obligation

and you will become informed about a most notable work by sending to us the coupon below.

Col.
W.C.
B. '04

Doubleday,
Page &
Company

Gentlemen: You may send to me the new booklet containing sample color plates, black and white half-tones, specimen text pages, etc., of The Nature Library. Include also particulars of price and terms.

Name.....

Address.....

City.....

THE HOMER YOUNG CO. LTD
Up To Date Trunk Makers
TOLEDO, OHIO.

I Think "Young's"
Dresser Trunk
is just Ideal

Off to the World's Fair

Another Good Style

We Sell Direct from Factory

Write to us for our catalogue of these new, up-to-date Trunks and we will quote you "Factory Prices" and make prompt shipment of any Trunk selected. They have smooth sliding drawers. No rummaging for clothing. All articles kept in their proper places. Bottom just as accessible as the top. Finest, strongest and best. Cost no more than others. Returnable if not satisfactory. Ask for catalogue A-1105.

THE HOMER YOUNG CO. LTD., Toledo, Ohio

"FORCE," . 138
all others, . 10

That's the vote of the Yale Senior Class this year on the best breakfast food.

It's no use talking—in the long run quality does tell.

Sunny Jim

"FORCE" is a muscle-builder. And it makes good the wear and tear of severe mental effort.

The Delineator for June (OUT MAY 14)

The Delineator differs from every other magazine in many ways—but chiefly in the fulness with which each number covers the features (all of them) that interest a woman.

It isn't merely that there are many fascinating articles on the Season's Styles pictured in this month's issue—and a notable paper on Home-Beautifying or something else next month—but each separate number of The Delineator is full of just the things, and all the things, she wants to know about.

There's a lavish abundance of the helpful and the practical that is not found elsewhere. Take the June number, for instance: (Five million women of America will read it.)

To begin with—the Fashions, of course. More to choose between and better pictured than in any other magazine you ever looked at—and through them all the safeness of absolute authority as to Fashion's approval. There are two gowns shown that are destined to—but one can't describe them here. And the Hats, too!!!

For Home Builders—a house that doesn't cost much, looks as though it did, and has artistic comfort built into every nook and corner of it. This is one of a series that doesn't deal with architects' dreams, but shows real houses, actually built—and illustrated with photographs taken after all the bills are paid.

"The Joy of Living," is a series of thoughtful papers by Lillie Hamilton French, which has already given our readers much to think about. It deals with the different phases of home life. This month's article is about mothers with stay-at-home daughters, and both mothers and daughters will read it with interest.

Rebecca Boone, the wife of the famous pioneer, had a life hardly less adventurous than that of her husband. Hairbreadth escapes and hardships innumerable were hers for many years. This is the second in the series of "Pioneer Women," and is an Indian story of the most fascinating kind—and a true one.

A School of Beauty has never really existed before. The nearest to it are the cosmetic shops and the doubtful newspaper articles by alleged "Beauty Doctors" and the like. In "The Fountain of Youth" Dr. Grace Peckham Murray is showing that each woman may control her own beauty. This series is a revelation.

There is much to interest the Child in this number—and as much more that will appeal to its Mother, as for instance, "Varying Temperaments in Children," by Mrs. Theo. W. Birney, Hon. Pres't National Council of Mothers. The tot: themselves have half a dozen work and play stories to amuse them.

"Around the World in Eighty Pictures" is the title of a series of picture-letters written by a young bride who is making the grand tour as a honeymoon trip. The letters are accompanied by a profusion of the most brilliant photographs we remember having seen. She is travelling through Manchuria in this number.

Fiction is here in plenty. "The Giver of Honour" is a Japanese love story of singular charm. Two college stories, "At the Window of Paradise" and "Bailey's Sister," bring the love-interest nearer home. The Departments are as fully treated as always—Club Women, Needlework—a score of other things.

This number contains more of interest to Woman than any magazine ever before published

BE SURE TO GET IT

Of your newsdealer or any Butterick agent, or of the publishers, at 15c. a copy; $1.00 a year. THE BUTTERICK PUBLISHING COMPANY, Limited, Butterick Building, New York

Suit Made $12 to Measure

Suit
Case
Free

Fine All-Wool
Tailor-Made
Cashmere or
Worsted Suit

Your Choice of a variety of colorings and weaves, and all the newest patterns just from the woolen mills. We direct special attention to the fabrics. The cloth is specially woven from new, high grade wool; it is close woven and the wool is full of "life," so that the cloth is elastic and the garments will hold their shape. Before cutting into the cloth for each suit, the suit pattern is thoroughly shrunk. Our cutters are first-class workmen, who incorporate into the suit the latest style, and take into account the various little differences in build each man possesses. The suit is lined throughout with "Bull's" serge and the sleeve linings are of the celebrated "Fowler" silesta. All trimmings are the very best, and button-holes are hand finished. The pants pockets are made of strong drilling, and all the findings are such as only can be secured in the high grade merchant-tailor article. Our measure and order blank will enable you to take your own measurement accurately, and a perfect fit is guaranteed. We are manufacturers, importers and custom tailors, and guarantee our $12.00 suits to be equal in wear to the best suits you can obtain from your local dealer for Twenty Dollars, while in style and fit our garments are incomparably superior to any but the product of high-priced city tailors.

FREE Suit Case

In order to establish customers throughout the United States, we are giving on the first order received from any one person, a handsome suit case, which we use to ship the suit. The suit case that goes with each suit is most presentable and would cost in your local store from $5 to $8.

A trial is all we ask. You run no risk in ordering from us, as we guarantee absolutely a perfect fit. We do not ask you to pay for the goods before seeing them. We send them by express C. O. D., with the privilege of examination at Express Office, and if the suit is not satisfactory in fabric, finish or fit, you need not accept it; it will be returned to us at our expense. The suit shown in the picture is our No. 351, and is a sensible, becoming suit to most gentlemen. The price is $12.00. It is entirely new, out of the ordinary and very stylish. Samples of cloth that make up nicely in this style are shown in our new catalogue, which contains styles and samples varying in price from $12.00 to $20.00. Our catalogue and

SAMPLES OF CLOTH FREE

will be sent you the very day your request for same reaches us. Remember, we have no agents, no branch stores, and no connection with any other clothing concerns. Our business has been established 40 years. Write today for samples. Address Meyer Livingston Sons, Dept. 48, South Bend, Ind. References: Citizens National Bank, South Bend, Ind.

COLLIER'S WEEKLY

P. F. COLLIER & SON, PUBLISHERS

New York, 416-424 West 13th Street; London, 10 Norfolk Street, Strand, W. C.; and The International News Co., 5 Breams Buildings, Chancery Lane, E. C.

Copyright 1904 by P. F. Collier & Son. Entered at the New York Post-Office as Second-Class Matter.

Vol. XXXIII No. 7

10 Cents per Copy

$5.20 per Year

New York, Saturday, May 14, 1904

CONTENTS MAY FICTION NUMBER

The Orchard. Cover Design . . . . .	Drawn by F. X. Leyendecker	Page
Rushing Supplies for the Japanese Army on the Yalu . . . . .	Photograph by Robert L. Dunn	7
Collier's Special Photographer with the Japanese Army in Korea
Editorials . . . . .		8-9
The Japanese Advance into Manchuria. Photograph . . . . .		10
Off for the Front! . . . . .	Frederick Palmer	10
Special War Correspondence from Japan
Marking Time in Tokio . . . . .	Richard Harding Davis	11
A War Drama. Special War Correspondence from Japan
Grief-Stricken Russia . . . . .	J. C. O'Laughlin	12
Special Correspondence from St. Petersburg
Formal Opening of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition . . . . .	Photograph	13
Not Honorably Discharged. Story . . . . .	Octave Thanet	14
Illustrated by W. L. Jacobs
The Emigrants . . . . .	Double-Page Picture in Colors by Frederic Remington	16-17
Slaves of Success. Story . . . . .	Elliott Flower	18
L.—The Necessary Vote. Illustrated by Jay Hambidge
The Restricting Clause. Story . . . . .	Johnson Morton	20
Illustrated by John Wolcott Adams
Blind Man's Buff. Story . . . . .	Laurence Housman	21
Illustrated by Anne Estelle Rice
Two Views of Divorce in Fiction . . . . .	Robert Bridges	23

Used by the Royal Families and Smart Hotels Throughout Europe

EREBOS TABLE SALT NOURISHES

Used like plain salt for table and kitchen. Contains wheat phosphates wanting in white bread
owing to the removal of the bran.

NEVER CAKES

Send for sample, enough for the family, naming your grocer
"CEREBOS," 78 Hudson St., NEW YORK

A Wing Style. 21 other styles to select from.

THE WING PIANO

Save from $100 to $200

We make the WING PIANO and sell it ourselves. It goes direct from our factory to your home. We do not employ any agents or salesmen. When you buy the WING PIANO you pay the actual cost of construction and our small wholesale profit. This profit is small, because we sell thousands of pianos yearly. Most retail stores sell no more than twelve to twenty pianos yearly, and must charge from $100 to $200 profit on each. You can calculate this yourself.

SENT ON TRIAL—WE PAY FREIGHT No Money in Advance

We will send any WING PIANO to any part of the United States on trial. We pay freight in advance, and do not ask for any advance payment or deposit. If the piano is not satisfactory after twenty days' trial in your home, we take it back entirely at our expense. You pay us nothing unless you keep the piano. There is absolutely no risk or expense to you.

It is Easy to Deal with Us

Our many styles give a greater variety of pianos to select from than is found in any retail store. The large lithographs in our catalogue show you these styles in the different woods, making it easy for you to select. Our correspondence department answers any questions you may ask, and gives all information promptly. You will find it more convenient as well as more economical to buy a piano from us than to buy from your local dealer. We sell on easy payments, and take old instruments in exchange.

The Instrumental Attachment

imitates perfectly the tones of the mandolin, guitar, harp, zither and banjo. Music written for these instruments, with and without piano accompaniment, can be played just as perfectly by a single player on the piano as though rendered by a parlor orchestra. The original instrumental attachment has been patented by us, and it cannot be had in any other piano, although there are several imitations of it.

All Wing Pianos

have seven and one-third octaves, double-lever grand repeating action, grand overstrung bass, with three strings to each note in the middle and treble registers; the scale is the same as in grand pianos, with largest size of sound-board and strings of the greatest length, giving greatest volume and power of tone; the cases are double veneered inside and outside, and finished up in Circassian walnut, dark, rich mahogany, genuine quartered oak, and ebony. The keys are of the finest grade of polished ivory and ebony. SPECIAL FEATURES.—Built-up wrest-plank construction, dove-tailed top and bottom frame case construction, full length, extra heavy metal plate, metal depression-bar, metal key-board support, improved noiseless direct-motion pedal action, noiseless twisting hammer shank, imported wrought-iron tuning-pins, copper-covered bass strings, improved practice attachment, full-length duet music-desk, instrumental attachment.

In Thirty-six Years Over 36,000 Pianos

We refer to over 36,000 satisfied purchasers in every part of the United States. WING PIANOS are guaranteed for twelve years against any defect in tone, action, workmanship or material.

A Book of Information about pianos, bound in cloth and containing 116 large pages, sent free on request. Every one who intends to purchase a piano should have it. Write for it to-day.

WING & SON
346-348 West 13th Street, New York
1868—36th Year—1904

Hunter Baltimore Rye

The Best
for
The Guest

Sold at all first-class cafes and by jobbers.
WM. LANAHAN & SON Baltimore, Md.

POPE MANUFACTURING COMPANY

BICYCLE INNOVATIONS

TWO-SPEED GEAR & NEW COASTER BRAKE

Greatest Improvements since the coming of the Chainless

POPE QUALITY IN EVERY WHEEL

EASTERN DEPARTMENT
HARTFORD, CONN.

"Columbia" "Cleveland"
"Tribune" "Crainford"

WESTERN DEPARTMENT
CHICAGO, ILL.

"Rambler" "Monarch"
"Crescent" "Imperial"

Catalogues FREE at our 10,000 dealers' stores, or any one Catalogue mailed on receipt of a two-cent stamp

COLLIER'S

MAY FICTION NUMBER

RUSHING SUPPLIES FOR THE JAPANESE ARMY ON THE YALU

PHOTOGRAPH BY ROBERT L. DUNN, COLLIER'S SPECIAL WAR PHOTOGRAPHER WITH THE JAPANESE ARMY IN KOREA. COPYRIGHT 1904 BY COLLIER'S WEEKLY

This photograph was taken in the middle of March, and shows a transport column resting in the defiles of the Tong Sari Mountains. Winter breaks and spring comes with astonishing swiftness in this region, and these troops, a few days before toiling through snowdrifts and over frozen trails, have stripped off their coats, and appear to be in summer marching gear. In place of the wagon transport of other modern armies, the Japanese use small two-wheeled carts which can be drawn by ponies, or by man-power, as occasion favors. Food, clothing, ammunition, all the hundred and one items of supply for an army, from tent-pegs to shoes, are packed in small matting-covered packages of uniform size, ready to pack or cart. Instead of a vast litter of all sorts of material at a transport depot, or on steamer or wharf, the Japanese army supplies are carefully numbered and piled, each of the small packages having a handle. This is one of the reasons why the bold advance through Korea in mid-winter was so successfully carried out. Under the same conditions of climate and terrain, the Russians in Manchuria have been hampered by the fact that the troops could move no faster than the wagon-trains which were helpless in bad roads. The Japanese transport can move as fast as the fighting column at all times, and the increased mobility of action will be an important advantage in movements of grand strategy. The reports that the Japanese infantry have been rushing to the front in marches of from fifteen to twenty-five miles a day are easily credible when their transport system is as light as shown in this photograph

"ALL THAT IS HUMAN," says GIBBON, like many others before and after him, "must retrograde if it do not advance." Such statements are easily made, but a nation is often going backward in a hundred ways while it is going forward in a hundred others, and it would take an infinite mind to tell in which direction it was moving on the whole. Even any single point appears to one wise eye whirling toward the promised land, while to another flawless optic it seems plunging toward perdition. To a BROWNING almost any change is forward. To a TENNYSON it seems that through the ages one increasing purpose runs. A MATTHEW ARNOLD finds in nature, a force that makes for righteousness. To other minds, like the author of Ecclesiastes, or the Persian Omar, progress is mirage, and man's history is

"A Moment's Halt—a momentary taste
Of Being from the Well amid the Waste—
And Lo!—the phantom Caravan has reach'd
The Nothing it set out from."

As in a universe or a nation, so even in a man, as he changes from one to another of his stages, altering his views, his interests, his activities, he will appear ascending to some friends and degenerating to the rest. If a man has typhoid fever, some acquaintances believe it will surely purge his system and leave him better, and to them a boil seems nature's happy way of withdrawing evil. A few acquaintances of ours, much too intelligent to respect Mr. HEARST, cheerily contend that the body politic and the Democratic party will be better for having suffered him. An old cook in our family, decades ago, when we were shining in our angel infancy, on being asked about her condition replied, "Very bad, glory be to God."

MOST PLATFORMS MEAN NOTHING. Sometimes there is significance in a plank or two. The Republican strategy this year will probably be to put the least possible meaning into the largest number of words, and stand on the record. We do not blame them. They are simply refusing to leave a ground on which victory seems assured. The Democrats are uncertain whether to say too much or nothing. The faction headed by BRYAN would make any statements sufficiently extreme and sufficiently unlike Republican policies. The majority, now centred around Judge PARKER, showed in New York that they fear, at present, to do more than throw paper bullets at the President. If they are to seem at once sincere and sane, it will be necessary at St. Louis to say explicitly both what they favor doing and what they do not favor doing to the trusts. Such a statement might be uncomfortably like President ROOSEVELT's position, but it could be at least plausibly argued that the Republican party as a whole is too closely tied up with financial interests to be independent in dealing with combinations. Here, also, is the only promising approach to the tariff issue, which could be resurrected in its bearings on the whole principle of special favors to the money power, and also on the side of reciprocity with Canada. Mr. WILLIAMS could write a plank, or a series of planks, about these topics, which would mean something, and which the people would accept as meaning something, whereas a document filled with the ordinary vague verbosity of such compositions could do nothing toward giving the Democrats a fighting ground. The American people have proved thus far that their common-sense is too strong for demagogues and agitators—those gentry who, as long as history has existed, have appealed straight to hatred. The people probably believe, nevertheless—a majority of them—that our present system allows to concentrated money illegal and unjust influence. They would embrace a man or party which could make them believe that he or it had really seen how to diminish the evil without disturbing those American principles under which we have lived with satisfaction for a century and more. For a just, intelligent solution we do not think they will ever accept as substitute the appeals to passion which have sometimes been successful in other lands.

PLATFORMS AND TRUSTS

THE SENATE IS AN ANOMALY, both in the mode of its election and in the distribution of its membership. Granting that we need a second House, State Rights has now become a phrase of so changed a meaning that it forms no excuse for making up the Senate in a manner so uneven. The composition of the second chamber was a device to protect the smaller States. Nobody could maintain that they need protection now, and justice, according to their size and population, they would have under a more even representation. The proposal to make Arizona and New Mexico into one State, therefore, and Oklahoma and Indian Territory into another, was essentially unwise, and we are glad that the Senate Committee failed to report on the recommendation of the House. When action is ultimately taken, these large Western Territories should be let in as each a State. When they should be admitted is another question, on which, however, we are inclined to be liberal, because we think that a distributed population is more advantageous to the country than a congested one, and therefore a representation which encourages the development of large new Territories tends toward results profoundly desirable. Often it is taken for granted that population is the only just basis of representation. If that is so, the whole composition of the Senate should be changed. If not, then we see no reason why a congested island like New York City should have in the Senate a greater influence than some vast stretch of farming territory, which equally needs to have its interests cared for, especially as the denser centres inevitably have the advantage in the House. The next Congress should pass either a more liberal Statehood bill or none at all.

STATEHOOD

JOSEPH FOLK FOR PRESIDENT is a cry which shows appreciation of a work well done, but which shows an absence either of sense or of sincerity. In Mr. BOURKE COCKRAN, who threw out the hint in one of his two tempestuous scrimmages in the House, we do not think the deficiency is in sense. He used FOLK as a handy brick to throw at PARKER. Two reasons would make the nomination of the St. Louis attorney absurd. One is general: that he has done nothing to show what kind of a President he would make, except to vote for BRYAN, with an honest indifference to financial questions and an equally honest instinct that changes were needed to make opportunity more even. Nobody knows what kind of a Cabinet he would appoint, were he President; what his view of foreign politics would be; how his mind would work on currency or the tariff. We know him only as honest, brave, and gifted as a prosecuting lawyer. The more specific and immediate objection, however, is much more cogent. Mr. FOLK's campaign for the Governorship is the direct and necessary consequence of his fight against corruption in the city. He became a candidate for Governor because he saw that in no other way could the corroding evil be removed. If he is Governor, we may expect laws honestly designed to destroy the industry of stealing the people's money, and the rigorous enforcement of these laws. If he should abandon the fight to accept another nomination with the probability of defeat, not only would he fail to carry on himself the stimulating and needed work of his own beginning, but he would inevitably hand over the Governorship to the very forces whom his victory would suppress. The Governorship goes either to FOLK or to the machine, the corruption of which it is FOLK's glory to destroy. To deliver Missouri to a predatory gang for the mere glamour of being the figure-head on a larger stage is an act which would be impossible in JOSEPH FOLK.

THE PLACE FOR FOLK

CONGRESS IS USUALLY JOKED when it retires, as well as while it sits. No divinity hedges the powers that rule America, and the people laugh freely, in their good-natured way. The Congress which has just adjourned did more than the average amount of work, some of the best of it being influenced by the President. The Republicans were stupidly led in the House, where the Democrats made an unexpected showing, strengthened by a leader of real ability in WILLIAMS and an eloquent and clever, even if superficial, debating orator in COCKRAN. In the Senate the lead in ability is still with the Republicans. The gravest charge made against this Congress, as against most others, is that the members are less full of disinterested thought for the nation than of special wire-pulling for themselves or their constituents. On the principle of local representation the result could not be different. Far better legislation at Washington would probably result if our National Legislature were elected after the manner of the House of Commons, each district not being restricted to men who happened to reside within it, but being able to choose from the whole United States. With any such change, should it ever come, ought to go a devolution of as much legislation as possible from Congress to the States. The more Government can be localized the better for local interests and the better also for those general affairs on which the attention of the National Legislature should be centred. No such radical change would be considered at present, but it is a possibility of the future.

CONGRESS

IDEAS ON PUBLIC EXPENSE are vague in the minds of most voters in America. Living as freely as we still do, we take no such exact interest in national economy as older nations do, and as we shall in the future, when our resources have been more fully used and the margin of profit made more narrow. A city administration is more likely to suffer under a charge of extravagance than a national administration is, because the ways of raising money for local purposes bring the reality of taxation home to the people, whereas for the general Government they pay without knowing in what manner or how much. Nevertheless some interest has been aroused by the fact that during the last four years we have had appropriated for the National Government $211,000,000 more than for the four years of McKinley and $883,000,000 more than for the last four years of Cleveland. Mr. Roosevelt's pension order

EXTRAVAGANCE is the item that has been most attacked, and it is defended on the ground that had it not been issued Congress would probably have passed a service pension law that would have cost several times as much. The tariff, so arranged at present as to take money from the poor and give it to the rich, is likely to be modified when we begin actually to feel the pressure of taxation. As few men can make such topics as economy interesting to Americans, it is one of the proofs of Mr. Williams's ability that he is able to do so. "Every dollar," says he, "that unnecessarily falls into the till of the general Government, to be unwisely and unnecessarily expended by that Government, is a dollar taken from some taxpayer in some State, who is thereby deprived of the opportunity to use it for better education, better shelter, warmer clothing, more books, more music, more pictures, more flowers, or more of something else tending to material, intellectual, æsthetic, or moral welfare." Economy is discipline, for man or nation, and a sharp supervision of the general expenditure is to the advantage and credit of a public.

FRRIENDLY UNDERSTANDINGS seem likely hereafter to play a larger part in diplomacy than formal alliances. The value of such agreements as those between France and Russia, and between Germany, Austria, and Italy, is at present seriously questioned, and even the alliance between Japan and England, the most timely and effective of those now existing, does not lack criticism from both countries, although on the whole this one alliance is regarded with enthusiasm. If the alliance is on the wane, the friendly understanding is noticeably increasing in frequency and value. Twin sister of arbitration, it may play an even larger part in preventing conflict and increasing strength in peace. The visit of President LOUBET to Italy, and the cordiality of his reception, are more characteristic of the times than the German Emperor's warlike tone and his attempt to rehabilitate the formal Triple Alliance. M. LOUBET is the seventh President

ALLIANCES AND ENTENTES of the Republic, and the one whose life and position seem most serene amid the shifting scenes of France. Two have died tragically, and some of the others have left office under conditions far from mild. The seventh President finds his country quiet at home and ready to be friends with its most ancient foe, and anxious to send him as peacemaker to any neighbor whose desire is peace. Probably the only Government in Europe to-day which ever thinks of war without distaste is Germany, and this general dread of warfare is what has caused the rapid growth of the entente as an informal device for preserving peace.

CORPORATIONS HAVE NO SOUL is a saying about as old as corporation law, and it is one to which current history is adding strength. The Western Union is the latest moral delinquent to be attacked for doing as a body what its members would presumably refuse to do as individuals. Probably its connection with the pool rooms will be made impossible by the great publicity given to the facts. It is said that a number of directors have resigned from the Fuller Construction Company since the exposure of that of the community and thus reacts upon all individuals. American high finance deserves a good deal of punishment, and the country at large will not grieve overmuch if the punishment is administered. If a few million dollars were cut off from the Western Union Telegraph Company in the name of honesty, the loss would be endured by the rest of us with the greatest equanimity. Corporations not only have no souls. They have no friends. And often they deserve none.

SOUL AND CORPORATIONS company's corrupt dealings with walking delegates, and thus by publicity is public opinion gradually improved. If Mr. THOMAS W. LAWSON is able to make good his intention of exposing the methods of the Standard Oil Company, the public will gain both pleasure and profit from the opportunity to "witness a series of flashlight pictures to which, for flashlighting generally, the United States Shipbuilding fandango will look like a midnight silhouette." Corporations are a necessity of modern business methods, but they have much to answer for in the way of blunting conscience. Since men will do readily as directors what they would hesitate to do as single owners, what they do as a corporate entity, without a soul, helps to form the business habits

THE SINS OF ALCOHOL are often celebrated, but usually the alcohol so vituperated is in the form of whiskey, gin, or other compound intended ostensibly for pleasure. It is a satisfaction, therefore, to see the evil assailed in a form which wears the garb of virtue. Mr. Bok, famous purveyor of manners and morality, is a man of contrast. Not long ago he published an essay on extortion in New York, which from end to end was undiluted "fake." Now, however, he appears with an article of which any journalist might be proud, attacking an outrage with truth and potency. The people who drink or eat patent medicines number millions. Some do it to save doctors' bills, others because they find the patent medicine more effective, since no reputable doctor would give in quantity and kind what the patent medicine contains. Beer contains from 2 to 5 per cent of alcohol. Lydia Pinkham's Vegetable Compound contains 20.6 per cent of alcohol, Paine's Celery Compound 21, Ayer's Sarsaparilla 26.2, Hood's Sarsaparilla 18.8, Vinol 28.5, Parker's Tonic 41.6, Boker's Stomach Bitters 42.6, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters 44.3, Warner's Safe Tonic Bitters 35.7, and so on, through a long list given by Mr. Bok, which all who are their own doctors may read in the "Ladies' Home Journal" for May. Opium, digitalis, and other powerful drugs also add to the power of these "medicines" by which drunkards are formed and babies are poisoned at the breast. Nothing succeeds like success, and a person who has been cheered by one of these compounds goes about enthusiastically urging it on his friends. Much virtue in a name. Call a mixture by some moral title and thousands will swallow and advocate it who would hesitate at absinthe or raw gin. The law, which forbids harmless oleomargarine to be sold as butter, does not prevent these poisons from being sold as "non-alcoholic." The Woman's Christian Temperance Union busies itself with such important matters as christening ships with wine. Life insurance companies, more intelligent, have begun to ask their applicants whether they have the habit of using patent medicine. These preparations are popular in prohibition States.

A LEAGUE OF LANDLORDS is rumored, in one or more of our great cities, to make rent higher by so much for each added child. There are in some places already entire blocks without a child. Hotels are leaning more toward excluding him, because invalids do not like his lively ways. Why should we not exclude the invalids instead? We might run hotels for the robust souls who enjoy the child's vitality and have children themselves. The difficulty is that the richest people are the landlord's object, and they it is who have fewest children and like them least. Now comes HENRY JAMES and accepts the diminution of progeny as the most favorable of signs; but Mr. JAMES is a bachelor, over-sensitive in his nerves. His observation was probably made without regard to two considerations. One is that the element which reproduces most rapidly is the one which is also immigrating in such numbers from southern and eastern Europe, and which is not the most desirable. Happily, if the so-called "pure American" refuses to increase, the German and Irish-Americans are still given to replenishing the earth. The other objection to the small-family habit, apart from the resulting composition of the race, is its effect on moral tone, by substituting luxury for naturalness and duty. We observe great bitterness on this topic not only among landlords but also among the women's clubs, and therefore touch it lightly, yet, feeling that the love of children lies so deep in normal human nature, we are unable entirely to conceal our furtive approbation of the stork.

OUR OPPOSITION to Mr. Hearst is entirely consistent with our desire to have our readers hear all that can be said in his favor by the ablest of his lieutenants. In our issue for May 21st there will be an article by Mr. Arthur Brisbane, describing Mr. Hearst in detail as a man, a journalist, and a politician. The same issue will contain an article by Mr. Norman Hapgood on immoral journalism; its effect on American life—especially on our respect for truth—and the contrast between its professions about wishing to improve civic life and the deeds with which it every day seeks at any price the most conspicuous "success."

COPYRIGHT 1904 BY COLLIERS WEEKLY

THE JAPANESE ADVANCE INTO MANCHURIA ALONG THE GREAT PEKING ROAD

PHOTOGRAPH BY R. L. DUNN, COLLIER'S SPECIAL WAR PHOTOGRAPHER WITH THE JAPANESE ARMY IN KOREA

With the coming of the first days of spring the difficulties of the advance were greatly diminished, as may be seen in this photograph. While much of the march from Seoul to Ping-Yang was through forbidding mountains, fertile and cultivated valleys were also crossed. By summer the fields through which this main highway runs will be a granary to supply great quantities of maize and millet to the Japanese forces in Korea. The farmers of these little patches have welcomed the invaders who have contracted ahead for their grain crops with liberal rates of payment.

OFF FOR THE FRONT!

By FREDERICK PALMER, Collier's War Correspondent with the Japanese Army of Invasion in Manchuria

COPYRIGHT 1904 BY COLLIERS WEEKLY

Mr. Palmer arrived in Japan, January 25, and spent two months in Tokio waiting for the General Staff of the Japanese army to depart for the scene of operations. When, at last, permission was granted to fifteen war correspondents and photographers to leave for the front with the first expedition, Mr. Palmer and Mr. James H. Hare, Collier's Special Photographer, were selected among the five Americans allowed to go. A cablegram from Mr. Palmer, sent from Champo, Korea, April 17, was published in the Household Number for May—April 30—announcing his arrival there.

KORE, JAPAN, April 3, 1904

NEVER was parting guest more happy to get away; never was parting guest more heartily and sincerely sped. With the correspondents of the first contingent actually going, the hopes of the second and the third rose to the dignity of expectations. They gathered at Shimbashi Station with tin horns and gave the chosen few an Anglo-Saxon cheer. For over two months some of us have waited for official passes to join the Japanese army in the field. Now that we have the treasure it is not much to look at—only a slip of paper which would go into the average size envelope. By rights, it should be on vellum, with marginal decorations of storks standing on one leg and an inscription of summa cum laude for patience in flourishes. Our thoughts, however, are not on such trivialities. They are entirely on how much each little pass will permit us to see.

"The Japanese were absolutely prepared for this war and all possible contingencies save one," said a secretary of legation in Tokio. "They overlooked the coming of a small army of correspondents representing the public opinion of two great friendly nations, whose goodwill it is to Japan's special interest to court."

Nearly a hundred foreigners, used to entirely different food and conditions of life from the natives, turned a hotel into a barracks, and with persistent address asked for privileges from the Foreign Office. In time such a force can wear even the Japanese smile of politeness down to a studied grimace. We had and have the conviction that the army would like to follow the navy's suit and permit no correspondents at all with its force. Had as much been said at first, then we could have gone home, feeling that if Japan had broken away from the customs of the age of the free press that was her affair. The lives, the millions of dollars, the national aims at stake were hers, and we came only by courtesy as foreigners. What was wearing on our nerves was the week by week "You may go very soon." We were told, so near was our departure—whether six weeks ago or last week—that it would be most unwise for us to go to Korea, and we waited and waited until candor took the place of our suavity, and the Japanese smile, suddenly broadening into its old sunniness, said that it was really very early for us to start, but there was something to see already, and if we wished we might go. So the rampant curiosity of the spoiled children of the press, grateful for small favors, may at last feed itself on the sight of a Japanese soldier really marching toward an enemy in a disputed land. A pitched battle is not expected for fully another month yet, if not for two months.

For two weeks Mr. Yokoyama's ship has been in readiness at Kobe. It was to have sailed on the 21st of March. When this date was announced we were temporarily quite pacified. A week passed, and while Yokoyama's ship waited only the "very soon" came from the General Staff. The smile met the increasing impatience—for each outburst was worse than the one before—with the polite, the deferential query whether we would not prefer to go on a transport rather than on our chartered vessel. Possibly the smile foresaw division and discussion. But were the chosen few, who had been sent from afar at great expense to their papers, trained to neglect patches of local color, however offered or wherever found? With one voice came our "Yes." Moreover, we were ready to go aboard at any moment, and we said so.

Now that we are started, we wonder what lies in store for us in this campaign of an Oriental power in a hermit land. Officially, we know as little of where we shall disembark as we do of General Kuropatkin's plans. The time of our return is shrouded in the mystery of the vicissitudes of a great war which has scarcely begun. The departure from Shimbashi, when an Anglo-Saxon hurrah broke the long record of ban-zais for departing troops, the parting of a dozen foreigners from their American and European friends, reminded us again of the romance and the picturesqueness of our position. There was never a war at all comparable to this, and never a war which drew so many foreign correspondents. The uncertainty of our position, the uncertainty of the conditions under which we shall live, brought a havoc of buying at the last moment on the part of men who have studied their requirements in the field while they waited. We have everything, from postage stamps done up in oiled paper to tool chests the size of a pocketbook—and now we are in the hands of Mr. Yokoyama.

Whether we bring profit or loss, praise or blame, to Mr. Yokoyama, we shall make him famous. Mr. Yokoyama has made a contract to transport our kits, from tents to extra buttons and shoestrings, and to give us three meals of European flavor a day. He has in this harbor a four-hundred-ton steamer, the character of whose cargo and whose passengers adds the finishing touch of the unusual to our departure.

In one cabin are twelve bunks. The first arrivals have staked out their claims with posted visiting-cards and baggage bestowed. Below decks are ponies which are to bear the "specials" to the victory or the defeat of editorial decision. In the hold are the outfits.

COPYRIGHT 1904 BY COLLIERS WEEKLY

The Steamship "Nagatamaru," which carried the War Correspondents from Japan to Korea

PHOTOGRAPH BY JAMES H. HARE, COLLIER'S SPECIAL WAR PHOTOGRAPHER WITH THE JAPANESE ARMY IN KOREA

COPYRIGHT 1904 BY COLLIER'S WEEKLY

Hoisting the "charger" of a Collier's photographer on board the steamer at Kobe

The Japanese contractor in charge of the correspondents, and his staff

EMBARKING THE FIRST GROUP OF WAR CORRESPONDENTS BOUND FOR THE FRONT AFTER THEIR TWO MONTHS OF INACTION IN TOKIO

PHOTOGRAPHS BY JAMES H. HARE, COLLIER'S SPECIAL WAR PHOTOGRAPHER WITH THE JAPANESE ARMY OF INVASION IN MANCHURIA

In handling the problem of war correspondence, the Japanese military authorities acted with characteristic shrewdness and ability. So long as it was considered necessary absolutely to screen all field operations, two hundred correspondents were hospitably entertained in Tokio under the strictest censorship ever devised. When the embargo was lifted a contractor (with assistants) was hired by the army authorities for the maintenance of the correspondents in the field. Such an organization will accompany each group of foreign observers Never before was there such a pile of baggage as that—bags and rolls and little Japanese officers' trunks, but nothing outside of the hold-all (unconventional in construction to suit the owner's whim) which would make the baggage smasher or porter feel at home. We need no longer discuss the relative merits of sleeping-bags and open blankets; they will be put to the test, leaving the discussion as warm as ever for future campaigns. But in that incongruous pile are furs and thick woollens for winter campaigning. (It was in February that the first "very soon" was sounded, and we provided for the cold of northern Korea and southern Manchuria.) Every separate piece is marked with the correspondent's name in Roman and in Japanese lettering; and "soon, very soon" we hope that all will be deposited on the beach, and we shall raise our tents and saddle our horses and go to work instead of to official dinners.

Acting as quartermaster of the dumpy craft is a serious Japanese (Mr. Yokoyama's representative) who has "Canteen" embroidered on a white circle on his arm. We, too, must wear white circlelets with the name of the publication which we represent. Thus we shall not be taken for Russians, though the Russians may take us; and I doubt if the Japanese would mind much if the Russians did. For every correspondent there is an interpreter and a servant. When we are not dependent upon Yokoyama, we are dependent upon them. Finally, we are in the hands of the all-doing, never-talking General Staff, and bound for an unknown destination. At Moji we board a transport, and Mr. Yokoyama's ship, with the horses, the kits, the servants, and the interpreters, proceeds at eight knots to the rendezvous at Chemulpo. After that, it is to be hoped that the correspondents may write about something besides themselves.

MARKING TIME IN TOKIO: A WAR DRAMA

By RICHARD HARDING DAVIS, Collier's Special War Correspondent in Japan

COPYRIGHT 1904 BY COLLIER'S WEEKLY

The Japanese War Office has issued a war correspondent's pass to Mr. Davis, and has assigned him to the Second Column. Until this takes the field, Mr. Davis will write of events in the Japanese Capital

YOKOHAMA, March 20, 1904

WHEN you have journeyed this far to send home news of battles, it is hard to find that the nearest you may come to being a war correspondent is to write criticisms of war plays. For, although the General Staff has given each of us a correspondent's pass, it maintains the attitude of the anxious mother:

"Oh, mother, may I go in to swim?"
"Oh, yes, my darling daughter,
Hang your clothes on a hackery limb,
But don't go near the water."

What made the war drama I saw the other night interesting was that it was so like the war drama as we have it at home. It pulled the same strings, it paused in the same places for the same applause, and, except that it ranked love of country higher than love of humans, it was an old-fashioned Academy of Music melodrama in a Japanese uniform. In my ignorance, I had supposed the Japanese theatre would be as far removed from our own as is the Chinese theatre in Chinatown. It was not at all like that theatre. The only great dissimilarity lay in front of the curtain, especially in the orchestra floor. The orchestra floor slanted down toward the stage and was divided, by rails of polished wood raised a foot from the matting, into tiny squares. It looked like a mammoth cucumber frame without the glass. Each square held four persons seated crosslegged on the matting, and with them their tea things, trays of food, and pipe boxes. The ushers who brought the tea and food ran and leaped with the agility of tight-rope performers along these polished rails. The musicians occupied the lower stage box. The chorus sat in the one opposite. It was a "Greek" chorus, not a "show girl" chorus. The aisles, or what in our theatres would be aisles, were long, narrow platforms. When with us the prestidigitator comes down among the spectators to borrow watches and take rabbits from a high hat, he walks on just such a platform. In Japan they form a part of the stage. Actors make their entrances and exits upon them, appearing from the part of the house that we call the lobby, but which in a Japanese theatre is the dressing-room. To see an actor make his entrance, the spectators must twist about and look behind them. Sometimes they are too comfortably settled to do this, and the actor is forced to deliver his entrance speech to the backs of the audience. Some of our stars would not approve of a Japanese theatre.

Except that it is furnished in dark wood and lighted by only a few gas jets, the auditorium resembles one of our own. The Japanese, like ourselves, have a nickname for the highest gallery. They call it the "deaf man's" gallery. At first, when the actors ran up and down the platforms, it was confusing, but one soon became accustomed to it; and when, during an act which took place at sea, the platform was solemnly spread with a strip of canvas three feet wide, painted to represent storm-tossed waves, which rolled over the heads of the spectators, one accepted it as an inlet of the ocean.

The stage of the theatre in Tokio is twice as wide as one of the ordinary size at home, but the flies hang only half as high. This is in keeping with the tiny proportions of the Japanese house. Were the proscenium arch as lofty as with us, four-fifths of the scenery would consist of blue sky. This smallness of the Japanese dwelling and the great breadth of the stage make it possible in one scene to show several houses of actual size, separated by streets and gardens in which people pass in rickshaws, or trim the flowers. The construction of the Japanese house gives the stage manager another advantage; for, as the Japanese work, eat, and receive visitors in houses one side of which is open to the air, it is possible to show what is going on at the same moment both inside and outside of the same dwelling.

But other features of the Tokio theatre did not lean toward realism. The prompter sat on the stage in view of the audience, and the fact that he was dressed in a skin-tight suit of black with a black hood, like a chimney sweep or a goblin, and that he kept his face always from the spectators, was supposed to render him invisible. Another black imp remained on the scene to act as dresser and stage manager. It was his duty to assist an actor in making any alteration in his costume, and to carry away any prop that had been used: a letter, fan, or tea-tray. If he thought an actor's sash was not properly fastened, he would creep up behind him, even though the actor were speaking, and tie it properly. We were not supposed to see him do this. As a matter of fact, it was curious how soon one failed to note his presence.

The war drama was preceded by a classic play. The same actors appeared in both, but their methods in each were entirely different. In the war drama they were conventional, natural people; in the classic play they followed the traditions of the old days and of the old players, and moved by jerks with long strides, speaking in shrill, falsetto tones, or remaining for many moments like mute, immovable idols. Originally, what is now the classic drama was played by marionettes, and when real people were substituted for them, it is said the actors, instead of imitating their fellow-men as they saw them around them, copied the dolls. This theory is offered to explain the jerky gestures from knee and elbow, the fashion of standing with legs far apart, bent at the knee, with the toes turned out. The strident tones are supposed to be an imitation of the false voices used by the man who talked for the different dolls. Others believe that the stilted acting in these old dramas is a correct but exaggerated reflection of the actual movements and gestures of the days that were choked with artificiality, ceremony, and etiquette. Now these classic plays give the best picture of ancient Japan which it is possible to obtain. They reproduce

WRECK OF THE RUSSIAN GUNBOAT "KORIETZ" IN THE HARBOR OF CHEMULPO

PHOTOGRAPH BY E. L. DUNN, COLLIER'S SPECIAL WAR PHOTOGRAPHER WITH THE JAPANESE ARMY IN KOREA

The "Koriets," sunk in company with the "Variat" on February 9, was untouched by Japanese shells, but was set on fire and blown up to prevent her capture. The awful destruction wrought by the explosion of her magazines and boilers gives a faint idea of what befell the Russian battleship "Petropavlovsk," after a Japanese mine had torn her bottom out the days of the Shoguns, the Daimios, the two-sword men. They show modern Japan how these men lived and moved, how they wore their robes and armor, the ceremony that obtained among them, and their manner of using the sword, the teacup, and fan. With us the comedies of Congreve or Sheridan are so seldom played that even in London it is difficult to find men who are at their ease in wigs, small clothes, and ruffles, who can present a snuff-box with elegance, or exclaim "damme" and "fore Gad" with conviction. They have not been trained to the artificial manners of the eighteenth century. But in Japan modern plays are a very modern innovation, while the traditions of the classic drama through many years have been handed down from actor to actor, and always to the best actors. For here the best of the older actors selects the most promising among the younger, and adopts him as his son, instructing him in all that pertains to his art. When the great actor dies, the pupil takes his name, and inherits not only his experience, but his museum of priceless robes, kimonos, swords, and armor.

The war drama was entirely modern. It had no chorus to interrupt with its comments and prophecies; the costumes and uniforms were such as you saw before you in the auditorium, and the stage properties were so up-to-date that they included one of Walter Camp's eight-day clocks, which is the first thing that shocks the seeker after atmosphere in every paper-screened, doll-like house in Japan.

The events in the first act occurred some four years ago in a Japanese seaport outside a Shinto temple, where the priests, villagers, and fishermen were holding a festival. Into their happy holiday came a band of drunken Russian sailors, who threatened the priests, beat the old men, and, what was much worse, kissed the women. With screams the villagers fled and the Russians pursued. A fisherman, who in the classic piece had played a Daimio, arrived on the scene and announced that alone he would drive the sailors from the village. As he rolled up his skirts, leaving his legs bare, the audience howled and applauded just as they do when one of our leading men throws off his coat and tucks up his sleeves. The curtain fell on the fisherman's vow to avenge the insult to the temple and the women. The curtain rose as soon as it fell, and we found that the stage revolved like a railroad turn-table, and that while one act was going forward the scene was being set for the next. In this act, the fisherman kept his promise, and the sailors with their officer were driven to their shore boat. But as they pushed off the Russian officer shot the fisherman and he died. The turntable spun again and we saw the home of his son. Four years had elapsed and war between Russia and Japan was in the air. This son was the captain of a torpedo boat, and he told how his father had been killed by a Russian, a captain, now Admiral Makaroff, whom he in turn would kill. A sailor sauntered down the long platform, opened the garden gate, and gave the officer his summons to join his ship. War had been declared. The officer retired and returned in uniform. The parting from his wife and his little boy, from our point of view as to how such a parting would take place, was interesting. The Japanese officer could not exhibit the least emotion, and neither he nor his wife touched the other, nor, of course, did they embrace or kiss. The woman brought the husband a photograph of herself and her son, and he looked a long time at it and stuck it inside his coat. The scene was real and solemn—the sailor who had brought the message loitering outside in the garden, yawning unconcernedly, or grinning at the little nezan waiting at the steps to put on her master's boots; the boy admiring and tugging at his father's sword; the wife weeping, but making no outcry, and kneeling at her husband's feet, and the officer holding himself in hand and saluting her prostrated figure as he marched away down the long platform. I must confess that it made me choke, and the men with me all went out and drank to the Japanese navy.

In the next act we saw a torpedo destroyer off Port Arthur; the waves rolled and tossed, and the men on the torpedo boat changed watch, scanned the sea with binoculars, and at last were sent to quarters. They awaited the dash upon the battleships. The officer of the previous act stood alone on the bridge. He took out the photograph of his wife and boy, and in the moving searchlight gazed at it. Then scornfully and contemptuously he tore it into tiny bits, threw it into the sea, and shouted the order to attack. The audience of husbands, wives, and children shouted in sympathy. The torpedo was launched, the shells flew, the first attack on Port Arthur had begun. An officer was shot in the arm, and a sailor tried to bind up the wound. The officer threw the sailor off, and to shame him beat the open wound repeatedly with his fist. There was much more of this same spirit illustrated in

BREAKING THE WORLD'S RECORD FOR PUTTING THE SHOT

In the Relay Race Carnival at Philadelphia, on April 23, Ralph W. Rose, a Freshman from the University of Michigan, equaled the world's record for putting the 16-pound shot in competition, with a distance of 48 feet 3 inches. Later, in an exhibition effort, he eclipsed this feat with a put of 48 feet 3 1/2 inches, but only the former figure stands to his credit officially. This is enough, however, to stamp Rose as one of the world's foremost athletes. He stands 6 feet 4 inches, is of gigantic build, and is expected to make a football player of great renown.

the war drama, but the climax was the tearing up of the photograph, the sacrifice of every other emotion to that of patriotism. For here "my country" is first. Lafcadio Hearn tells how in the last war officers shot themselves, the modern hara-kiri, because they were left at the base, or were too ill to lead their men into action. Already in this war three have died for this same ideal. One officer shot himself because he was taken prisoner. A recruiting sergeant, because a private wept when saying farewell to his parents, drew his sword and struck him dead, and, on the ground that Japan has no need for soldiers who weep, the sergeant was not punished. The third was a young lieutenant, who, when ordered to Korea, found no one with whom he could leave his little daughter. That his mind might not dwell on her possible sufferings in his absence rather than on his country's work, he killed her. He was ordered to be tried for murder after the war, and sent to the front.

I do not know of any writer of melodrama in England, the home of melodrama, who has ventured to place the love of country over the love of sweetheart or wife and children. Even William Terris could not have made that sentiment popular, and I doubt if an American audience would care for it. If it were known that an American officer had halted at the foot of San Juan Hill to tear up the portrait of his wife and boy, he might get to the top of the hill, but he never would get to the White House.

GRIEF-STRICKEN RUSSIA

By JOHN CALLAN O'LAUGHLIN

Collier's Special War Correspondent at St. Petersburg

Copyright, 1904, by Collier's Weekly

ST. PETERSBURG, April 17

RUSSIA is to-day a grief-stricken nation. The requiem sung over the sunken Petropavlovsk by the waves that wash Electric Cliff has been heard in every part of the Empire. I saw the Czar on his knees testifying to the greatness of the loss he had sustained. Down the cheeks of the Empress Dowager rolled tears of sorrow at the national misfortune. The young face of the Empress, more self-controlled, gave evidence of the internal emotion from which she was suffering. At the Admiralty, the men who had known and loved Makaroff, and who appreciated the effect of the destruction of another battleship, wept bitterly over the disaster. The night the news reached St. Petersburg, a clerk of the Department of Agriculture, with whom I was talking, burst into tears. A blinding snowstorm swept the streets of the city the next morning, but from the earliest hour I saw Mujiks clustering around bulletin-boards upon which had been posted the official despatches announcing the sinking of the Petropavlovsk and the death of Vice-Admiral Makaroff. They formed sober little groups. There were no loud comments, no criticisms, no noise. When the despatches had been read, the crowd would melt away and another would quickly form. That day all the flags and bunting which had decorated the houses and streets in honor of the resurrection of Christ were removed.

The news seemed at first to daze the people. I called at the home of Lieutenant Travlinsky, who commands the torpedo boat Reshitelny at Port Arthur. "It can not be, it can not be," cried the lieutenant's sister. "How can it be?" pathetically asked his mother. In this household, as in others throughout Russia, no anger was evinced toward the Japanese. There was no cry for vengeance. Few charged the Japanese with the responsibility of blowing up the ship, not because of any feeling of pride, but rather because they did not think of it. Blindly disregarding the human agency that caused the disaster, the average Russian said simply: "God blew up the Petropavlovsk," and, after a moment's reflection, added: "And God will blow up the Japanese fleet."

But in spite of this fatalism, the immediate effect of the Petropavlovsk's destruction was to increase public interest in the war to a degree hitherto unshown. Walking along the Nevsky Prospekt the day following the disaster, I saw newspaper vendors hustled by crowds anxious to buy the latest intelligence from the front. Hundreds gathered around the Admiralty and near the palace, dumbly awaiting further news, and occasionally, from the yellow building over which flies the flag of the navy, would come out a picturesquely clad peasant woman, her eyes filled with tears because of official confirmation of her fears. That night, save a few naval officers, who did not seem to appreciate

Weighing the gold bars in the Assay Office

Packing the bullion in kegs for cartage to the steamer

SHIPPING SIX AND ONE HALF MILLION DOLLARS' WORTH OF GOLD FROM WALL STREET TO PARIS

This money was sent on April 30, to meet the first payment on the purchase price of the Panama Canal, and a part of it will probably be used to assist in handling a Russian war loan

FORMAL OPENING OF THE LOUISIANA PURCHASE EXPOSITION, ST. LOUIS, APRIL 30, 1904

At noon, Saturday, April 30, after five years of preparation, a golden button, pushed by President Roosevelt, set in motion the machinery of the St. Louis Exposition. The exercises attracted a great multitude, which found the buildings ready for the public, the adornment of the grounds delayed by bad weather, and about forty per cent of the exhibit space yet to be filled. This record is better than that of the latest Paris Exposition and not quite so good as that of Chicago.

the decency of the moment, theatres and cafés lacked their usual throngs of pleasure-seekers.

By direct command of the Emperor, a requiem mass was sung for the repose of the soul of Vice-Admiral Makaroff. On the day the news first came and the miraculous escape of Grand Duke Cyril, a possible heir to the throne, who was attached to Makaroff's staff, was reported, a thanksgiving service was held in the chapel of the Winter Palace. Here gathered all the members of the imperial family. The grief of the rulers, the military services, and the people, was expressed at noon the next day at the Church of the Admiralty. In this white marble edifice, with its garish gold ikons, its three shining crosses, and its historic religious pictures, the heart of the nation was placed quivering before the throne of God.

Mourning the Loss of Makaroff

A few nights before, the highest dignitaries of the land had assisted at a brilliant festival in the Winter Palace in recognition of the anniversary of the rising of Christ. In the uniforms and decorations they wore on that occasion they appeared at the Admiralty Church. The Emperor, tactfully honoring the service that had suffered the most, was in the special full dress of a captain of the navy. His mother and consort were in black, and this sombre color was worn also by the other women there. Kneeling beside the Empress, her face hidden by a heavy crape veil, was the striking-looking widow of Makaroff, and behind her was her beautiful young daughter, Lillie, and son of eleven years.

When the American Republic offers a service in memory of a dead hero, army and navy detachments guard the portals of the church and line surrounding thoroughfares. Thus it was, in time of peace, for Lawton and for Sampson. But military Russia, where every tenth person one meets is in uniform, made in time of war no imposing demonstration of force in honor of Makaroff. Not a company of soldiers, not a detachment of sailors stood before the Admiralty Church. When I entered, a sailor took my coat, and I walked up the stairs in a crowd of officials, officers, soldiers, sailors, and civilians of the poorer class. Entering the church proper, I was given a candle, as was every other person who assisted at the service. Even the Czar held one in his left hand. When his Majesty lighted it, the other worshipers followed his example; and soon the daylight that flooded the church was punctuated by hundreds of little flames that vainly attempted to vie with it. Before the altar stood a bishop and three priests chanting, rhythmically, an impressive mass. The imperial party followed it attentively, the Emperor devoutly crossing himself and kneeling at the appointed moments. Toward the close of the service, the bishop, raising his voice above the sweet intoning of the choir, prayed that eternal rest be granted to "Stepan and all warriors who had died bravely for their country." The tears of the Empress Dowager flowed faster, and sobbing was heard in every part of the church. The Emperor showed his participation in the prayer by falling upon his knees, and, with face uplifted, audibly repeating the words of the bishop. At the close of the service, a priest advanced to the Emperor and received the lighted candle from his Majesty. It was placed upon a silver platter, and beside it were put the candles which had burned in the hands of the Empress Dowager and Empress. Lay priests collected the tapers from the rest of the congregation. The Emperor then lifted Madame Makaroff from her knees and murmured his heartfelt sympathy. As he passed out a diplomat said to me: "Did you notice the expression on his Majesty's face? It seemed to me that he has said to himself: 'My hand is upon the plow, and I shall do the work allotted to me, whatever be the personal sacrifice!'" And I could at the moment believe this of Nicholas, for I recalled that he had insisted that Makaroff should go to the East in spite of the desire of that officer to remain at Cronstadt. Driving back to the Winter Palace, the Emperor was saluted by a detachment of soldiers marching toward its barracks. His Majesty knew better than these drab-coated men that, with the Port Arthur fleet a negligible factor, they and their comrades were the only force which could save his country from a terrible and lasting defeat.

The Attitude of the Russian People

I have told of Russia's grief. What is the effect of the disaster? Before describing the attitude of the people, I allowed several days to elapse in order that complete reports might be received from Port Arthur, and the feelings of the people, thus worked upon, should be more patent to the observer. Perhaps the most surprising thing to me was to find slight increase of anger against the Japanese. An editor of a St. Petersburg paper unconsciously gave me the key to the character of the Slav. Before the disaster he emphatically declared his confidence in Russian arms ashore and afloat. After it he said bitterly that Russia could not hope to win. "What can we do against these people?" he continued. "Our fleet is gone, the Japanese can land where they will, and I feel sure that their army will be as well handled as has been their fleet." Thus he swung from optimism to pessimism. But because he feared Russia would not be victorious, he by no means advocated any effort to restore peace. "Russia can not, must not, be beaten," he added, rather illogically. And then one of his confrères, whose temperament enabled quicker recovery from despair, interrupted: "Surely we will win. God is with us. But the war will be long, very long, and we will lose more ships and thousands of men." "That is true," said a third journalist, who hails from the Caucasus. "But I do not think it will be so long as you imagine. Wait until the Cossacks strike. They've shown already what they can do. At Tyeng Tjiou, General Mischenko displayed strategy immeasurably superior to that of the Japanese commander. And do you recall the fight near Eui Tjiou, where thirty-five Cossacks annihilated a detachment of fifty Japanese?" Nevertheless, among high officers of the army, who also believe in the Cossacks, apprehension exists that the proved courage and cleverness of the Japanese will roll back Russia's troops as the ships have been sunk down to the bottom of the waters of Port Arthur. It is not, of course, believed that the Japanese victories will be continuous. The General Staff cries with every other Russian: "Russia must win." However great the sacrifice, Russia will make it because she feels that her national life demands it.

Russia's Plans for the Future

The loss of the Petropavlovsk and the ramming of the Poltava and the Pobieda raises the question: What changes will Russia make in her plan of campaign to meet the new conditions? Her first effort will be to repair her injured battleships and to conserve all the vessels now in the harbor until the Baltic Fleet shall arrive in the China Sea. Reports are being circulated that the Baltic ships will not go out. You can dismiss them from your mind. They are idle speculation. "Even if we knew in advance that the fleet would be annihilated," said an official of the Admiralty, "still would it go to the East. Russia will strain every nerve to be victorious afloat as she must be on land."

A few nights after the disaster, I went to the Maikhailovsky Manège, a huge riding hall which has been transformed into a place of amusement for the people. A theatre had been erected in the back of the hall, and a play entitled "Port Arthur" was being produced. There must have been 5,000 spectators, who followed the performance with the most intense interest. The plot was woven around the love of a hero lieutenant and a Red Cross nurse—the Admiral's daughter. There was blood, hogsheds of it, bursting bombs, and clever Japanese. The ubiquitous American correspondent, resembling Frederick Palmer, played a mighty part in the stirring drama, always beating his English competitor, who recognized his own mental and physical inferiority. The impressive feature of the performance was the final tableau. It represented Russia triumphant, surrounded by the various races that form this heterogeneous Empire. When the curtain rang up upon it a deafening roar of applause burst forth. Again and again the curtain was lifted. It was the finale which the people evidently earnestly seek in the war now in progress.

NOT HONORABLY DISCHARGED

By OCTAVE
THANET

ILLUSTRATED
By
W. L. JACOBS

DOWN near the new bridge, the massive piers of which lift incomplete parapets, lies on the Cambridge side of the Charles a tangle of streets, narrow and mean, filled with wooden houses of two or three or four stories huddling together like sheep in a sheep-fold, their clumsy stoops and crooked bays blistered with age, shabby in front and squalid in the rear. Some day, when the wind is high, a chimney will go wrong, or any of a dozen possible causes will start a conflagration, and it will grow into Pepys's "malicious, bloody fire" and gulp down acres of buildings. But with this the inhabitants of the present do not trouble. They fear, as well as live, from hand to mouth, and only the rent due to-morrow or the pestilence striking to-day concerns them.

One of these streets curves like a weighted fish-rod out of a wider thoroughfare. It has a few dejected shrubs, a few maimed trees, to fling wavering shadows over its uneven sidewalks. The windows show grimy shades or dingy lace curtains. Some of them have the further ornaments of an imitation palm or a red lamp, and a placard of "Students' Rooms." On a certain January Sunday this street was steeped in a silver fog which gave a pastel-like quality to the scene. The snow covered roofs and railings, and was so newly fallen that it was still white in patches. Dull grays and velvety black notes in the bare trees made the high lights brighter. Figures of men or horses were silhouetted rather than cast in relief, with all the detail of them lost. The steel-gray sky hung low and white smoke volleyed out of the tall shop stacks, scalloping wonderful clouds against its luminous shadow. There was a pensive and lonely beauty about it all, not the less lonely that the street was a crowded quarter in a great town. An old man who had come out of one of the houses had eyes for both aspects. He smiled back at the woman who was sweeping the steps and said, as he took the broom from her hands—with a gesture of such long habit that it did not need apology—"Well, snow's uncommon pretty, if it is kinder lonesome!"

He won a wintry smile from the woman, who was elderly, but not old, and had been pretty in her tidier and vainer days, when she did not strain her wisp of gray hair back into a knob on the nape of her neck or wear a dragged little red plaid shawl over a limp black calico with white spots.

"'Tis kinder sightly," she agreed, "but someway sets me thinkin' of funerals."

The man smiled. "Now it makes me think 'bout Gloucester way and how the streets looked my weddin' mornin'. Fifty years ago to-day, Mrs. Carney, and she's been gone twenty-seven, come May; and there ain't been a day I ain't missed her more than the last."

"My land!" exclaimed the woman, a faint glint in her sharp and faded eye, "that's more'n I could say for Carney, though he wa'n't mean, 'ceptin' when he was overtaken, and I will say he was a real good provider. But I couldn't feel to be onresigned when he went, for talk's I would, his bad habits was growin' on him. Well, I hadn't no right to complain. My mother warned me if I would marry a Irishman I'd have to pay the price, but I was one couldn't endure 'why do you do so?' from nobody, so I did marry him, and I did pay the price, land knows! Wust is, I didn't get only a Irish husband, but a Irish son and a Irish daughter."

"Now, Mrs. Carney"—in a voice of propitiation—"your children will be the crown of your old age. There's Denis fighting the battles of his country—"

"Way off in them heathenish Phillipes, that we oughtn't to have took! Well, I dunno but 'tis better'n fightin' in the Port and gittin' juggled!"

"He's a kind-hearted boy, and he's sent you a parrot and a pineapple frock! And there's Delight—"

"Much delight I got out'er her till this last year. Why, I whipped that girl when she was sixteen years old to keep her from gadding with folks no decent girl would be seen with."

The broom fell on the porch as the old man straightened and looked at the mother almost sternly. "Don't you ever, ever try do that again to her, Mrs. Carney, or her blood, or worse than her blood, will be on your head!" he warned. "You got to remember she's got her father's recklessness and your obstinacy in her, and that's a mixture to be handled awful gingerly!"

No one else in the street would have ventured to say as much to Mrs. Carney, who had by no means lost her youthful inaptitude for receiving advice; but Jonas Wainwright was a high favorite with her, and she only shrugged her shoulders. "Well, anyhow, I stopped her, and she's improved right along sence," she flung back; then added, "I ain't denyin' that you had a lot to do with it. Delight sets the world and all by you, Mr. Wainwright."

The old man's smile was bright, and so little had

An old man had come out of one of the houses

Mrs. Carney seen it for the last week that it seemed brighter. It fairly illumined his delicate old face. His clean-shaven profile and his curling gray hair belonged, somehow, to his old-fashioned black frock-coat and the "dickey" on his Sunday white shirt. By trade, Jonas Wainwright was a wood-carver, a handicraft which admits of cleanliness every day for its followers; and every day Jonas shaved, but it was only of a Sunday that he allowed himself white linen. "He's a real handsome old man," thought Mrs. Carney. She looked at him kindly.

"I guess I set the world by Delight, too," he said, "is she gone out?"

"She went down to the Social Union this mornin', but I'm looking for her. You goin' to church, I expect?"

"Well, no, ma'am, I'm going to go to Gloucester."

"Good land! to visit your folks?"

"My folks are all in the graveyard"—but he smiled faintly instead of sighing. "No, I'd a notion I'd jest git a glimpse of the old town once more. Well, good-by, Mrs. Carney. You've been real kind and good to me, always. I was sorry to keep you waiting for the board."

"My sakes alive!" interrupted Mrs. Carney vivaciously, "if my lodgers was all's prompt as you I'd be a lot better off! And you paid me all up yesterday. I hope you ain't casting round to change your boardin'-place, Mr. Wainwright, or dissatisfied—"

"I'd be pretty demandin' if I wasn't satisfied, Mrs. Carney. No, ma'am, I'm not looking for any other boardin'-place."

"Well, come back early; we're going to have pigs' feet for supper, and Delight wants you to come."

Wainwright only had lodgings with the Carneys. He "found himself." He made appropriate acknowledgments for the social courtesy. It was only after he had shaken Mrs. Carney's hand, raised his worn silk hat, and limped down the street that it occurred to her he had said no word of acceptance. She was pondering a little on this and some other unusual traits of her lodger, when Delight, the daughter, returned. Delight had the attenuated but trimly pretty figure, the fine carriage, and the gift of making an impression in toilets with very little money which belongs to the Irish-American shop-girls often. In addition, she had a rich color, long black curling eyelashes, and a wonderful mop of black hair parted on one side to sweep duskily above a black brow and a brilliant blue eye. Her glance swept carelessly down the street and lingered on Wainwright's lean shape as if it were a good sight to her. "He's taking the street cars," she said.

"Well, he is!" exclaimed the mother, with a disproportionate interest in a trivial act; "he must feel flush; he paid me in full yesterday night. I was kinder glad to git the money, but I wouldn't have pressed him if he'd gone a week longer."

"I should think not," the girl cried emphatically. She spoke with the purity of articulation and the correctness of speech which the public schools of Massachusetts have given to the humblest scholars of this generation. The only trace of her Celtic origin was a melodious deepening of her tones. "He helps us more than his board. How did he seem this morning, mother?"

"Why, he seemed real chirked up and chipper. You don't 'spose he could have got that pension? I wisht he'd git it; he'd be real well fixed, then; there's so much back money, three, four thousand at least. He'd ought to have it; for he fit all through the war, riz to be a sergeant, and wouldn't be a lieutenant 'cause he said he didn't know enuff. And he wouldn't have asked for a pension if he hadn't needed it bad. And all the fuss jess because his capt'in thought his name was John 'stid of Jonas, and them blamed ignorant fools in Washington can't straighten out a little mistake like that. I ain't got no patience with 'em nor the President, nuther. Say, how long's he been lodgin' with us?"

"Two years last week," said the girl, and for some reason a dull red burned in her cheeks and slowly spread over her brow; "he came when the Moodys moved."

"That was jess after his brother died. I remember I seen the funeral creepin' past, jess a hearse and two carriages, and I thought it a pretty meachin' funeral till I found out they was sending the corp' to Gloucester. The old captain was bedrid ten years, wasn't he? And not the best of company, neither. Ann 'Liza Moody told me he was the most demandin' man and the wust at profane swearin' she ever knew of. And the temper of him! He'd pitch anything handy at you when he got his dander riz. One time 'twas his pocket-knife with the blade open and next 'twas a teapot—all the same to him. You can't convince Ann 'Liza that he didn't kill that sailor man, and she was free to say that 'twas a pity Jonas Wainwright got him cleared of murder. He spent an awful lot of money on the lawin' and then had to keep him. Such orderings of Providence make me sick!"

"Ann 'Liza told me Mr. Wainwright owned as much as twenty thousand dollars once, and he used to put a dollar in the plate at Trinity every Sunday of his life."

"Think of it," sighed Mrs. Carney, "and every last cent of it gone, what between the lawin' and that bank that broke and the doctors' bills. But poor Jonas he went back to his trade, and he got the skipper every mortal fool thing he'd ask for. Tryin' to kinder console him for not bein' footloose. And the skipper he was sich a nat'ral born pig he jest took it all, not so much as thankin' for it. He grunted even 'bout his going to church Sunday mornings. But Jonas Wainwright did make a stand there."

"He told me once that he'd gone to Trinity Church every Sunday, 'cept when he was twice out of town, for twenty years."

"Shaw! Come to think, I guess he did. And he was clean daft 'bout Bishop Brooks. Why, he'd buy his sermons and read 'em to the captain. And the time Bishop Brooks died I never seen a man mourn truer'n he done."

"Did you know, mother, that he spoke to Bishop Brooks once?"

"Dear me, suz! What did he say?"

"Oh, just Good-morning, Dr. Brooks, can I git your car for you? It was one day when he had preached at Trinity and we were outside waiting. Uncle Jonas was mortified, afterward, because he hadn't called him 'Bishop,' but I guess Bishop Brooks didn't mind."

"What did he say?"

"Why, he looked at the Grand Army button on Mr. Wainwright's coat and said, 'No, thank you, he was walking,' and then he said, 'Haven't I seen you in Trinity Church?' 'Every Sunday but three for twenty years,' said Uncle Jonas, 'if you were there, for I was.' 'You sit by the third pillar in the gallery,' said Bishop Brooks. Uncle Jonas looked as if he could kneel right down in the mud and glorify Dr. Brooks. But somebody came up for the Bishop just then and he went off, but he told Uncle Jonas to be sure come see him if he ever was in any perplexity or trouble."

"Did he?"

"No, he didn't think that he had any great enough occasion, and not very long after that Bishop Brooks died. He wished, then, he'd gone. Ma, how did Uncle Jonas seem to-day?"

"Why, he seemed a sight chippered, seemed to me. He brought you a box of candy, yesterday, when he paid me."

"He's always so good to me," sighed the girl.

"Well, I guess you're good to him, too," snapped Mrs. Carney; "he never got his darning done neater than you do it, and find your own thread, too. Well, if you got time to stand out here gassin', I ain't, and I guess Barney Martin kin find you inside the house as well's out."

Though the words sounded peevish, Mrs. Carney was well pleased with her daughter, as Delight perfectly understood. Yet as she went into the house the girl sighed to herself—"I wish I'd seen Uncle Jonas before he went!"

Had she been able to behold Jonas Wainwright at the moment of her thought, she would have seen nothing to justify any depression, only a tidy little old man with a singularly interested and alert expression, swaying on a car-strap which he had just clutched, having given his seat to a feeble little woman with a baby, and his friendly admonition to the athletic Harvard student and the young negro fop who had sat placidly in front of her gyrations.

The car bumped past Beacon Street and Commonwealth Avenue and veered unwieldily down Boylston. From his side, Wainwright could not see Trinity Church, so he went out on the platform. He looked long and intently at the great pile, perhaps the noblest monument of the most imaginative American architect. In that subdued and pallid atmosphere it seemed built of shadow stones, massive only as clouds are, and about it the shrubs and trees of the Public Gardens dripped on the thawing snow, bleak and sad.

The old man sighed for the first time. "Well, good-by," he was thinking. "I'd like to go once more to church, and I'd like once more to see Dely, but, maybe, I'd give myself away, and it would be one more day to pay for!"

He did not look up again until the car was descending the gentle incline past the ragged wall of shrubs, which is so dazzling with light and color in summer, into the roaring subway. In the subway he changed to the elevated road, but the train was late and he had barely time to swing aboard the Gloucester car at the North Station. Not since he went to Gloucester on the wild skipper's last journey had he been on the cars. "Seats spotted jest like they were then," he muttered. He did not look out the window. He was seeing visions of his brother and his brother's life, from the time of his reckless youth before he went to sea, and Jonas used to help his mother dissemble his drunken headaches before the neighbors, to those days of suspense in the court-room, his brother at his side, while the impassive twelve faces on whom everything hung mocked their torment, and so on to the final dragging years of helplessness, the caged wild beast breaking his helpless, sullen heart.

Jonas had almost hated him in the early time, because he made their mother suffer so much; but there came years of calm when Abner was sailing the seas, in reputable condition on his visits, and showing a lavish good-will by strange gifts—ivories and silks and fragrant woods. During this halcyon period the mother had lived contentedly with her dutiful son and his wife, and it was her good hap to die before Abner returned in chains to be tried for murder; his wife, also, was dead by then, so that Jonas was the only one to be punished for Abner's sins; and the man's danger, his high, if brutal, courage, and the misery peeping behind his callous pride, drew his brother to him. "I guess 'twas knowing I was the only mortal being he had to help him, and that he was all I'd left to need me, made me kinder cling to him"—thus the old man's thoughts ran as the train moved slowly out on to the flats past the inky black piles and the tidewater scummed with ice-bound snow—"and he was real good company when he was easier, and never did much harm in his contrary fits, 'cept to the furniture!" He gave a reminiscent smile to some grotesque outbreaks of the past. "And he certainly did git more peaceful and Christian-like toward the end. I make no doubt he and ma are in heaven together now. I do hope he's got over wanting to shy things at folks, though, or the angels will have to skip lively." Here he checked a grin severely. "I'd ought to be ashamed of myself. Someway I never could take things serious as I ought. Poor ma used to reprove me oftener for that than anything else I remember. Well, I bless God I'd a tidy sum saved up, and she'd a cab to go to church in rainy Sundays, and all the street-car rides she wanted; and how she and mother did enjoy gitting a good dinner when the Gloucester folks would come to town! Ah, well! I didn't have those good times long enough to git any foolish vainglory, for I never held my head up after Abner's trial—" His thoughts, as is the ill-regulated manner of thoughts, misted from definite sentences into pictures or sensations, and he was again seated in that greasy arm-chair in the hot court-room, with the jury loling uncomfortably behind their palm-leaf fans, and the judge in his court-room black (it was before the day of robes for the Superior Court), and the heart withering within him, because of familiar sea-port faces drifting in among the strangers. He never made sign of recognition, and he never went back to Gloucester until he went with his brother's coffin. For one thing, it was a Gloucester lad whom Abner had slain, whether with or without adequate provocation, and there was an ugly story of money owed and a debt wiped out foully in the creditor's blood. He never knew quite the rights of the tale, but he found out enough afterward to induce him to send his last thousands to the boy's mother, and to say his only reproachful words to Abner. "It's what our mother would have made you do if you had the money," he said, "and I'll do it for you, for her sake, not yours."

Well, he had held up his head with the best of them to the last. He held it up after his brother went. He paid the doctor, he paid the undertaker, and he would have been able to lay up a little sum for his old age if his eyes had lasted. At this, he was back at his bench, with the work which he had loved so blurring before him; because of the blur he was slow, he was careful. The envelope did not hold as much as once by many dollars on the weekly pay-days. But the work hadn't fallen off. It was just as true. His hand was as firm—if he did have needle-like pains jabbing him with every stroke. Yet it cut a man to feel himself growing old, and not a living soul to care for or to care for him. Only Delight; he had saved the girl from more than he knew himself, for he was of too chivalrous and clean a nature to let his fancy act as scavenger among squalid temptations. She meant to be a good girl; she would be a good girl—of that he was assured, and he went no further; therefore he gave her the deference and the respect he kept for all good women, and by degrees grew to care for her tenderly. But she was young, she was pretty, she would be finding a mate and happiness, and he was only a poor lodger of her mother's who barely could pay his way. Of a sudden the scene shifted, as he thought: "But now I can't pay my way!" for he was in the doctor's office, and the doctor—a good, kind man—was telling him with gentle circumlocution that he could not use his eyes for a year; they would never be any better, they might grow worse, possibly with rest and care they might improve, but any use of them in his trade would ruin them.

Well, he was glad that the only feeling in his mind was, "Jonas, you've been a soldier, you've got to git out of this here in good shape!" and every word he said was "Thank you, sir; I guess you've broken it to me as easy as you could. How much is it?" He remembered just how the old wallet felt in his fingers, and how it flashed over him that he mightn't have enough money saved up for him; but the doctor said, "Well, I don't think I'd like to take money for telling a man a thing like that."

So he thanked him another time. It was kind of the doctor to shake hands with him, and he went away. He went, crushed like, telling himself he'd have to go on the town. Standing in his room, the full bitterness swept over him, and he cried aloud, "If I'd only died first!" As he spoke he saw the pipe which Abner carried all over the world and left to him, and it was as if he heard Abner saying again: "Once the pirates caught me, but they couldn't scare me, for I always carried round with me the way out. I wasn't going to give up my mates. Well, I got rescued then, but it's a big thing to have your own rescue always ready."

"But," said Jonas—he remembered what he said perfectly—"you wouldn't have the right to use the way unless it was sure death anyhow, and guess you would have the right to choose an easy death for a hard one, 'specially if those heathen peoples was trying to persuade you to give information that might hurt your shipmates, and human nature might give way!"

Abner had nodded: "I'll say this for you, Jo, you're not a sneak, but I guess a man's got the right to go when it gits so bad he's no comfort in living."

"No," said Jonas. "I take it a man's put here by God Almighty just as a soldier's given a post, and he's no right to go till he gits his discharge. So long's a single person needs him he hasn't got his discharge."

He remembered the talk as if it were yesterday. And distinctly, as clearly as a mortal voice could sound, he heard Abner's sea-roughened tones. "Well, you got your discharge, all right, to-day!" Had he? Was it possible that this which had seemed to him an unbearable burden was really the mercy of God? His permit to leave a hard and lonely world? He walked to the little window where he could look out toward the reddening skies where the sunset was hidden by the city roofs. Always his simple heart had imaged supernal glories behind that pageant. He softly repeated a hymn which he had found copied by his wife in one of her books, after her death:

"Beyond the hills where the suns go down,
And brightly beckon as they go,
There lies the land of fair renown,
The land which I so soon shall know."

"I wish it was soon!" he mused. "Oh! I do wish it. I've been lonesome so long." He went back to the pipe, standing sunken in thought for a long while, considering whether as a Christian man he could leave the world of his own motion. In his distempered musings he cast his eyes about the room; directly before him was a picture of Bishop Brooks, which he had bought in more prosperous days, framed according to the taste of the department-store clerk who had framed photographs in Gloucester before he came to Boston, and who surrounded the noble face with red plush and bronze. "Bishop Brooks," said the old soldier, "I'm in a very great deal of trouble. I followed your sermons faithful in my daily life for more'n twenty years. I don't remember I ever knowingly wronged a human creature. I wa'n't improvident nor idle. I lay up a plenty for my old age. But I couldn't see my own brother on the gallows, so it all went; and now I'm old and my eyes are gone and I ain't got any folks. I do want to be gone to my folks and my wife. Bishop, you told me to come see you if I was in trouble. Here I be. Tell me I've got the right to go."

The picture made no sign, the bright eyes looked at him with their look of comprehension and encouragement, the faint smile on the beautiful, sensitive mouth did not stir; but as Jonas half turned to the pipe he heard his brother's voice again: "You got your discharge, Jonas, the doctor gave it to you to-day! Nobody needs you; you'll be eating other folks' bread; you've a right to step out; you ought to step out!"

"That's so," he answered, as he would have answered a human speech.

After that he did not argue the question any more; but made his preparations for his final exit with a view to cause as little trouble as possible. He sold some of his tools and his watch. This gave him funds to pay his board bill, and the tailor who had pressed and cleaned his best suit, as well as for the cheapest decent funeral. He made his will, leaving his few articles of furniture to Mrs. Carney, and the simple trinkets which his wife had possessed to Delight. He left her, likewise (as an afterthought), any pension money which might come to him. The application had been pigeon-holed in some Washington office so long that it had ceased to be even an asset of his hopes. Last of all, he made up a small packet of his wife's letters to him when they were "keeping company" and he was in the wars, a few little belongings of the twin boys who died in their babyhood, his wife's picture and his mother's, and some old family daguerrotypes; this packet he addressed in Delight's care, but with the direction "To Be Burned." He hesitated a moment ere he added the picture of Bishop Brooks to the heap on the table. "I don't feel some-ways like I wanted anybody to be handling that, and maybe not quite so particular to be respectful to it," he said. Then he wrote a letter to Delight which he marked, "Not to be opened till five o'clock." Having thus arranged his worldly affairs, and having set his room in order, the morning being come for some hours already, he shut the door behind him and fared forth on his quest of peace.

He had determined to go to Gloucester, to walk to his wife's grave in the old Wainwright lot, and he had with him the means of quick and painless sleep. His motives had been explained to Delight, and inclosed in the envelope was enough money for his last rites, which, as he had said, "won't cost near so much if I'm already in Gloucester, for they charge awful for a trip in a coffin."

Thus at peace, and his simple testament complete, Jonas went not merely with composure, but with thankful joy, on his last journey. Never had he or his wife doubted that they would be reunited in another world, and it was with an artless and pure-hearted anthropomorphism that he speculated on the future. "I'd ought to be able to find her out by to-morrow"—was his calculation—"and for all her glorified body I'll know her all right. I can't even think of ma, but I will soon's I've seen mother. And pa, too. And then I'll look up all the folks and the friends. (Continued on page 27.)

With shaking hands Jonas lifted the portrait

He opened his paper and his face changed solemnly

This is the fourth of a series of twelve paintings, made especially for Collier's by Frederic Remington, illustrative of the Louisiana Purchase Period. These pictures will appear, one every month, in the Fiction Numbers.

INDIANS ATTACKING A WAGON FOUGHT ON THE PLAINS BETWEEN

COPYRIGHT 1904 BY COLLIER'S WEEKLY

EMIGRANTS

ERS—ONE OF THE MANY AND FORGOTTEN BATTLES THAT WERE ID WHITE, WHEN THE TIDE OF EMIGRATION FIRST SET WESTWARD

INTED BY FREDERIC REMINGTON

SLAVES OF SUCCESS

By ELLIOTT FLOWER

From now until November politics will be uppermost in the minds of all Americans. "Slaves of Success" is the title of a series of political stories which every prospective voter ought to read. In them Mr. Flower has given us a truthful "inside" picture of the game of politics as it is being played to-day in every town, county, and state of the United States. The characters are drawn with great fidelity, and the story of how Azro Craig, an honest farmer, after first fighting the "machine" in the Legislature, gradually comes under the influence of the "boss," is told with both force and humor. There are to be six stories in the series, of which the titles are:

THE NECESSARY VOTE—May Fiction Number
THE REFORMER REFORMED—June Fiction Number
A MORTGAGE ON A MAN—July Fiction Number

THE SLAVERY OF A BOSS—August Fiction Number
A STRATEGICAL DEFEAT—September Fiction Number
AZRO CRAIG'S AWAKENING—October Fiction Number

THE NECESSARY VOTE

THE day after Azro Craig was nominated for the Legislature he found himself surprisingly popular; three days later he wondered if people thought he was to be the whole Lower House. For Azro Craig was an unknown quantity politically, and therefore an object of solicitous interest to all those who sought legislative power. He had been nominated as a Republican, but there was little reason to believe that he would consent to wear the party collar. He was a guileless, hard-headed old fellow, with unlimited faith in his friends, but inclined to be obstinate and suspicious where faith was lacking. Consequently, he would not be an easy man to handle.

The nomination was a surprise to the politicians. The "machine" had been back of Nagle, but the good people of this country district had wearied of the "machine." The word conveyed only a hazy idea to them, but the newspapers had taught them to attribute all that was evil in State politics to the few men who were popularly supposed to be at the head of it, so they had turned out in unexpected force at the primaries to put the stamp of their disapproval on Nagle. It naturally followed that they had put up a man who had as fierce a hatred of the "machine" as any of them, and quite as little practical knowledge of it. In this emergency certain prominent politicians began to wonder whether it would not be advisable to elect the Democratic candidate. The district was Republican by only a small majority, and a little quiet treachery would almost certainly change the result. Indeed, if the Democrats made an aggressive fight and the Republicans practically no fight at all, it was more than likely that the Democrats would win. Possibly a "deal" might be made that would be more advantageous than the election of an obstinate old mossback. Thus it happened that Azro Craig received more attention than it was customary to give a nominee in that district.

The first man to arrive on the scene, after the neighbors had extended their congratulations and warned their candidate of the wiles of practical politics, was Tom Higbie, who had been sent by Ben Carroll, and there was an element of treachery here. It had been arranged that John Wade should go, for Wade had once lived in the district and knew the people, but Carroll was afraid that Wade might so arrange matters as to give himself more power, and he had enough already. Wade was politically unscrupulous, but personally honest—a combination sometimes found. This means that he was not a boodler himself, but that he was not above helping boodlers in order that he might use them politically. He would not offer a man money, but for a political price he would let him steal it from others or from the State. Carroll, on the other hand, used politics for his pecuniary advantage; with him power had a cash value, in addition to being personally gratifying. He liked to rule, but he played politics principally because it put him in the way of making money. At the present time he could not get along without Wade, and Wade could not get along without him. Their alliance was one of convenience, which either would terminate the moment he felt himself strong enough to do it. So Carroll had put the case to his lieutenant, Higbie, in this form:

"Wade is going down there next week to look the ground over, but I don't see why we can't do the job first. The House is going to be pretty close, and I'd rather not have Wade in a position to dictate terms, as he may if he gets that yahoo on his staff. I want to make Mackin Speaker. Mackin is our man, and, with him in the chair, we can organize the House and make Wade keep in line in order to get any favors at all. He'll have to stick to us. But the margin is so small that a very little may upset everything. He has a personal hold on some men now, and control of this yahoo is likely to give him a grip on some others of the same class—they stick together pretty closely now and then. If you can pledge Craig to Mackin, we'll take chances on getting him when we need him after that; if you can't, see what you can do with the Democrat, Rowley. We can't use him on strictly party measures, but I'm told he can be reached on pretty nearly everything else, and a 'handy' Democrat is a whole lot more useful than a balky Republican, and won't be as dangerous to our Speakership plan. And Wade isn't going to like the Mackin idea at all. That's why we've got to see that he doesn't get too much power. Do you understand the situation?"

"Perfectly."

"Well, make a smooth job of it, and, if Rowley looks like the best man for us, I'll see what kind of a deal can be made at this end of the line. The Democrats ought to be willing to concede us something if we put their man through in a Republican district. I wouldn't wonder if Hatton and Dailey would help us organize the House, in a pinch, just to turn down Wade. They know where our organization will be of advantage later. I'll see them if that seems to be the best thing to do."

With these instructions, which show how "machine" men of opposite parties can sometimes meet on the common ground of personal or pecuniary benefit, Higbie sought Craig and had a long talk with him. But Higbie was not a good man to handle Craig. There was something in his manner that suggested the schemer. He hinted at things that he did not explain, and he talked too much of being "with the party" and not enough of being conscientious. Perhaps his idea of conscientiousness was "being with the party." At any rate, his main argument was that they had to pull together or the Democrats would control.

"That ain't worryin' me," retorted Craig. "There's good Democrats an' there's bad Republicans. You kin count me ag'in the 'machine' on both sides."

Then Higbie tried to explain that the "machine" was merely the necessary party organization, which impractical reformers had maligned until they had

"You go to thunder!" roared Craig made an opprobrious term of an innocent word, but Craig was obdurate. He did not believe in the "machine," and he would make no pledges whatever.

"All we want," said Higbie, "is to make sure that the House will be organized on a good Republican basis."

"You kin do that easy," returned Craig, "by doin' it right; but I ain't goin' to help organize on no 'machine' basis. When I git to Springfield I'll see how things is an' act accordin'."

"You may not get to Springfield if you don't have the party behind you," suggested Higbie.

"Goin' to turn me down, are you?" exclaimed Craig hotly. "Well, you go plump to thunder!"

"You misunderstand me," urged Higbie. "We'll support you, of course, but you'll stand better if there's no question as to your party loyalty."

"The folks here knows what I stand for, an' that's enough," asserted Craig aggressively.

"Why not take a run up to Chicago and have a talk with the party leaders?" asked Higbie, seeing that he would be able to do nothing with the man alone. "That will give you an idea of the situation and of the need of harmony. Together we can rule, and you will be of real value to your district, but no one of us can do anything alone. We'll be glad to see you, and when you know the men I think you'll take a different view of things."

Craig said that he might do this, but Higbie already had given him up as an unsatisfactory proposition. It was advisable to treat him as cleverly as possible, so far as outward appearances went; but Rowley, the Democrat, might easily prove to be the better man for their purposes. Rowley had changed his party twice. Beginning as a Democrat, he had switched to the Republicans and then back to the Democrats. He was not a man to let a little matter like political affiliations interfere with his own interests, so he had changed whenever it had seemed to be to his advantage. The Democrats, although they had no great love for him, had nominated him as a matter of party expediency. He would draw some independent votes, and he could be controlled by those who would need his services. Knowing this much about him, Higbie quietly arranged for a confidential chat.

Craig, suspicious, but unsophisticated, puzzled his head not a little over the significance of Higbie's visit. He had expected to meet and fight the "machine" at Springfield, but he had not expected that the people in Chicago would take such an immediate interest in him. It looked to him as if he were of more importance than he had supposed. This idea was strengthened by a call from a representative of a political reform organization that sought to do with the Legislature what the Municipal Voters' League had previously attempted, with reasonable success, to do with the Chicago City Council. It investigated the records of candidates and sought to pledge them in advance to certain principles of legislation, and to a line of action that would thwart the plans of the unscrupulous.

Letters and circulars had come from the Chicago headquarters of this organization, but Craig was suspicious of all pledges and he had ignored them. Nor did the agent impress him any more favorably than the letters and circulars. The agent seemed to look upon him with tolerant condescension. He was earnest, but there was an aloofness about him that was aggravating. Somehow he gave the impression—quite unintentionally, of course—that he was a superior person. And Craig would have none of him. "I ain't signin' pledges nor makin' promises," said Craig.

"My dear sir," said the reformer, with lofty complacency, "I fear you do not understand. All we desire is to wrest the control of legislation from those who will use it unscrupulously. We realize that it would be folly to attempt to interfere with purely party measures, even though some of them may be questionable, but we hope to put an end to many forms of corruption. This task is more difficult in a State than in a city, for the party is more important, but there is no reason why it can't be done in time. With the aid of the honest independents we can teach the politicians the importance of putting up good men. The independent voters turn against an objectionable party man every little while, so why not organize and concentrate that independent force with a view to compelling the parties to put up good men? To do that effectively, we must pledge the candidates and study their records. Now, you have no record—"

"You go to thunder!" roared Craig. "I got a record of forty year in this one township, an' all the folks know I'm square. You git out! I ain't goin' to have nobody tellin' me what it's my duty to do, an' I ain't goin' to make a promise—not a darned one."

The air of the man exasperated Craig, and so it happened that he was labeled "Doubtful," although, as Rowley was designated "Bad," this did no particular harm. The reformer did not know how to handle him, but this was also true of all others—until Wade came. Wade was a better judge of men, and he had the advantage of knowing both Craig and the district, although it was all of ten years since he had seen either. Moreover, Craig had a sort of sneaking admiration for Wade. He had gone to the city and had become a big man, which was proof of his ability. True, he was identified with the "machine," but one could admire his success and still be reasonably cautious about succumbing to his influence. And Wade urged nothing. He was the same old Jack Wade of years ago.

"Great guns, Azro!" he cried, when he met the old man, "how did you do it?"

"I didn't do it," laughed Azro. "You folks up to Chicago did it by takin' so blamed much int'rest in Nagle. You got him so plastered over with 'machine' tags that the people couldn't stand him. We ain't electin' men down here to represent a lot of you Chicago fellers, you know."

"That's right, too," Wade declared heartily. "I told the boys to keep their hands off, but they wouldn't listen to me. Well, I'm glad you got it."

Much more did Wade say in the same line, and he talked politics with Craig for over an hour, but never once did he even suggest that he had the slightest interest in the old man's course of action. He advised nothing, argued for nothing, and asked no questions that could possibly arouse suspicion. But he learned all that he wished to know, which was that Craig would be "anti-machine" on everything.

"Ever been to Chicago, Azro?" he asked finally. "Once, twenty year ago," replied Craig. "Why don't you run up some day? You know I'm always glad to see you. Just go right to the house and make yourself at home."

So far as possible, Wade was clever to every one. "You never can tell when you may need a man," was the way he put it, "so the more you have on your staff the better you are fixed for emergencies." He had decided that Craig would be "worse than a Democrat," but that was no reason why he should not hold his friendship, if he could. He had not the same use for Rowley that Carroll had, but a good hold on Rowley would have its advantages, and a strong "anti-machine" Republican would be an absolute menace. Furthermore, it was policy to let Carroll have his way in this matter, and Carroll wanted a spoilsman. Wade could strengthen his own hold on the party machinery by giving this spoilsman to those who had need of him, at the same time escaping a political danger. For he felt that there was danger in this intractable old man, with his intense hatred of "machine" politics.

A secret conference with Rowley was as important in Wade's case as it had been in Higbie's, for public knowledge of it would create comment and arouse suspicion. But to the suggestion that such a conference be arranged he received a most startling reply.

"Mr. Rowley says it would be a risk that is unnecessary," the go-between reported. "He already has seen Higbie, and it's all right."

"Seen Higbie," mused Wade, when he was alone. "Why has Higbie been here when the job was left to me?"

He had no need to ask the question of himself, for the answer was framed in his mind before it was really asked. It was Carroll's work. Carroll wanted this man for himself; he wanted him for certain "jobs" that would follow the organization of the House, and he did not wish to pay a political price for him to any one else. He was strengthening himself—preparing, so far as possible, to "go it alone."

"That means trouble," commented Wade. "If I don't watch out I'll be on a side-track somewhere. I wonder if he saw Craig."

A delay of a day or two and another casual meeting with the old farmer gave him the information he desired on this point. Higbie had seen Craig, had failed to pledge him, and had asked him to come to Chicago. Wade quickly saw that Higbie had made an unfavorable impression, and another man in his place would have told the old man of the contemplated treachery. But Wade deemed it wisdom to let that information come later, and, if possible, through some other source.

"He's got to be handled carefully," he said. "He'd look to see where I was interested, and he'd find out. Then I'd be losing, instead of gaining, his confidence."

Wade went back to Chicago and called together a few of his personal followers, with whom he went over the situation carefully. According to indications, he might or might not have considerable strength in the Legislature. Some he might properly call "his men," but there were others whose loyalty would depend largely on the showing he was able to make; they favored him, but favored themselves more, and would not hesitate to ally themselves with a stronger combination. If Carroll could get these, he might easily control, and there was no doubt that Carroll was seeking to make himself the absolute dictator.

"I wish I could get a grip on that hayseed," he muttered. "He may be the key to the situation. How the devil can I make him my friend?"

He wrote to him, making certain wise suggestions for the campaign, and he exerted his own influence in his behalf. He even sent one of his followers down there to do a little quiet work, for he considered Rowley quite out of the question now. He began to hear talk of Mackin for Speaker, too, and his first impulse was to notify Carroll that this was equivalent to a declaration of war, but he thought better of it. With Mackin in the chair, Carroll would rule, and Carroll must be pretty sure of his ground or he never would have dared risk the opposition that this plan would arouse. All in all, it was better to meet this trickster on his own ground of strategy and duplicity.

It was about a week after this—a week devoted to investigation and hard work, during which men had been sent to various parts of the State to weld what promised to be a faction of the "machine" more closely together and to see what could be done to add to its numerical strength—that Wade found Craig sitting on his doorstep, and it took all his self-control to withhold an exclamation of astonishment and protest. Craig had come to the city as a result of the many invitations to do so—some extended as a mere matter of form and some in the hope that he would really come, for even those contemplating treachery were anxious to keep on the right side of him temporarily. He had prepared for the trip by donning "store clothes," which did not fit, and a pair of new boots, which hurt. The city pavements troubled him, and his feet were painfully sore when he appeared at the door of Wade's home.

"Jack Wade live here?" he asked.

"Yes," replied Mrs. Wade, who had happened to come to the door herself.

"I'm Craig—Azro Craig," the old man explained. "He told me to come here an' make myself at home."

Mrs. Wade, being the wife of a politician, had become accustomed to all sorts of queer characters; so she assured Craig that her husband would return soon and asked him to come in.

"Reckon I better wait here," returned Craig. "It's so darned close indoors."

As he held to this determination, he was left on the steps, where he amused himself by making a careful survey of the exterior of the house. To do this the better he crossed the street and sat on the opposite curb.

"An' Jack Wade didn't use to have no better home than I got," he muttered. "By gum! he's a smart feller, an' I'm darned if I ain't proud of him." Then after another survey of the house, "An' that there belongs to Jack Wade, that was my friend down to the farm, an' he acts like he was the same old Jack Wade, too."

He wandered back to the steps, sat down, and pulled off his boots to ease his feet. The home-made knit socks, with conical toes, stuck out like a pair of submarine boats, and these caught Wade's attention the first thing; but, as recorded, he restrained the exclamation that sprang to his lips.

"Tryin' to ease my hoofs," explained the old man, "but I won't do it in the parlor nor at meal times, so don't you worry."

"Oh, that's all right, Azro," returned Wade genially. "It's you and not your boots that we're glad to see. Come up to my den and we'll have a talk."

The old man followed, carrying his boots, much to the astonishment and dismay of Mrs. Wade, and presently was comfortably settled in a big chair in the room that Wade had reserved for his own use, while the boots rested on a table. While this was distressing to Wade, it happened to be, in this instance, a minor detail of the game of politics—and he is a short-sighted politician who sees only the things that have a direct bearing on the game. The theoretical politician would bring all to his standard of life; the practical makes some concessions to theirs.

"Say, Jack!" remarked Craig, when he was comfortably settled, "what's the matter with them reform fellers?"

"Why do you ask?" inquired Wade.

"Well, I was up to see 'em," explained Craig. "They wrote askin' me to come, so I come; but it looks like they think their brand's the only thing that makes a feller good. The way they talked you'd think there wasn't any virtue anywhere, only what's got their stamp on it. Why, they pretty near had me wild—not owin' to what they said so much as the way they said it. Who made them the boss of me, anyhow? Just 'cause they're leanin' away from evil so hard that they're fallin' over backwards, ain't no sign that they're the only good people there is. They aggravate me, that's what they do. They act like I was a poor suff'rin' sinner, that ought to give thanks for a chance to git in the glory of their smiles."

"Did you sign their pledge?" asked Wade, quite casually.

"Sign nothin'!" exclaimed Craig. "They ain't my kind; they're 'way off somewheres, an' I don't seem to git close to 'em. Looked like they had an idee they was so big an' good an' wise that folks ought to do what they said just 'cause they said it. A feller can see that they're sort of lookin' down on him, even when they talk nice; they ain't sociable."

"Oh, they are not so bad," said Wade magnanimously.

"Ain't they ag'in you?" asked Craig.

"They have opposed me in some ways," explained Wade, "but they mean well."

"By gum, Jack! folks has lied about you," asserted Craig admiringly. "I was lookin' to have you tell me those fellers was the meanest skunks livin', like Higbie did."

"Have you seen Higbie?"

The old man was comfortably settled in a big chair

"Yep. Went to the headquarters where he hangs out, an' when I told him how these reform folks looked to me, he couldn't talk mean enough—said they was all lookin' out for the best of it an' was reg'lar hypocrites."

"That's not so," said Wade promptly. "They're doing the best they know how, according to their ideas, but they're narrow-minded and they can't get down to the level of the people."

"Darn me if you ain't better'n all of 'em, Jack!"

cried the old man. "You're the only one that's talked anyways decent about the others. Why, they said you was workin' to be, or to own, a United States Senator, an' didn't give a hang what happened s'long as you could run the 'machine' while you was doin' that."

"That only shows their egotism and narrow-mindedness," remarked Wade carelessly, although the statement was dangerously near the truth.

"An' they seemed to think all I wanted was lickin' an' se-gars an' some fun," Craig went on with some indignation. "Kept tellin' me to drop in whenever I wanted an' help myself, an' I heard Higbie say to 'take that old billy-goat down an' make him think he was livin' high by openin' a bottle of champagne." Carroll talked nice, but he was always showin' me how I could git good things on the committees by bein' with the party. 'We take care of our people,' he said. I tell you, Jack, it looked like they thought I was jest graftin', an' I could see some of 'em was laughin' at me, too. They ain't my kind, Jack; they got too much idee of everybody watchin' to gain some-thing for himself; I wouldn't trust 'em. Fact is, I heard when I was leavin' home that they was dickerin' with the Democrats."

"It's possible," admitted Wade, noncommittally, "but I would hesitate to believe it without some evidence."

"Jack, you're white," asserted the old man, impulsively leaning forward to take his hand, "an' you're the only white man I've seen in Chicago. All the rest of 'em is doin' dirt an' talkin' dirt one way or another."

Wade, knowing his man, had got the grip on him that others had failed to get, and that is the secret of successful practical politics. Some men know how to do it one way and some know how to do it another, but the true politician has no hard and fast rule. He gauges his man and acts accordingly. For the first time, Craig felt that he had a generous political friend; all others sought to be his political masters, either by purchase or by right of birth and commercial standing.

Wade saw his advantage and made the most of it. He insisted that the old man should remain two or three days; he introduced him to his wife and children, who gave him cordial greeting and treated him as a welcome friend; he invited a few friends in to dinner, expressly stipulating that there should be no dress suits, and the friends were diplomatic and clever. One among them was a business man of some prominence, and he reciprocated by giving a stag dinner at his club. How Wade arranged for this it is unnecessary to state; let it be sufficient to say that the man was an intimate friend who would do much for Wade, and who rather enjoyed the old man's breezy comment and rustic simplicity, anyway.

"But they'll all be wearin' spike-tails there," protested Craig. "Don't believe I better go."

"Nonsense," returned Wade. "I won't wear one, so there'll be two of us anyway."

That dinner was worth more than weeks of argument and explanation. There were men there whose names Craig had seen in the papers, and they were not politicians, so he felt reasonably sure that friendship and not politics was at the bottom of it. There was a freshness and sincerity about him that made them like him, too, and he was flattered to find himself among such men. Here were successful men, big men, and he was one of them; he was seeing something of real city life—not the features that are provided for every stranger who has the price, but the real thing. He forgot about his clothes and talked freely. It was an experience that he could and would treasure.

And all this was part of the game of politics, as played by an astute man. Carroll would have done as much, if he had had the wisdom; but the reformers would have thought it more than should be expected of them. With them, politics is too often a thing apart, to be taken up during the spare time that they can give to it and then put aside; they would not take it into their business or their homes. With the practical politicians it is of first importance everywhere and at all times. And somehow the practical politicians seem to have the best of it when the test comes.

Craig returned home, singing the praises of Wade. There was nothing of envy in the old man's heart; he was glad to see a man from his district do so well in the city—this was local pride—and he was glad to find him so good a man and so companionable and democratic in his ways.

"He ain't swelled up a bit," he said. "He's jest as glad to see his old friends as he ever was, an' it ain't politics, either. It's friendship; that's what it is. We talked politics in a friendly way, but that's all, an' there wasn't nothin' but politics to the other fellers; they jest wanted to 'fix' you one way or another an' then have you mosey along—nothin' real, you know. I tell you, folks has lied about Jack Wade."

Craig learned, too, that his election, which followed later, was partly due to Wade's efforts—Wade saw to it that he should learn this in a roundabout way—and that there had been treachery in other quarters. He verified, sufficiently for his purpose, the story that he had heard before leaving for Chicago. After that he was Wade's man.

Carroll knew this, and he redoubled his efforts in other quarters, but so did Wade. (Continued on p. 28.)

Copyright 1904 by Collier's Weekly

THE RESTRICTING CLAUSE

By JOHNSON MORTON

ILLUSTRATED BY JOHN WOLCOTT ADAMS

FOR seventeen years Ann Foss had been librarian of the Acton Library. In the early days her duty consisted in unlocking the side door of Mrs. Asa Burden's shed-room on Tuesday afternoons, and mounting guard over some slender rows of discreet books in brown paper—a nucleus formed from the leavings of successive summer boarders of philanthropic tendency. Then the Ladies' Aid Society (having no wars on its hands) took up the matter, and, after a series of fairs, readings, and an unexpected windfall or two, the library marched triumphant to the chamber over the Town Hall, where Miss Foss sat in gratifying isolation behind a railing, and, three days a week, gave out books with bits of sage literary advice and acquired that authority of manner which, later on—after the Hon. Phineas Bowles had tardily remembered the town of his humble birth in his will—landed her in the haven of a salaried position in the smart Colonial building that flanked the Freewill Baptist Church. Not that the honor came unchallenged, for when it was learned that a salary of four hundred dollars a year was made possible by the terms of the bequest an army of claimants appeared. It would be useless to number the cabals and struggles that marred two town meetings. Sam Volney's paper, the "Clarion," backed him; the Church supported the claim of Deacon Burr's son, while the Widow Bibby relied on her importunity, and sat, on the back row of seats, a pathetic figure with a twin on either side. But Miss Foss, with experience behind her, a look of competency on her smooth brow, an impressive knowledge of things literary at her tongue's end, and, more than all, that air of authority which comes to those who have "forbidden" for years, won over the field and got the appointment.

After that the little town settled to the enjoyment of its privileges. Every day at precisely ten minutes before two o'clock Miss Foss entered the library buildings and locked the door carefully behind her; a window was flung up, and then came a period of stillness till nine minutes later, when the key turned in its lock again. An early caller or two was admitted, and the business of the day began—a well-ordered, regular business; the giving out of books, the looking up of a reference for a school composition, or data for Mrs. Evans's paper on "Marie Antoinette as a Mother," to be read in the vestry at the Wednesday Literature Circle next week.

Yet on this particular July afternoon the heart of Miss Foss was far from serene. Under an outward calm reigned a discontent that had grown apace since the proud moment of her accession, for to all the honor and dignity of her position was attached a "Restricting Clause," and the increasing pressure of this little librarian was feeling to the full. At the very end of the Hon. Phineas's will it had been appended—unlucky afterthought: "I hereby direct that my brother Clarence Bowles, by virtue of his tastes and interest in such matters, shall be a sort of adviser to the directors and librarian of said library, and that his opinion shall be followed in questions that do not have to deal too definitely with financial matters."

Airy phrases these, that seemed at first mere graceful figures of speech, but which proved, alas, rocks in the pathway of Miss Foss. Now Mr. Clarence Bowles, a neatly preserved gentleman, well turned of sixty, had evinced early in life tastes that brought upon him the contempt of his brother. The child of his parents' old age, of delicate disposition, he had been coddled through infancy and petted through childhood, so that at twenty-five, a full-fledged dilettante, he had spent the whole of his small patrimony in a trip to Europe, only to return, penniless, some months later to catch the metaphorical crusts that his brother threw him disdainfully, yet half proudly. Clarence painted a little, could sing a song, once he had written a book of poems, and it was said that the great sculptor, Mr. Thomas Starbuck, himself a native of Acton, had been so struck by the lines of his brow and chin that he had perpetuated those features in his statue of the "Young Isaac." This fact alone had set Clarence apart.

Promptly on the second morning of Miss Foss's occupancy he had appeared, and, seated opposite her in a mahogany chair that bore his name on a silver plate at its back, had addressed her in his thin, precise voice:

"It's a pleasure, a great pleasure, to see you here, Ann. The sight of you recalls many a boyhood memory to me." He coughed gently. "You seem so associated with my youth, Ann, that as I look at you it all comes back to me."

Ann bridled a little. In the old days there had been what might be called the "beginning" of an "understanding" between the gentle lad and the energetic girl. She thought of a home-made valentine, with an original verse, tucked away in silver paper in the back of her bureau drawer, and wondered if he still kept the muffer she had made. But she turned to him calmly.

"Yes, Clarence, it does seem good and natural to sit talking here with you after all these years, and I hope to see you often. The will, you know, gives you a certain position in the library, and it's likely you'll look in on me from time to time. You'll always be welcome, Clarence," she added primly.

"Yes, I know." Mr. Bowles put on his glasses and produced a paper from his pocket case. "It's about the library that I want to speak to-day. There are two or three things that I'd like particularly to call to your attention."

Miss Foss flushed. She was quick to take offence, and there certainly was a note of implied rebuke in his tone. This from Caddy Bowles, who hadn't spunk enough to walk home with her from singing-school in the old days, but had kept a distance behind on the other side! It was almost too much, but she remembered the "restricting clause" and turned attentively.

"I've been through every shelf," he went on in small, clicking phrases, "and there seem several, several too many, little mistakes of arrangement that must be corrected. So I've taken the liberty of jotting them down for you."

Ann took the paper with dignity, folded it into a neat square, and tucked it into the bead bag at her side. "I did them myself, Clarence, and I am sure that everything was correct."

He smiled as she went to attend to a child with a book, as if to close the interview, and rose too. "And there's one thing I didn't jot down," he called after rearranged her neat black apron and stole a glance at the smooth hair reflected in the little gilt mirror over her desk—a mirror intended for no such vain uses, but rather of a detective in its way; it exposed the sins of the young to the eye of the law.

"I do wonder what Clarence will have to find fault with next," she thought. "He made me get my catalogue done by that woman from New York when I could have done it just as well myself, and he put 'Trilby' back into the library when, goodness knows, it's a book that half the girls in town hadn't ought to read. He's bolder than he used to be, at any rate, and he's here all the time. Last Monday about the furniture polish I was to use; on Friday about the color of my delivery cards—buff or salmon—the fussbudget. And here 'tis only Monday! I declare, I'm getting tired of it all. Yet he is a nice man, and I suppose he does know!"

A step grated the threshold; there was a careful wiping of a pair of shoes on the mat, and a faint glow of pleasure tinged Miss Foss's cleanly soul at the sound as the "Advisory Board" stood before her.

Clarence was dressed to-day with more than common care; his thin hair was tossed into an aged semblance of the curls that years ago crowned "Young Isaac's" brow; an opal pin flashed from his starched white tie, and his open gray coat disclosed a colored waistcoat with pearl buttons. He held a straw hat with a gay ribbon in his left hand, as he took her limp right in his.

"You are surprised to see me so soon again, Ann?" She drew in her breath.

"I'm never surprised to see you, Clarence; you don't give me a chance," she added dryly; "besides, I got the telegram about an hour ago. What's the trouble now?"

Mr. Bowles had seated himself delicately with outspread coat-tails, and was drawing a fine silk handkerchief across his brow. "You see, Ann, this is a very especial occasion. I've a suggestion—we may call it a proposition—to make. I've already seen the directors, Mr. Thom and Deacon Fairbanks, last week." Ann winced a little, for she liked to be first, even at the rack. "And they have agreed. You see it is like this. He hitched his chair nearer her own, and went on in a breathless way that disclosed some agitation.

"You are aware that Acton has, from time to time, been the birthplace of some remarkable men—and women," he hastened to qualify—"men who went forth into the waiting world and trod the path of fame—paths of fame, I should say, for they led to varied summits. My lamented brother—in oils—was one of them, of course."

"Then Eli Pearson, he invented the clothes-pin, you know, and"—with a wave of a white hand—"we have a little tribute to his memory in our relic case."

"Then Miss Wolcott, your relative, the 'Educationalist,' we may call her—a woman spoken highly of by Froebel himself; her white tombstone marks the slope of yonder hill, quite visible from our southeast window."

"And Oscar Barker—'Cattle King of the West'—donor of our beautiful symbolic fountain, of which a photograph graces these walls." Instinctively Miss Foss turned to regard it. "But—" and here Clarence paused for effect—"of all Acton's sons none shines with clearer light than the great sculptor Starbuck, he who hewed from solid rock fair fancies of his brain."

"He made statues, I believe," interrupted the lady with some acidity. The "Advisory Board" heeded no interpolation.

"And of this great genius there is, alas, no monument—nothing to which recollection can fondly cling. It's worse than an oversight, it's a culpable neglect"—his hand struck the chair—"that such things can be! But it shall be said no longer that Acton fails to honor her proudest scion. There shall be a copy of his greatest work here in this very spot. It is my intention, Ann"—and his voice sank to an impressive whisper—"to procure a copy of Starbuck's 'Bathing Girl' for our Entrance Hall!"

He leaned back smiling and replaced his handkerchief. The glasses fell from Miss Foss's horrified nose. Her voice sharpened.

"What are you talking about, Caddy Bowles?"—the old name shot out in her agitation—"That 'Bathing Girl' in my front hall! Well, I guess not!"

The "Advisory Board" raised a conciliatory hand. "My dear friend, you quite miss the point. 'Tis an honor for the library—a fair white replica of this lovely statue—the pride of the Old World should not be lacking in the New. What more fitting than that in this, I may say, Temple of Literature, there should be a niche for a sister art. With perhaps a screen of crimson velvet for a background—"

"Screen of crimson velvet all around it, tight," retorted the lady. "Caddy Bowles, don't you know any better than to talk like that to me? I can stand your everlasting fault-finding, hard as it is, because there's some truth in it, maybe, and because you're a man! I was mistaken about the book of Mr. Warner's. I

The "Advisory Board" raised a conciliatory hand

her. "You oughtn't to have put Charles Dudley Warner's 'Summer in a Garden' under 'Agriculture'."

Ann's color came; she shut her lips together and forgot to upbraid Johnny Jenks for a smooch on the cover of "The Lamplighter."

So it went on. A conspicuous postal card, read by Mrs. Saunders, no doubt, in the post-office, which read: "Tauchnitz was not an author. He did not write 'Quits' and 'Cometh Up as a Flower.' Don't put his name on the outside of all those little volumes." Or a letter of a more serious tone:

"Don't cut jokes out of the copies of 'Life' even if you don't like to have the children read them. There is a rule against the mutilation of magazines that would seem to apply to a librarian as well as to readers."

It was all very trying, and on this particular afternoon on Ann's desk lay a telegram which had been brought a few minutes before—a sort of thing that always disturbed her with its unaccustomed color and method of approach. It looked innocent enough: "Wish to talk with you this afternoon on important business.—C. Bowles."

He might be there at any moment. The afternoon train had whistled at the station; mechanically Ann don't know any language but my own, thank Heaven, and I do get those foreign names mixed up. I am a stupid old woman about the catalogue, and that slip of a girl from New York was a help, though I hated her; but, when it comes to your setting there and proposing to put into my front hall, that I've always kept sweet and proper, a shameless hussy of a marble woman, with nothing on but a towel in her hand and a bracelet, to the best of my remembrance, I tell you it's got to stop! She ain't in any condition for anybody to see. I don't care if Starbuck did make her; I don't care if you made her yourself. She don't come into this library building while I have breath to deny her."

A faint color had mounted the shaven cheek of the "Advisory Board." His voice quavered. "It's all for art," he went on feebly. "She's a work of art. That's a reason for her existence."

"Art!" interrupted the librarian with awful distinctness. "If that's art I don't want any of it. I've always been found on the side of decency! Caddy Bowles, ain't you ashamed of yourself? You used to be such a nice little boy, with modest ways, too, and shy. I never thought you'd grow so bold—I never thought it." Her voice broke pitifully, and the tears stood in her eyes.

Mr. Bowles hurried toward her, gentle, apologetic, deprecatory. "Why, Ann," he stammered, "I didn't mean to hurt you. I never thought—why, you see—"

"I don't see anything," came inarticulate from her pocket-handkerchief. Then she steeled herself with an effort and looked him full in the face.

"Clarence Bowles, that 'Bathing Girl' don't come here without it's over my dead body." Her voice rose, and two young heads from the reading-room peered curiously through the door. With dignity she pointed a long finger before her. "Once and for all," she added, "and it's my last word. You'll have to choose between her and me!"

She sank into a chair, white and weary; her hands clasped one another tightly. She was no longer the stern champion of decency, only a sobbing little woman who wanted to do right, and who, alas, remembered still.

Some subtle sense flashed the meaning of it all straight to the man's heart, stripped him of his small affectations, and left him dazed by what he understood at last. "Restricting Clause" no more, just the man he was meant to be.

Carefully he closed the door behind him against the questioning eyes outside and stood before her. "Ann," he said, and he spoke with his real voice, "do you mean just what you have asked me?" Her eyes answered him. "Why, then, Ann"—he took both her hands in his and held them close—"why, then, dear Ann, I choose you!"

And the long intervening years were forgotten, and the sun of youth shone again, and they found that the heart never grows old, and that love is just the same at sixty as at twenty, and there were no regrets as they looked at one another; only courage and hope and the blessed consciousness that they were together.

Mrs. Bowles is librarian still, though she spends her salary for the services of a desperately capable young woman who has just finished a course in Library Economics, and is eager to try it on. Every afternoon she comes to open the building, driven in a neat, covered buggy by a dapper old gentleman, who springs eagerly to the sidewalk and helps her out. Side by side, at precisely ten minutes before two, they go in and close the door behind them, stopping in the hall, perhaps—though this is pure conjecture—to look at a statue which stands between the portraits. Of this the "Cricket," the defunct "Clarion's" spruce successor, spoke not long ago:

"Last Thursday evening the latest acquisition to the art treasures of this town was shown in the library to a host of delighted citizens. Afterward cake and coffee were served and an enjoyable time was had. It consisted of a copy of our famous townsman Starbuck's statue entitled 'Innocence,' less well known than some of his work, but remarkable for its beauty and chaste qualities. It represents a female figure, closely draped in a heavy cloak, and only the face—a sweet and appealing one—is visible. There was much talk a while ago of adorning our Temple of Literature with a copy of Starbuck's world-famous 'Bathing Girl,' but, we are glad to add, wiser counsel prevailed."

BLIND MAN'S BUFF

By LAURENCE HOUSMAN

Author of "An Englishman's Love Letters," Etc.

ILLUSTRATED BY ANNE ESTELLE RICE

EVERY ONE in Chadsy knew that old Peter Booth was rather narrow in his dealings with others. Those who worked for him did not give him a good name. All the little differences which distinguish one who means to beat you at a bargain from one who means to deal fairly by you came out pretty soon if you had to do with old Peter. But beyond reckoning him a hard man of business, folk thought no more of it, though there was some talk when his daughter Sarah chose to go out into service in preference to staying at home, as she might well have done, for the old man had his small bit of leasehold, and was reckoned to have saved something by the time that he had got past work.

When his wife died, every one thought his daughter would come home to look after him. But no, she did not; and Peter lived on with an old body coming in every day to do for him and going back to her own home again at night. That, no doubt, got him into lonely habits—he became very unsociable, never inviting a neighbor inside his door. With his wife's death, hers being the last life on which it was held, the land fell in to the owner; but Peter had insured himself against that event by an annuity policy, and it was known that a certain sum then began regularly to be paid him; how much or how little no one knew. When he put down the pony-cart it was understood to be because his sight was failing, so that he could no longer see to drive in safety. There was no talk, then, of its being for any other reason. But when the woman who did for him got past work, and no one else came to take her place, people did begin to think it strange; and then on the top of that it was told that he was really going blind, and one day his daughter Sarah came back to look after him.

She was almost in middle age then, and had given up a good situation as housekeeper in a gentleman's family in order to be with him. A capable, managing sort of woman was Sarah, and eminently respectable, but it was not to be looked for under the circumstances that there should be any great affection between father and daughter. Duty was what had brought her, and her duty she meant to do; but she found that old Peter had got ways of his own by then which no reasoning could disturb.

She had hardly been with him half a year when he went quite blind. People were sorry enough for him, but they seemed even a bit more sorry for Sarah. Nobody thought old Peter would be a very easy person to live with.

What I tell you now only came to be known bit by bit afterward, but I tell it in the order of its happening. We go inside the house, so to speak, so as to get Sarah's own view of affairs and understand her consequent action, which was what led at last to the whole thing becoming known.

She had not been with her father long before she noticed plainly enough that there was a difficulty with money. She was surprised at the small amount which she received week by week for the housekeeping, and though she was a born manager she found it hard enough to make ends meet. When his sight completely failed, she thought, no doubt, that she would have the entire handling of his business for him; but no—once a quarter he made her take him down into the town to his banker's, and there he would go into the manager's room alone and come out again with his annuity money in his pocket. Sarah never knew what the amount was.

It so happened, however, that just when one quarter day came round old Peter was laid up in bed, too stiff with rheumatism to move out. When the day arrived he became very fidgety and restless, and at last it appeared as if he could not wait. Sarah indeed was bothering him for the usual housekeeping allowance, and by his own account he had not got it to give her. So at last he wrote by her hand a letter to the bank asking for remittance in a sealed bag to be made by bearer. He signed the letter, put in a receipt made out by himself, and closed it up.

Sarah carried it to the bank, and, being known, got the money handed over without any difficulty. When she received it she was considerably surprised at its weight, and, having already her suspicions, she felt through the thickness of the canvas and counted no fewer than fifty coins of various sizes, and by their weight she knew that a large proportion of them must be gold. This opened her eyes considerably.

When she got home she was astonished to find the old man out of bed and downstairs. Evidently he was waiting for her. He took the bag, and without opening weighed it in his hand, saying, "Ah, so they've sent it in silver!"

Now that she knew was not true, but she said nothing. Old Peter, still without opening the bag, gave her some money—which he must therefore have still had by him before she set out—and told her to go out at once and do her shopping in the village. Sarah accordingly set out; but, seeing that she had the average curiosity of her sex, I need not tell you she did not go far. She went in fact no further than the garden gate, and after giving a clatter to the latch, stole back toward the window of the room she had just quitted. There she saw old Peter returning from the window to his chair. It was evident he had been listening to make sure of her departure. Then he sat down and began to undo the bag containing the money. He had just broken the seal and was about to pour out the contents—and you may think how Sarah then sharpened her eyes—when a thought seemed to occur to him. He got up, felt his way across to the window once more, and let down the blind.

Sarah was mightily put out by this unexpected rebuff to her curiosity, as well she might be; but though deprived of the ocular demonstration she had anticipated, her mental vision was henceforth clear. In a word, in spite of what old Peter had said to put her off, she saw gold—and a good deal more of it, now she came to think matters over, than was in the particular bag which she had brought back that day from the bank.

Being of a philosophic mind, she went off and fulfilled her errands. When she returned she found the old man sitting in his accustomed place, quite quiet and natural in his demeanor, and the window-blind up again. She stared round the room pretty hard, but she said nothing, nor did she see anything to give direction to her suspicions as to where the money might be stowed.

It seemed to Sarah a long time before she could get her father back to bed again, but he went at last. When she came down from seeing him comfortably settled for the night she had a regular turn-out in the hopes of finding where the hoard lay; not that she had any thought then of appropriating it to herself—that she would be sworn, as, indeed, there was occasion for her to do afterward—but she had a natural housekeeping dislike to a thing being about, with herself in ignorance of its whereabouts. Some day the old man might take it into his head to die suddenly, and what a waste then it would be to have to pull the house down in order to find it! She wanted also to know how much her father had managed to save—her curiosity was very natural. But it was not on that occasion satisfied. She sat down and thought the matter out. One practical result of her cogitations was that she let down the window-blind and cut in it a good, comfortable, round hole at a height easy for looking through from the outside. Then she bided her time, trusting to fortune.

She had not to wait long. Having her wits now well awake, she watched the old man as a cat watches a mouse. The very next evening, just as it grew dark, he sent her off, according to a custom of which she now recognized the significance, to buy him his half-ounce of snuff. This trick of laying in stock by small dribbles had always been a worry and an inconvenience to her. That was now explained—so also was his waiting until the time when the blinds would be safely drawn against in-lookers.

On this occasion his daughter got up to do his bidding with more hearty good will than usual. According to his habit, old Peter followed after her to the door to lock it against intruders during her absence—a performance which also had now acquired a fresh meaning to her. Sarah went down to the gate, opened and clicked it to, and straightway creeping back over the loose garden soil, took up her position outside the window, and applied her eye to the hole in the blind.

In the opposite wall of the room she now looked into was an old disused window, blocked up perhaps first in the days when windows were taxed or walled in when some lean-to, now no longer existing, was added to the cottage. In any case the window, both glass and framework, remained entire, with merely a white-washed wall at the back of it. Now and then, when the wind set from a certain quarter, it was opened the very few inches that were possible in order to counteract a descent of smoke from the chimney, since a draught out of some cranny or from below the floor thus found its way into the room.

To this window Sarah now saw her father feeling his way and knew all in a flash, half of exultation at the discovery and half of chagrin at not having thought of it before, that the hoard must lie concealed somewhere on the further side.

She got out the bag . . . and emptied out its contents.

She watched old Peter first fumbling with the hasp, then opening the casement, then stooping and making a long arm, and finally rising again and fetching out a couple of bags into view. With these he advanced to the table, and she recognized the smaller of them as the one she had herself brought from the bank the day before. He got them on the board, opened first one and then the other, and poured out their contents.

Sarah saw in one heap by themselves something like a hundred and fifty gold sovereigns. In the other gold and silver lay mixed; the old man pushed forward an arm, feeling slowly and cautiously to make sure that the two heaps lay well divided; then he began counting the smaller one. Sarah noticed that he made mistakes now and again, putting sovereigns along with shillings and shillings with sovereigns. She saw him weighing and feeling to make sure of their size, till in the end he got matters right. She would have been surprised at his finding so much difficulty in judging by touch alone, but she knew that the sort of palsy which had come with old age had affected his sense of touch and destroyed his steadiness of hand; nor are hands that have been used all their days to outdoor labor so sensitive and informing by contact alone as perhaps yours and mine may be. In any case, it was apparent that old Peter had in the end—this being but one of many like sittings—been able to sort his gold from his silver and keep it sorted, making a hoard of the one and leaving the other for current expenditure.

Fixing her scrutiny on the smaller of the two piles, Sarah was able to make a fairly close reckoning of the amount that she had brought home to him. It would be, she thought, twenty pounds, two pounds of it being in silver. That meant, then, that her father had eighty pounds a year to live on; but the amount of money that actually came into her hands for household expenditure was something very much nearer to the quarterly allowance than to the whole sum. What she did not receive evidently went into the reserve fund, for as she watched she saw old Peter take twelve pounds from the dissected heap of gold and silver and transfer it to what might be termed his deposit account—that is to say, to his accumulated savings.

Sarah Booth till that moment had attended on her father in his old age and infirmity from no sordid motive or calculation of future advantage. She had, indeed, made a sacrifice, for she knew that his annuity died with him, and that only the small freehold cottage and garden would be hers after he was gone. She had come to look after him from a sense of family pride and decency, rather than from affection; but she had the right to feel that she had been and was a dutiful daughter to him, and her sense of justice revolted that she should have been led to give up a good situation, with its comfortable living, in order to aid and abet this old man, her father, in dragging out a life of sham penury—that all her management and economy and hard scrubbings and gardenings, with no help from outside, had been practiced to no end but to allow him to hoard up a little more gold in which his blind eyes could no longer take any delight and for which at his age he could have no prospective use. Undoubtedly, as she looked through her eye-hole in the blind and watched those miserly hands pawing over the gold sovereigns, Sarah felt aggrieved, and a little inclined to let her resentment have play. But there was something of the sporting instinct also in her mood; she had found old Peter out, had spotted him down, taken his exact measure, and—he did not know.

It gave her a sense of power and of possession. The knowledge that her father was not so dependent on her as he had pretended to be restored her independence also. The question was: How should she use it? She could, of course, go back to him now, declare all she knew, insist that if she stayed to look after him he should make her an allowance for the housekeeping according to his means. But it was just possible that he might find some way of rejecting any such ultimatum on her part; and Sarah, feeling defrauded, and having seen the glitter of that heap of gold, so much larger than any she had ever set eyes on before, was minded to stay and see that it was well spent—that no accident happened to it. It was impossible, in fact, for her not to be moved, and perhaps a little contaminated at heart, by the sight which had met her eye. And so in the end, determined to risk nothing, instead of breaking in and dropping thunderbolts on the old man, as she might have done, she let things stand as they were and went her way to the village, leaving him still scrabbling over his gold heap.

When she returned, having been gone hardly longer than usual, she found old Peter sitting under the mask of his affliction just as she had left him—the patient, resigned, almost reverend figure she knew of old.

But from that day the game of hide and seek began, and with it there came to Sarah a constantly growing sense of power, a power which became the more sweet to her in that she let no sign of it reach him. It was her secret; presently it became her mastering passion. Hitherto she had led a life of dull respectability in the employ of others, a dependant in petty authority without initiative. Life had not struck her before as specially interesting, nor had it occurred to her that humanity was an object worth studying. But now it was revealed to her, this life, this humanity, in a new and a romantic aspect—a thing to discover and pry into, to gloat over and experiment on. She was a woman unlikely ever to marry or have children, yet she had that harder domestic instinct which makes good nurses mothers, and housewives out of unlovable tyrannical characters. This possessive sense in her had never before found its full scope; even the household management which her father left to her of necessity had given her but small satisfaction, since he had not eyes to see how by hard labor she had impressed her individuality on her surroundings. Now, however, she exulted in the means of ascendancy secured to her by his infirmity. He had practiced concealment and evasion, keeping secret what she had every right to know. To her, therefore, it seemed fair enough to practice a corresponding deception, but before long what had started as a sort of game had become deadly earnest.

At the first safe opportunity, Sarah, you may be sure, did not neglect to make a strict investigation of the money bags. She found in the larger one rather more than she had expected—not far short, that is to say, of two hundred pounds. This was made up entirely of sovereigns. In the other were sovereigns, half-sovereigns, and silver. These coins had been separated, the gold from the silver, and knotted into opposite corners of a silk handkerchief—a development which she had missed sight of through having to prosecute her errand to the village.

Now, in a spirit of mischief or experiment, it occurred to Sarah to substitute among the gold a sixpence for a half-sovereign. Tying up the handkerchief again, she put it back into the smaller of the two bags, restored both to their hiding-place, and waited to see what the result would be.

It so happened that the very next market day gave her the demonstration she had expected. Old Peter, giving her the money for the weekly purchases, told her, as was his custom when the coin was gold, to be careful and not lose it. Sarah was delighted. "Lor! father," said she, "whatever are you thinking of? This is only a sixpence you've given me!"

The old man was very unwilling to believe her and asserted that he knew better—wasn't so blind as all that, he declared. She gave it him back. "Come and do the shopping for yourself, then," she said, "if you won't believe your own daughter. That's a sixpence you gave me, and not a penny more it wasn't. Not a penny!"

Against the eye-hole that she herself had made, she saw in the semi-obscure of the moonlit night the shadow of a man

Peter was greatly perturbed, and Sarah sat down opposite to him and smiled, now quite pleased with herself. Her father handled the coin suspiciously and uneasily, shifted about in his chair, got up and sat down again, unable to keep still. All this Sarah watched with a comprehending eye. It was evident that he wanted to get her out of the house. But if he gave her nothing how was she to shop, and if he surrendered the impugned coin, which according to her was only sixpence, how was he afterward to dispute it?

Sarah was quite phlegmatic over the business. Whatever course he decided on, she had made her point. In the end he kept the sixpence and raked out of his pocket a couple of shillings more, saying that this was all he could afford, with the ten shillings gone somewhere, and that she must make it go as far as it would.

She went off submissively enough, and before long was round at the window watching. Sure enough, old Peter was out with his money bags, and to watch him, she told herself, was as good as a play. He brightened up wonderfully when, by dint of much testing, he recovered the missing half-sovereign from among the silver—for up to that time Sarah had taken nothing actually away, though she had begun to have out the money-bags and open them for her own amusement after she had got him to bed.

So, when she came back from market, she found him all right again, but saying nothing; and she understood that the fiction of a lost ten shillings was to be kept up and the housekeeping purse be stinted for a week in consequence.

The incident perhaps helped to remove any strong scruple that Sarah might up till then have retained. Anyway, from that date she began more definitely to scheme against old Peter's unfair miserliness, and to wonder how, comfortably and without suspicion, above all without spoiling her game, she might get things more into her own hands.

Matters were now at this pass: The old man, since his desire to be ever handling his gold increased as time went on, was forever waiting for his daughter's back to be turned, and she was forever giving him the opportunity he sought. And as the delight of secret watching grew strong in her, so gradually did a love of the gold itself work its way into her heart. She wanted to possess. It was unreasonable, she knew; for she had only to wait till the old man was in bed to possess it just as much as he did. It was as safe in his keeping as in hers. But she could not forget that he had deceived her and was unfairly stinting her, that she worked harder than was necessary, and lived with him on a poorer scale than he had any right to expect. Nor can you play the game of cat and mouse continually without the predatory instinct getting some hold upon you. With the money under her eyes—hers and yet not hers—Sarah became more and more covetous of its possession, but could not yet see her way to become possessed of the one joy without thereby defrauding herself of the other.

The next quarter-day was drawing near, and Sarah, who had hopes that her father might again be too indisposed to go himself to the Bank, had the disappointment of seeing him keeping in his usual health and strength, though both were of a failing character. In spite of a wet season his rheumatism seemed to have left him.

But being well resolved now to prosecute her purpose, she made preparation to suit the circumstances. So in company when the day came they visited the Bank, set out and home again, old Peter carrying the money-bag safe in his own pocket.

Now Sarah knew quite well that nothing would induce him to open it in her presence, and that immediately on their return he would invent some excuse for getting her out of the house so that he might count over his money in solitude. So, as she was getting tea ready, Sarah, in taking the kettle off the fire, let it slip through her hand, tilt, and spill.

Old Peter was informed by a lusty scream that his daughter had got her foot scalded. She made a great to-do with it, bandaged her shoe up in rags, and walked lame. After that there was no getting her out of the house again that night.

The old man fussed and fumed, inventing wants of this and that or the other—things she might perhaps be able to get for him from a neighbor; but their nearest neighbor was a quarter of a mile away, the cottage standing lonely in its own lane, and Sarah declared that she could hobble no further than the wash-house and back again. This she did, giving him just time to slip his bag away into its hiding-place. After that her foot began to get better, and when old Peter suggested that she should get to bed early and lie up with it, leaving him to follow when so inclined, she declared she had too much cleaning and mending to do, and shouldn't think of bed much before eleven.

Old Peter tried to sit her out, but it was no good; when she saw that was his game she opened the door and let the fire out, till the room got too cold for his old limbs. Then to quicken him she declared that they would both go, and by that at last got him upstairs.

No sooner did she hear him get into bed than down she came again, with a fine scheme all ready and waiting to be put into execution. She got out the bag that he had brought home that day and emptied out its contents. The amount was twenty pounds—eighteen pounds in gold, two pounds in silver. To replace these, Sarah put in from a store that she had provided beforehand eighteen shillings, ten florins, and eight half-crown coins—easy for the fingers to reckon with.

It was a simple piece of artifice, and yet ingenious when you come to think of it, since it left nothing with which the shillings could be compared and so be found wanting. Old Peter was so certain the bag contained twenty pounds that only by being put out of his reckoning would he be likely to come to think otherwise. Sarah was still playing the game with some caution. It was a sporting venture. She put three pounds of what she had now taken into the large bag of sovereigns—making the total there just what it should be (their temporary withdrawal had been the chief risk of the proceeding)—and pocketed the rest.

Scarcely had she done this than she fancied she heard a creak upon the stairs. In another moment there could be no doubt of it. Old Peter had got up from his bed and was softly and slowly descending.

"The old cheat!" thought Sarah to herself. "Why, he must have got into bed with his clothes on!"

She had only just time to get the bags back into their nook without noise and the window hinged—that was the most difficult thing to do silently—when her father's hand fell about the door handle without. In her trepidation she blew out the light. This, of course, made no difference so far as old Peter was concerned—darkness and light being all one to him, except when the latter was right before his eyes—but it made the situation rather trying for Sarah. She had to trust to her ears alone to guess what went on, and to keep out of reach of the blind man as he moved about the room. She backed into a corner, held her breath, and waited. Evidently old Peter was nervous, afraid of being overheard. Twice he went back to the door and listened. Dead silence convinced him at last that his daughter had not been disturbed. He came on again, unheeded the little window that Sarah had so lately shut, and got out his money-bags. She heard their muffled chink as he carried them across the room, the soft rattle of the coins as they slipped out on the table, and then—"tink-a-tink"—the slow counting over of them began.

To Sarah's ears the light chink of the pieces as they fell one upon the other was unmistakably silvery; but she heard the old man muttering through his arithmetic in undisturbed tones, and presently began to breathe more freely. It was evident that he suspected nothing.

How strange, if you come to think about it, was this obsession of an old blind man! His blindness had

(Continued on opposite page)

From Good
Apples

DUFFY'S CIDER

An absolutely pure product of perfect apples—a distinctive home beverage that retains the delicious flavor of the fruit itself with the piquant and mellow zest of added time.

DUFFY'S 1842

Non-Alcoholic
Carbonated Sterilized

Sold by all grocers

Made and guaranteed by
AMERICAN FRUIT PRODUCT CO.
90 White Street Rochester, N. Y.

Quater Brown Book free on application.

Culver Summer Naval School

(Lake Michigan)

Absolutely unique in its combination of things that both delight and benefit a boy. An ideal substitute for the aimless summer. Makes a boy at home on the water, happy, brown as a berry, and "hard as nails." Affords him expert tutoring in any study. Gives him this year a week at the World's Fair under ideal conditions. Many other interesting features. Beautiful location and extensive equipment. Navy Cutters from U. S. Government. Opens June 25th, closes August 24th. Descriptive booklet, illustrated in dotypes and colors, mailed on request.

Address,
Culver
Summer Naval School
Culver, Ind.
(on Lake Michigan)

THE PACE THAT KILLS

A picture that has set the Art world on fire. The only picture of its kind on earth. 10 years in advance of the times, a picture that appeals, not to the idle rich alone, but to every man and woman who is interested in today, tomorrow, and the future, regardless of the Pursuit of Pleasure. It vividly portrays the present and looking through and beyond, shows to us in all its forceful reality the future.

Thirty-two thousand sold in one week. Size of picture 34 1/2 inches. Beautiful colors and powerful for its cost.

THE CHAMBERLAIN CO., 334 Dearborn St., CHICAGO, ILL.

TELEGRAPHY

Thoroughly and quickly taught. Expenses low and can be reduced one-half by working for board. Railroads give our graduates immediate employment and furnish free passes to destinations. We have more orders for operators than we can fill, and give students choice of different railroads in many states. Write for Catalog. We pay railroad fare to Jonesville, Va.

Valentine's School, Est. 22 Years, Jonesville, Va.

TWO VIEWS OF DIVORCE IN FICTION

By ROBERT BRIDGES

DIVORCE, as a subject for fiction, is in great favor at present. The natural evolution of a topic for popular fiction seems to be through the daily press to the comic papers, to the woman's clubs, to the pulpit, to bar associations, to men's clubs, to a novel that is well advertised. The thing is in the air for three or four years before it really gets on to the book-stalls. We have become fairly accustomed to modern divorce, and accept it as a matter of course, as we do the X-rays. Yet a few years ago both were sensational. It is difficult now for the reader to get very warm over fictitious marital troubles. Lawyers pretty generally agree that there should be a uniform law for all the States, and by and by it will come just as naturally as the national bankruptcy law. Preachers seem to agree that it is too easy, but show a readiness to accept fees for remarriages. Several of the strongest Churches stand firmly against both divorce and remarriage. Men and women generally are rather cynical about the whole matter, and poetry and romance have felt its blighting chill.

The most recent novel on the subject is "He That Eateth Bread with Me," by H. A. Mitchell Keays—a woman, for no man ever dared to write about "a dainty little gray embroidered grenadine, edged about the pretty, round throat with purple velvet pannies." From the first page to the last the story is keyed up to the divinely impossible Katharine, the wronged wife, who loves and suffers and endures through two death-bed scenes (which were pulled out of the fire by an Agnostic Doctor) and a railway accident, by which the seductive lady with the copper-gold hair and pink-and-white complexion is suddenly "removed" in perfect health. Psychologically a fast express is a very weak device to restore the erring husband to his one and only real wife (who always looked on his second marriage as a mere legal interlude). But Katharine can be trusted to get some suffering out of even this stroke of good luck. She got what she wanted, "yet in a way her return to him will be the greatest sacrifice she has yet made for him." Poor restored husband! The fast express was unkind to him.

Robbed of its fine writing and emotional sprees, the author has depicted in this novel with considerable force the state of mind of a refined woman who believes that marriage is indissoluble and finds herself deceived and deserted by the husband she loves and who had loved her. That is also the attitude in "Let No Man Put Asunder," by Basil King. Readers of "Anna Karenina" will recall that the wronged husband came round to that point of view—though from entirely different motives. How Tolstoi's great novel, written a quarter of a century ago, towers above these pigmies of fiction! It is as modern as though it had been finished last week in Chicago.

In the current number of Robert Grant's serial, "The Undercurrent," two divorces in Newport high life are impending, and the struggle of a woman of high ideals and small resources to accept the legal relief as a solution for her troubles is, evidently, to furnish the third example in the story. Mr. Grant approaches the problem not only as an experienced social satirist and writer of fiction, but through many years of observation as a Judge of Probate in Boston, where motives are apt to be sifted down to their original molecules.

The lawyer in this story, Gordon, puts the case for the State, as opposed to the Church, very clearly: "It seems to me that if my wife had been false to me and my love for her were dead, I would not allow such a sentiment—and it is only a sentiment—to tie me forever to a woman who was no longer my wife, except in name. Your life is before you. Why should a vitiated contract be a bar between you and happiness?"

All the novels, and plays like Sardou's "Divorçons," fall into these two categories—those advocating the indissoluble character of marriage and those approving of divorce for cause. It is one phase of the old contest between Church and State, and the solution of it is a long way off.

Whichever view prevails, there can be little divergence of opinion as to the main cause of the trouble. Divorce prevails because material standards prevail. This applies to rich and poor alike. Loyalty to an idea, which used to be so potent, is old-fashioned. Capitalist and workman both want to see definite results from their endeavors. If they do not materialize, throw them over and try something new! The mind gets little satisfaction from following an old ideal. It is restless and impatient, and must be consoled with new ideas.

The women have this same restless mind demanding material novelties. If they are rich, amusement becomes their meat and drink. One of them in Mr. Grant's story "intimated politely, but clearly, that I bored her—said we did not care for the same things." What moral obligation, or legal, can justify perpetual boredom! Therefore, change partners all around!

Some people solve the trouble or make it easy by having three or four houses and three or four changes of climate in a year. Keep the eye and mind busy with new sensations, and the old obligation may not gall.

But the step from several homes to several wives or husbands is often very easy. New conditions demand new companions; the wife who helped make a fortune is not the one to help spend it. We change religions, politics, businesses, and friends so often and so easily—why not change wives or husbands?

Moreover, there has been a serious breakdown in the belief in immortality. One wife for eternity may have been an appalling prospect to some, but four or five seemed incongruous and often humorous. However, if the present life is all there is of it, the average American wants to make the most of it, and is not going to stay bored through loyalty to a faded ideal. That is pretty nearly at the root of the whole trouble.

BLIND MAN'S BUFF

(Continued from preceding page)

caused him to give up tobacco and take to snuff instead, but it had not made him lose the joy of handling the yellow metal whose color he could no longer see, whose sound even—not that he was dull of hearing—he could no longer with any certainty distinguish, whose weight his trembling old hands could no longer properly appreciate. And yet the love of his gold was stronger in him than it had ever been. It was becoming each day more furtive and more passionate. Sarah had seen him spread out his pile of gold sovereigns and bury his face in them, take them up one by one, and lay them against the lids of his blind eyes, as one lays coins on the lids of a corpse to give to dead eyes the appearance of rest; and, watching this miserable exhibition of base human folly, Sarah's heart had felt neither the shrinkings of disgust nor the melttings of pity. It had become infected, corrupted, and debased, till the covetous desire of gold had grown in her also, along with that other desire, which perhaps can run to more cruel extremes still—the desire to have mastery over another soul. Her old dotard father was now a puppet in her hands, of which she pulled the strings in order that she might watch the workings.

But she had not yet probed all the mysteries of the poor human heart. Presently, as she listened, she was startled to hear sobbing and a dull metallic note, as though the money lying upon the table was being softly pushed about under the pressure of face or palm. "Oh, I am so poor, so very poor!" quavered the old voice in a depth of maudlin self-pity, indescribably forlorn. And again and again came the cry, faintly uttered, "I am so poor, so poor!"

Then there was silence, till at last his daughter thought he must have fallen asleep where he sat. The room was very cold; gradually light stole into it. The late moon had risen; before long its radiance fell upon the blind. Through the hole she had cut in it came a small disk of clearer light; it lay upon the wall near her like a large white coin slipping by degrees to ground. Presently some form intervened; the disk, dis-

New Views of Wedgwood's Old Blue Historical Plates

GEORGE WASHINGTON

1732-1799

"Soldier and statesman, rarest union:
High-poised example of great duties done."
James Russell Lowell.

"America has furnished to the world the character of George Washington; and if our American institutions had done nothing else, that alone would have entitled them to the respect of mankind."—Daniel Webster at the completion of the Bunker Hill Monument.

The above cut represents one of 61 subjects of Wedgwood's old blue souvenir plates (5 inch). The other subjects are, in part: The Washington Elm, Cambridge; under this tree Washington first took command of the American Army July 31, 1775—The Capitol, Washington—Mount Vernon, 1744-1802—Martha Washington—Independence Hall, Philadelphia (1743)—Longfellow's Home, 1789-1902; once Washington's Headquarters, Cambridge—The Old South Church, 1773—Faneuil Hall—The Old North Church, where Paul Revere hung out the lanterns in 1775—Old Stone Mill, Newport—The Return of the Mayflower—The White House, Washington, 1790-1902—The Landing of the Pilgrims—Priscilla and John Alden—Signing of the Declaration of Independence—Arlington House, home of Robt. E. Lee—The Old North Bridge, Concord—Bunker Hill Monument—The Battle of Lexington—State House, Boston—Emerson's Home, Concord. Among the later productions are: Monticello, the home of Thomas Jefferson—Grant's Tomb, Riverside Drive—Yale College and the Old Fence—Elmwood, home of James Russell Lowell—U. S. Frigate Constitution in Chase—Harvard College Gates, etc.

A booklet of half-tone cuts of the series will be mailed free on receipt of a two-cent stamp. These pictures have been produced from engravings after etchings and paintings (at the famous pottery of Josiah Wedgwood & Sons, Staffordshire) of important subjects connected with American history.

The decoration is under the glass and therefore indelible. In selecting a dozen or more for table use, order by numbers from the booklet.

The price is six dollars per dozen, or fifty cents each. A single plate of any subject desired will be mailed in one of our safety mailing boxes, prepaid to any postoffice in the United States, on receipt of 75 cents, P. O. order or stamps.

Jones, McDuffee & Stratton Co.
CHINA AND GLASS MERCHANTS
Wholesale and Retail (Seven Floors)
180 Franklin, Cor. Federal Street (Dept. C) Boston

Dr. Graves Unequaled Tooth Powder

Pure and refreshing. Removes tartar and prevents decay. Gives the teeth a snowy whiteness and the sharply defined appearance of perfect cleanliness. Leaves a perfume of purity to the breath.

3 Ounce Metal Bottle 25c 8 Ounce Metal Bottle 50c

SOLD EVERYWHERE

A Trial Bottle FREE on request

Dr. Graves' Tooth Powder Co., Chicago, Ill.

U. S. ARMY — TENTS at $1.45

Now is the time to buy your next Summer's

CAMPING OUTFIT

No. 999, Regulation U. S. Army Shelter Tent. These Tents are made in two parts, of light canvas, good quality, and will accommodate two persons. Are quickly put together.

Size, 4 feet long, 4 feet high, 3 feet 6 inches wide, and cost U. S. Gov't $4 each. Have been slightly used by Government, but are in excellent serviceable condition. Price $1.45. Make excellent Lawn or Shore Shade and Playhouse for children. By using two of these Tents "over 1000 one-hundred," which will cost $2.90, you make a tent 10 feet long, 4 feet high and 36 feet wide. Tents will be exposed charges collect upon receipt of full amount.

If you are interested in Sporting Goods send 6 cents in stamps for our new 32-page Catalogue No. 3070 of Firearms, Fishing Tackle and Outing Goods, and 48-page Booklet of War Recipes.

We will send FREE, our SPECIAL BASS BALL cleaver, offering many good inducements. Every boy should have it.

CHAS. J. GODFREY, 4 Warren St., New York

Roof Leak?

Elliott's Durable Asphalt Coating

is about the best investment the owner of a roof can make. Will add ten years to the life of a new or an old, leaky shingle, tin or felt roof. Makes rusty tin water-tight and arrests rusting. It is used as a liquid cement on big leaks and stops them absolutely.

Q Composed of pure Utah Asphalt, prepared Linseed-Oil and Pine Creosote (wood preservative) it prevents decay in new shingles and arrests it in old ones. Prepared also for use as a shingle dip. Highly fireproof.

Q Will not soften in summer or crack in coldest weather. A boy can apply it. It is not possible to make a more durable liquid coating. Nothing else so good in salt water atmosphere—200 per cent more durable than pure oil paint. A perfect coating for iron fences, etc.

Q Made in Black, Dark Green and Rich Maroon. On a trial order we will send, express prepaid, to your door, one gallon for $1.00. Sufficient for cementing 100 square feet, or painting 200 square feet. One gallon shingle dip covers 400 square feet shingles both sides. The express charges frequently cost us more than $1.00.

Q Five gallons or more 75 cents per gallon, freight paid east of Denver. Guaranteed to be satisfactory or returnable at our expense. Please write for interesting booklet, "History of Asphalt," together with liquid samples free.

ELLIOTT VARNISH CO., NEW YORK, 269 Pearl St. CHICAGO, 149-151 Fulton St.

TRY

Roof Leak?

appearing from the wall, alighted on the old man's shoulder as he sat at the table bowed over his gold. Sarah, who believed in death-ticks and all such portents, wondered superstitiously if this betokened death; but before she could seriously entertain the thought he had moved from his recumbent posture. In the obscurity she saw him gather up the two piles separately and restore each to its bag and its accustomed hiding-place, and, having hopped up the window, feel his way cautiously back to the door by which he had entered. Straining her ears, she heard him ascend the stair and re-enter his room. She then relighted her candle and made a practical investigation to assure herself of the success of her device. Finding that twelve shillings had been transferred to the larger of the two bags, she smiled as if satisfied, put the hoard back into its hiding-place, and, after waiting a safe time, stole softly to bed.

Sarah had now found out that to old Peter's dulled perception shillings and pounds were very much alike, and the certain knowledge of this made the temptation too strong to be withstood. Little by little, lest too sudden a change in the weight of the bags should attract his attention, Sarah took over the gold into her own keeping, and before long had by substitution left her father nothing but silver.

She may have held that the ruse did him no wrong. It deprived him of no pleasure or benefit that was otherwise his, while it left her free to add as she thought fit to the comforts of the house. Old Peter, if he thought anything, ought to have thought his daughter a wonderful manager. Sarah, having the gold secure in her own hands, was not so purely the miser as not to expend a portion in satisfying her housewifely pride, which had so long been stinted of means; in fact, she was not miserly in the true sense at all. She was naturally a saving woman, but it was rather graspingness than hoarding that was her passion, and she cared very much for the look of things, and to stand well in the envy of her neighbors.

Old Peter did not guess how smart bit by bit things were becoming all about him. When his daughter got in help for the garden, she declared that she was doing it out of her own earnings, and that it would pay for itself in results. Apparently it did, since her housekeeping cost him no more than formerly—no more, that is to say, so far as he knew. Meanwhile the double secrecy of their relations to each other went on, and as it was the comfort of his life to have out his money in his daughter's absence and count it over, so it became the delight of hers to watch him doing it, and to see him handle so cherishingly the silver she had given him in exchange for gold. Two days hardly ever passed without their coming together for an indulgence that had become second nature to both.

Sarah was more bold in her procedure; what she had loved best was to sit in the room with him unknown, and watch each movement he made and every expression of his face.

In order to secure this dearest joy for herself she started a practice of pretending to go across to one of her neighbors a little before her father's bedtime, leaving him to find his way up to bed by himself when he liked. As this gave him a fresh opportunity of paying a visit to his hoard, he raised no objection and consented to be locked up in the house during her absence, since he would be in bed before she returned.

Sarah would take the key from the inside of the lock, open the house-door, shut it again, put in the key and turn it, pull it out once more, slip it into her pocket, and creep back to the room where her father was sitting. Under cover of the stir he made in opening the wall-window and reaching after his money-bags she found no difficulty in getting back to her carefully arranged vantage-ground. Then, with only the table between them, she would sit and watch him, and now and again would reach out very cautiously and substitute a shilling for a pound among the outlying coins while he was engaged in counting up his piles of tens; and doing it she felt with a keen sense of satisfaction how the reins of power were really passing from his hands into hers. Power—that was what she loved.

Before long she had gone further still. Led on by his helplessness into experiment, and feeling her way with fresh tests of the dulness of his wits, she would remove a coin here and there from some pile that was waiting to be recounted, so as to make the total come wrong, would withhold it until she had driven him to count over and over again, each time more perplexed and desperate, and finally would restore it and let the reckoning come right. A cruel trick, but habit sweetened it to her, for she felt indeed then that she had him, body and mind, in her own keeping; also it made the deception safer to maintain—the old man was beginning to be unsure of himself, and would count many times over, even when the results came right. And yet she would wonder, as she heard the light chink of the silver pieces, that he did not detect a difference in the quality. This was, perhaps, because she herself had become an adept, and with her eyes shut could tell by sound and touch the white metal from the yellow. That, surely, was a strange game for any one to look at, played across the table, week in, week out, by the blind old man and the middle-aged woman with the hard face and the cold beady brown eyes.

During this time old Peter kept his health fairly well—not that he went out much, but he was able when quarter-day came round to go as usual down to the bank.

Every one in the neighborhood, and those who knew him by sight from his periodical comings into the town, knew what his errand was at these particular dates; and "There

Quicker to Talk than Walk

A PRIVATE LINE SAVES TIME

A TIME-SAVING, LABOR-SAVING, SOUL-SAVING NECESSITY

It reaches from Chamber to Kitchen; from Parlor to Pantry; from Boudoir to Barn.

Any Distance Required

Two telephones complete, ready for service, with 100 feet of wire, batteries, buzzers, etc. Any one can install. Price $10.00. Satisfaction guaranteed. Send cash or equivalent.

ANDERS PUSH BUTTON TELEPHONE CO. 134-6 Liberty St., New York City

Send NO Money

$10 DRESSES ANY MAN

FROM HEAD TO FOOT

FREE SAMPLES AND MEASUREMENT BLANKS

We make an up-to-date suit strictly to your measure in latest English Style for only $10, and give the following complete outfit FREE and you don't pay for it until you receive the suit and Free Outfit, and find it just as represented. Send us your P. O. address and we will send you FREE SAMPLES of cloth, tape measure and measurement blanks, for size of Neck, Sleeve, Hat, etc. FREE A Suit of Clothes Made to Measure from any of the samples sent you, for which tailors would ask from $25 to $42.00. A Doublet, Black, any shape Hat, 2.50. A pair Boy's Last or Congress Shoes, 2.50. A neat Frock Coat, 1.50. A neat four-button Bow or Full Tie, .50. A pair of good web Suspenders, .50. A Jay Handkerchief, .50. A pair extra quality Lisle Thread Socks, .50. Many Dealers ask for this Outfit $30.00. Send No Money. SAMPLES FREE. Address: CHICAGO MFG. & MDR. CO., Dept. 224, 87-89-91 Washington St., CHICAGO. Ref. Metropolitan Trust and Savings Bank, Capital $1,000,000, or any Express Company in Chicago.

All over the civilized world
THE IMPROVED
BOSTON GARTER
IS KNOWN and WORN
Every Pair Warranted
The Name is stamped on every loop—
The Velvet Grip
CUSHION BUTTON
CLASP
Lies flat to the leg—never Slips. Tears nor Unlatches
ALWAYS EASY
Geo. Frost Co., Makers, Boston, Mass., U. S. A.
REFUSE ALL SUBSTITUTES

Father Kneipp
devoted his life to the study of human health. He demanded pure linen next the skin, and approved of and gave his name to Kneipp
Linen-Mesh Underwear
The only underwear guaranteed to be pure linen to the last thread. It keeps an even skin temperature during changing seasons.

FOR SALE BY
Leading Haberdashers and drygoods stores.
Write to "Kneipp" Publicity Dept., B. 66 Leonard Street, New York, for instructive booklet.

Put Your Money in Upper Peninsula Land

$10.00 down and $10.00 per month will buy you 40 acres of good farming land in the Upper Peninsula of Michigan. This land is close to markets, good towns and railroads. Hundreds of settlers will go to this country this Spring and land values will increase. NOW is your time to make a safe, permanent, profitable investment. No if's or an's about it. Write to us to-day—now.

Upper Peninsula Land Co., Ltd., 916 Washington Arcade, DETROIT, MICH.
F. J. MERRIAM, Gen. Mgr.

REFERENCES—HALLIDAY TRUST & SAVINGS BANK, Chicago, Illinois; COASTAL TRUST COMPANY, New York, N. Y.; CLEVELAND CREDIT BANK COMPANY, Cleveland, Ohio.

'Defender of the Rails—The New York Central'—Utica Herald

MENNER'S BORATED TALCUM
TOILET POWDER
A Positive Relief
For PRICKLY HEAT,
CHAFING, and
SUNBURN, and all other eruptions of the skin.
Removes all odor of perspiration. Deodorant after Shaving. Sold everywhere, or mailed on receipt of 25c. Geo. Menner's (the original). Sample Free.
GERHARD MENNER COMPANY, New York, N. Y.

Show Your Loyalty by Wearing the Class Pin or Badge

(HUNDREDS OF DESIGNS FREE)
of your college, school, club, club or society. Order straight from the factory. Either of the two series shown, in any color of enamel, with any three letters and any two figures.
In Silver Plate $1.00 a doz. Sample 10.
In Sterling Silver $2.50 a doz. Sample 25.

Beautiful catalog showing hundreds of designs free. Satisfaction guaranteed. Will gladly make a special design and estimate free.
BASTIAN BROS., 21 V. South Avenue, ROCHESTER, N. Y.

TEN DAYS FREE TRIAL

allowed in all our bicycles. We SHIP ON APPROVAL without a cent deposit; any wheel not satisfactory returned at our expense. Highest grade 1004 Models $8.75 to $17. Counter Broken. Hodgehorne. Perfect good tires and best equipment. 1905 and 1906 Models, best make $7 to $12. 800 Second-hand Wheels All makes and Models $3 to $8. Good as new. Great Factory Clearing Sale at Half Price. RIDER AGENTS WANTED. In each town to take orders from sample wheel furnished by us. Our agents make big profits. Write at once for catalogues and our Special Offer. AUTOMOBILES, TIRES, Sewing Machines, Bicycles, etc., half retail prices.
Mead Cycle Co., Dept. 53-F, Chicago

3 Months Free

Send us your name and address and we will send you The Investor's Review for three months free of charge. A great journal of advice for everybody. Fully illustrated. Gives latest and most reliable information concerning industrial, mining, oil and other stocks and enterprises. Knowledge is power. Great opportunities come and go. Great fakes likewise. Get posted before investing. Write to-day. INVESTOR'S REVIEW, 1409 Galt Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

GINSENG
Great opportunities offered. Book explaining about the Ginseng Industry. Free. Agents wanted. F. B. MILLER, Box 265, Rose Hill, N. Y.

STUDY

during your spare moments. Thorough training, theoretical and practical, is necessary for the man engaged in technical work. We teach

ENGINEERING

under the personal direction of instructors of recognized standing. They are, through long experience, familiar with the best methods of teaching

BY MAIL

The courses are prepared by leading authorities and combine theoretical training with practical experience in order that the student may immediately apply the knowledge gained from his study. A postal will bring you our 200-page bulletin No. 28 M, giving full outlines of courses suitable for summer study.

American School of Correspondence
AT ARMOUR INSTITUTE OF TECHNOLOGY
Chicago, Illinois

MARSHALL'S MAY DIAMOND OFFER

$35.00 Each
$3.50 per Month

As opportunity to secure AT ONCE a first water DIAMOND. Each stone in the lot is a gem, and has THE MARSHALL GUARANTEE that it is pure white color, absolutely perfect, free from flaws, of greatest brilliancy and, strictly top grade in every particular; also guarantee weight, value and that full amount will be allowed in exchange at any time. Meetings are held here, here, here.

Sent to your address Express Prepaid for Free Examination

If you are pleased with the diamond pay $1.00 cash and $5.50 per month. If not, return at our expense. For full amount down these $35.00 stones are $22.25. Diamonds sent on approval anywhere in the U. S. or Canada.
Two Free Diamond Books. "Jewels and Jewelry," is filled with "suggestions" for wedding, anniversary, graduation and birthday gifts. It shows every new thing. "How to Buy a Diamond" the most interesting, useful and instructive book for diamond fanciers ever published. Both FREE on request this month. GEORGE E. MARSHALL, (Inc.), W. S. Hyde, Jr., Pres. A. S. Tracy, Sec.
Dept. 11 Columbus Memorial Bldg., Chicago
REFERENCE—First National Bank.

MOVING PICTURE MACHINES

Stereopticons You can make BIG MONEY Entertaining the Public. Nothing affords better opportunities for men with small capital.

We start you, furnishing complete outfit and explicit instructions at a surprisingly low cost. The field is large comprising the regular theaters and lecture circuits, also local fields in Churches, Public Schools, Lodges and General Public Gatherings. Our Entertainment Supply Catalogue and special offer fully explain everything. Send Free CHICAGO PROJECTING CO., 328 Dearborn Street, Dept. 106, CHICAGO, ILL.

Can You Draw This?

Copy it as well as you can, send to us and we will give you an expensive art portfolio of drawings by the noted artist, Charles Lederer. A course of lessons by mail, at home, will qualify you to earn a big salary as an artist and cartoonist. Instruction individual and exactly adapted to your talent.

THE LEDERER SCHOOL OF DRAWING
3846 Ellis Ave., CHICAGO

JOURNALISM

Practical, paying newspaper work, writing short stories, etc.

TAUGHT BY MAIL

By our successful system in personal charge of Mr. Henry L. Whitehead, former managing editor of Washington Post, successful students everywhere. Write for illustrated booklet. NATIONAL CORRESPONDENCE INSTITUTE, 35-74 Second National Bank Building, Washington, D. C.

U. S. A.

Liquid Pistol

Will stop the most vicious dog (or man) without permanent injury. Perfectly safe to carry without danger of leakage. Fires and recharges by pulling the trigger. Loads from any liquid. No cartridges required. Over 30 shots in one loading. All dealers, or by mail, $6.00. Rubber covered holster 5c. extra.
PARKER, STRAIN & SUTTON, 224 South St., New York, U. S. A.

PENMANSHIP

Stenography and Book-keeping, complete course for Home Study is all three, $5. Insures a beautiful hand. Situations for all graduates.
C. C. GAINES, Box 961, Poughkeepsie, N. Y., or 119 West 125th St., New York, N. Y.

Uncle Sam Needs You

Do you know that our Government is in constant search for stenographers? It's a fact. Civil Service Commission will tell you so. Our splendid course (Mail Course) in Stenography and Typewriting qualifies you for appointment. Salary $2000 to $14000. Graduate fully prepared and instructed just how to obtain appointment. MERCANTILE Dist. Inst., 108 Canal, Chicago Ill.

goes old Peter Booth to get his coin!" was a likely enough remark to be heard in the market-place, when the blind man went by, his daughter leading him. Perhaps it was said on this last occasion of all.

This time Sarah was not concerned as to how he received his money: all went like clockwork under her arrangements, and she had but to take her own time to get things in her own way. Nevertheless, on this occasion, as on the last, perhaps from the liking she had for working on that haggard brain and watching results, perhaps without intentional malice, Sarah stayed in the house on their return, and would not stir out again.

On Saturday night there was always more to do in preparation for Sunday; unexpectedly, before she was ready for him, old Peter announced that he was going to bed. That meant that the Bank money-bag was going upstairs with him. It meant, therefore, that when the house was quiet he intended to come down again.

Sarah went in to have a look at him about half an hour later, declaring herself then on her road to bed. A glance round the room showed her where his clothes were: he had got them under the sheets. Sarah retired, saying nothing.

Downstairs again, she fixed up a candle, in an old horn lantern, sufficient to throw a dim light on the scene, and placed it upon a high bureau not too near the door. She took this precaution because at times her father had sufficient visual sense left to be aware of a light near and on a level with his eyes. Having thus made ready, she took up her position and awaited his coming with confidence.

It was about twenty minutes before she heard him feeling his way downstairs. As soon as he had entered all went as usual: with one money-bag drawn from its hiding-place and the other from his pocket, he sat down to the table, and was speedily engrossed in business.

It must be remembered how the situation now stood. The only gold remaining in the old man's possession was what he had brought from the Bank that day. All the rest—the coins occupying the larger bag—were the two hundred substitute shillings. As old Peter spread out his riches into two heaps, Sarah, according to what was now her established custom, began substituting shillings for pounds.

By some chance, either her sleeve touched it or he did, a coin slipped off the table and fell to the floor. Old Peter, hearing it go, went down on hands and knees and began to grope for it. When at last he had found it he was evidently in doubt which heap it had fallen from. By fingering it, he knew that it was either a shilling or a pound, but he was not sure which. To solve the matter, he felt his way to the heap of should-be sovereigns, and, taking up one, laid it face to face against what was in fact a pound. In another moment he arrived suddenly at the disconcerting discovery that the doubtful coin was a little bit smaller than the one which he knew to be a pound.

Sarah, fully alive to the fact that his suspicions were now awake, or were on their way to becoming so, saw that her only safety lay in depriving him at once of all means of comparison. The moment he laid down the questioned coin in a place by itself and raked for another of the pretended pounds wherewith to make further comparison she saw how his mind was working. Quick as thought she reached over, took up the pound he had for a moment laid down, and substituted a shilling.

Peter having found that the two supposed pounds he had in hand corresponded, that all, in fact, from that heap did so—for he tried others—now started with considerable agitation to try comparison once more with the coin that had fallen.

This time, of course, its size matched; he was more puzzled than ever.

At once he began plunging his hands into the larger heap, picking up haphazard, comparing, weighing, and finding that all of them agreed.

Sarah, meanwhile, was subtracting one by one every gold piece from the smaller heap and substituting shillings. The game was exciting—just touch and go—requiring all her courage and address. She held her breath for long periods, fearing to make a sound. The slightest slip might at any moment betray her.

A man with his suspicions awake is much more acute than a man without. The complete exchange had hardly been effected when Sarah was surprised to witness the sudden hurry, agitation, and vitality which seized hold of the old man. With violently trembling hands, but quick decisive gesture, like a bird picking up its food, he began to catch up coins and compare them first from one heap and then from another. They gave him no information whatever.

Then he began to count over the last quarter's payment, which still lay apart from the rest. Sarah had been unable in the time at her disposal to set matters so right as to make her shillings give a correct total as representing pounds. At the end of his addition the old man was hopelessly out. If these were all pounds then he had received too much, five or six pounds too much, since Sarah in substituting shillings had forgotten that there were shillings already there, which must now, to his calculation, stand for pounds.

And now Sarah saw him, in greater agitation than before, counting up tens and twenties and weighing them first in one, then in the other palm. She leaned forward over the board with her two clinched hands lying out in front of her like a rower waiting to start. The old man muttered and whined. All at once he threw up his hands in a sudden access of despair. "Oh,

The Race for the FOOD The FOOD for the RACE

We will gladly send a large sample (sufficient for six meals) to any mother who is not acquainted with Nestlé's Food and who is anxious to try it.

We are always glad to correspond with mothers on this or any other question relative to the care and feeding of infants. Our Mother's Department devotes its time to receiving and answering all such inquiries.

HENRI NESTLÉ, 73 WARREN ST., NEW YORK

The Leonard Cleanable Refrigerator

LINED WITH
Genuine Porcelain Enamel

The Grand Rapids Refrigerator Co., Grand Rapids, Mich.
7 Illinois Street.

Dyspepsia

and other stomach troubles quickly relieved and in most cases surely cured by the use of

"Glycozone"

This scientific germicide is absolutely harmless; it subdues the inflammation of the mucous membrane of the stomach, and by removing the cause, effects a cure. Used and recommended by leading physicians. Take no substitute and see that each bottle bears my signature. Trial size, $1.00, at druggists or by mail, from

Prof. Charles H. Hirsch
59 H Prince St., New York
Send for Booklet How to Treat Disease.

SAVE ONE THIRD

By Buying of the Makers

We are actual manufacturers—not a commission house. We can and do save our customers one third on retail prices by selling direct to user and cutting out all dealers' profits. All our goods carry our guarantee. Our free illustrated catalogue shows a greater assortment of carriages and harness than any dealer can show you. Send for it.

THE COLUMBUS
CARRIAGE AND HARNESS COMPANY
COLUMBUS, OHIO

THE FASTENER
WITH A BULL-DOG GRIP
WASHBURNE'S
PAT. FASTENERS

More feel comfort and utility in their use. Applied to:
Key Chain and Ring, 25c; Swift Holders, 10c;
Cuff Holders, 25c; Drawers Supporters, 25c;
Sole Fastener, 10c; but Never Let Go. Catalogue Free.
Sold everywhere.
American Ring Company, Dept. 75, Waterbury, Conn.

Non-Sinkable Steel Auto-Boat $250

Fitted with powerful Auto-motive, four cycle marine engine, cannot sink, cannot rust. Capacity 10 to 12 people.

Nonsinkable Steel Launches, Row Boats, Sail Boats, Canoes, Duck Boats, etc.

Made from the best quality Apollo steel—will last a lifetime. Send for catalogue. Write for agents' discount.

Michigan Steel Boat Co., 1298 Jefferson Ave., DETROIT, MICH., U. S. A.

We are sending Regal Shoes to all parts of the world

We Guarantee a Perfect Fit

Let us send you full particulars of the Regal Mail Order system. We will prove to you that you can buy better shoes for $3.50 through the Regal Mail Order Department than you can buy in New York or anywhere else for six dollars, except in Regal Stores. And we will prove that you can safely depend on receiving just what you want just when you expect it.

We will guarantee you a perfect fit. You take no risk. Under this agreement you are as safe in ordering Regal Shoes by mail as in ordering provisions from the grocer—with the help of the famous Regal Style-Book which keeps you posted on the latest correct fashions in shoes—which tells the whole story of the Regal personal way of fitting orders—and which we'll send you free.

For the convenience of thousands of our Mail Order customers we have established five sub-stations throughout the United States where Mail Orders may be sent if customers have not sufficient time to wait while sending order to Boston. Customers should send their orders direct to Regal Mail Order headquarters if possible.

EXETER

Particularly provided for university students and young business men who desire full 1904 style in a Regal Oxford. New effect in extension sole.

Style B1631—As illustrated: Oxford in Blucher Style, made of Black Russian Calfskin; "Flat-iron" Extension sole of Medium weight, High Military Heel.

Style A1631—Blucher Oxford, exactly as illustrated, except made of Black Waxed Calfskin.

If you are planning to visit the Exposition of St. Louis write for our special map which covers both the city and the Exposition grounds and buildings. We have prepared similar maps of every city where there is a Regal store. Any of these maps will be sent free for the asking.

Women's Regal Shoes are made in all the latest styles. Sold only through our Mail Order Department and in our exclusive women's stores.

21 Regal Stores in New York City.
6 Regal Stores in Boston.
4 Regal Stores in Philadelphia.
12 Regal Stores in United States and England.

Regal Shoe Co., Inc., Mail Order Dept., 707 Summer St., Boston, Mass.
Sub-station A—400 Broadway, New York
Sub-station B—212 Broadway, New York
Sub-station C—418 Olive St., St. Louis
Sub-station D—221 Canal St., New Orleans
Sub-station E—6 Whitehall St., Boston
London Post Dept., 27 Chancery Lane, London, England

REGAL

THE SHOE THAT PROVES

ALLEN'S FOOT-EASE

Shake Into Your Shoes

Allen's Foot-Ease, a powder for the feet. It cures painful, swollen, aching, nervous feet, and instantly takes the sting out of corns and bunions. It's the greatest comfort discovery of the age. Allen's Foot-Ease makes tight-fitting shoes feel easy. It is a certain cure for ingrowing nails, swelling, callus and hot, tired, aching feet. We have over 30,000 testimonials. TRY IT TO-DAY. Sold by all Druggists and Shoe Stores. Do not accept an imitation. Sent by mail for 10c in stamps.

FREE TRIAL PACKAGE sent by mail. MOTHER GRAY'S SWEET POWDER, the best powder for French, Toilet, Children, sold by Druggists everywhere. Trial Package FREE. Address:

ALLEN S. OLIVESTED, Le Roy, N. Y.

Swedish Hunting Knife

Indispensable in camp—always useful in a boat. Keen enough to skin a deer—strong enough to split light-wood—12" enough to dig a rain trench. A camping kit in itself. 3 1/2 inch genuine Swedish forged steel blade. Made for sportsmen who want a heavy-duty knife for all-around work. Folds when not in use, but cracks close down on your hand. Sent postpaid for 75 cents. We have catalogues of Chicago cutlery or Yachting Supplies. Tell us which you want.

J. C. HOPKINS & CO., 115 Chambers St., New York

God!" he cried. "Oh, God, I am going mad! I can't see, I can't see! Oh, for one moment, just for one moment, give me back my sight; or how shall I ever know?"

Sarah had been holding her breath so long that now as she let it go it issued in a faint sigh. Old Peter sprang suddenly to his feet. "Who's there?" he cried, sharp as a pistol crack, and hung half-crouched, his hands out to guard his treasure.

Sarah had risen at the same time, cool and self-possessed, still hoping to ward off discovery; lest he should reach out and touch her she drew back and held herself rigid, strung to her last muscle.

"Who are you?" cried old Peter again. "Some one is there; you have been robbing me! Where is all my gold? how much have you taken of it? Ah, I'm blind, I'm blind! Sarah, Sarah, come down! They are robbing me!"

As he thus cried aloud, he began in frantic haste to clutch up all the money he could lay hold of and tumble it back into its bag. In a wonderfully short time he had cleared the board. Thus bulked it became a formidable weapon in the hands of a man, even though old and feeble, nerved to desperate defence of his property. He reared it up with a threatening gesture.

Sarah saw him about to advance toward her. She was in a corner, with only one way for escape—the table was between them. She was hoping even now that persistent silence on her part would make him believe he was mistaken. Then it struck her that if he came nearer he might discover the light that stood behind her on the bureau. Across the back of a chair a shawl lay handy. Catching it up, she threw it over the lantern, completely muffling it.

As she did so, as the natural gloom of the place asserted itself, the window became the most illumined point in the room; and there against the blind, and against the eye-hole that she herself had made, she saw in the semi-obscure of the moonlit night the shadow of a man, the motionless shadow of one watching.

Terror and dismay seized her. She uttered a low cry, and stood self-betrayed. In another moment the blind man had sprung upon her, lifting up his bag to strike. She struggled to get past him, and, unable to, shrank back, crying aloud: "Don't, don't, father! It's me—Sarah!" It seemed as though the suddenly revealed truth did but add to his terror and rage. All at once a stunning blow from a dull metallic weight, that chinked as it descended, fell on her, striking her out of her senses to earth.

When Sarah came to herself again all was dark and silent. A gust of cold air told that the outer door stood open. Search proved that she alone remained in the house. Old Peter and his money-bags were gone.

In the remaining hours of the night she waited, expecting that he would return, wondering, perhaps, how much she would be obliged to admit if accused. But when it began to grow light a new fear impelled her into action. It would never do for the story to get abroad; and her father might possibly have gone to seek shelter and protection at some neighbor's door. It was necessary, therefore, for her to go and bring him in.

Her head was still dizzy from the blow she had received, but she dared not wait. She hurried up the lane in the direction of the nearest group of cottages.

The event proved that she need not have hurried. She came on the old man lying by the side of the way with placid face upturned, quite dead. His throat bore marks of rough handling, his clothes gave signs that a struggle had taken place. The money-bag, which his dead hands still crooked to clutch, was gone.

That, afterward, was traced; and the man in whose possession it was found did not attempt, in the face of his graver danger, to deny the charge of robbery and violence of which he stood accused. But no murder could be proved against him. Failure of the heart's action was the medical verdict when the coroner held his court. There the incriminated man elected to give evidence, and, having been duly cautioned, gave it.

Truly he had a tale to tell of what had gone on under his eye as he watched at the window-blind.

Sarah, too, entered the witness-box and bowed her head to the judgment passed on her by the world. She never lifted it again. And though she gave old Peter a funeral that all the world turned out to see, and in due course raised a costly marble emblem over his remains, she never righted herself in men's eyes.

She sold the cottage, and, with the proceeds of the sale and what remained of her ill-gotten gold, passed out of the district. Chadsy heard of her no more.

□ □

TOASTING

THE practice of "toasting" a sentiment or a health began in medieval times, when the "loving-cup" was a feature of every banquet. This cup was filled with wine or mead, in which floated a piece of toasted bread. The cup was passed from guest to guest after the host had touched it with his lips, until each one had tasted. After it was back to the place of starting, the host drank what was left of the liquor and swallowed the piece of toast in honor of his assembled friends.

Burnett's Vanilla Extract

Is the best, and the best is none too good for your food and drink. Insist on having Burnett's.—Ad.

Cereal Foods

without cream are not appetizing, but good raw cream is not always easy to get. Borden's Peerless Brand Sterilized Cream is superior to raw cream with a delicious flavor and richness. Use it for general cooking purposes. Borden's Condensed Milk Co., proprietors.—Ad.

A Summer Day and a

CADILLAC

Model A Touring, $850
Without Touring, $750
Model B Touring Car, $900
Without Touring, $800

For a delightful spin in the country; for business or pleasure; for quick and pleasant transit over long distances or short, there's nothing equals a reliable automobile.

No reliable automobile is so easy to buy, to operate, or to maintain, as a Cadillac.

No automobile at double the money is so strongly constructed, so speedy on good roads, so dependable on bad, so capable in the matter of hill-climbing, as the Cadillac.

Model A Touring (shown above) will carry four people safely and comfortably at 30 miles per hour on the level stretches, and will go up a 45 per cent. grade.

Model B Touring car is identical in accomplishment, but has larger wheels, longer wheel-base, more roomy body. Both Models are equipped with Goodrich 3-inch detachable tires.

Full appreciation of Cadillac superiority in design, construction and performance is possible only by inspection and trial.

Will be glad to send you booklet L for the asking. It explains and illustrates all Cadillac models in detail, and gives address of agency nearest you where they may be seen and tried.

CADILLAC AUTOMOBILE CO.,
Detroit, Mich.

Member Association of Licensed Automobile Manufacturers

"IDEAL" STEAM COOKER FREE

To introduce our new 1904 patterns in every home in America, we will send a free copy of the "Ideal" Steam Cooker, with a full set of recipes, absolutely free, under the only condition of our $1.00 "Ideal" Cooker. It is the only cooker, both new and used, that is absolutely steam and odor tight and that has a whistle to warn when water is low; with drawn handles; top, bottom, and side compartments. Fuel bills reduced one-half. Its price book and free offer if you write today. Agents make $100 to $200 a month.

TOLEDO COOKER CO., Toledo, O.

LEARN SHORTHAND

By Correspondence from Court Reporters. We do the largest court reporting business in the world and teach the same standard system we use. We make no false claims; we teach no false shorthand. Write for "Success Shorthand" and copy of guarantee, sent free.

WALTON, JAMES & FORD
Suite 26, 71-79 Clark Street Chicago, Ill.

You Can Make $3 to $10

a day fitting glasses. Our 14-p. FREE EYE BOOK will show. We give complete instructions for testing eyes, fitting glasses, and furnish all goods. Write for our book and letters from some of our successful representatives.

JACKSONIAN OPTICAL COLLEGE, (Chartered)
614 College Building, Jackson, Michigan

The hygienic influence and correction of carriage acquired through wearing O'Sullivan's Rubber Heels receives the recognition of the medical fraternity. When you need a lift on your heels ask your dealer to put O'Sullivan's Rubber Heels on. 25 cents and small sum for attaching. All dealers, or O'SULLIVAN RUBBER CO., LOWELL, MASS.

$3 a Day.

Send us your address and we will show you how to earn $3 a day absolutely sure; we furnish the work and teach you free, you work in the locality where you live. Send us your address and we will explain the business fully; remember we guarantee that you can earn $3 for every day's work. Write at once.

ROYAL MANUFACTURING CO., Box 1106, Detroit, Mich.

ASTHMA It won't cost you a cent to learn how it can be immediately relieved and permanently cured at your own home. Address, Frontier Asthma Co. (Dept. B) Buffalo, N.Y.

CORLISS COON & CO.

STYLE

In Corliss-Coon Collars Style and Good Taste are synonymous. They are never frassish, but are cut from carefully designed patterns, devised to unite elegance with comfort, dignity with correct style. We bother with the science of fit; you have, in consequence, the satisfaction of wearing perfect collars.

Sold by leading dealers, 2 for 25 cents, or from us by mail if unable to find them. Write for booklet of leading shapes and information on correct dress.

CORLISS, COON & CO. Dept. R TROY, N. Y.

DWIGGENS Invincible

Twice the life of any other fence. Double galvanized steel wire; weather and rot-proof. Never loses its rigidity. Trim, close designs for parks, lawns, cemeteries, etc. Catalogue FREE, shows variety of styles 10c. in 50c. a D.

ACME LAWN MOWERS

Direct from Factory to User
Prices: 16-inch $8.75; 18-inch $9.50; 20-inch $10.50. Express charges prepaid. Your money back if not as represented. Warranted highest grade ball-bearing reel and roller-bearing wheels. Easy push, best material and workmanship. All parts interchangeable and adjustable. Write for Circular.
American Die & Tool Co., 24 & Battonwood Sts., Reading, Pa.

Fisherman's Outfit

No. 9.
This Splendid High Grade Outfit consists of a herring-iron three-jointed split bamboo rod, mounted on a solid stock, six rings carefully placed and evenly spaced, very closely fitted, wrapped with metal wire. All mountings are full heavy nickel plated. Cork handle. Rod is 5 1/2 feet long, comes in a stained and varnished herring-iron case and a leather bag. One fine quality Archer Brand Multiplying Reel, full nickel plated, silver yellow, back spring steel and drag, balance handle, holds 40 yards of line. Reel also contains 25 yards of extra quality line. Stripped all for trout or bass, 10 feet of water proof 3/4 lb. C. Ross Line, No. 64. Two down split shot for Strainers. Three No. 5 Bladed Hooks for Bass fishing. Six assorted styles bass and trout flies. One six foot 5 lb. worm. One Leader. Eighteen single gut Stuffed Hooks, assorted for trout and bass. One soft Rubber Frog, perfect imitation. One No. 4 Flashed Trolling Spoon, nickel plated with silver hooks, nicely feathered. One colored float. This Outfit would ordinarily cost at retail at least $10.00. We will send it to you with the deepest understanding that if you are not satisfied with it after you have examined it, you can return it to us at our expense and we will refund your money.

Our Special Price $2

Our Handmade New Sporting Goods Catalogue, containing everything for the Fisherman or Hunter, mailed free upon application.

SIEGEL COOPER & CO.
NEW YORK CITY, N.Y.

BUILD YOUR OWN BOAT BY THE "BROOKS SYSTEM"

16 FT. LONG Exact size PATTERNS of every piece. Complete IN-4 FT. BEAM STRUTTERS. Each step plainly ILLUSTRATED. Expert PATTERNS $5.50. Once unnecessary. Hundreds have built this boat. Boat Patterns of all kinds and sizes up to 40 ft. at prices from $3.00 up. We also build complete boats and knock down frames.

CONSTRUCTION LAUNCH-SAIL PARTICULARS FREE-25¢ brings 64 illustrated catalogue. & ROW-BOAT set of working instructions and illustrations.

BROOKS BOAT MFG. CO. 57A-C BAY CITY, MICH.

Artistic Flower Stand

For use on lawn, cemetery or in home. Made of iron. The shape and depth for earth enables plants to thrive in it better than in any one on the market. Buy from your dealer or send to the manufacturer. Full description and price on application. State where you saw this ad and get FREE our booklet "How to Have a Beautiful Lawn." The Artistic Flower Stand Co., 14 Mill St., Grand Rapids, Mich.

PATENT SECURED Or Fee Returned

Free opinion as to patentability. Send for Guide Book and What to Invent, then publication issued for free distribution. Patents secured by us without fee in Patent, Second, Success Cases. EVANS, WILKINS & CO., 405 F St., Washington, D. C.

Be an Actor or Actress

Learn this noble profession AT HOME through the SCOTT MAIL COURSE; also Education, Oratory, Voice Culture and the Memory to retain volumes. "The Science of Acting," with handsome portraits of leading actors and actresses FREE to all sending their name and address to the:

SCOTT SCHOOL OF DRAMATIC ART
Dept. A, St. Louis, Mo.

To Owners of Gasoline Engines, Automobiles, Launches, Etc. The Auto-Sparker

Does away entirely with all starting and running batteries, their maintenance and expense. No belt—no switchboard batteries. Can be attached to any engine now using batteries. Fully guaranteed; write for descriptive catalog.

Metsinger Device Mfg. Co.
22 Main St., Pendleton, Ind.

Be Your Own Boss!

MANY MAKE $2,000.00 A YEAR. You have the same chance. Start a Mail Order Business at home. We tell you how. Money coming in daily. Enormous profits. Everything furnished. Write at once for our "Starter" and FREE particulars. C. W. KREMER CO., 131 Washington Street, Chicago, Ill.

TELEGRAPHY

Taught quickly. Can't fill demand for operators. Established 1874, endorsed by official Western Union Telegraph Co. Total cost: Tuition, Telegraphy and typewriting, board and room, $100.00. course, 807. This can be reduced. Catalog free.

DODGE'S INSTITUTE - VALPARAISO, IND.

PATENTS

NEW BOOK MAILED FREE. Tells all about Patents and how to obtain them. Tells what to invent for profit. Contains lists of thousands of inventions available for sale. 67 N. B. & H. B. B. Pat. 4572. 610 11th St., Wash., D. C.

A Beadwork Book FREE

Beautifully illustrated in colors telling all about art and many dainty novelties for ladies, sent free.

MIETZKY ART CO., Dept. 20, 84 WASHINGTON ST., CHICAGO

STARK TREES

best by Test—75 Years LARGEST N. Y. FRUIT BARK FREE. W. STARK TREES. PAY CASH. STARK BROS., Louisiana, Mo.; Danville, N. Y.; etc.

Not Honorably Discharged

(Continued from page 15)

First and foremost I'll look up Bishop Brooks. He'll be high spiritedly, I say, as he was in this world; but I'll hear him speak and get the shine of his eyes on me again, and have him speak to mother. Well, I must look out and see how the country looks so's to tell mother. I declare, I'm that eager it's like my first trip to Boston way when ma couldn't keep me still. I'm glad there ain't nobody in front or behind of me to remark my antics. Say, Jonas, you must look out, here's Montserrat!

Montserrat showed only the tattered and winter-pilaged remnant of her arboreal beauty. The black lace-work of vines over the station walls, the leafless trees, or the snow-laden shrubs around it, and the wide, white plain could but feebly recall the orderly loveliness of summer. But the sea shone presently at West Manchester, blue and dazzling in a rift of sunshine; and the old man smiled as he put away in his mind every violet shadow on the snow, every white blaze of hillside. "I'd most be willing to live a little longer," he thought. "It's such a sightly world. But I got my discharge." At Magnolia a single passenger, a girl with a bundle, climbed into a waiting wagon on runners, which crunched and squeaked up the snowy road through the fir trees, a bleak contrast to the noisy bustle which the summer had used to pour out on the platform. West Gloucester lay deserted, screened by its dense white forests. Jonas looked about him, at the vacant car of which now he was the sole occupant; he experienced a curious longing for human intercourse, for some parting token of that deep underlying kindness which man has for his brother, because of their common lot. When the brakeman gave him a segment of a ruddy young face through a half-open door, calling "Gloucester; do not leave any articles in the cars!" he rose quickly so as to speak to the youth before he went.

But the words were not said. The old man stood as if palsied, staring at the car seat. On its dingy plush lay a picture framed in red and bronze; the picture which he had put away with his own hands in Cambridge; the same, yet not the same, for on the pictured face was stamped a look of reproach and warning never there before.

With shaking hands Jonas lifted the portrait. No one had sat in the seat and he had passed it on his path into the car. He could remember just the sprawling stain disfiguring the red plush—the stain which the picture had hidden, but which was plain and black now. That picture was not on it then. There could not be two such pictures framed exactly alike, with the resemblance complete down to the detail of a chipped right hand corner. It was Jonas's picture. But this melancholy and solemn appeal was not in his picture. Jonas sat down. Unheeding, he looked into the wonderful eyes, while the train moved out of the Gloucester station and sped over the snow to Rockport. "Is this how you answer me? Don't you want me to do it?" he was crying inaudibly. "Oh, let me, please! I have done everything you asked me, for these twenty years. Now—I can't. Why, Dr. Brooks, Dr. Brooks, I couldn't go to the poorhouse! And that's where—I haven't grudged rich folks their luxuries. I was willing, cheerful willing to live plain. Why, Bishop, I didn't have a meat dinner three times last month, or any other meal with meat, either. But I have got to feel I don't owe no man. I fought for my country and she won't recognize it 'cause my captain's dead and he mixed my name up—I don't blame him; if you see him, you tell him I don't blame him; but I ain't got no chance there. I haven't any of my own folks alive, and my friends are poor's I am. And I'm growing blind. Dr. Brooks, I can't bear it—lemme look off a minute and then come back and look your old way at me, for God's sake, Dr. Brooks; and let a useless, tired old man go home!"

But when he saw the eyes again, though there was immeasurable pity in them, they were warning, prohibiting him, still.

"But I got my discharge, I ain't deserting," the old soldier pleaded.

The brakeman pushed his entire robust presence, breathing fresh air, into the car. "Hullo, grandpa," he hailed jovially, "you got carried on? Well, jest set still; I'll fetch you back; we turn round at Rockport, y' know." He was tipping the seats over in preparation for the return.

Jonas wearily moved his head to pick up the picture which he had laid beside him.

There was no picture on the seat!

He inspected the floor; he rose and searched the seats in front and behind, without result. The portrait, his own portrait, had vanished. Awestruck, Jonas crumpled up in his old place. He had no thought of revolt. "I didn't sense it was wrong, Bishop," murmured he, wiping the slow tears away, "but I know you know best. I'll not try to desert, since desertion it would be; and one comfort, I'm nigh the allotted span. It won't be as hard waiting for mother as for me, that's more comfort. I won't disappoint you, Bishop, after you've took all this trouble to show me my duty."

The low afternoon sun was gilding the State-house dome as a pale and haggard old man caught sight of it on the Harvard Bridge, returning homeward. Almost the same instant, he caught sight of something else in a passing car, a young girl in a big hat waving for the motorman to stop. He was too spent to wonder much even when Delight Carney, with her eyes lustrous with emotion and her cheeks burning, boarded

Hopkins & Allen Automatic Hammer Revolvers

Positive Cylinder Stop and Trigger Safety Device. Accidental Discharge Impossible. Automatic Ejector. 32 or 38 Calibre. Triple Nickel Plate

Outfit No. 20, complete as illustrated above—Automatic Hammer Revolver, Chamois Leather Case, Box of 50 Cartridges and Cleaning Rod—Prepaid to any Express Office in the United States $6.00

Send for Catalogue No. 46 of Rifles, Shotguns and Revolvers

THE HOPKINS & ALLEN ARMS CO. NORWICH, CONN.

PENDLETON INDIAN ROBES

$4 to $15 Express Prepaid

Made of the finest Eastern Oregon Wool, in absolutely fast colors, in the latest, most attractive Indian patterns, these popular robes have become a necessity in the well-ordered home.

The color combinations and designs are thoroughly Indian and are furnished up by the tribes themselves. The Indian is the best judge of a blanket, always buys the best. That is why we ship thousands to the Reservations every year. They are used in homes everywhere for slumber robes, veranda wraps, couch covers, trunk and box throws. Their bright, striking colors will be a welcome addition to any corner, "den" and college room, while their satisfying warmth is a boon to the invalid, the convalescent, the traveler, the camper.

Send for FREE catalogue "C," with illustrations of the various patterns and the robes in actual use. Robes returnable if not perfectly satisfactory.

PENDLETON WOOLEN MILLS, Pendleton, Oregon.
Dealers, write us for discounts.

Learn the Truth

Do you know

That the main cause of unhappiness, ill-health, sickly children, and divorce is admitted by physicians and shown by court records to be ignorance of the laws of sex?

Sexology

ILLUSTRATED

Contains in one volume

Knowledge a Young Man Should Have.
Knowledge a Young Husband Should Have.
Knowledge a Father Should Have.
Knowledge a Father Should Impart to His Son.
Medical Knowledge a Husband Should Have.
Knowledge a Young Woman Should Have.
Knowledge a Young Wife Should Have.
Knowledge a Mother Should Have.
Knowledge a Mother Should Impart to Her Daughter.
Medical Knowledge a Wife Should Have.

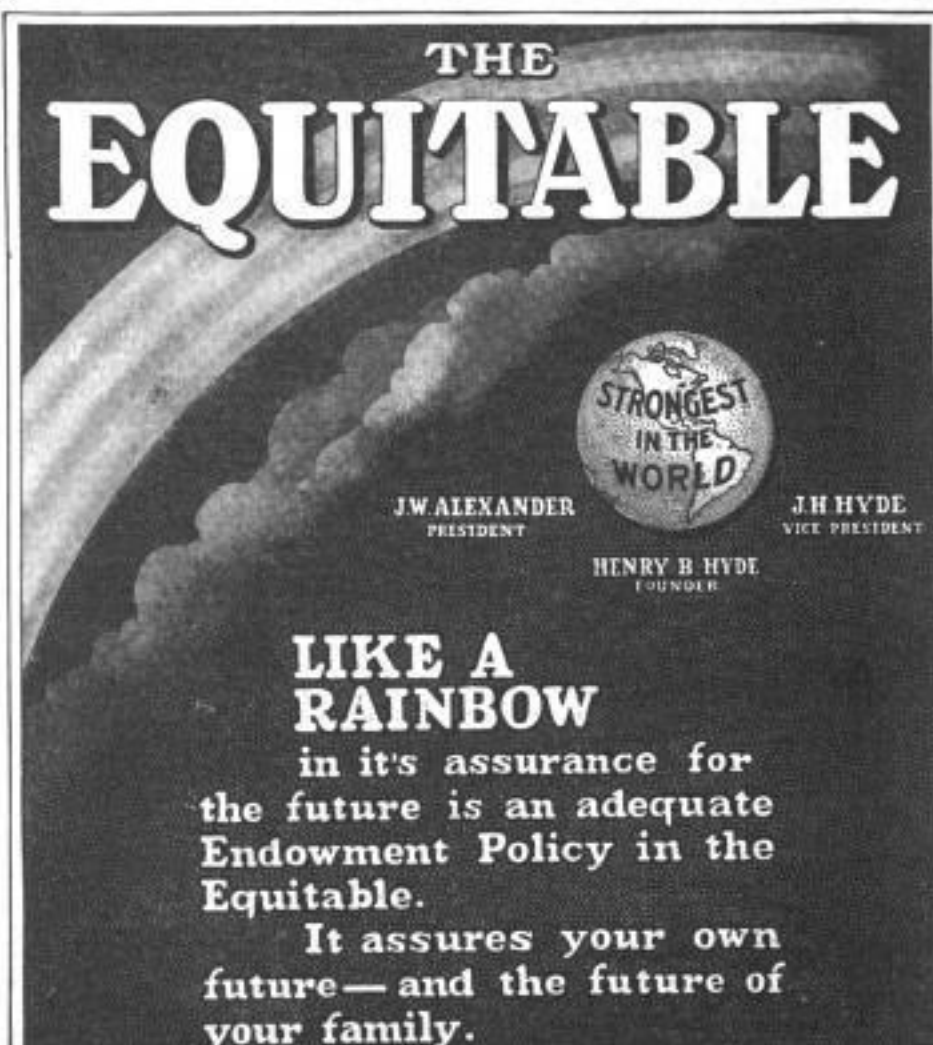

By WILLIAM H. WALLING, A.M., M.D.

New Edition. Enlarged and Illustrated. Rich Cloth Binding. Full gold stamp. $2.00.

Write for "Other People's Opinions" and Table of Contents, also 100-page illustrated catalogue of books of medicine—FREE.

PURITAN PUB. CO., Dept. W, Philadelphia

THE EQUITABLE

STRONGEST IN THE WORLD

J.W. ALEXANDER
PRESIDENT

J.H. HYDE
VICE PRESIDENT

HENRY B. HYDE
FOUNDER

LIKE A RAINBOW

in its assurance for the future is an adequate Endowment Policy in the Equitable.

It assures your own future—and the future of your family.

Opportunities for men of character to act as representatives Apply to GAGE E. TARBELL, 2nd. Vice President

For full information fill out this coupon or write

The Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States, 120 BROADWAY, NEW YORK Dept. No. 24

Please send me information regarding an Endowment for $.....

if issued at.....years of age.

Name.....

Address.....

POISON

has never been found in the Enamel of

AGATE
MFG. & CO.
NICKEL-STEEL WARE

TRADE MARK

THIS BLUE LABEL
Proves It

Mends everything from a fan to an old shoe.

Army & Navy Liquid Glue

Comes in tubes, no brush needed, and no bother to apply.
Glues everything glueable—furniture, china, bric-a-brac, cut glass, leather, rubber, etc.
Made from pure hide and sinews, and has four times the cohesive strength of other liquid glues which are made from fish sounds.

If your dealer hasn't it, we will mail you a sample tube on receipt of 5 cents.

Wachter Mfg. Company
513 West Pratt Street
BALTIMORE, MD.

At Factory Prices
Direct from our own Factory

Why pay your dealer from $5 to $40 more for a stove or range, when you can buy direct from our factory

KALAMAZOO
STOVES AND RANGES

saving all dealers' and middlemen's profits? We save you from 25% to 40% on every purchase and you run no risk for we give you 360 Days Approval Test and a guarantee under a $50,000 bank bond. If a Kalamazoo does not satisfy you in every way, send it back and we return every cent you paid. We pay the freight. Can we make a fairer offer? We are selling thousands of both steel and cast iron stoves and ranges in all parts of the country, and can refer you to pleased customers in your own neighborhood.

New patterns, large square ovens and guaranteed fire backs. All blacked and polished ready to set up. Send postal for Approval Offer and Catalog No. 176.

Kalamazoo Stove Co., Mfrs.
Kalamazoo, Mich.

We fit all our ranges and cook stoves with our patent new thermocouple which heats baking easy.

WILLIAMS' SHAVING STICK

Commends itself to travelers by land or sea, on account of its convenience, compactness, luxury and economy.

Sole of all druggists.

THE J. B. WILLIAMS CO., Glensbury, Conn.

WONDERFUL PIANO OFFER

THE CELEBRATED BECKWITH PIANO
CO.'S UPRIGHT
GRAND 55-YEAR
GUARANTEED
PIANOS.

$89.00
115.00
138.00
and 165.00

For the most liberal piano-offer ever heard of, write for our Free Piano
Catalogue, and you will receive by return mail, free, postpaid, the handsomest, most interesting and most complete Special Piano Catalogue ever published. We will send you a fascicle of our celebrated 55-year guarantee, our one year's free trial plan will be fully explained, how we furnish pianos on trial without one cent of money being sent to us will be made very clear; you will receive valuable letters from the largest Chicago banks endorsing our proposition and we will explain just what the freight will be to your town. In the special catalogue we show large, handsome, half-tone illustrations and complete descriptions of all the different parts, the manner of construction (interior and exterior shown), also color tone sample plates of the different woods, including French beech, walnut, English, quarter sawed oak, Red Douglas fir, mahogany, etc. Each piano is shown in very large half-tone, full plate illustrations, every detail is fully and accurately described. Why the highest grade Beckwith Piano made, the Acme Cabinet Grand Concert Piano at $165.00, is in every essential point the equal of any piano made, regardless of price, is made very clear. Write for our Free Piano Catalogue and get all this free by return mail, postpaid, our latest and most splendid offer, the greatest piano proposition ever heard of. If you have any hard to sell piano at any price, don't fail to write for our Free Piano Catalogue and Others. Address:

SEARS, ROEBUCK & CO., CHICAGO

Send No Money

Just write to-day for our all-new catalogue showing the latest styles. We guarantee our $10.00 Tailor Made Suits to be as good as suits you have paid $15.00 to $18.00 for. We give you five (5) days time to examine one in your own home before deciding whether or not you wish to keep it. Isn't this a fair proposition?

10,000 Pairs of $5.00
Tailor Made Trousers
FREE

with the first 10,000 orders.
OUR OFFER:
Providing you will agree to send 10 envelopes containing our All
Wool Suits and Pants samples, catalogues, tape measure and Special Offer, to ten men
who in your judgment would be likely to buy clothing from us on our liberal offer. We will give you a pair of our regular $5 Tailor
Made Trousers
(any pattern you select from our samples)

FREE
with one of our $10 ALL WOOL
TAILOR MADE SUITS.

We make your suit and extra trousers as ordered.
Send them to you by express, and allow you five
(5) days time to examine them in your own home.
If, at the end of that time, you and your family and friends find the suit is well tailored, stylishly cut, a perfect fit, and the extra trousers as good as are commonly sold for $5.00, keep them! All the full tailor-made suit and extra $5.00 trousers will have cost you $10.00, and the little work of handling out ten (10) envelopes.

If for any reason you find after five (5) days that they are not perfectly satisfactory return them to us and we will refund every cent you have paid out. Remember, we run all the risk.

These envelopes you are to distribute will be sent in the box with your suit. Read this offer over again carefully, then write to-day for free samples of our $10 Suits (including Clay Worsted, Tubeta, Serges, Cassimeres in Black, Blue, Brown and Gray and Handsome Mixtures), also separate Trousers samples, Catalogue, instructions for taking measurements and Special Offer.

Notice: We pay one man in each town $20.00 in cash for doing certain work for us.

Reference—Midway Avenue State Bank, Chicago.
Capital Stock $250,000.

O. T. MOSES & CO., Dept. No. 302, CHICAGO

the car. She gasped a queer little laugh and squeezed his nearest hand, reckless that the people were watching her and pleasantly misinterpreting her little drama. "Oh, but I've been scared about you—scared to death!" she began, with a hysterical laugh.
Instinctively the slower masculine mind righted her feminine incoherence. "Keep cool, Dely, that's a good girl. What'll folks say!" he soothed.

But she only gurgled a staccato compound of a laugh and a sob. "I don't care, now I've got you back! Oh, I was so scared."
"What scared you, daughter? Speak low, so the folks don't hear."

"Something came for you; Barney Martin brought it over. It came to the shop last night after you'd gone; and the boss gave it to him; so he brought it over; he's waiting at the house now, I guess, for he said he'd come back. And I was going out to try find you in Gloucester—"

"But why? I don't understand!"
"Because—because, you see, after he left
I took it up to your room to be waiting for you and give you a beautiful surprise; and —oh-h! Uncle Jonas, I saw the things on the table and the envelope to me to be opened at five—"

"You didn't open it, daughter? It ain't hve—"

"No, I didn't open it; I haven't forgotten what you taught me so much as that, but I went downstairs, and the two Rooneys were there—they told 'bout your making your will, and how they witnessed it—I got terrified. I guess I was plenty scared before. But here you are, all right! And here—here's the envelope from Washington.
I didn't tell you I went to some of the Trinity Church ladies and told them about you, and they stirred them up in Washington. And I got a letter from one of them, yesterday, saying the lawyer was pretty sure you'd get it. Barney thinks for sure this is it." She pushed the long envelope into his hands while he could only stare. But he made a stand for his lifelong habit of reticence.

"Don't wiggle so, Dely!" commanded he in a quivering voice, "folks will think we're crazy. I guess we'll git off and walk now." She walked him into a quiet back street and promptly fell on his neck and hugged him. He opened his paper and his face changed solemnly; his lips moved.
Dely jumped up and down, all the Celt in her aflame.

"Three thousand dollars! Oh, Uncle
Jonas! Now you can open your shop, your own shop, and Barney will help you,
and I'll keep house for you—for you both."

"Is that why Barney has been here so much, daughter? Well, well, I guess I'll have to give you your wedding."

They walked home together. He would not return her the unopened envelope, but he confessed his purpose.

"And what would I do without you?"
she cried.

"But you have Barney."

"And how'd I keep Barney straight without you?"

They were standing outside his room door. He kissed her as her father might.
"Well, I ain't thinking no more forever of it. I guess the good Lord knows better'n us when a man's usefulness is ended. Now, daughter, you go down and help your mother.
I'll follow soon."

She nodded, and, almost in reverence,
after he had passed in and closed his door,
she went softly down the hall.

He lighted the gas to gaze about him;
his eyes last of all went to the little marble-topped table. The packet was untouched.
As he opened it, his fingers were cold.

The picture of Bishop Brooks lay on top,
and the face wore the old gentle and hopeful smile.

THE NECESSARY VOTE

(Continued from page 10)

It was an out-and-out fight for control of the party machinery now; one or the other would have to rule, and the weaker would have to make the best terms he could with the victor when the test came. After all, according to Carroll, Craig was only one man, but there could be no doubt that Wade knew how to make the most of the man.

Thus matters stood when the scene was transferred to Springfield just previous to the opening of the session. Wade had put forward Henry Wellington as a candidate for Speaker, and Craig had accepted him without question.

"Perhaps he isn't the very best man," Wade explained, "but he is the most available one for our purpose. He's certainly better than Mackin, who would be the tool of Carroll and Higbie, and would make up the committees in accordance with the wishes of the hoodlums. It's a very simple thing for the Speaker to make graft easy or difficult—a little juggling with one or two committees will do it. I know how to prevent this, and some of the independents and country members ought to be willing to help me. Talk it up a little, Azo. It's the chance of a lifetime to beat the 'machine.'"

Craig did talk it up a little in his blunt way, and his talk was reasonably effective.
There is always an undercurrent of opposition to the "machine," especially among the country members, but it is too often weak and vacillating. Men fear that open opposition will destroy their usefulness to their districts, and many of them fear to be called traitors to the party if they interfere with what seem to be the party plans. But here was a chance to win. True, it was only a split in the "machine," but why not make the most of it? Why not

Headache and Neuralgia CAN BE CURED

H
E
A
D
A
C
H
E

N
E U
R
A
L
G
I
A

DR. WHITEHALL'S NEGRIMINE

A special remedy prepared by a specialist for a special purpose: will cure any headache in thirty minutes. Try it, then you will never be without it in your home. A postal card will bring you a convincing sample free. Twenty years of unparalleled success places NEGRIMINE at the head of all remedies for HEADACHE and NEURAL-GIA. Sold by all druggists, or address

THE DR. WHITEHALL NEGRIMINE CO.
187 N. Main St., South Bend, Ind.

IN AN OLD TRUNK

Baby Finds a Bottle of Carbolic Acid and Drinks It

While the mother was unpacking an old trunk a little 18 months old baby got hold of a bottle of carbolic acid while playing on the floor and his stomach was so badly burned it was feared he would not live for he could not eat ordinary foods. The mother says in telling of the case:

"It was all two doctors could do to save him as it burnt his throat and stomach so bad that for two months after he took the poison nothing would lay on his stomach.
Finally I took him into the country and tried new milk and that was no better for him. His Grandma finally suggested Grape-Nuts and I am thankful I adopted the food for he commenced to get better right away and would not eat anything else. He commenced to get fleshy and his cheeks like red roses and now he is entirely well."

"I took him to Matamoras on a visit and every place we went to stay to eat he called for Grape-Nuts and I would have to explain how he came to call for it as it was his main food."

"The names of the physicians who attended the baby are Dr. Eddy of this town and Dr. Geo. Gale of Newport, O., and anyone can write to me or to them and learn what Grape-Nuts food will do for children and grown-ups too." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Look in each pkg. for the famous little book, "The Road to Wellville."

RED TOP RYE

GOOD WHISKEY

It's up to YOU

FERDINAND WESTHEIMER & SONS
CINCINNATI, O.
ST. JOSEPH, MO. LOUISVILLE, KY.

A FEATURE OF THE WORLD'S FAIR

The Peerless
TRUSCOTT

TRUSCOTT BOAT MFG. CO.
ST. JOSEPH, MICH.

Physical Culture

The best Spring and Summer medicine
A Complete Work on
Physical Culture, 25 cts.

For Men and Women — "Health or Luck and Muscular Dynamism" is a clear and simple description of the most beneficial exercises for attaining perfect health and tone. Used with remarkable success. Complete with photographic illustrations, and the entire course is contained in 16 Physical Diagrams of College and V. M. C. A.'s endorse it.
By following instructions you can keep in normal and healthy condition and enlarge and strengthen any portion of the body. Price 25c. Complete Breastling Tube develops the Neck, Lungs and increases Chest 2 to 4 in. Price 25c.
Book and tube postpaid for 50c. or 25c. in 10c.
stamps. Send for literature concerning book and tube.

W. J. CROMIE
Physical Director Y. M. C. A.
6345 Germantown Ave., Philadelphia, Pa.

Emmerich Feather Pillows

Have the above trade mark tag attached to every pillow. Every "Emmerich" Pillow is guaranteed. Every "Emmerich" Pillow contains feathers only, no "shoddy," no bits of cloth, no foreign substances whatever, just clean feathers. Every pillow bearing our label is clean. It is unabsorbent, no sleep on pillows made of cheap feathers, which are not properly cleaned. You have no guarantee of what you are getting in a pillow unless you rely on our label. Many a night's rest is destroyed by an uncomfortable pillow. The dealer doesn't know what is in the pillow when he buys the product of unscrupulous makers. You must insist on the C. E. & Co. tag on every pillow if you want clean, cool, stable, elastic, soft pillows.

"FINE FEATHERS MAKE FINE PILLOWS"

Is the title of our book which is full of information about feathers and down pillows and cushions. You ought to read it before buying pillows or cushions.

Write for it—It is Free

It will also tell you how to secure FREE a beautiful decorated satin cushion cover, which we are giving to our customers. A postal will bring our booklet. Please give your dealer's name. Address your request to CRAS, EMMERICH & CO., 192 5th Avenue, Chicago.

"THE WORLD'S BEST"
THE SMITH PREMIER TYPEWRITER CO.
Executive Offices, 287 Broadway, New York,
Factory at Syracuse, N. Y.
Branches in all large cities

Don't Use Powder on Baby

There is something better to prevent and cure baby's chafing. Let us send you the handsome photos of

Four Hundred

SPIM SOAP

Babies Free.

They will convince anybody. Spim Soap, Spim Ointment got mailed prepaid. Send to-day.

Spim Co., C.B. Knox, Pres., 14 Knox Ave., Johnstown, N.Y.

Protect Your Children

You can do it while you are alive. But—afterward? Write us and learn how you can save money and at the same time protect yourself against old age and your children against the consequences of your death. We insure by mail.

PENN MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE CO.
921 Chestnut St., Philadelphia

Gems of Art

A Book containing 24 of the most entrancing Photogenic Pictures ever shown in one publication. The Artist's Dream Realized. Size of Book 6x9 inches, all full page pictures. Sent prepaid for 25c.

THE WHITE CITY ART CO.
310 Dearborn St. Chicago, Ill.

LEARN TO WRITE ADVERTISEMENTS

Taught by Mail Thoroughly. Taught by the founder of the original school. Taught in an expert manner, enabling you to earn expert salary. Six years' system and hundreds of successful graduates. Large prospectus free on request.

PAGE-DAVIS CO., Suite 19, 90 Wabash Ave., Chicago

ASTHMA Cured by CURED. Health restored. BOOK 4 Free. F. HAMMOND HAYES, Buffalo, N. Y.

give their strength to the faction that was the least objectionable, if only to overthrow the other?

Thus Craig argued, and Craig was known to be as fierce an anti-"machine" man as any of them. Thus, also, Wade argued with the leaders of the reform element. It was their chance, he said, to accomplish something—not so much as they might wish, perhaps, but still enough to materially improve conditions. They were not strong enough to force the selection of a man of their choice on either party, and when the vote came their men would divide on party lines. The speakership was a party question, with which the pledges they held had nothing to do, but they could exert considerable influence. Their aim was honest legislation, aside from purely political matters, and here was the opportunity to lay an honest foundation that would be of incalculable value later, for the mere knowledge that they favored the defeat of Mackin would turn some Republican votes to Wellington.

"Give me an interview for publication at the proper time," Wade said to the secretary of the organization. "You may carefully explain that you are speaking personally and not in your official capacity, that the pledges exacted have nothing to do with purely party questions, but that it seems to you, as an individual, a grievous mistake to give control of the House to the spoils-men. That's all I ask, and you know how important it is to you that Carroll shall not rule."

The secretary knew that Wade was a politician, but not a boddler. There could be no doubt that he had his own ends to serve, but he was infinitely preferable to Carroll; so, after some hesitation, he agreed to the plan.

Still, the battle was far from won. Neither side could be sure of a clear majority in a party caucus, but Wade knew that Carroll's game was blocked, and he decided that the time had come to make the really important move. He sought Carroll, to put the case to him bluntly.

"Your man can't win in a thousand years," he said. "There is no possible combination of circumstances that can give him the full Republican vote. The hayseed contingent, that my friend Craig has rounded up, wouldn't vote for Mackin if he was the last man on earth, but you can deliver your votes to Wellington. I can hold mine, but I can't deliver them."

"A deuce of a nice job you've made of it, haven't you?" growled Carroll.

"Just cut that out," retorted Wade sharply. "You tried to 'do' me and I had to protect myself. I've done it, I guess. At any rate, I've got the opposition all under one banner, and they'll fight Mackin to the last ditch. Some of them won't even be bound by caucus rule. I've shown them a chance to win, and they're bitter. If it comes to a fight, they'll force a compromise that won't do you a bit of good. And you're weaker than you think you are. Look here!" Wade pulled a carbon copy of the interview he had secured from his pocket and handed it to Carroll. "Will the publication of that help you to organize the House?" he asked.

"You're having trouble holding some men in line now. They don't like you, they don't like what you stand for, but in a speakership fight they want to be with the party. All they want is an excuse to break away—just an intimation that you're not so much of the party as you claim to be. I tell you, Carroll, you're up against a stone wall, and I built the wall."

"But I can beat you!" exclaimed Carroll. "If I have to turn down Mackin, I can swing to a man who will suit your highly moral bunch a whole lot better than Wellington does."

"But you won't," said Wade, with an unpleasant smile. "You won't, because you couldn't make the terms that you can with me. You won't, because such a man wouldn't let you control a single important committee, and Wellington will. You won't, because I need you, and the reformers and hayseeds don't. If I need you, I've got to look out for you a little."

"What are you after?" asked Carroll, suspiciously.

"Nothing much this session, but," meaningly, "at the next we elect a United States Senator. The wise man looks ahead, and control now can be used to make greater strength then, especially if a fellow has a check on the wise boys who are avaricious. I am looking for power, Carroll; that's all. If it has to be bought, I know how to buy it. You can name the two best committees—any two that you may select, barring only those that I need for political purposes. I'll concede that much, Carroll, but no more. You see, I can't trust you—I need you, but I've got to have a check on you to hold you in line. I may decide to go to the Senate myself."

Carroll scowled, but he knew that Wade had him in a corner. His man was already beaten, apparently. By making a fight he might drag Wade down to defeat with him and force the selection of a man that neither could control, but he would gain nothing, while there would be excellent "commercial" opportunities in the control of two strong committees, especially when he could rely on certain Democrats in all but strictly party questions. Still, he was not prepared to surrender without making one last desperate effort, so he merely agreed to consider the matter.

"If I could only win that hayseed," he muttered, "I could break him yet. Confound it! he's as much the 'machine' as I am. Why can't the yahoo be made to see it? If he broke away, it would split that little bunch of country members and the whole thing would go to pieces."

W. M. OSTRANDER, Suite 162, North American Building, Philadelphia

Please send, without cost to me, a plan for finding a cash buyer for my property which consists of.....

Town.....County.....State.....

IF You Could

Following is a brief description.....

Call at my office, see my equipment, and have me explain to you personally how I do business. I believe that you would be absolutely satisfied that I am better equipped to make a quick cash sale of your property than any other real estate broker in the country. I would like to explain to you how I find buyers for all kinds of property in all parts of the country through advertising, through my branch offices, and through the hundreds of real estate men with whom I co-operate. I would like to explain to you how a buyer is found in Maine, and sent to California, or how a buyer is found in Chicago, and sent to Texas or Florida, and taken care of until he finds a property that suits him. I would like to explain to you personally scores of other things concerning my business which cannot be satisfactorily explained in my advertisements or by letter. I don't want you to simply take my word for the assertion that I am doing the largest real estate business in the world, and that I have more efficient methods than any other broker. I will tell you how to find this out for yourself, if you have not already done so, and will give you indisputable evidence of the wonderful results I have accomplished. I will tell you how I sell all kinds of property in all parts of the country every day, and how I turn properties into cash after other brokers fail. If I did not have the ability and facilities to sell your property, I certainly could not afford to pay for this advertisement. This ad. [like all my other ads.] is practically sure to place on my list a number of new properties, and I am just as sure to sell these properties, and make enough money in commissions to pay for the cost of the ad., and make a good profit besides. Why not put your property among the number that will be sold as a result of this ad.? It doesn't matter whether you have a farm, a home without land, or a business; it doesn't matter where it is located, or what it is worth. If you will fill in, and mail to me, the blank on the upper portion of this page, I will outline a plan for quickly converting your property into cash, and will send you (free) my interesting and instructive booklet. You will be glad to get the information, even if you decide not to sell. Do it right now before you forget it.

If you want to buy any kind of a property in any part of the country, fill in, and mail to me, the blank on the lower portion of this page. I will guarantee to fill your requirements promptly and satisfactorily.

Remember, that while you are filling out one of the blanks on this page, it is quite probable that somebody will be filling out one of the hundreds of thousands of blanks that appear in this and other leading publications, to correspond exactly with your requirements.

Lowest cash price.....

Name.....

Address.....

W. M.

OSTRANDER

Suite 162, North

American Building

Philadelphia

I desire to buy a property corresponding approximately with the following specifications:

Town or City.....

County.....State.....

Price between $.....and $.....

I will pay $.....down, and the bal.....

Remarks.....

Name.....

Address.....

Free to Investors

This handsomely illustrated Brochure tells of Missouri's fertile farms and how I have loaned 3 1/4 Million Dollars at 5%.

Men of Wealth

will tell you of their success with me. No Losses. Absolute security. Send for this book today.

WILLIAM R. COMPTON, 11 Wardell Bldg. MACON, MO.

NOW DEPOSITED IN THE BANK

$75,000.00

IN CASH GIVEN AWAY

To arouse interest in, and to advertise the GREAT ST. LOUIS WORLD'S FAIR, this enormous sum will be distributed. Full information will be sent you ABSOLUTELY FREE. Just send your name and address on a postal card and we will send you full particulars.

World's Fair Contest Co.
108 N. 8th Street
St. Louis, Mo.

I. W. Harper Rye.

"On Every Tongue."

For gentlemen who appreciate quality; for the weak who need to be strengthened; for the careful physician who requires purity; for everybody who knows a good thing. Sold by leading dealers everywhere.

BERNHEIM DISTILLING CO., Louisville, Ky.

W. L. DOUGLAS

Union Made $3.50 SHOES Worth $5.00.

$10,000.00 will be paid to any one who can prove that W. L. Douglas does not make and sell more men's $3.50 shoes than any other manufacturer in the world.

REWARD The reason W. L. Douglas $3.50 shoes are worn by more men in all stations of life than any other make is because they hold their shape, fit better, wear longer and are of greater value than any other $3.50 shoe.

2,473,464 PAIRS OF FINE SHOES WERE MADE AND SOLD BY W. L. DOUGLAS IN 1903.

"For years I have worn Douglas $3.50 shoes exclusively. They have given me better wear and more comfort than any other shoe I have ever worn." —J. M. Brinkhoff, of J. P. Brinkhoff & Sons, New York.

W. L. Douglas High-Grade Boys' Shoes, $2.00 and $1.75. Douglas uses Corona Coltskin in his $3.50 shoes. Corona Coltskin is conceded everywhere to be the finest patent leather yet produced. PAT COLOR EYELETS USED EXCLUSIVELY.

W. L. Douglas $3.50 shoes are sold through his own retail stores in the principal cities, and shoe dealers everywhere. No matter where you live, Douglas shoes are within your reach. No trouble to get a fit by mail. See extra prepay delivery. Write for Illustrated Catalogue of Spring Styles.

W. L. DOUGLAS, 154 Spark Street, Brockton, Massachusetts.

America Leads the Shoe Fashions of the World and Douglas Shoes Lead America

But the yahoo was blind and deaf. Three different men, Carroll himself being the last, tried to show him that he was being used for "machine" purposes, that he was aiding the worst "machine" ever known in the State—a "machine" that was for a man and not for a party. Craig would not argue the question; he simply made a statement in his blunt way.

"Wade's my friend," he said, simply. "You all been clever to my vote, but he was clever to me. Them reformers took me by the nose an' tried to lead me, but he took me by the arm an' it was jest man an' man goin' together. Why, he left off his spike-tail coat at a swell dinner so's to be with me, while you was tryin' to sell me out an' put in a Democrat. He's my friend, I tell you—my friend, not my vote's friend, an' I know he's all right."

Then Carroll surrendered. "It's all up," he told Highie. "Pass the word to Mackin that he's got to draw out at the last minute, but that he's fixed for a committee chairmanship. Wellington is to be Speaker. That hayseed—just one vote—has done the business."

Something of this was rumored in other circles, and many people, knowing nothing of the finer points of practical politics, wondered and speculated. "Isn't it marvelous," they said, "the way Wade gets hold of people?"

Men's White Negligee Shirts, with pleated bosoms, neatly hemstitched. These shirts are guaranteed to fit. They are cut in the most improved pattern, have split cushion neck bands. Fastened with three pearl buttons. They are as good as any $1.00 shirt on the market. State the size of neck band when ordering. Order as many of these shirts as you want, they will be sent you with the full understanding and agreement that, if they are not the greatest shirt bargain you have ever seen, you can return them to us at our expense, and your money will be refunded. This is an opportunity to supply yourself with the most popular shirt to be worn this season at a price never before quoted on goods of equal value.

SIEGEL COOPER & CO.
NEW YORK CITY, N.Y.

Illinois Central R.R.

DAILY FAST TRAINS
Elegantly equipped and with Dining, Buffet, Library, Sleeping and Reclining Chair Cars, from its northern and southern terminals, connecting it its numerous gateways with trains from the EAST, SOUTH AND NORTH

Particulars of agents of the Illinois Central and connecting lines.

A. H. HANSON, Gen'l Pass'r Agent, CHICAGO

15,081 REMINGTON TYPEWRITERS

are used for instruction purposes in the schools of the United States and Canada—3,499 MORE THAN ALL OTHER MAKES OF WRITING MACHINES COMBINED.

This condition is created by the demand for Remington operators; therefore it clearly reflects THE CHOICE OF THE BUSINESS WORLD.

Remington Typewriter Company
327 Broadway, New York

$5,000 for a Short Story

WITH a view to secure not only the finest work of already famous story-tellers, but to encourage and develop younger writers in the field of fiction, COLIER'S WEEKLY offers the following prizes for original short stories by American writers:

- A First Prize of $5,000
- A Second Prize of $2,000
- A Third Prize of $1,000

There are absolutely no restrictions as to the kind or treatment of stories. Every manuscript will be judged upon its individual merits. The stories may be of love, adventure, business, in fact anything, and they may depend upon plot, style, character, or atmosphere. It is the hope of the Editor to get the best of every kind.

I. The author must be an American by nationality or residence. As the object of the Contest is especially to bring out American fiction, we have made this condition, using the word American in its broadest sense and to include anybody residing on this continent as well as American citizens residing abroad.

II. There is no limit to the number of stories any writer may submit. That is, it is quite possible for one author to submit a dozen stories, win all three prizes, and have the remaining nine stories accepted for publication in the Weekly at five cents a word.

III. Stories may be of any length whatever, from the very shortest up to 10,000 words. The preferable length for use in the Weekly is from 5,000 to 7,000 words, but this will have no bearing on the award of prizes.

IV. All manuscript must be typewritten, laid flat, or folded in its envelope—in other words it must not be rolled. It must not be signed, but accompanied by a plain sealed envelope inscribed with the title of the story and containing a card or slip of paper with the writer's full name and address written on it. Under no circumstances must there be any word or indication on this envelope or on the manuscript itself or any matter sent with the manuscript that would divulge its authorship. No one will know who are the authors of the prize-winning stories until the judges have selected the three best manuscripts. The envelopes with the corresponding titles will then be opened, but not until then.

V. As one of the objects of this competition is to secure as many good short stories as possible, the Editor reserves the right to purchase any of the manuscripts which have failed to win a prize, but which he considers suitable for publication in the Weekly. All such stories will be paid for at the rate of five cents a word, except in the cases of authors whose recognized rate is higher than this amount, in which instance the author's regular rate will be paid.

VI. The copyright of the three stories winning prizes is to vest absolutely in COLIER'S WEEKLY. All other stories which fail to win a prize, but are acceptable for publication in the Weekly, will be paid for at the rate of five cents a word for the serial rights only.

VII. All MSS. must be mailed on or before June 1, 1904. That is, although a story may reach us a week later than this day, should the envelope bear the post-office stamp with the name of the starting-point and the date of June 1, 1904, or any date previous to that, the MS. will be considered eligible for the contest.

Every story will be carefully read and considered, but the awards having once been made, the greatest despatch possible will be used in returning manuscripts to their authors.

The following gentlemen have consented to act as judges: HENRY CAROT LODGE, United States Senator from Massachusetts; WILLIAM ALLAN WHITE, Author and Journalist; WALTER PAGE, Editor "World's Work."

All MSS. should be addressed,

SHORT STORY CONTEST, COLIER'S
415 West 13th Street, New York City

Postage for their return should be inclosed in the envelope containing the author's name.

THE BOOKLOVERS

The Largest Circulating Library in the World

BOTH for $5.00
One Year's Membership in The Booklovers Library giving you all the good new books published immediately upon publication—exchanging as often as you wish—wherever you wish - $5.00
One Year's Subscription to The Booklovers Magazine—one of the best illustrated monthly magazines published in the world - $3.00

Send $5.00 and begin at once. Club service can be arranged in small cities
Address: THE BOOKLOVERS LIBRARY, Dept. N., Philadelphia, Pa.

Send for this Book

THE LUXURY OF A BATH

If you want

Hot Water

instantly, anytime, anywhere.

It tells of the cheapest and most convenient way to secure hot water and plenty of it, summer or winter, in bath room, laundry, kitchen, etc., by using the

Humphrey Crescent
Instantaneous Water Heater
Sold by all Plumbers

This heater is handsome in appearance, occupies little space, is easily and quickly installed and lasts a lifetime. Gas is the fuel and less is required than in any other heater giving equal service. Hot water flows the moment the gas is lighted. $5.00 in use. Price $16 to $45, depending upon size. Send on 30 days trial.

Humphrey Co., Dept. K., Kalamazoo, Mich.

TOWERS of STRENGTH
Wealth—Character WHICH?

THE SHEDDON SCHOOL OF SCIENTIFIC SALESMANSHIP

Success in Salesmanship, Management, Ownership

Its teachings insure wealth and health as the fruit of labor. The business of the future is not only one of science, but of the "ingenuity" of the laws and principles underlying correct methods of thought and action. Our instruction is set out in a series of simple and helpful lessons make all the seemingly difficult things plain and easy to learn. Taught by correspondence only.

The success of the busy man is not, among other things, the fact that he makes time, for busy of the point where the other fellow gets tired, and you will win your battle in every contest.

"No man is contented except he strive bravely."

We will show you the laws of this great commercial contest, so that by studying you will secure labor in the most efficient way. A very limited time only. Today is the day to win and the future is yours. Tomorrow is too late.

Our Booklet sent postpaid on your request. Write today.

S. S. of S. S., 955 McClellan Bldg., Chicago

How to Grow Tall

A Startling Discovery That Will Revolutionize the Physical Condition of Mankind

Why Remain Short and Stunted When You May Learn Free the Secret of How to Grow Tall

No Matter How Short You Are or What Your Age You can Increase Your Height

No new discovery has attracted more attention in the scientific world than that made by K. Leo Minges, of Rochester, N. Y. Mr. Minges is to short men and women what the great wizard, Edison, is to electricity. He has gathered more information relative to bone, muscle and sinew than any one else in existence. Making people grow tall has been a hobby with Mr. Minges for years, and the results he has accomplished are startling to a high degree. By his method every man or woman not over fifty years of age can be made to grow from two to five inches in height, and any one older than that may increase his height perceptibly. His method has the endorsement of leading physicians, and several prominent educational institutions have adopted it for the better physical development of their pupils. If you would like to increase your height you should read the book which tells how this remarkable discovery was made and reveals to you the secrets of how to grow tall. It is free. You are not asked to spend a single cent, and if you desire it we will send you the statements of hundreds who have grown from two to five inches in height by following this method. The results are quickly accomplished. Many have grown as much as three inches in two months. There is no inconvenience, no drugs or medicines, no operation. Merely the application of a scientific principle in a perfectly hygienic and harmless way. Your most intimate friends need not know what you are doing. All communications will be sent in plain envelopes. The book, "The Secrets of How to Grow Tall," contains illustrations that will interest and instruct any one. One thousand of these books will be given away absolutely free, postage prepaid, while the present edition lasts. If you want to grow tall write to-day, in strictest confidence, for a free copy. Address

THE CARTILAGE CO., Dept. 335 G B
Rochester, N. Y., U. S. A.

Collier's

MAY 21

1904

Across the Yalu With the Japanese Army

Cable Despatches, Photographs, and Correspondence

From the Seat of War

by

Frederick Palmer

Richard Harding Davis

J. F. J. Archibald

R. L. Dunn

A. M. Knapp

and

"Torpedo Craft vs. Battleships"

by

Captain Mahan, U.S.N.

BUILDING THE SECTIONAL AND PONTOON BRIDGES AT HIROSHIMA THAT WERE USED AT THE CROSSING OF THE YALU

MODEL No. 30, Pope-Waverley Station Wagon, Price $2,000. A stylish superbly finished and appointed carriage. Speed 5 to 15 miles per hour. It can be maintained and operated at less cost, mile for mile, than any other motor car of like capacity.

POPE Waverley ELECTRICS

Are always ready, clean, noiseless, and simple to operate.

Our 1904 Catalogue shows runabouts, surreys, stanhopes, chelseas, physicians and delivery wagons. Agents in all principal cities.

POPE MOTOR CAR CO., Waverley Department, Indianapolis, Ind.

DO you wear clothes with that label in them. If not, you've got a lot to learn about clothes; it will pay you to learn some of it.

That label means: Fabrics all-wool in every thread; examined inch-by-inch for flaws; sponged and shrunk two or three times; cut to the latest models; hand-tailored in our own clean, light, wholesome shops. It is the custom tailor's process on a large scale.

That label means more than quality; it means correct style; it means perfect fit—yes, ready-made, and perfect fit: we said you could learn something about clothes.

It means one thing more: If you buy and are not satisfied you can have your money back.

These are the reasons why that label, which is a small thing to look for, is such a big thing to find.

Most dealers in our clothes are glad to make that fact known. If your clothier doesn't have them, and won't get them for you, let us know. We'll see that you are supplied.

Hart Schaffner & Marx

Good Clothes Makers

Chicago Boston New York

Appetite Health Vigor

ANHEUSER-BUSCH'S
Malt-Nutrine
TRADE MARK

is invaluable to nursing mothers, feeble children, the aged, infirm and convalescent, and its use brings appetite, health and vigor.

Malt-Nutrine is not an alcoholic beverage, but a pre-digested food in liquid form, easily assimilated by the weakest stomach.

Malt-Nutrine is sold by all druggists and grocers. Served at all health resorts and summering places.

Prepared only by the

Anheuser-Busch Brewing Ass'n
St. Louis, U. S. A.

Also brewers of Budweiser, the World's Most Famous Bottled Beer.
World's Fair Visitors are cordially invited to inspect the Anheuser-Busch Brewery.

Packard

The PACKARD ride our agent will give you if you will send us your name, will convince you of the superiority of the Four-cylinder PACKARD over other motor cars—superiority in strength and power, in comparative light weight, in speed, in smooth, quiet running, in hill climbing powers—in fact, in every point of importance in automobile construction.

Model "L," 1904, Four-cylinder Packard,
22 horsepower, price - - - $3,000
Other models at $1,500 to $10,000

Send for illustrated descriptive literature and name of nearest agent.

PACKARD MOTOR CAR CO., Dept. H, DETROIT, MICH.

Member Association of Licensed Automobile Manufacturers.

N.Y. AGENTS: Packard Car Co. of N.Y., 317 W. 59th St., New York City

COLLIER'S

SATURDAY, MAY 21, 1904

P. F. COLLIER & SON, PUBLISHERS, 416-424 WEST THIRTEENTH ST., NEW YORK; 10 NORFOLK ST., STRAND, LONDON, W. C. 1. COPYRIGHT 1904 BY P. F. COLLIER & SON. ENTERED AT THE NEW YORK POST-OFFICE AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER

ON THE MARCH TO THE YALU

DRAWN, FROM A PHOTOGRAPH, BY FREDERIC REMINGTON

In order that the Japanese army might advance with the greatest possible speed toward Manchuria after landing at Chemupo, hundreds of Korean coolies were employed to carry military supplies and provisions as well as the knapsacks and baggage of the soldiers. The roads in Korea are so bad that almost all transportation is done on the backs of men, so that these coolie carriers, experienced in this kind of labor, proved of greatest service to the invading army.

REPUBLICANISM IS FASHIONABLE at Washington, overwhelmingly, in the social sense. Foreigners going there, with social introductions, comment on how few Democrats they meet. Republican dominance, broken only twice in forty years, and then for stretches of four years only, might account for this, even were not the Republicans the party of the money interests. At the publishers' dinner, representing the entire country, those who sat at the speakers' table were practically all supporters of the Administration, and JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS sat at an ordinary table on the floor. The South, the home of the majority of Democrats in Washington, is socially very different from the North, but if the social machinery at the capital were in Democratic hands for a sufficient length of time, the sectional division would count for nothing, if, indeed, it did not actually favor the Democratic end, since the cultivated South surpasses the North in social charm.

PARTY FASHION
AT THE CAPITAL

Democrats who come from the large cities in the North are not, as a rule, men of social habits and tradition. Owing to this fact, which is of no slight importance, foreigners, whether visitors, correspondents, or members of the Diplomatic Corps, are likely to see all policies through an atmosphere entirely Republican. As the capital of the United States is not the same city as the metropolis, this bearing of the social life on politics is less weighty than it is in London, for instance, where society is one of the weapons constantly used by politicians, and a weapon in using which the Conservatives have decidedly the advantage. In England, in spite of occasional social pillars like Lord ROSEBURY, it is not quite "respectable" to be a Liberal, to say nothing of a Radical; and the same principles, somewhat modified, have a serious bearing on policies at our capital.

THE MORE CONSERVATIVE PARTIES control England and the United States because in both countries the opposition has succeeded in becoming identified with certain policies that are hopelessly unpopular. Civilizations dominated by the Anglo-Saxon character will not accept change merely for the sake of change. Of the ablest statesmen in England, few recently have been Liberals, and of the ablest statesmen in America few recently have been Democrats, a condition which has been caused partly at least by the fact that the parties of change stood squarely for nothing which could seem to any large body of wise men unmistakably desirable. In England the Conservatives took the Irish issue away from the Liberals, just as in this country the Republicans have strengthened themselves by a progressive policy on trusts, by some liberality toward Cuba, and by Secretary TARTT's demeanor in the Philippines, which has done much to kill anti-imperialism as an issue. What is left of it appeals only to the same small class which composes the Little Englanders across the water. By making hostility to the Boer War their leading issue the Liberals of England disintegrated about as completely as the Democrats here went to pieces over silver, threats against the Courts, and Populism in general. When one party stands in the main for the status quo and the other stands for a general discontent with things as they are, prosperity makes strongly for conservatism. The Democrats, in this country, not having any big issue on which they are united, and appealing only to a love of change, are put in a difficult strategic position by persistent fulness in the crops.

CONSERVATIVE
PARTIES

ABOLT BY BRYAN, HEARST, and the Populists might prove anything but an evil. With the Populists set off in a party by themselves, drawing from Republicans and Democrats alike those who represent impatience with law, reason, fair argument, and common-sense, both the larger parties might improve. The Populists might carry a far Western State or two, but no one would worry over the possibility of their doing more. Whether they do bolt or not will depend upon which cause they calculate will give them the strongest position in 1908, either to control the Democrats, dictate to them, or increase the strength of a party of their own, founded upon BRYAN's popularity, HEARST's money, invested in publicity, and the general need of such a home for agitators and extremists. The chance for a bolt at St. Louis is rather good, as even if the Populists have a third of the delegates at first, they may not get a satisfactory compromise. Delegates do not stay bought. The local leaders who are taking HEARST's money are in many instances cheating him. "You are a pleasant sight," said a friend of ours to a Cook County leader, "destroying the usefulness of a great party for a little money." The leader showed he did not understand. "I mean HEARST," replied our friend. "Oh, HEARST. You don't understand. You know that — — —, CARTER HARRISON? Well, he is the man we are laying for, and we are going to do him, you bet." HEARST is merely a club to this man, and many such, and a representation built on money and local feuds is likely to dwindle rapidly after the first ballot at St. Louis.

BOLTING

ORDINARY POLITICIANS ARE SHREWD within their own field of tricks and exact calculations, but they often fail entirely to estimate a widespread moral public sentiment. JOSEPH FOLK's victory over the machine in Missouri shows an extreme miscalculation by the machine politicians. The cities voted more as they had anticipated, but in the country districts they met an unexpected Waterloo. When some man of marked personality or accomplishment happens to appear, all the ordinary modes of forecast frequently go astray. Party loyalty, the basis of such calculations, is lost in a fresher and more special interest. Mr. FOLK's victory shows that his work has had a more vivid hold on men's minds than their routine party spirit has. The more stirring the events of public life, the more possible is it for men to think freely, out of party lines, and that the people of Missouri are stirred deeply by the changes centring around Mr. Folk is now fully proved. In State and city, as in national politics, party lines are hardest to break in stagnant times, easiest in the stress of feeling. The scheme developed by Missouri's machine, to seem divided on candidates, whose strength could be later concentrated, was well devised and at one time made success look so probable that Mr. Folk himself was far from confident. It failed, from inability to cope with one element of the situation which it had underrated—a public opinion not in its usual state of lethargy, but thoroughly aroused. Missouri, therefore, seems certain to enjoy the proud and rare distinction of electing a Governor for the virtues which he has proved, against the frantic efforts of organized politicians.

MACHINE
CLEVERNESS

THE DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE, the recent creation intrusted with important powers, is not creating in the public mind an impression favorable to its strength. President ROOSEVELT, who inherited the strongest members of his Administration from MCKINLEY, was here left to his own resources, and his opportunity to discover men has not been followed by overwhelming success. In the case of a new department, where everything must be practically created, a powerful personnel was even more than usually essential, and it can hardly be claimed that the President was inspired in selecting it. The probability is that the department will drag along through four years more, without visible influence, and at the end of that time either Mr. COR-

A WEAK DE-PARTMENT

TELYOU and his associates will be succeeded by officials more equal to the possibilities of the post or the experiment will become so unpopular that it will meet an unwept end. Mr. CORTELYOU has the reputation of being very honest, but no one has yet accused him of strength. An auspicious start is an immeasurable help in undertaking such an important new field, and the chances of usefulness in the future are therefore none too good. Any lack of efficiency, however, should not be charged to futility in the scheme itself, since the scheme could be fairly tested only if the positions were most aptly filled.

JAPANESE SUCCESSES are received in many parts of Europe with a disappointment in sharp contrast to the general satisfaction shown in England and America. Dislike of England is under most of the alarm expressed about Japan, for England, in spite of her new understandings with hereditary foes, is still unpopular on the Continent. It is necessary to bear in mind always the people as well as the Government. Fashoda may be officially forgiven, but the French people forget neither Fashoda nor their childhood teaching about the hereditary foe. Germany, in diplomacy, is now more isolated than England, but she is apparently not so much dreaded as England is by many powers. Naturally, the Russian Anglophobia is strongest, in spite of recent efforts at a pleasanter relation, and in the Russian prophecies about Britain's dire purposes we are frequently included. Commenting on the "Anglo-Saxon peril," a Moscow journal says that Great Britain and the United States expect to extinguish minor states, and to annex the colonies of Germany, France, Belgium, Holland, and Italy. We are to annex or divide China, Mongolia, and farther India, and are eager to fight with all Europe on this topic immediately. For such reasons are we laboring so assiduously on the side of Japan. "In recognition of this fearful general European upheaval now being prepared by the 'enlightened' pirates and their transatlantic brethren, the European powers must—at least for the time being—lay aside all their peculiar differences and all their inner conflicts. The real source of peril is not so much an invasion of the barbarian savages from the East as the economic and political subjection of the European powers by the advancing 'civilized countries' of the Anglo-Saxons." Further complications are discovered by other penetrating observers. A Calcutta organ of the natives says that Great Britain and the United States, fearing "the competition of the patient and industrious yellow toiler with the degenerate whites," outraged China in 1900. Japan fought on the side of "the European white faces" in that war, against her sympathies, in pursuance of wise and far-sighted policy, directed against the West and especially against the Anglo-Saxon menace. Thus, by looking at opinion in various quarters of the globe, we find remarkable doings planned by the Anglo-American secret barbarian alliance.

MARES' NESTS

FOREIGN ALARM OVER US, the terrible Anglo-Saxon peril, does not hold the field alone, for although we have rather exhausted the other side, the yellow peril to wit, as a topic of conversation, things continually crop up to force us back upon it. The troops under General Ma bring it to life one day, and the next the Empress of China consents to have her photograph taken, and worshiped, thus taking one more step in the wake of Japan and suggesting again possibilities of an Asiatic combination. Japan's success in destroying warships with torpedo boats also sets us figuring from an entirely fresh point of view. The newspaper strategists were at first going to supersede the battleship altogether, until they were reminded that, allowing every induction from the present war, the torpedo boats could do nothing except as part of a fleet of which the battleships are the backbone. They might also be reminded that it makes a difference whether shots aimed at a torpedo boat hit it or not, and whether searchlight practice is kept up to the highest efficiency; and yet, when all exaggeration is thus cut down, we do face the fact that so much is being done to shake up the ideas even of our greatest experts that we shall have to sit down and think a long time before we decide in what proportions the various kinds of war craft should be accumulated. The war, both on land and sea, keeps us guessing, and thinking about various large subjects with more persistency and openness than we have used on them before. Being so full of surprises, it inculcates humility even in those solemn editors, who, loving to prophesy and direct, have become almost persuaded that General KUROKI's military ideas are superior to their own. As mental exercise and general education this war is a distinguished triumph.

THINGS TO THINK ABOUT

WE ARE USUALLY SERENE. Our mind is calm and dwells with moderation on the follies and virtues of mankind. We are a philosopher, but there is one thing that robs us of philosophy and makes us as prejudiced and extreme as "a Christian or an ordinary man," to quote the good Sir Andrew. That object of repugnance is the corset. Just as we are trying to keep that even balance of sympathy which is our habit, seeing Russians and Japanese with equal justice, in spite of Japanese glamour and Russian verbal thunder, we fall upon the fact that in Japan the corset is unknown, save by an imitative few. The Japanese look upon full, deep breathing as the best part of exercise and a necessity of healthy life, and therefore it did not seem advisable to them to confine the body in a vise. Moreover, they have been in the past, and have not yet ceased to be, a race of most artistic taste, and therefore fonder of the human figure than of an image done in whalebone. Just what Japan will take from the West, of good or evil, none can say. She may lose her taste and art, her physical health, and everything that was best in her former life. She may even take to corsets. If so, Commodore PERRY and President FILLMORE will have much to answer for.

CORSETS

MEN SEEKING MOTIVES are often inaccurately precise. Especially in the case of an old man who has held his country's highest honors is it easy to attribute springs of action much more insistent than those which actually exist. Mr. CLEVELAND has spoken frequently of late, and his words have been stimulating not to the listening Democratic ass alone, but to the attentive elephant as well—to the American world, in short. In this unusual fluency some observers find ambition, but we do not. If Mr. CLEVELAND should, under stress of circumstances, accept another nomination, it would, we are sure, be with a rather heavy heart. Wise and experienced old age usually loves rest and contemplation. When Mr. CLEVELAND denies, too acidly, alleged social relations with a negro, it is not the politician speaking, but the elderly potentate who feels wronged and exaggerates the wrong. If he takes to writing about his record, it is not the candidate holding up his banner, but the thinker in retirement and the father of a family none too well provided for in a worldly sense. CLEVELAND IN HIS AGE A man who is old, sated with the world, and good, centres his thought upon those nearest him, and the lives which they are to lead, when he has left the table and his friends have turned down the empty glass. To judge a man like this as if he were a youngster, with no place won, his muscles taut, and eager for the race, is a sin against the rudiments of psychology. Mr. CLEVELAND to-day is a sage and not a struggler for advancement.

OUR VERY LANGUAGE seems to work against the negro. Evil deeds are black. The devil himself is black. A black soul is the strongest expression for what is bad. Angels are white. All that is pure and good is represented by that color, and light means intelligence, and darkness means ignorance and depravity. The more educated a negro the more keenly sensitive he is to such shades as these, that have become part of the language which he must speak. Fortunately the gayety of his nature is not always, or perhaps usually, killed by the bitter struggle of doubtful outcome, that lies before his race if it would move forward under the discouragement of constant contrast with the whites. The outlook is not a cheerful one, except when it is lightened by the inspiration and courage of a BOOKER WASHINGTON, or by a similar spirit in some other man, like the negro who recently spoke these words: "Refusal of a glass of soda in a white drug store is simply pointing the negroes to a negro drug store and telling them to take the nickel there and help up the struggling negro; the same is true in white eating-houses and the like. Let the negro patronize his own struggling people and help to be something." We think the President has acted injudiciously in keeping before the public the case of Dr. CRTM. Whatever his motives, an injury results to the unfortunate race with which he justly sympathizes. Likewise it would be cruel to the negro for either party to name him in its platform or make him an issue before the voters. Talk, indulged in by some negroes, about a negro party, with colored candidates, is the very depth of folly. The conditions faced by enlightened and ambitious blacks at the very best are hard enough. Every issue, except the issue of self-dependence and hard work, can only make these conditions harder.

SUFFERINGS OF HAM

WE LIKE TO CELEBRATE able and honest men, particularly when they have the minor attributes of taste and modesty. Sir WALTER SCOTT gave the name of delirium tonans to the disease of loud talking. The Russians give symptoms of this disease at present, the Spaniards were not without it in 1897, and the Americans enjoy sonorous phrases. Ambassador CHOATE is not alone among our countrymen in ranking SAMPSON and DEWEY with DRAKE and NELSON, and generally crediting us with somewhat more wood than we actually saw. Our exaggerated pension system has a similar influence, and Mr. CARNEGIE's latest brilliant entrance into the stage centre with his cash department for assorted heroes tends decidedly to increase our oversupply of valorous epithets. We do not wish Americans to talk like Bardolf, Pistol, and Nym. HEINE suggested that a man might support his sick mother without demanding a four-boire from the eternal. Now, being rather full of this objection to self-laudation, we read delightedly one more fresh and sensible observation by the Honorable JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS of Mississippi. For the public service, which he adorns, he thinks a fair prescription is one part patriotism and principle to one of ambition and one of love of conflict. In the Middle Ages fighting was the only honorable calling for a gentleman. It gave just what politics gives to-day in similar proportions. These elements may be discovered in business or in science, but, as Mr. WILLIAMS puts it, "the political arena offers the best modern substitute for the profession of fighting, as it was 'way back in the ages when fighting was the only profession in the world. You have a noble background—your amphitheatre is the wide nation; the rewards are noble—soldiering never offered any as fine; the conflict, though not often physical, is extremely stimulating—it is mind against mind, instead of arm against arm, and the game never flags." To the life which he is leading Mr. WILLIAMS calmly gives the name of fun, and we are inclined to praise him for doing his duty well without decorating it in phrases of undue magnificence.

FUN

Capt. F. C. March
(U.S.A.)

Lieut.-Gen. Baron Kolenta

Baron Koyama (Minister of Foreign Affairs)Gen. Nishino (British)

Prince Kanin

Major Von Foerster
(German)Lieut. Crowder
(U.S.A.)Major Wood
(U.S.A.)Capt. Morris
(U.S.A.)Lieut. Frano (Austrian)
Capt. J. E. Rahn (U.S.A.)
Gen. Tanaka (Minister of War)

THE BOTTLED-UP MILITARY ATTACHES IN TOKIO

By order of the Emperor of Japan, Viscount Tanaka, Minister of the Imperial Household, gave a reception, April 13, at the Shiba Palace, in Tokio, to the foreign military attaches who have been "marking time" for many weary weeks, impatiently awaiting permission to go to the front and witness the fighting

ACROSS THE YALU WITH THE JAPANESE ARMY

Special Cable Despatches from FREDERICK PALMER, Collier's Correspondent with the Japanese Army in Manchuria

ON THE EVE OF BATTLE

In the Field, April 28, by Overland Messenger to Seoul, May 3

THE military censor will not yet allow correspondents to give the name of the place from which they are sending messages or the date of filing. Thus far the Japanese army has restricted itself to those minor operations by which an offensive force secures a strategic position. The country in which the army is operating provides a striking ground for a great and decisive action. Natural battlements rise on either bank of the Yalu River. The town of Wiju itself lies in a natural pocket grimly watching the preparing army which is wholly concealed from its adversary. From the opposite side of the Yalu one can see only windowless houses and seemingly uninhabited country, except for an occasional Cossack horseman or a scouting outpost.

No temptations that the Russians can offer can make the Japanese disclose the position of their batteries until the time comes for striking. The two armies feel each other with occasional firing, but the rattle of transportation carts is heard more frequently than the rattle of musketry.

Although the hills on the Japanese side are a beehive of industry, there is not even the passage of a single soldier which is not screened from the Russian gaze. Here is an army ceaselessly working in a section of country absolutely given over to an army's work. The troops are provisioned by long lines of coolies coming up over the Peking road.

The quietness and order governing the actions of so many men, all doing so much in preparation every day, is carried out admirably. The long marches, sleepless nights, fatigue duty, and even doing the work of coolies, have not dimmed the spirit of the Japanese private. Hand-made war burdens and baggage are borne by men instead of horses, the latter being conspicuously absent.

No other army of equal size could give so little evidence of its presence here as the subtle, soft-moving, active Japanese.

CROSSING THE YALU

In the Field, April 30, by Overland Messenger to Seoul, May 6

All of yesterday was spent in timber cutting, road making, bridge building, gun placing, and in constructing screenings for the positions of the batteries. The taking up of new positions and the movements of troops are all carried on at night.

This infinitely careful preparation had its climax today in a movement so magnificently done that it seemed only a part of a simple routine manœuvre, and it was carried out in the face of opposition so slight and so ill directed as to amount to little more than delaying tactics as seen from the Japanese side.

Japan gained a position on Manchurian soil with not a bolt missing, not a screw loose. This achievement was a triumph of military organization.

Spectators, who are accustomed to hear of Japanese deeds as accomplished before they are announced, learned for the first time last night of the passage of the Yalu River at a point which no correspondent was permitted to see.

The low islands below Wiju were not chosen as had been intimated as the point of passage, but instead, a point above Wiju where the bank rises precipitately from the river. The valleys behind the hills occupied by the Japanese on the Korean side of the river were crowded with reserves, which were never needed.

The first sight we had of the arrival of the Japanese on the Manchurian side of the river was a little dotted line of dark figures. This was the infantry advance, and the onrushing climbers looked like a tracing on a map.

The steep ascent was made safely, and the attacking column reached the top as unmolested as if they had been on an ordinary route march.

There was the whole story at a glance. The little Japs climbed up the rocky ascent by faint paths, then formed into lines, again spread out over the summit, wheeled, and the apparent Gibraltar became theirs for the mounting.

With their arrival at the top of the river bank there was an outburst of Japanese artillery fire for their protection. The Japanese gun fire, which had been heretofore frugally withheld, became the spectacular expression of this day's work.

The town of Wiju, the masses of reserves, the guns in their positions all stretched out as a panorama before the correspondents who had taken up their position on a hill that was like a gallery overlooking this wonderful scene.

The accuracy of the Japanese artillery fire was marvelous. They got the range at the first shot. Wherever a Russian gun spoke on the Manchurian side, there the Japanese sent an overpowering bull's-eye as an answer. Later we saw the tireless hill climbers swarming along the banks of the Ai River on the Russian flank. There were few scenes of blood and carnage, few of the grim realities of war. To the onlooker all was so well done that only the sight of the manœuvring troops and the sound of guns told us that a great military achievement had been successfully accomplished.

The crossing of the Yalu was as easy to the Japanese as the overcoming of the Variag and Koriets.

THE FRUITS OF VICTORY

Wiju, May 3, via Seoul, May 6

The victory of the Japanese over the Russians at the crossing of the Yalu is overwhelming and complete. It is the result of a wonderful organization that is every hour developing new wonders. The infantry's mobility and their mountain work are without rival. Never before was a force more ready, and never did an army strike harder. The shops of Antung on the Manchurian side of the Yalu are open for business. The Japanese are welcome. The integrity of Manchuria has come to stay.

LIEUTENANT-GENERAL KUROKI

Commanding the Japanese First Army Corps, he fought one of the most brilliant actions strategically in modern warfare, by crossing the Yalu in the face of an entrenched Russian army on the far side, charging their works over a plain two miles wide, and shattering the enemy in a series of flanking assaults. The conditions of his attack were much like those confronting General Buller at the Modder River. The Japanese general won because he was by so much the abler soldier

LIEUTENANT-GENERAL OKAZAWA

Aide to his Majesty the Emperor of Japan, he joined active service in command of the Imperial Guard, which, attached to the First Army Corps, was in the battle of the Yalu River. The official report says that "the Imperial Guard surrounded the enemy on three sides, and after a severe fight, captured more than twenty guns, many officers and men." This part of the action was so desperate that few Russian artillerymen survived

AN INFANTRY REGIMENT NEAR THE END OF THE FORTY-MILE MARCH ACROSS FROZEN LAKE BAIKAL.

SLEDGES USED TO TRANSPORT MILITARY SUPPLIES

HAULING CARS BY HORSE-POWER OVER THE FROZEN LAKE

A RUSSIAN REGIMENT HALTED FOR DINNER. THE SOUP RATION IS PREPARED IN KITCHENS ON SLEDGES WHICH FOLLOW THE COLUMN

RUSSIA'S MILITARY HIGHWAY ACROSS LAKE BAIKAL

PHOTOGRAPHS BY VICTOR K. SULLA, COLLIER'S SPECIAL PHOTOGRAPHER WITH THE RUSSIAN FORCES. PHOTOGRAPHS COPYRIGHT 1904 BY COLLIER'S WEEKLY

When the war crisis awoke Russia to the need of hurrying three hundred thousand men into Manchuria, five thousand miles from the home base, the single traffic line of the Trans-Siberian Railroad was broken by Lake Baikal, which had frozen to a depth of nine feet in December. The ice-breaking ferries expected to maintain communication had proved unequal to their task, and the railroad around the lake was not completed. Therefore a line of track was laid across forty miles of ice, but for several weeks before it was ready for use troops and stores were hurried to the front across the ice and snow in weather steadily far below zero. Rest houses were built at frequent intervals, but, despite all precautions, the sufferings of the troops were very severe. Crevices and windrows of broken ice made marching and sledging dangerous and exhausting. It was reported that one regiment, losing the trail in a blinding storm, wandered into such treacherous ice, with a resulting loss of six hundred men drowned and frozen. A large number of soldiers were disabled by frostbite. Their sufferings were not over when they were again loaded on troop trains, for they often begged to be allowed to help shovel snow from the railway track, in order to fight the cold with bodily exercise. During this period it was impossible to move more than two thousand troops a day across Lake Baikal. The solid ice breaks up in May

A JAPANESE PONTOON TRAIN MOVING TOWARD THE YALU FROM PING-YANG

The boats, built in sections, were carried by one pack-train of the engineers' column, the beams and flooring by another. Before the war, the Japanese Intelligence Office sent skilled engineers, disguised as coolies, through Korea and Manchuria to make detailed measurements of the width, depth, current, and tidal force of every stream which an invading army might have to cross. The Yalu was the most important river to be surveyed in this way, and the data were used to construct, at Hiroshima, complete pontoon bridges for the crossing, so that the material was ready to be carried with the army when the advance began. In brief, the Japanese prepared the Yalu crossing to measure, months beforehand, and when the bridges were needed they were flung into position without the slightest waste of time, labor, or transport.

MARKING TIME IN TOKIO: THE FORTY-EIGHTH RONIN

By RICHARD HARDING DAVIS, Collier's Special War Correspondent in Japan

The Japanese War Office has issued a war correspondent's pass to Mr. Davis, and has assigned him to the Second Column. Until this takes the field, Mr. Davis will write of events in the Japanese Capital.

TOKIO, April 15
TODAY a small piece of flesh, which was once a portion of the body of a young naval officer, was buried here with such honors from the Mikado and Government and, on the part of the people, with such demonstrations of reverence, that, as half saint, half hero, the memory of Commander Hirose now ranks in Japan near to that of the Forty-seven Ronins.*

Hirose attempted what Hobson attempted, and in the venture lost his life. That he died in an effort to save the life of one of his crew, as well as in an effort to serve his country, has not lessened the value of his sacrifice. The sentiment of the Japanese toward him is that same sentiment which Kipling declares considers less the Commissary-General than the Tommy who steps outside the square to drag a comrade to safety.

On the night of the second attempt to block the entrance to Port Arthur, Hirose commanded one of the four steamers marked out for self-destruction. They were picked up two miles distant from the harbor mouth by the Russian searchlights, and the remainder of the run was made under a terrific fire from both the guardships and the forts. Hirose's steamer, the Fukui Maru, had reached the harbor mouth and was about to anchor in the entrance when she was struck by a torpedo. At the moment, Sugino, a gunner, was below lighting the magazine which was to blow up the vessel and let in the water. But the torpedo had let in the water, and Hirose and his crew were escaping from the sinking steamer in the shore boat before they discovered that Sugino was not with them. Hirose instantly climbed again on board and ran below, searching for the missing man. He failed to find him, and on returning to the deck and learning he had not yet reached the shore boat, twice again went below, the last time remaining there until the rush of the rising water drove him on deck. He had but just dropped in safety into the shore boat when a shell struck him and tore him into small pieces. One of these pieces fell in the boat. It was buried to-day. But before it was buried it was treated with the honors paid to a reigning monarch. As it passed in the transport that conveyed it to Japan it received the salutes of the entire Japanese fleet, the guns were fired, the yards were manned, the flags lowered to half staff. Later a detail of officers escorted it to Tokio where it was met by a great concourse of people, and to-day as it was borne on a gun-carriage to the grave the people turned out to do it reverence, and in thousands and thousands lined the streets. Before the procession moved the Mikado sent to Hirose's family a roll of silk, a compliment the importance of which can be understood only here, and raised Hirose and his family to the senior grade at court. And at once his statue is to be erected in one of the public parks. This in a city where the only statues I have seen are those of imperial princes.

FUNERAL OF COMMANDER HIROSE: THE CAISSON BEARING HIS FULL-DRESS UNIFORM

Already the true story of Hirose is being hung with legends. As the transport carrying the piece of flesh passed the battleship on which Hirose had served, the engines refused to work, and for a few minutes the transport lay motionless.

"This, which happened before the eyes of the whole squadron," says a Japanese paper published last week in Yokohama, "made a great impression upon all who witnessed it. It was as though the brave Hirose even in death refused to be separated from the ship in which he had held command."

THE RUSSIANS AT NEWCHWANG

By JAMES F. J. ARCHIBALD

Collier's Correspondent with the Russian Army in Manchuria

It will be observed from the optimistic tone of this letter that the Russians had every confidence in the strength of their position at Newchwang at the time of writing. It is a peculiar coincidence that the Czar's troops evacuated that city, without firing a shot, on May 7, the day Mr. Archibald's correspondence was received in this office.

NEWCHWANG is the right flank of the entire Russian position, and the wavering of the line at this point would jeopardize the security of the whole army now afield, and lay the lines of communication open to constant attack. A very large force has been mobilized at this place, and the majority of them are the best of the regular troops, fully equipped for a hard siege, should it be necessary to withstand a protracted assault by the enemy. No one here can understand why the Japanese have not invested or attacked Newchwang long before this. The inactivity of the enemy has been most surprising to all on this side of the peninsula, for it has given Russia time to fully prepare for a campaign. There are regular troops here that have come all the way from St. Petersburg since the declaration of war. General Kondratovitch is in command of the district and has a full division for its defence besides a considerable force of detached artillery.

As Newchwang is the terminal station of the Manchurian Railway, it is in good communication with the main force and with the headquarters at Mukden, so that in the event of an attack additional forces can be rushed into position. There is no doubt but that the enemy will eventually appear here, for it is the most important key to the investment of Port Arthur, but the attack is not likely to take place for some time, as it is now on the full of the moon, and the nights are as clear as day. The Russians have spent this entire week in mining the mouth of the river, and yesterday the connecting cables were laid from Chinese junks commandeered for the purpose.

Martial law has gone into effect, but has made no apparent change in the affairs of the town, for Newchwang has practically been under military control for several weeks. The port of Yin-Kow, directly across the river from Newchwang, has also been included in the order, and, as this is the terminus of the Chinese Railroad and telegraph connecting with Peking, it puts Russia absolutely in command of the situation so far as the transmission of any news to the outer world goes. The nearest neutral telegraph will be at Shan-hai-kwan, a distance of about one hundred and fifty miles.

All of the women and children have left this place, and many of the men are also leaving. All those remaining have their effects packed to leave at a moment's notice, as it is expected that the military authorities will order every one out who has no direct business with the government of the place or the military.

The entire country around Newchwang is absolutely flat, being but a very few feet above the sea, and in consequence will be very easy to defend and very difficult to attack. The snow has commenced to melt and the roads are in a frightful state for transportation of troops or wagon trains. The ice in the river has broken, but has not cleared, and consequently makes the passage of the river dangerous at all times, and for the same reason easy to defend, should the enemy effect a landing on the opposite side.

The boundaries of neutral China are rather vague, and I do not think that either one of the combatant forces would bother very much over a matter of a hundred miles or so, but it is the generally accepted opinion that the boundary is marked by the town of Shan-hai-kwan, where the Great Wall of China comes * The adventures of the legendary Forty-seven Ronins, heroic warriors of infinite resource, are retold by each new generation in Japan. They hold a place in story somewhat like that of King Arthur's Knights of the Round Table.

LIEUTENANT-GENERAL KONDRATOVITCH

He was in command of all the Russian forces west of Port Arthur and the Laotung Peninsula, until the Japanese advance made it impossible for the defenders to hold the frontier. His army, therefore, has fallen back to mobilize with the main strength under General Kuropatkin. General Kondratovitch directed the evacuation of Newchwang, which he had fortified and expected to be able to hold indefinitely.

posed to be working on the Russian railways, with the intention of blowing it up, is greatly exaggerated, for the coolies have been carefully watched to prevent this very thing. It is not an unusual sight to see a Cossack walk up to a Chinaman and grasp his long braid of hair and give it a sharp pull to see that it is really his own. If a Chinaman coils his queue up under his hat he is suspected immediately, especially if he looks at all like a Japanese. For the present there is nothing but snow and mud, and the war is anything but picturesque; and, with all of the rumors and fancies pertaining to a secret campaign, it is hard to say what really is happening.

JAPAN IN THE HOUR OF VICTORY

By ARTHUR MAY KNAPP

Collier's Special Correspondent at Yokohama

COPYRIGHT 1904 BY COL. J. P. WHELAN

YOKOHAMA, April 15

IF chivalric courtesy be the finest flower of civilization, there should be an end in the West to the disparaging talk about Japan's being an uncivilized country. It will be remembered that when Admiral Ting, after the destruction of the Chinese fleet under his command at Wei-hai-wei, died by his own hand, the respect paid to his memory by the Japanese revealed to the Occident the existence in a "heathen" land of a finer sentiment of honor than that of which Europe's Age of Chivalry ever dreamed. Yesterday, when the tidings of Russia's great disaster reached the capital, there was an even more significant demonstration of the instinctive sense of courtesy which is ingrained in the character of this people. Respect for a brave man and genuine regret for his untimely end overbore every feeling of exultation at the crippling of the enemy's forces. Not even the tremendous impulse given to the nation's hope of ultimate victory could temper the feeling of the honor due to courage, the

JAMES F. J. ARCHIBALD

COL. THE CORRESPONDENT AT THE RUSSIAN ARMY

Chosen as one of seven foreign representatives permitted to join the Russian General Staff in the field, Mr. Archibald was at Newchwang when the official order came to proceed to headquarters. A cable message received a week before the battle on the Yalu said that he was about to start for Mukden. It is therefore almost certain that he was present at the first clash of the hostile armies at the Yalu.

down over the mountains to the sea. The Chinese Government has massed between thirty and forty thousand of the best picked imperial troops at the Great Wall, ostensibly to protect the district from bands of robbers, but, as the robber bands never number more than a hundred, it is not hard to imagine the real reason for this mobilization of the forces. The Government at Peking has certainly been very much alarmed over the situation, and had it not been for the pressure brought to bear by the foreign ministers, the court would undoubtedly have fled as it did during the Boxer troubles. The advice to remain was accepted, but at the same time the Government began to throw an immense force toward Peking and the frontier until there are now nearly one hundred thousand troops within easy striking distance of the present scene of action. I do not know what provocation would call for action from them, nor what influence has been brought to bear on their leaders by either of the belligerent forces, but should these Chinese troops ever be thrown into the game they would come near to constituting the balance of power necessary to make the end certain for the side with which they allied themselves. These Chinese troops are by no means the same that fought the Japanese ten years ago, for they are well trained on European ideas, and are as splendid a body of men as I have seen in the field for some time.

The arrangement with China, whereby all of the foreign countries maintain a "legation guard" in China, creates a peculiar state of affairs. The various countries keep a sufficient force to guard their interests in Peking and along the railway as well. At every station through the district of the north the platform is filled with soldiers of every nation. French, German, Italian, British, Japanese, Austrian, Russian, and others meet every train that arrives. As the station is more distant from Peking the numbers of the soldiers grow less, except in cases where the country has interests in that locality. As the train leaves Taku for the Manchurian frontier there are very few soldiers except the Japanese, German, and Russian, and when it arrives at Shan-hai-kwan there are none about but the Japanese and the Russians. Here the two are calmly walking up and down the station platform without so much as a glance at each other. It is a curious situation where the soldiers of the two countries at war practically live together and within a hundred miles of the scene of the hostilities. It really gives Japan an enormous advantage to have this neutral outpost within such short distance of the Russian lines, and under such conditions that Russia can neither drive them out nor prevent their presence. The arrangement allows Japan to watch the Chinese railway, to see that no contraband of war or supplies go across the frontier to Russia, and also allows her to question the passengers returning from Newchwang as to the state of affairs there and as to the disposition of troops. The steward of the dining-car that runs almost the entire distance to the Russian lines is a Japanese, and undoubtedly is working for the Government. The system of secret service work on both sides is most remarkable, although the Japanese have much the simpler problem, as it is not difficult for their secret service men to disguise themselves as Chinese and go where they like in the Russian lines. I think, however, that the number sup-

COMMANDER HIROSE, THE HOBSON OF JAPAN

He was in charge of one of the four steamers engaged in Admiral Togo's second attempt to block the entrance to Port Arthur, and lost his life while seeking to rescue a gunner, after the ship was torpedoed.

highest ideal in the range of Japanese thought. It may safely be said that had the fight occurred off the coasts of the Empire, and an opportunity given for funeral honors to Admiral Makaroff, there would have been such a demonstration of popular feeling as would have placed this nation among the most chivalrous of the peoples of the globe.

Generally speaking, it may be said that Japan's attitude in the hour of victory is as far as possible from that which her detractors have prophesied would be the case. Not only has there been no faintest indication of the "cockyism" which, it was confidently predicted, would follow success in war, but never since the Empire was opened to the world has there been more kindness and courtesy shown to foreigners than is now being manifested. In this regard all prophecies have been put to shame. When Japan's initial diplomatic victory was gained, and, by the abolition of extra-territoriality, she took her place as an equal among the Western powers, not a few of the old alien residents here held that the result would be a general backing of the tumbrils to foreign doors to cart the inmates off to prison. Far from such being the case, the bringing of foreigners under Japanese jurisdiction has resulted not only in an access of courtesy on the part of the natives, especially of the officials, but in a reciprocal feeling of closer comradeship on the part of the aliens themselves. Identified with Japanese interests more closely than ever before, woven into the warp and woof of Japanese life, the last traces of the old antagonism are vanishing. Whereas in the Chino-Japanese war foreign feeling was against the nation, and the foreign press was almost a unit in predicting Japanese defeat and in disparaging Japanese victories, it is now difficult to find, outside the ranks of Russia's French allies, aught but confident hope and belief in this nation's continued and ultimate success.

The outpouring of foreign generosity in aid of the families of the men at the front has been almost without parallel even in this community, famed for its generous giving. Subscription lists without number are circulating, and no week passes without elaborate entertainments to swell the fund. The American Asiatic Association, on the occasion of the memorial service held on the fiftieth anniversary of Commodore Perry's treaty, pledged itself to contribute ten thousand yen toward the Perry Relief Fund. At a subsequent meeting of the Association held to redeem the pledge, not only was the amount exceeded, but there is a probability that it will be more than doubled, so ready is the response given by all Americans in aid of the cause. Nor are the Japanese themselves by any means failing to do their part. Their contributions have already far passed the million mark, and there is as yet no sign of the flagging of the spirit of self-sacrifice. And with it all is the continuance of the same quiet self-confidence which from the beginning has marked the attitude of the nation. There is no hint of boastfulness in this self-confidence. It is based upon a consciousness of thorough preparedness which stands in marked contrast to the unpreparedness of the foe, whose boastfulness is that of the mere giant. Indeed, the phenomenal calmness of this people in the face of their tremendous task has no precedent in the history of warfare; and when to it are added the forces of a patriotic sentiment exceeding in intensity even religious fervor, of a national pride beyond that of which any denizens of the West are capable, and of a worship of courage deeper and more vital than that which has animated any votary of religious faith, there can be little doubt of the ultimate outcome of the struggle. Russia has indeed a vast army, but she will need it all upon the spot, here in the Far East, to overcome the viewless forces here in array against her.

AN INCIDENT ON THE ROAD TO PING-YANG

Observers have agreed that the one weakness of the Japanese Army is the cavalry force, the horses being small and the troopers poor riders. R. L. Dunn, Collier's special photographer, who went into Northern Korea with the Japanese vanguard, throws some light on this condition by this photograph and the following comment: "This will give some idea of what the Japs don't know about a horse. When I came upon the scene an officer was riding this horse, which had broken its leg. He had a Korean yanking the bridle and a Jap soldier beating the poor brute over the back with a club. The officer dismounted when I explained that a horse with a broken leg could not recover, and ought to be killed. He protested that the leg would mend in a few days, and that as long as the horse walked on three legs he didn't think it would suffer. My argument persuaded him to walk, at any rate, and he ordered the soldier to lead the crippled horse to Ping-Yang, a distance of 75 miles."

HEARST—A PERSONAL SKETCH

By ARTHUR BRISBANE

Mr. Brisbane is editor of the New York "Evening Journal" and acknowledged to be one of the ablest newspaper writers of the day; he has been closely associated with Mr. Hearst for years, and we have invited him to contribute this personal sketch of his friend as a matter of fairness and news interest. We have printed his article exactly as he wrote it, without prejudice to our own editorial attitude

William Randolph Hearst

COLLIER'S WEEKLY asks for an article concerning William Randolph Hearst, and for "as many personal details as possible."

The article is written gladly. It is useful to inject truth into a mass of mean and commonplace falsehood.

It is a pleasure to contradict the contemptible attacks that have been made upon Mr. Hearst by men as far below him in moral character and integrity as they are in ability.

Hearst has a great work to do in the United States, and he means to do it.

He lives in a country where many have succeeded in spite of poverty, where many, having succeeded, forget or despise the poor, among whom they were formerly counted.

Hearst has succeeded in spite of wealth, a most unusual thing in this country.

In spite of wealth, he has worked on the side of those less fortunate than himself.

He has done more than any other man in the United States to spread among the people genuinely democratic ideas.

He is the only man of large fortune that has persistently attacked special privilege regardless of everything, save his desire to transform democratic generalizations into realities.

Hearst is forty-one years old. He looks younger, because of vigorous health, and because his life, even in this country of hard-working, right-living men, has been singularly free from dissipation.

Personal Characteristics

He is a type of northern manhood, a good deal over six feet tall, as was his father. His head is of large size and well developed, his eyes light gray, and his nose unusually long. Few men have made a great success in the world—outside of the sentimental realms of music and poetry—unless they had blue eyes. Blue eyes and a long nose combined give the best result in a human being.

Hearst is a teetotaler, and he does not smoke. But he is a teetotaler for himself—not for others. He combines a sensible life with an understanding of other men's rights.

In all of his newspapers, read by no fewer than five millions of people daily, he urges young men to leave whiskey alone. And he opposes vigorously the poisoning of young boys by cigarettes.

He also opposes prohibition. He believes in argument, in reasoning—not in coercion.

A peculiarity which seems most admirable to Hearst's friends, and hurts him among a certain class of blatant, self-advertising politicians, is his modesty. Hearst is one of the very few men in American public life who underestimate their own ability and personal importance.

Different in other ways from many of our popular politicians, he is a man of speculative mind, one who thinks deeply on abstract questions. He is many miles removed from the typical American handshaking politician.

He is a man with whom others do not easily get acquainted, and his acquaintance always inspires respect. He has physical courage and moral courage.

What is more important than anything else, Hearst is a man of fixed purpose.

His strength, and his usefulness to the country, lie in concentration.

He believes in definite ideas and principles.

He believes that the government should work for the benefit of a majority of the people, that a race, like a building, must be lifted from the foundation.

Mr. Hearst's Early Education

Fortunately for himself and for the public, Hearst was a public school boy. He went to the public school before going to Harvard. He was educated in a democratic American manner by a father who worked hard, and made his son realize that hard work is the important thing in life.

His aim, which he preaches constantly, is to make the public schools so good that even the richest man will have to send his children to the public school in order to give them the best possible education.

The leaders of the Democracy in New York City will testify that when they asked Hearst for his support, just after he had bought the "Journal," and asked him what he wanted, he told them that the only thing he wanted was the biggest possible appropriation for the public schools—and this, by the way, he got.

Hearst realizes that in development of the minds of children lies the hope of the future. He realizes and preaches that knowledge is the only remedy for social and political evils.

His ownership of great newspapers would be of incalculable benefit to this nation, if only because of his persistent advocacy of a better public education.

He is a man of unusually upright character, yet he is attacked in gossip and in editorials by men who are unworthy morally to associate with him.

He does not drink, smoke, or speculate, lives most simply and plainly, yet he is presented to the public as a man of the worst possible habits by those who know him not at all, or deliberately misrepresent him.

Many foolish persons, not a few editors among them, actually say that Hearst lacks ability as a newspaper man, does not have his own opinions, does not edit his own newspapers; "that he hires brains to do the work for him."

One of the minor editors on the "World," just after Hearst had taken hold of the "Journal" in New York, suggested an idea to Mr. Pulitzer.

He said to that venerable and wise journalist: "Mr. Pulitzer, Hearst is a rich young man who means to work hard and do his share in the world. Give him a page in the Sunday paper, write him up well, praise him for working and trying to do something, instead of spending his money foolishly, as most rich young men do."

Pulitzer replied with a quizzical look from his very piercing eye: "Young man, you are crazy. Keep your mind on the Sunday paper, that young man Hearst will give us plenty of work to attend to."

Mr. Pulitzer was a good prophet.

When a war breaks out, Hearst engages his correspondents, arranges for ships, and maps out the work from beginning to end.

His Interest in the War

When the Spanish War broke out he offered to supply a regiment of cavalry at his own expense, to equip it, maintain it, and go to the front with it. This offer was made to and urged upon President McKinley through Senator Elkins. But it was refused.

At the outbreak of that war Mr. Hearst gave his steam yacht to the Government. He did not seize the opportunity to sell it, as did some eminently respectable gentlemen who affect to despise Hearst. He not only gave it outright, but he also paid the expense of putting it in shape to be used as a gunboat, the building of a steel deck forward, etc.

In offering to supply a regiment of cavalry and go to the front with it, Hearst was moved by no boyish desire to see a fight or craving for personal glory. He had advocated the war. He was even bitterly accused of bringing it on by men who were very cheerful when the war was over. He felt that he was at least partly responsible and that he ought to share the physical danger involved.

He finally succeeded in getting, at the last moment, an obscure appointment in the navy, but was not ordered on active service. Meanwhile he had chartered an extra ship for himself and gone to Santiago, determined at least to report the war, if he could not take a fighting hand in it. He reported the destruction of the fleet at Santiago for his own newspapers.

Among other statements that misrepresent Hearst was one—widely spread—to the effect that he made money from the war by selling papers, and was, therefore, anxious for the war.

In view of that statement, it may be worth mentioning that because of the war and the enormous expense of handling it in accordance with Hearst's ideas, the New York "Journal" while the war lasted was run at a loss that averaged three hundred thousand dollars a month—about ten thousand dollars per day. It is not likely that many individuals lost as much through the war as did Hearst.

It is ridiculous to be compelled to affirm that the most successful newspaper man in America understands his profession. Yet it is necessary to make that affirmation and to make it often, so ingeniously imaginative are the gentlemen of the conservative press.

Those who think that Hearst is not an editor may refer to Pulitzer or to Bennett. Those who think that he does not understand the mechanical details of his business may refer to Hoe & Co., the great press manufacturers, or to the head of the printers' or pressmen's union in New York City. Hearst could take a press to pieces. He has suggested, and by insisting has secured, improvements in the Hoe product. Every newspaper man in America knows that his personal work has developed the art of newspaper illustration. He directs minutely every detail of his newspapers—editorial, reportorial, telegraphic, and mechanical.

As to Mr. Hearst's inception and direction of editorial policy and editorial writing, Samuel E. Moffatt, now an editorial writer on Mr. Pulitzer's staff, would serve as a good witness. Mr. Moffatt was formerly Hearst's principal editorial writer. He is unquestionably one of the ablest men in the profession. Under Mr. Hearst's personal direction, Mr. Moffatt had been conducting an energetic campaign in favor of the Nicaragua Canal.

The gentlemen at Washington finally decided to have the canal, subject to British control.

Moffatt knew that Hearst was intensely interested in the canal commercially for the sake of the West, as well as of the East, but especially because of its strategic importance to our navy. It might be that Hearst would want the canal built, even under disadvantageous circumstances. But, before approving the suggested scheme, he cabled for instructions to Hearst, who was then in Egypt on his way up the Nile.

Hearst cabled back at once the editorials which were published in his papers against the suggested surrender to the English, demanding that there be no canal at all unless it be an American canal. Those editorials killed the English project effectually, although the Englishmen found admirable support in most of the other New York newspapers.

He Edits His Papers Himself

All the other Hearst editorial writers can testify to the fact that Hearst initiates and directs the policy of his newspapers, that those editorials on national questions which attract the greatest attention are either written verbatim by him, or are paraphrases of his telegraphic or verbal instructions.

Mr. Bennett and Joseph Pulitzer, as is well known, outline by telegraph or letter to their editorial writers the important utterances of their newspapers. The orders of Hearst to his editorial writers, in detail and in number, are at least double Pulitzer's orders—a fact due partly, of course, to Mr. Pulitzer's unfortunate state of health. Mr. Hearst actually writes more than any other important editor and proprietor in America. Henry Watterson as a conspicuous editor should be excepted, but he is not an owner.

One word about Hearst's activity on behalf of the people and against the trusts. Mr. Einstein, of the firm of Einstein & Townsend, was formerly counsel for Mr. Hearst's newspapers in New York City. He has been succeeded by Mr. Shearn. Mr. Einstein will testify that a lawyer who undertakes to carry out Mr. Hearst's instructions in regard to public fights will be kept busy. The mere statement that a thing is impossible has no effect upon Hearst whatever. The fact that it is pronounced impossible simply makes Hearst all the more determined to do it. The attacks upon the Ramapo water steal, the Gas Trust, the Coal Trust were all initiated by Mr. Hearst and carried out under his personal direction. The mass meetings, organized at no little expense, were ordered by Hearst, and on his orders the many fights were made in court. In short, Hearst manages literally every detail of his newspapers, and devotes all of his time to them.

He has really no other interest, and no other pleasure, outside of his home life.

His first child, a son, was born on the 23d of last month. It is to be hoped, for the people's sake, that this boy will grow up, and that, like his father, he will use his money and his energies in fighting for the people's rights, even at the risk of being called anarchist, revolutionist, and incompetent, as a reward for useful public effort.

Hearst Will Own Fifty Newspapers

As an editor and an editor only, apart from political office, Hearst would do an enormous amount of good for years to come, more perhaps than any other man in the United States. If he lives, he will, within a few years, publish at least fifty newspapers, and reach every day practically the whole population of the United States. He owns and edits now nine morning and evening newspapers. When his papers shall be published everywhere the public official who betrays his trust will be called a traitor in every corner of this Republic, and the people will know that he is a traitor.

Those very men who hate Hearst, because he interferes with their schemes of plunder, would be the first to admit that it is absolutely impossible to influence him by any argument foreign to the public welfare. With some other newspapers they use successfully various arguments, not too creditable sometimes. Against Hearst their only weapon is slander. They use it with a vigor that is almost admirable. If the people should actually appreciate and reward a man who works for them, they would not be disappointed in Hearst.

They would not put in office a man full of revolutionary ideas, eager to turn the country upside down, to overthrow in a month or in a year an established social system.

They would elect to office a real man, one independent of every other, anxious only to work for the majority to whom he would owe the honor conferred upon him.

They would put in office a genuinely conservative man, whose conservatism would consist in preserving the rights of the individual, and especially the rights of the collective mass as against the predatory few. They would put in office a man in whose eyes the richest scoundrel in the United States would be no more impressive, and far less worthy of gentle treatment, than the ordinary man who steals a pair of shoes.

If Hearst were made President, it would not be a happy day for the gentlemen in whose brains lie, yet unborn, the future Ship Trusts, Steel Trusts, Coal Trusts, etc. But it would be a very good day for those who believe that the President of the United States should be known to the people and selected by them—not some dummy pronounced safe by the financiers that control the public purse.

The random statements written here about Hearst are true. They are based on personal knowledge.

Whether Hearst be nominated for the Presidency or not, some things will be proudly remembered by his friends.

The position that he has made for himself.

Every dishonest man on a big scale in the United States would dread his election. Every open violator of the law fears him and dislikes him. He is cordially hated by the lawbreakers in Sing Sing as well as by the lawbreakers in Wall Street. He has thousands of friends among the poor people, whose battles he has honestly fought.

He stands thus far as the only really self-made candidate for nomination by the Democrats, and he stands very far above the quiet dummies whom the trusts are trying to push into prominence, that they may control both nominees.

The fight of the trust-owners and of the corruptionist Democrats everywhere is made against Hearst. He is the man they fear; their only thought is to find some Democrats that can be used to beat him. They do not care what the Democrat's name is. Hearst has built up a strong position for himself as a result of his twenty years of hard newspaper work. He and his friends may be proud of it.

And if not nominated for the Presidency he will continue to be what he is now—a much more influential and a much more useful man to the Republic than nine out of ten Presidents in our history.

Incidentally, the colorless editors throughout the country might observe that it is a good thing to have principle and fight for it. They might ask themselves if it would not be better to try on their own account to do something for the public, instead of using their energies in attacking Hearst, who has worked to make the American newspaper what it ought to be, a constant voice, representing the majority of the American people.

THE NEWSPAPER SHELL GAME

By NORMAN HAPGOOD

NEWSPAPERS have on American morals and thought an influence hardly second to the schools, and greater than the Church. Many of them teach, more persistently than anything else, a contemptuous disregard for truth.

They lie about their circulation. They use the cry of "Extra" to get readers on false pretences. They exaggerate every happening to the degree of falsity. They have invented type which enables them the better to lie about the news.

CZAR'S DEATH

FORETOLD BY GYPSY

is a typical headline, intended to bunco each buyer out of one cent. In any war this forgery method of the press runs riot. The perverting press loves war, in spite of the temporary loss in advertising, because it means news and circulation, from which advertising, power, and money follow soon. After McKinley was shot, agitation, falsity, and malice subsided somewhat, but the temptation to play on class and party hatred, and to tell a lie when the truth will not suffice can hardly be resisted by any owner who has cast himself for the rôle of demagogue. Let us take the leader.

Hearst sells newspapers. Rockefeller sells oil. I should not wish to say which is the greater hypocrite or the more evil influence. One can hire Legislatures and give money to religion. The other can pay a journalist the salary of a United States President to write editorials for him and to tell people, if need be, with great skill, what a modest, virtuous, self-sacrificing lover of the people his employer really is, and what a great editor; and the people must believe part of these stories about the employer's character and powers, just as they must believe part of the news printed in his newspapers. When the yellowest papers print a lie they do not take the space next day to deny it. Even if what they say about the Christlike nature of their proprietor, or some other topic, is doubted in other papers, those other papers are never seen by thousands who are reached by the class of journals headed by the Hearst newspaper trust.

It is of more importance, said the opening editorial of Mr. Hearst's new Boston paper, what a newspaper believes than what it does. Let us see what this little sentence means; for it is a clever sentence, as most of Mr. Brisbane's sentences are.

It means that a newspaper owner may on one page tell all the lies that will help his business, provided on another he solemnly prints in display letters that "it is IMPORTANT to tell the TRUTH."

It means that if he attacks gambling on one page, he may devote several other pages to making gambling attractive.

It means that he may take money for advertisements of alcoholic "medicines," provided he writes against drunkenness; as Mr. Rockefeller may get money by corruption, provided he mumbles over the eighth commandment.

Mr. Hearst, believing wealth unpopular, makes a display of attacking wealthy men. He always holds them personally responsible for everything that is done by the corporations of which they are a part. He wishes every rich director put in jail. He attacks Mr. August Belmont for being president of the Jockey Club, which he describes as an institution for the promotion of gambling.

Well, what is the "New York American"?

In the morning week-day issue of the day on which I write, half of the front page is given to racing, all of the second page, except half a column of advertising, all of one other page, except a little advertising about old doctors who cure diseases of men, and a few inches of prize-fighting and other "sports." This page includes "tips," telling how to bet, furnished free to its readers by the "American." It also includes advertisements trying to induce people to send money on the chance of winning large amounts by guessing the winning racers. And Mr. Hearst is so very noble in his attacks on racing and on

NOTE.—Some editorials Mr. Hapgood has written in Collier's about the Hearst boom and what it stands for, have provoked sufficient discussion to warrant a longer article than the editorial page permits. Having invited Mr. Brisbane to contribute his view of Mr. Hearst, we have asked Mr. Hapgood to say something from the other side. His article is addressed particularly to those readers of Collier's editorial page who, while conceding our fairness in general and not accusing us of being a paid mouthpiece of the trusts, consider that we have dealt harshly with Mr. Hearst, whom they describe as "a true friend of the people."

Mr. August Belmont! In this very issue I find a pure-minded editorial accusing President Clowry of being a criminal because the Western Union furnishes to pool rooms news about the races.

I open the "Evening Journal," edited by Mr. Brisbane for Mr. Hearst, to see what view of life it encourages in the people. On the principal news page I find articles on the following topics: Murder, 8; bigamy, 2; other crimes, 6; accidents, 7; insanity, jilting, and spirit revelations, Japanese monkeys, and how they are now breeding from patriotic motives; eighteen articles, mostly the smaller ones, covering foreign and domestic news, from the port at which Cornelius Vanderbilt's yacht is stopping to the largest fish ever received at Fulton Market. In space this page of "news of the world condensed," giving the general scope of the paper's interest and influence, devotes about six columns to crime and horror, and about one to those other interests of life on which it deems its readers worthy to be informed.

The yellow newspapers do good, incidentally, when it is not inconsistent with their advantage. Take the two leaders: Why is it that the highest type of men concerned in journalism have some respect for Mr. Pulitzer and none for Mr. Hearst? It is, in part, because of personal acquaintance with the two men, but more because in one of Mr. Pulitzer's newspapers there is some degree of sincerity, and even of independence. There is some disregard of truth also, but newspaper men forgive much. Mr. Hearst they do not forgive, for he has only exaggerated what was bad in Mr. Pulitzer and abandoned what was good. Modesty, too, is popular, and Mr. Pulitzer is a fairly modest man. Mr. Hearst's name was printed in one day, in one of his many papers, in one of the many issues, 28 times on the editorial page, 20 times on the second page, 27 on the third, 40 on the fourth, and 64 on the sixth, or 179 in all. Mr. Pulitzer, whatever his faults, is known as a man without petty qualities—and that is something. Nor has Mr. Pulitzer ever been known as a man who used his newspapers to terrorize with scandal his political opponents. The "New York American" is now exploiting the private troubles of the Villard family, because the "Evening Post" attacked Hearst as a candidate. Mr. Ochs is now suing Mr. Hearst and Mr. Brisbane for making up the story that August Belmont owned the "Times," a story concocted in order to punish that paper for opposing the Hearst candidacy. When I began to write against Mr. Hearst's modest political pretensions, I was warned that if there was anything in my life which I wished kept private I had better hold my peace. Mr. Pulitzer has, I believe, been impersonal. He, the pioneer, knew enough, as Hearst has known after him, to hire able subordinates, but it was only as editors, not as press agents. Mr. Hearst is the first man to be run for President by his employees.

When the United States became a nation, the founders hoped that the old story of aristocracy and demagogue might never be enacted here. Shall we be able to preserve our pure, fair democracy, with the Rockefeller attacking it from one direction and the Hearsts from the other? I think we shall. We shall be victimized neither by plutocracy nor by the friend-of-the-people shell game. If Mr. Brisbane would allow me to write one of his editorials for him, I should contribute this:

LISTEN.

To the billion readers in our Hearst family, ONE WORD.

Let them EXAMINE this paper.

They will find over a page of advertisements by quack doctors, of a kind which reputable papers will not print.

They will find masses of advertisements on patent medicines. One contains 44 per cent of alcohol. One, advertised as "safe," contains over 35. We KNOW they are poison.

We aid and abet clairvoyants, palmists, astrologers, and card-readers. Why do we carry all these schemes to CHEAT THE POOR?

Did you ever study proportion?

Neither has the poor savage of Australia; but we have, and our morality is determined by the ratio of cost to what we get out of it.

As it is in these petty swindles, so is it in the larger bunco games of politics.

We defend the poor when it PAYS.

We cheat the poor when it PAYS.

THINK IT OVER.

There are confidence games that I like better.

Shall the soul of yellow journalism spread over our politics and into our private life? George Washington saw in a demagogic press one of the gravest dangers, even a century and more ago, before any man had money enough to become a newspaper trust alone.

"High finance" is able to secure the ablest legal talent, to play every known trick upon the courts—for money.

The wealthy owner of a newspaper, or syndicate of newspapers, is able to secure the ablest journalists, to play every trick upon the people—for money.

The trust lawyers know their business.

So do the yellow editors.

As a matter of mere ability I take off my hat, if not to Mr. Hearst, yet to his writers and defenders. If any force can change this free and happy land into an Old-World fighting-ground for hatred, they can; and then will the gloomy prophecies of Washington come true.

"A SKIRMISH BETWEEN JAPANESE AND RUSSIAN OUTPOSTS NEAR THE YALU."

A REMARKABLE BATTLE PHOTOGRAPH IN "HARPER'S WEEKLY"

We must compliment our esteemed contemporary, "Harper's Weekly," on the excellent double-page reproduction of the above photograph, which appears in its issue of May 14. Unfortunately, the spirited scene it portrays is not "A Skirmish Between Japanese and Russian Outposts near the Yalu," but a photograph taken at Fongcheatun, a few miles north of Port Arthur, on November 22, 1894, almost ten years ago, during the Sino-Japanese war. This photograph and another, printed as a full-page in the same number of "Harper's Weekly," were originally published in a book entitled "Japan-China War," by Kelly & Walsh, Yokohama, Japan, 1895. If our contemporary will refer to recent pictures by R. L. Dunn, Collier's special photographer, from the seat of war, it will note that the Japanese army of March, 1904, wears a uniform considerably different from that of November, 1894. In the present war the only artillery engagement on or near the Yalu was fought on May 5, and we had figured to receive photographs of this battle about July 5 from our two correspondents now with the First Japanese Division in Manchuria. We fear the dazzling timeliness of this particular picture betrayed our contemporary into a trifling error.

PASSING THROUGH SAI-MUN ON THE ROAD TO PING-YANG

Dr. Haraguchi      Capt. Iwata      Lieut. Imamura      Sec. I
GENERAL SASAKI AND STAFF, IN COM

THE FORTY-SIXTH INFANTRY REGIMENT MARCHING THROUGH TAI-TONG, OPPOSITE PING-YANG

THE OCCUPATION OF PIN

PHOTOGRAPHS BY R. L. DUNN, COLLIER'S SPECIAL WAR PHOTO

Under date of March 21 Mr. Dunn writes from Seoul: "I returned here overland late last night from Ping-Yang. I spent twenty-two days in and near that city, getting as far north as Sunan. At every place I was able to get some good pictures. I went further north than any other newspaper man and secured pictures no one else got. There was only one way to send you pictures from the North, and that was by special messenger overland to Seoul, sometimes a distance of more than two hundred miles. I have learned that the mail and pictures I posted the day I left Ping-Yang have never gone, and upon arriving at Seoul I learned that not half my messengers had arrived here. All mail was opened at Ping-Yang, and, judging from the way I was watched day and night, I am certain that the Japs did not send my mail. After finding I was under guard I organized the overland messenger service. On the way back to Seoul I saw Korean coolies stopped every day and searched by I had a hard time going and coming from it six days' trip to Ping-Yang, over mountains by the Japs, as many as twenty-five slow carrying my provisions and films on pack, ting fine scenes at once, and getting them no end of worry among the correspondents

Shibata Capt. Makayama Lieut. Kajiura
WHICH TOOK POSSESSION OF PING-YANG

DRILLING IN THE FIELDS ON THE OUTSKIRTS OF PING-YANG

THE FOURTEENTH INFANTRY REGIMENT MARCHING OVER THE SAND FLATS OF THE TAI-TONG RIVER TO ENTER PING-YANG

BY THE JAPANESE ARMY

IN KOREA. PHOTOGRAPHS COPYRIGHT 1904 BY COLLIER'S WEEKLY

all of my messengers could not have escaped. el at this season is most difficult. It is a good ce to sleep at night, every village being taken in advancing army occupies the roadway from turn trip but to travel over frozen rice fields, first correspondent to arrive at Ping-Yang, get- m arrived. My presence at Ping-Yang caused re complaining about my being permitted North while they were held in Tokio. The Japanese Consul at Ping-Yang told me that complaints were coming to him daily, and that I must leave. After getting him to round up the other correspondents at Ping-Yang I returned from the North and we all started on the return trip. The other men chose to go to Chenampo to await the boat, but I preferred traveling overland, and upon my arrival at Seoul I learned that my friends had been driven from Chenampo by the military authorities and were compelled to follow me over the rice fields."

Since writing this letter Mr. Dunn has been compelled to return to Tokio in order to obtain credentials that will enable him to accompany the Japanese army with official sanction. He was assigned late in April to the third expedition, of which fact he advised us by cable, but he was not allowed to inform us of the destination of this army corps

THE GIRL OF THE VIOLIN

By Katharine M.C. Meredith

Illustrated by

A.I. KELLER

As the men lingered over their coffee, the notes of a violin were heard.

IT WAS an afternoon in December, and each window of the library at Marsh Hall framed a stretch of white Long Island landscape touched to flame color, where the setting sun was reflected in the sheets of thin ice which, here and there, covered the marsh land. Away off beyond it all a gray sea pounded upon a gray shore. Within, blazing logs illuminated the red leather of the library.

Hewitt Webb walked to the fire. Dawson had said that Mrs. Mills would see him there. Mrs. Mills was the Matilda of his past. Sometimes she had even been Tillie. With the latter he had been in love at one time, although he had never quite approved of her except later as the wife of another man. And now she had a fashion of asking him down to the Hall just often enough to make him feel that he would like to go, always sending him back to town again before he became restless. Matilda Mills never overdid anything. "Well—here you are!" The voice was bell-like.

"Here I am!"

"Were you glad to be asked?" tinkled the voice again.

"I am here," Webb replied, with an economical transposition of words.

"My dear—you have saved my life! Such a stupid crowd as are down just now! All of them George B.'s friends except Lucy—she's mine," George B. was Matilda's husband.

"Lucy who?"

"Lucy Reeves—the girl with the violin."

"A girl with a violin!" Webb began to draw on his gloves and looked at the door.

"Don't worry, my friend—this one is different."

"Impossible!"

"Well—nine chances out of ten she will not play. She has to be in just the right mood!"

"Oh! moods—and a violin—Tillie, how could you? Let me go now and come again some other time." He took out his watch. "I could catch the five-fifteen."

"Perhaps; but you will not. Besides, I asked you on purpose for her!"

Webb regarded his hostess with horror.

"For her! I am to be sacrificed?"

"Not at all. But you are to study her. I think she is a case."

"Oh, shop!" Webb was becoming a noted alienist.

"Well—shop—then. She is the dearest little thing in the world. But any one can see that her music is killing her. Why, the last time I heard her play she fainted."

"Fudge! pretence."

"No, she did!"

"And I am to save her—"

"—from Art; it is killing her!" Matilda nodded solemnly.

"And my rôle is to be?"

"That of Love," retaliated Matilda.

"Not science, then?"

"Oh, bother science!" Matilda cried with disrespect.

"You can't be serious! Ah, not you—that is what you never were and never will be!" Webb settled himself comfortably, crossing his legs, and began to remove his gloves with an air of relief.

"But I always was—about other people! And she's such a duck!"

"Pretty?"

"Oh, of course, that's as one might fancy."

"Like you, then?"

"Not in the least. She's very gentle, appealing, dove-like."

"And plays the violin! Impossible! Where is she to-day?"

"Riding with the rest—such a set!"

"She rides well?"

"Oh, but like a greenhorn—"

Just then a log in the fireplace fell with a crash, the embers blazed up into a ruddy crimson, and the sparks danced merrily. When Webb and Matilda turned to look at each other again a girl stood just before them.

Matilda gave the most perfect little gasp of pretended alarm.

"How long have we been a party of three? Why, Lucy! We were talking about you!"

Webb, being a man, felt and acted a little more ill at ease. He was very sure of his own awkwardness as he rose and remained standing by Miss Reeves.

"I was reading—in the window over there." She was in her habit and hat, while a crop was in the hand which held her book. "I came home a half-hour ago—just before you, I fancy!"—looking at Webb musingly: "I was so interested I never noticed you were here—or you, Matilda—until a moment ago."

Matilda bit her lips and wondered hard and long. Webb tried to retrace their fragmentary conversation and studied the new face. As Lucy Reeves was tranquilly regarding the fire he had an unrivaled opportunity for doing so. These are his impressions:

In the first place her calm seemed to him assumed. A high color stained her cheeks and the delicate brows were drawn together with a stern intensity. The face was a very pure one. The childish nose was tilted, as if in maidenly disdain of a world too coarse for its taste. The mouth was sweet and looked as if it might fall into lines of grief easily. Her form was extremely slight, hipless, and she stood as daintily poised as a bird, a little shy, and as if eager to fly away.

As Webb looked at her the impression was forced upon him that she had heard nothing of their silly conversation because of a preoccupation of mind. It seemed to him that the girl was mentally absorbed with some subject in which he and Matilda bore no part.

Matilda, leaning forward, grasped one of the girl's hands.

"You witch—didn't I see you ride away with the rest?"

"Yes, but I ran away from the others. I came home alone"—diffidently.

"How was that?" Matilda opened her eyes very wide.

"Dopy ran."

"He ran! Weren't you afraid?"

"Not of the horse," said the girl slowly, as if to herself, while her eyes traveled gradually from the fire to the window where the darkness outside was veiling the icy marshes.

"Of what, then?" asked Webb, as Matilda went from them to the tea-table.

She did not appear to hear him, and the room seemed suddenly to fill as the four men and women who entered it were noisy and excited. The two men sought the fire. The women took seats, one on either side of Matilda, at the tea-table.

"What possessed her? To ride like that!" cried one of the women.

All were looking good-naturedly at Miss Reeves. She walked with a timid, uncertain step to a table where she laid aside her book and crop in order to take the tea which Webb brought her.

"Is it a novel?" he added, as he saw her turn a leaf in the book before closing it.

"No—yes."

"What is it called?"

"Oh, it's just a foolish sort of thing."

Webb fetched muffins and tea, talked stocks and turf, and then he came to the book where the girl had left it. It was Binet's "Alterations of Personality." The page turned was one in a chapter devoted to an analysis of the case of one "Selida." He ran his eye rapidly over the chapter, catching a sentence here and there. "Variations which take the form of two or more personalities in the same individual," he read.

"Perfectly healthy people may be found among these."

"In these phenomena, we may see an example of double personality." And so on. He remembered having read the book some years ago. How had it happened to find a lodging on the shelves of George B.'s library?

What possible interest could it possess for such a girl? And why had the girl lied in saying that it was a novel? As he looked up from the pages he met her eyes steadily regarding him.

"Why the fib?" he asked, going over to her, book in hand.

"I don't know," slowly.

"You know, but you won't tell?"

"Oh," she stammered, and he noticed that her voice had a sweet flute-like quality.

Still holding the book, he tried to draw her out. But she would have none of his ideas. She seemed quite suddenly collapsed into a schoolgirl, who would not be interested in Binet's "Alterations of Personality," and very soon ran away from their circle and up the stairs to her room. Webb laid the book on a table at his side. When he came down just before dinner it was not there.

That night, as the men lingered over their coffee and cigars, the notes of a violin were heard.

It was a mad air, thrilling, mocking, and dying finally in notes of an infinite despair. Such music! Full of fire, turmoil, and riotous life! What secret of the underworld—what disaster—was disclosed by its impetuous notes? And the horrible charm of it all! Whose was the master hand capable of evoking such emotion, of displaying such consummate technic? Webb knew at once. He heard the stir which broke the silence after the last note, and went with the others into the music room. As he entered he saw Lucy leave by an opposite door. Slipping through the hall and into the library, he met her as she sought to make her escape.

"You play like that?" he cried.

"Was it I?" she called in a harsh voice, as she flew past him, eluding his outstretched arm.

II

ON TUESDAY, at a quarter of two, Webb entered his consultation room, a small parlor just back of that which served for a general office. The house was a narrow, rather old-fashioned one in the thirties, and just off from Fifth Avenue. The weather was milder in town, and a sticky slime covered all of the pavements, while a cold drizzle which was more than rain and less than snow filled the air with its discomfort. As he stood, a card was brought to him. While looking at it in bewilderment, Miss Reeves was shown into the room.

She greeted him in a quiet, self-possessed way, and seated herself with dainty grace in the chair indicated by him. He looked closely at her face. Its features were set in an earnest fixity of purpose. Suddenly he discovered that she was less embarrassed than himself, and fell into silence awaiting her first word.

"I have been worried for some time about a matter," said she quietly. "The matter of my brain. Dr. Webb, I am anxious to be examined as to my sanity."

Webb stared, and then walked a few steps up and down the room.

"Your sanity!" he repeated. "Oh, is that all?" and he smiled at her.

But the girl did not return the smile.

"Well, let us get at it," he said genially, and, sitting just opposite her, leaning a little toward her, he asked her rapidly a great many questions, to all of which she replied with great care and seemingly conscientious effort. No, her head or spine had never sustained injury. The facts of her heredity were given. Then came the physical tests, submitted to with the same apparent earnest eagerness. She showed a keen intelligence as to the subject. Webb breathed more and more easily, and gradually assumed a friendly, laughing air, as of one who has humored a child. Finally he sat and looked at her with admiration.

"How did you, may I ask, come to know so well just what questions might be put to you?"

"I have read a lot."

Webb shook his head. "Oh, if women would leave such books alone."

"But I have suffered terribly."

"Well, you have answered my questions. I find nothing to suggest any reason why you should have come to me."

"You would call me—normal?"

"Most certainly."

"You have not asked me as to any fancy in regard to any unpardonable sin!" She looked at him eagerly.

"Have you committed one?" he returned, smiling.

"No." She hesitated. "You have not asked if I am ever any one else—not Lucy Reeves."

"Are you?" He lifted his eyebrows and regarded her shrewdly.

"I am." She breathed it out defiantly. "Now you will say that I am insane!" She looked at him.

His face was imperturbable.

"Tell me all about it."

And then in a torrent of words, and finally with sighs and tears, she told him.

"Wait," he said. "Have you ever told any one else?"

"Never!"

"And this person, whom you are at times—who is it?"

"It is a man." She looked at him, rebelling at his expression. "I tell you it is so—he takes possession of me whenever he wills. I am at his mercy. Lucy Reeves is just a girl—like any girl—except for him."

"When did it all begin?"

"Two years ago—when the violin I now have was sent me by Aunt Julie from the other side."

"Had you read books on nerve disorders before this feeling—came upon you?"

"Never! I tell you, I was just like other girls."

"And in just what do you differ now?"

"It was like this: I was always fond of a violin. I began to study when I was nine—ten years ago. I was patient and plodding, but I never got beyond a certain point. I never have got beyond a certain point. He does that."

"Who?"

"I don't know who, but it is a man, and not I." She sat looking sullenly at the fire.

"But why are you so sure it is a man?"

"I know it—that is all," she repeated obstinately.

"Have you ever seen him?"

"No, never!" She shuddered.

"And the other night at Marsh Hall?"

"It was he who played—"

"It was he?"

"Yes—and, oh, another thing! It was he who rode Dopy that afternoon. Dr. Webb, I think the horse knew. I am a timid horsewoman. I hated to mount that day. I never shall again—that is, if I can help it!" And the girl burst into tears.

"Has that phase ever occurred before?"

"No, only that of the violin."

"Why do you play at all? Why not drop music for a while?"

"Ah! Would I not be glad to do so? But I can not. The thought takes possession of my mind—I must go to the violin—must handle it. And then—he does as he likes."

"Do you dream of him?"

"No, thank God!"

"Does he come in any other way?"

"No. But I forgot to say that my voice grows harsh and horrid at such times. I seem to hear it so."

"Where did your aunt get the violin?"

"She never told me."

"And you do not know to whom it belonged?"

"No—that is—" She hesitated.

"What were you going to say? Keep nothing from me."

"Once I had an uneasy night. When I awakened I seemed to feel that I had walked in my sleep. I saw on the table at my bedside the writing pad I had left on my desk."

"The writing pad, you thought you had left on your desk," Webb interrupted quietly. "Go on."

"Well"—she clasped her hands nervously—"it was there—and on it these words in a strange hand: 'I must live again through you at times. The violin is the one I pawned at Paris. I was crowded out of life.—André Proust.'"

"Was it in pencil?"

"Yes. And I found the pencil under my pillow."

"And your doors?"

"Were locked on the inside as I left them the night before."

Webb arose. "And what are your own thoughts about this incident, Miss Reeves?"

"That he wrote it with my hand during the night—just as he plays his own violin with my hand," she replied obstinately. "I feel—"

"Feel!" snorted Webb. "Oh, you women and your feelings! What do they amount to!"

He walked up and down the room a moment, then came again and stood before her.

"Do you want me to tell you what it all means?" he asked very kindly. She looked her assent.

"Just this, then. When you wrote, you acted your dream. Do you understand? And when you play on the violin—you dream while awake. Do you understand that also?"

She faltered out a few low words.

"I know—I understand—I have read it—"

"Listen! I believe that you are an intelligent girl and will understand. In that way you will be able to help yourself. Now, my dear Miss Reeves, your case is quite simple—it is one of traumatic hysteria. You fancy you are at times another person, because the disease with you has a quite distinct phase. Of your two personalities one is normal, yourself—and from that we hope much; the other is distinctly pathological. In some way we shall cure you—possibly by some method of hypnosis. I will think it all over carefully and will write you when to come again. Meanwhile, cultivate your will power!"

As he talked the girl seemed to collapse before his eyes. Paler and paler she grew.

"It is true, and you can never help me in that way. And, Dr. Webb, sometimes I wonder if what you scientists call 'subjective selves' are not just spirits after all."

"Come, be sensible!"

She said no more, drank the glass of wine he offered her, and left the office. Webb watched her uneasily. It was an interesting case.

A week later he was surprised by a letter from her.

"After I left you the other day, my dear Doctor Webb," she wrote, "I did what you would certainly call a foolish thing. I went to a minister whom I knew as a kind good man. He told me practically just what you did. He said a lot to me about cultivating my will power and saving myself. I don't know exactly what I had hoped, but I think I wanted him to offer to pray for me."

"I have heard that in the Catholic Church they still hold that prayer will cast out evil. But I know that science regards all these things as superstitions. Sometimes I have thought that perhaps that which they call 'superstition' was all that kept real religion alive, and that what appeared foolishness to our wise men was God's wisdom after all."

"We must not expect miracles. I shall just go on and do the best I can with my life. But I can never be like other girls."

"I am going away to-night. I am sure you will remember me as an interesting case. My address will be as below for a couple of months. Sincerely yours, "LUCY REEVES."

Webb read the letter several times. "A very lovable little girl," he thought. "All the more lovable because of her foolishness."

III

ALL this had happened in the December of 1902. In the February of the following year Webb dined with Mrs. Mills in town—a little dinner of six. Later all went to the Metropolitan to hear one of the operas of "Der Ring des Nibelungen." It was "Götterdämmerung." Their seats were in the stalls, and Webb sat next to Matilda, who had on her other side a man whose pose was that of a musician but whose genius was purely social. He talked in a dilettante fashion of the singers and the orchestra work, criticising Hertz, who was conducting the opera. Nordica, also, he whimpered, was not doing as well as in "Siegfried." Finally, toward the end of the evening his talk, which Webb styled drivel, and to which Matilda listened as if fascinated, drifted to the work of various violinists. He spoke in detail of an artist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and of a violin divertimento, "Nights in the Ukraine," and the "Death of Tintagiles," both of which, he argued, could only be interpreted by a man.

"But," he added in the falsetto voice Webb detested, "I make one exception. There is a curious girl in Boston—an American, strange to say—who can render them with terrible intellectual force. But she is an anomaly. She is a curious psychological study. She is wearing herself out with a hysterical frenzy which she throws into her rendering—really painful."

"You must mean Lucy Reeves!" exclaimed Matilda, and Webb started into a new interest as if stung.

"That is her name!" continued the dilettante.

"She played for us one night—last winter—down at

"But there is one thing about Lucy Reeves which would spoil any woman in my eyes. She has such a terrible voice, harsh, masterful—actually the voice of a man."

Matilda turned in astonishment. "Are you sure? There must be some mistake! Lucy has—as I recall it—a voice which is melody itself."

Matilda's dilettante shook his head. "It is far from being melodious now."

Webb felt strangely excited. He fidgeted, looked up and down, and then slowly across to where Lucy Reeves herself was sitting. She was leaning back in her seat and looking dreamily at the stage. Her fragility was startling. All the look of fresh bloom, the prerogative of girlhood, was gone. She was like a wisp of spirit tangled in a rag of tulle and flung in a graceful attitude into the chair she occupied. Webb looked steadily at her, and as he looked he marveled.

Was there an André Proust after all—an ill-starred soul from some mysterious underworld—a phantom rival? And what is this veil of personality which, lifting, reveals other egos peering from the obscurity of mind?

Was there less insanity in the world now that there were more alienists like himself? He knew that there was not.

What should he call it? Possession, or obsession, or hysteria, or what not? The girl belonged to him—had always belonged to him from the moment he met her. He felt that his own professional egotism had blocked the way. As he looked at her his whole awakened soul in his eyes, she turned and met his glance. He shuddered at the indescribable mournfulness of her look. She did not bow. She nodded slightly several times almost as if at her own thought. It was as if she said to him:

"I know—I know—and now you know, too—at last."

When he went to her, as he did at the first opportunity, it was as if they had but parted yesterday. And when they separated it was with the understanding that they were to meet on the morrow.

The next day he went to see her. Lucy received him alone. The change in her which had startled him the night before was even more apparent by day. As if she wished him to realize once for all the true condition of her health, she drew him by one hand to the window, and stood before him just where the heavy parted draperies allowed the full light of day to envelop her face and form. The curtains were of pale blue, and they found correspondent tints about the eyes and lips of the girl. Her skin seemed translucent, delicate as porcelain, and the head with its mass of bronze hair seemed too heavy for the support afforded it by the pale throat which arose from the simple waist of her pearl-colored cloth gown. Without a word she held her hands to the light, that he, the physician, might note their fragility. Each dainty finger was tipped with rose, each vein was outlined in azure—the wrists and hands seemingly of wax.

He stood with a sinking heart and noted each trace left by the advance of the Enemy.

She watched him keenly, the pupils of her wonderful eyes expanding slowly. Her lips quivered in a sob and then into words: "You are sorry?"

"Sorry! my God! Lucy—what does it all mean?"

She smiled up at him an inscrutable smile, in which was blended mockery, tenderness, and a strange triumph. It was as if the child in her nature was crying out to him, "I told you so!" But in a whisper she said, "I am lost."

"No! It is not so!" he cried.

"Who will save me?"

"I! I will!"

She sat in silence, and he saw tears steal silently over her wan cheeks.

"No," she shook her head. "You have not faith enough!"

"Lucy, science has a great many resources—"

She touched his lips with one fingertip. "Hush!"

"Why do you whisper, dear?" he asked anxiously. "Have you lost your voice?"

A gray pallor spread over her face and she seemed about to faint. "Yes—that is it, I have lost my voice," she murmured, and in her eyes he saw a bitter agony.

"Do you still believe—what you told me in my office that day?"

For an answer she bowed her head. The pathos, the resignation, of the motion was indescribable.

Webb pondered in vain for a suitable thing to say. He could not, did not, believe with her as to the awful power which overshadowed her.

Yet he had come to think that he could best influence her mind by pretending to do so. What could he say? What could he do? He was lover now as well as alienist. If he told her she was dying from auto-suggestion, what would that mean to her? She might reply by asking him to tell her just what the sub-consciousness was. She might ask him how he could be sure that it was a part of her ego. She might ask him to prove that it was not an entity separate from herself. He felt very helpless and ignorant quite suddenly. And he saw that whatever was to be done must be done at once.

"Dr. Webb, note every phase of my case—it may help you when others come to you as I did." The girl seemed very hoarse. "What was true then is true now—the music they think so wonderful is still his. (Continued on page 16.)

There was a rush, a struggle, a discordant twang of strings . . .

Marsh Hall. We were all thrilled—astounded—a mere child with the execution of a man."

"There is a mood—one must call it so—'Le Diable à l'œuvre et circule.' She goes quite mad over it, and her audience lives with her in a sort of Walpurgis Night. She has a wonderful grip on such work. One can not understand her. But she is wearing out."

"Her genius?"

"No—her physique. No woman could stand such a strain."

"Poor Lucy—such a nice little girl, too!"

"Is she really?" If you heard her play you might call her anything but "nice."

RUSSIA'S WAR FLEET NOW BOTTLED UP IN PORT ARTHUR

TORPEDO CRAFT vs. BATTLESHIPS

By Captain Alfred T. Mahan, U.S.N.

This is the third of a series of articles under the title of "Appreciation of Conditions in the Russo-Japanese Conflict," contributed exclusively to Collier's by Captain A. T. Mahan, U.S.N., author of "The Influence of Sea Power on History," who is a recognized authority, the world over, in matters pertaining to naval strategy. The first article was published in Collier's for February 20; the second, April 30.

THE destruction of the Russian battleship Petrovsk by a submarine mine, and the completeness of the catastrophe, involving both vessel and crew, constitute an incident so dramatic as to arrest at once the attention of the superficial, and to compel the close study of responsible authorities. In all such cases the obvious is that which carries the day in the so-called "opinions" of the hasty; and in this instance the obvious is the relative insignificance of the means of destruction, compared with the result produced. The true lessons of the occurrence, however, are not to be so lightly learned; they are not to be found in impressionist articles in the press, or in impressionist utterances elsewhere. There are always qualifying considerations. Possibly, these may not in the end be found strong enough to overbear the contention of those who judge only by an event, and that event isolated; but not until the other side of the question has been duly pondered can conclusion be justly thought final and safe.

Naval History bears witness to two continuous streams of belief; one in the superior efficacy of big ships, the other in the possibility of reaching some cheap means of offence, which will supersede the necessity of large vessels. The gunboat policy of President Jefferson affords the extreme example of this prepossession, which is only one aspect of a conflict everywhere seen between means and ends; the desire to obtain results without paying the reasonable and necessary price. Another instance of the same disposition is the hope of bringing an enemy to terms by commerce destruction alone, to be effected by a number of small cruisers, instead of obtaining control of the sea by preponderance of great fleets, supposed to be more expensive. No disappointment kills this expectation; experience is powerless against it, and is equally powerless to repress the theory, continually recurring, that some class of small vessel, with peculiarly redoubtable qualities, will be found to combine resistlessness with cheapness, and so put an end to the supremacy, never heretofore shaken, of the great ship of the order of battle. Its supremacy destroyed, the control of the sea will pass to the destroyer.

Control of the Sea. That, I believe, is conceded by all naval students and statesmen to be the one clear and necessary aim of naval warfare. The control may be local, as that of Japan now is; or it may be substantially universal, as that of Great Britain has been during long periods. Whether general or restricted, however, it means that the commerce and the military expeditions of the nation possessing control can pass continuously to and fro, without danger of disabling blows from the enemy. Absolute immunity from injury, occasionally even grave, is a vain dream of those who would fain wage war without running risks. In sober conception, "control" means such use of the water as a man has of a well-established business; not liable to failure, but also not exempt from reverses.

The Control of the Sea

The necessity then actually before us being that of control of the sea, the question raised by those who in speech and cartoon are now deriding the battleship is: Can control of the sea be maintained by a large number of small ships, carrying torpedoes, against a lesser number of big ones? It must be clearly noted from the first that the question is not primarily that of the potential effects of the torpedo on the big ship. As I said in my first article for Collier's, "Nobody has doubted the destructive effects of a torpedo, once placed"; but the big ship can carry them too, and in as large numbers as the successive relative progresses of the torpedo and the gun may render desirable. It may be that in the near future the development of the torpedo may obtain for it a much greater proportion of the total tonnage of a vessel than at present, to be taken at the expense of the guns and their ammunition; but that is not the immediate matter under discussion, which is, the relative efficacy of big and small vessels. To put this most clearly before us, let it be thus stated: If all the Japanese armored ships were suddenly destroyed, their torpedo flotilla remaining decisively superior to the Russian, would the Japanese undertake to convey an army to Korea in the face of the three Russian battleships now remaining?

Being already so far involved—several army corps now in Korea—they might attempt much; but that they never would have begun the war, in the case supposed, may be inferred from their incessant—and most wise—efforts to destroy the enemy's battleships, as well as from their continued measures to provide themselves with more large vessels,—the "Marine Review" of April 28 contains the particulars of two new Japanese battleships, of 16,400 tons displacement, ordered in England. The three Russians would not be enough to establish Russian control of the sea; they would be too few to cover the necessary ground; but they would make it impossible for transportation to proceed in quantity adequate to Japanese needs.

What Torpedoes Can Do

Could the Japanese torpedo flotilla, however, grapple with such a situation? To answer that it can do so, adequately, would mean that it can with certainty, and in reasonable time, destroy the remaining hostile battleships, or prevent their going to sea. Of this there is as yet no evidence. I don't mean merely no proof; but there is not even anything to indicate the probability that they could effect this result under the supposed conditions. For, what has been done? First, there was a successful surprise of a fleet off its guard and at anchor; in which, by the detailed account of the London "Times," ten torpedo vessels took part, discharging twenty torpedoes at a distance of 500 yards. The result we know was two battleships and a cruiser disabled, under circumstances much more favorable than can be expected to recur. The position of the enemy was known, he was at anchor, off guard, and without proper lookouts. Close range was thus attained, unseen; yet of twenty torpedoes fired, only three hits are scored. This is substantially the only success of the torpedo vessel—as distinguished from the torpedo weapon—in its peculiar sphere of operation. These hits are moreover the only achievement against battleships of the moving—automobile—torpedo, whether discharged by big ships or small; the other Russian casualties have been occasioned by stationary—anchored—submarine mines.

The laying of the mines, upon one of which the Petrovsk met her fate, was a most ingenious ruse, admirably carried out. In it, as in the first surprise, the military credit of outmaneuvering the enemy must be conceded; but that is something totally distinct from the efficiency of a particular class of vessel, or particular weapon, granting equal vigilance and skill on the part of both offence and defence. Togo's battle fleet has not even been ruffled by the very respectable, though numerically inferior, Russian flotilla; and he has preserved his battleships, and with them the control of the sea, by the very simple device of keeping them out of sight after nightfall. If, like him, the Russian admiral, on February 8, instead of staying just where the Japanese expected to find him, had put to sea for some unknown position, within a sixty-mile radius of the Port, the attack would probably—almost certainly—have failed; for there would not have remained night enough for search, nor indications by which to direct it. It is vain to speculate on the consequences, moral and material, upon the course of the war; but the other side of the question of torpedo-vessel attack would have received illustration. As it is, illustration being one-sided, "opinion" is the same. As I said also in my first article: "The question has been as to the ability to get in a hit at a fleet of vessels well picketed, and standing on their guard,"—one element of which is position and dispositions unknown to the enemy. It would have been interesting to see what would have happened had daylight found the Russian battle fleet and the hostile torpedo vessels in sight of one another. Probably, however, the latter would have retired toward its approaching main body.

Taken in connection with the manifold recognized advantages of large ships over small, in such matters of important military concern as speed, steadiness, coal capacity, and ability to deal with heavy weather, I think we may rest assured for the present that whatever modifications of armament may take place, the fleets that will control the seas will not be mosquito fleets. They will doubtless be so far above water as to afford target for guns, and this fact in turn will probably induce the continuance both of guns and of some armor protection.

Where Togo has kept his ships does not appear; but we may feel sure that somewhere there have been cruising lookouts, which would have given him speedy notice had Makaroff attempted to restore conditions by the use of his torpedo flotilla against the Japanese battle fleet, or to molest transportation by taking the open with his own, evading the enemy. From either of these operations ignorance of his opponent's whereabouts deterred the Russian admiral, whose good will to assume the offensive, if opportunity offered, was abundantly shown. Makaroff also had definitely committed himself to the position that the power of the sea is never wholly lost, so long as the services of torpedo craft remain available; there was therefore special reason to expect a demonstration of their usefulness from him. And so history curiously repeats itself, with steam as with sails. "Here we are," wrote Collingwood in 1804, "eighty miles off shore in a heavy gale; nothing to prevent the enemy coming out except the uncertainty whether he may not stumble upon us." To come out under such conditions is doubly hazardous when, as in the case of Port Arthur, there is no other port available for return.

The moment of writing—April 28-30—affords us an instance of such issue on the part of the other Russian division, that at Vladivostok. Interest has centred so decisively round Port Arthur that I fancy the attention of most persons has been diverted from the conditions at the northern arsenal. Despite Togo's recurrent appearances and bombardments, we really know no more about his outside movements, his purposes, or where he is keeping his fleet, than we do about the other Japanese division believed to be watching Vladivostok. Still, we hear a good deal about him; but about the other practically nothing. The sortie of the Russian armored cruiser squadron to Gensan, however, affords material for inferences concerning the opposing division, composed of ships of the same class, as well as indications of Japanese land movements. It is definitely shown that, while the main Japanese advance is by the west coast of Korea and the mouth of the Yalu, there is a subsidiary movement by Gensan on the east coast. This is not absolute news; but it is a confirmation of previous probable reports, enforced by the sinking of a transport and collier. Granting reasonable facility of moving from several ports toward the point of general concentration for the Japanese army, it is advantageous to distribute the landings among them. More men can be landed at the same instant, and simultaneous advance by several roads also promotes celerity. Between the east and west shores of the peninsula there intervenes some very high and rugged ground of over 5,000 feet elevation, which will impede co-operation between the forces landed on its either side; but the difficulty is the same for Russians as for Japanese, and greater for cavalry, in which the Russians are believed superior. Japanese divisions moving along this line tend also to check detachments of the enemy, occasionally reported advancing from Vladivostok. While, therefore, it is almost beyond doubt that the main Japanese attack will be by the lower Yalu and west coast, it is now clear that there is some activity on the east as well.

The Menace of a "Fleet in Being"

The mere existence of a Russian armored squadron in Vladivostok would compel the neighborhood of a superior Japanese force; but when there is exposed transportation of troops and supplies, as just shown, the necessity is doubly imperative. Also, as at Port Arthur, the most desirable of all alternatives is to destroy the hostile vessels, singly or together, as opportunity offers or can be contrived. Like dead men, only dead ships cease to be dangerous; while they are "in being," however held in check, there is always the chance of their doing harm. The recent exit of the Russian squadron possesses this particular interest. It shows that such a "fleet in being," even in the neighborhood of a superior force, can menace the "control" of the sea; that it can create some insecurity, effect some injury, greater or less as chance may serve; but it also shows that such injury may be inconsequential, and, even if severe, can not be vital. To sink or capture two or three hostile transports, even to interrupt momentarily the progress of transportation by apprehension for its safety, is not to accomplish the severance of communications, which is a mortal blow.

When You Go On Your Vacation Take

An Ingersoll Dollar Watch

It is the best watch for travelers, for business or pleasure—it removes one worry—about the injury or loss of a valuable timepiece.

The time has passed, however, when its usefulness is limited to Sportsmen and Children, as it is being carried habitually by every class of people, fully meeting the average requirement for accuracy, appearance and durability.

It is an "every-day watch for everyone"

Sold by 50,000 dealers or postpaid by us. See that "Ingersoll" is on the dial.

Robt. H. Ingersoll & Co. Dept. 55-57 Maiden Lane N.Y.

THE BELL ODOMETER

Accurately registers distance traveled by carriages and automobiles up to 1000 miles, and repeats a small bell in the instrument's ring as each mile is passed. Easily attached to axle and is operated by steel pins in end of hub. Special attachment for wire wheels. Runs very easy half inch for wheels from 28 to 30 inches. Fully guaranteed for one year. The works are milled from solid metal and are non-corrosive. Absolutely dust and water proof. Price $2.50 and up at dealers or BELL ODOMETER WORKS, Oakwood, Pa. Automobile Accessories Co., London, England.

CATALOGUE FREE

Now Only $4.95 A PAIR Express Paid

ALLIGATOR PUNCTUREPROOF SELF-REPAIRING CYCLES TIRES

The Original and only Punctureproof and Self-Healing Tire made. Nails, tacks, and glass will not let the air out. Practically will not become porous. Strong, durable, reliable. Greatest thickness where needed (see fig. in file). Examined "Red of 3." Sent C.O.D. anywhere, subject to examination—no deposit asked; but we pay express only when each examination order. State character of tire and size wanted. Catalogue Free. THE VIM COMPANY, Sole Manufacturers, State and Lake Streets, CHICAGO.

For Summer Afternoons

People go wild over it. Just like a Real Cotton Exchange. Different from all other card games. Scientific, yet intensely amusing. Ask your dealer, or sample sent postpaid for 50 cents. Standard American Game Co., Atlanta, Georgia.

O'Sullivan Rubber Heels are now described as the missing link between wings and shoes. Their buoyancy is due to the elasticity of new rubber. 35 cents and small sum for attaching. Buy of your dealer, or O'SULLIVAN RUBBER CO., LOWELL, MASS.

WE DESIRE TO HEAR from every Lady who would like agency work. We wish Lady Agents for Corsets, Petticoats, Dress Skirts, Dressing Sacs, Hose Supporters, Sanitary Belts, &c. Goods made to special measurement if desired. Can help you build up a large trade. Write us. Price List free. Mention Collier's Weekly.

RELIANCE CORSET CO., Jackson, Mich.

Reduced Rates on household goods to be sent from California, California, Washington and Oregon. Write Bakers Household Shipping Co., 97 1/2 Washington Street, Chicago.

STARK TREES best by Test—75 Years Largest Nursery. Fruit B-OK free. We PAY CASH. STARK BROS., Louisiana, Mo.; Danville, N. Y.; etc.

The Russian division, though very much in being, has merely made two raids of some 300 miles—say 20 hours—from its port; and in doing this has run a very great risk, as appears from the speed with which it hustled back. It is probable that at some time of its absence the superior Japanese squadron was nearer than itself to Vladivostok. There is no need to insist that the danger of such a situation greatly exceeds the results achieved; while the limitation upon its action is evident from the fact that, though it evaded observation, and had a good start, it did not venture down to the Korean Strait, or to the west coast, where the great movement of Japanese transportation was in progress. In brief, Japanese control of the sea was not threatened by this strong division, although it had succeeded in gaining a position between Togo and the Vladivostok Japanese fleet, whence it was free to act upon the main line of the enemy's communication for an appreciable time before being stopped.

It will be interesting to learn how this successful exit from Vladivostok, undiscovered, was effected. Probably under cover of fog; and if the ground surrounding the harbor be high, as at Santiago, their absence might well remain undetected. It would seem, however, that it should be otherwise as regards their presence outside; that this ought to have become known by some other agency than that of their captures. As a general proposition, it is at least safe to say that the Japanese division in watch of the port should have been itself so posted as to be able quickly to get between the enemy and his return, and that its scouting system should have ensured speedy knowledge of movements at no greater a distance than 300 miles. Like all general propositions, however, experience furnishes us with so many inevitable practical exceptions that it is impossible to dogmatize, in advance of precise knowledge in each particular instance. The obtaining of intelligence, the faites-moi savoir of Napoleon, by scouting or otherwise, is among the most difficult as most necessary of military demands. Historically, I suppose no fleet ever had scouts enough; these being vessels capable of swift movement and distant detachment without weakening the main body.

The dash of the Russian armored cruisers from Vladivostok emphasizes the wisdom of Admiral Togo's course, in compassing the destruction of vessel after vessel of the Port Arthur squadron. "Kill the ships" is the first demand of naval warfare; starve them—that is, stop their coal—is the second. There can be no doubt of the good will of the Japanese before Vladivostok to do as their comrades to the south have done; and that they have not attempted it by means of the torpedo flotilla, in which the Japanese navy is strong, shows their appreciation that there is a decisive difference between sending their boats against a fleet anchored in the open, as at Port Arthur, and one within a fortified harbor, like Vladivostok—or Santiago. This indicates limitations to the action of the torpedo vessel. So also it would seem that the motive which probably prompts Togo's frequent disappearances weighs also with the northern Japanese division, not to keep at night too close to a hostile harbor in which torpedo vessels are lying. The admirable secrecy preserved by the Japanese authorities debar us as yet much information we would gladly have, but since writing these words I find in the recent non-telegraphic correspondence of the London "Times" the following detail concerning the bombardment of Vladivostok, March 6: "The Japanese ships then drew off, and watched the harbor from a distance; . . . and at sunset withdrew beyond the range of torpedo attacks during the night. Next morning it stood in again."

The blockading fleet in such cases is always in the open; its chief protection against the insidious approach of the torpedo is a position unknown to the assailant, further fortified by a cordon of active lookout boats. This of course means a certain remoteness from the harbor during the dark hours, in which the torpedo finds its opportunity. As the late Admiral Sampson once said to me: "The torpedo boat is the child of darkness." It is evident, however, that a position thus taken facilitates an escape, such as that lately reported of the Vladivostok fleet; and as there is no other apparent reason for the Japanese not lying close up with the harbor, I apprehend they know there are torpedo vessels within. When the war began the Russians were credibly reported to have on the station eighteen to twenty destroyers, of which not more than a dozen seem to have been in Port Arthur.

We may therefore, I think, reasonably conclude that there is a certain amount of military movement and sea transportation to the east of Korea; that it is threatened by the Russian fleet at Vladivostok, not with serious interruption, but occasional harassment; that the Japanese squadron off the port is hampered in the thoroughness of its watch by torpedo vessels within, and yet unable, from local conditions, to get at the enemy's vessels except when, as on the recent occasion, they venture out of port. It is possible, also, that it may be part of the Japanese game to give opportunities for evasion, in the hope of intercepting return. This was Nelson's policy off Toulon; but now, as then, it offers too many chances to the enemy. It seems, however, very unlikely that the Vladivostok fleet will go far from home. Having no other base open, its coal capacity measures the limit of its depredations, which can scarcely effect results proportionate to the risks, so long as the main Japanese operations are on the west of Korea.

MAY 3, 1904.

The Columbia Graphophone

Type AR

$65

The Perfected Phonograph $4 to $100

Grand Opera at Home

The Graphophone will reproduce for you the voice of your favorite artist, with all its beautiful modulations and all its wealth of tone color. Send for catalogue of records by the world's great singers—De Reszke, Sembrich, Schumann-Heink, Campanari, Suzanne Adams, Scotti, Gilbert, and many others.

COLUMBIA DISC RECORDS

Absolute perfection of sound reproduction. All the sweetness, volume and beauty of the original rendition.

Seven inch, 50 cents each; $5 per dozen. Ten inch, $1 each; $10 per dozen. Grand Opera Records, $2 each.

25c

Columbia Gold Moulded Cylinder Records

25c

Send for catalogue 63, containing vocal quartettes, trios, duets, solos, and selections for band, orchestra, cornet, banjo, flute, clarinet, etc., etc.

COLUMBIA RECORDS FIT ANY MAKE OF TALKING MACHINE

For Sale by Dealers Everywhere and by the

COLUMBIA PHONOGRAPH COMPANY

Pioneers and Leaders in the Talking Machine Art. Grand Prize Paris, 1900

New York, Wholesale, Retail, and Export, 312 Broadway
Chicago, 88 Wabash Ave.
Philadelphia, 1099 1/2 Market Street
St. Louis, 908 Olive St. (Price Building)
Boston, 164 Tremont St.
Baltimore, 321 N. Howard St.
Cleveland, Cor. Euclid Ave. and Erie St.
Buffalo, 645 Main St.
San Francisco, 145 Geary St.
Pittsburg, 515 Penn. Ave.
New Orleans, 628-630 Canal Street
Detroit, 375 Woodward Ave.
Milwaukee, 381 East Water Street
Washington, 1312 F St., N. W.
Toronto, Ontario, 107 Yonge St.
Minneapolis, 13 Fourth St., South
Indianapolis, 48 N. Pennsylvania Street
Uptown, Retail Only, 872 Broadway
Kansas City, 1016 Walnut Street
St. Paul, 384 Wabasha Street
Denver, 305-307 Eleventh Street
Omaha, 3511 Franklin Street
Los Angeles, 223 South Main St.
Memphis, 269 Main Street
Portland, Ore., 128 Seventh Street
Terre Haute, 59 S. Seventh Street
London, Wholesale, Retail, 88 Great Eastern St., E. C.
Paris, 111 and 113 Rue Montmartre
St. Petersburg, 52 Nevski Prospect
Berlin, 71 Rittenstrasse
Vienna, Seilergasse No. 14

"Especially the BUFFALO LITHIA WATER of Virginia."

For Bright's Disease, Albuminuria, Renal Calculi, Gout, Rheumatism and All Diseases Dependent Upon a Uric Acid Diathesis.

Samuel O. L. Potter, A. M., M. D., M. R. C. P., London, Professor of the Principles and Practice of Medicine and Clinical Medicine in the College Physicians and Surgeons of San Francisco, Cal., in his "Hand-Book of Materia Medica, Pharmacy and Therapeutics," in the citation of remedies under the head of "Chronic Bright's Disease," says: "Mineral waters, especially the BUFFALO LITHIA WATER of Virginia, is highly recommended."

George Halsted Boyland, A. M., M. D., of Paris, Doctor of Medicine, of the Faculty of Paris, in the New York Medical Journal, August 22, 1896, says: "There is no remedy as absolutely specific in all forms of Albuminuria and Bright's Disease, whether BUFFALO LITHIA WATER, accompanied by a milk diet. In all cases of pregnancy, where albumin is found in the urine as late as the last week before confinement, if this water and a milk diet are prescribed, the albumin disappears rapidly from the urine and the patient has a positive guarantee against puerperal convulsions."

T. Griswold Comstock, A. M., M. D., of St. Louis, Mo., says: "I have often prescribed BUFFALO LITHIA WATER in Gouty and Rheumatic conditions and in Renal Calculi, accompanied by Renal Colic, and always with the most satisfactory results. In Renal Calculi, where there is an excess of Uric Acid, it is especially efficacious."

Medical testimony which defies all imputation or question mailed to any address.

BUFFALO LITHIA WATER

is for sale by druggists and grocers generally.

Hotel opens June 15th.

PROPRIETOR BUFFALO LITHIA SPRINGS, VIRGINIA

WINCHESTER

TAKE-DOWN REPEATING SHOTGUNS

The notion that one must pay from fifty dollars upwards in order to get a good shotgun has been pretty effectively dispelled since the advent of the Winchester Repeating Shotgun. These guns are sold within reach of almost everybody's purse. They are safe, strong, reliable and handy. When it comes to shooting qualities no gun made beats them. They are made in 12 and 16 gauge. Step into a gun store and examine one.

See our Exhibits at St. Louis, in Manufacturers and Fish and Game Buildings.

WINCHESTER REPEATING ARMS COMPANY • NEW HAVEN, CONN.

BALTIMORE & OHIO
RAILROAD
THE "NATION'S HIGHWAY"

TO
ST. LOUIS
WORLD'S FAIR

ROYAL BLUE SERVICE

SEASON SIXTY-DAY—EIGHTEEN DAY
TICKETS ON SALE FROM MAY 21

DEKASSETZ, BALTIMORE, MD. • J. N. ADAMS, ST. LOUIS, MO. • D. B. MARION, CINCINNATI, OH.

The Yosemite

Is the Tourist's Paradise of California

The points of interest are El Capitan, Three Brothers, Washington Column, Cathedral Rocks, The Sentinel, Half Dome, Bridal Veil Falls, Yosemite Falls, Mirror Lake and Cloud's Rest. The Yosemite Falls are composed of three cascades, the first being 1500 feet, the second 600 and the last 400 feet high.

THESE ATTRACTIONS ARE BEST REACHED VIA

UNION PACIFIC
and
SOUTHERN PACIFIC

Sixteen Hours Quicker to San Francisco via Omaha than any other line.

E. L. LOMAX, G.P. & T.A.
UNION PACIFIC
Omaha, Neb.

To choose time is to save time

To choose the

ELGIN WATCH

as your timekeeper is to save your reputation for punctuality.

Every Elgin Watch is fully guaranteed. All jewelers have Elgin Watches. "Timemakers and Timekeepers," an illustrated history of the watch, sent free upon request to
ELGIN NATIONAL WATCH CO., ELGIN, ILL.

PUNCTURE PROOF HEDGETHORN
BICYCLE TIRES

TO INTRODUCE WE WILL SELL YOU A SAMPLE PAIR FOR ONLY $4.80

REGULAR PRICE $8.50

STRONG, DURABLE, EASY RIDING, SELF-HEALING NO MORE TROUBLE FROM PUNCTURES

Result of 15 yrs. experience. Fully covered by patents. Dozens of imitations. No danger from thorns, stones, glass, nails or nails. Serious punctures take no time to fix. No need to stop. Guaranteed not to become porous. NOTE the thick tread and puncture proof sections—will resist any other make. Soft, elastic and easy riding. We will ship C.O.D. on approval with no cash deposit. If you order direct from this advertisement, sending cash, we will please express charges. Please give full name, address, city, state and zip code. Send for CATALOGUE "77" showing all makes and kind of tires, bicycle machines, motor bikes, building materials, etc., at half retail prices.

MEAD CYCLE CO., Dept. T-53, Chicago, Ill.

WE CARPET YOUR FLOOR

Bruxelle Art Rugs

Can be used on both sides, all colors and sizes, in beautiful patterns.

Sanitary, Artistic, Economical

Easily cleaned, warranted to outlast higher-priced carpets. Expressage prepaid. New and colorful catalogues, showing rugs in actual colors, from Mead's selection of art and factory.

SANITARY RUG CO., Inc.
111 Oxford St., Philadelphia, Pa.

"The Car of Quality"

The Premier will interest any one interested in automobiles. They rush the hills at 30 miles an hour where other cars take the low gear. Four cylinders (air cooled) do the work. Engine in front, simple and accessible. 16 h. p. 1400 pounds. 32 x 34-inch clincher tires. Powerful transmission. Every part built to wear and to stand the strain of American roads. The Premier, a quality car for the gentleman driver who wants power, speed, accessibility and satisfaction.

Write for illustrated, descriptive catalogue
PREMIER MOTOR MFG. CO.
906 Ft. Wayne Ave. INDIANAPOLIS, IND.

BOOK-KEEPING

Complete business course, simple and easy. Book-keeping, Business Practice, Bank and Accounts, Commercial Law, Letter Writing, Penmanship, etc.

TAUGHT BY MAIL

Graduation certificate degrees of B. A. and M. A. and are awarded to professors. Free cash or book rewards. Write for announcement.

NATIONAL CORRESPONDENCE INSTITUTE (Inc.), 35-71 Second National Bank Building, Washington, D. C.

THE GIRL OF THE VIOLIN

(Continued from page 15)

He comes more and more often—for a year he has left me but little. There is very little Lucy Reeves left. It is nearly all André Proust now."

"André Proust?" cried Webb, thunder-struck.

The girl turned her head wearily. "I forgot—you do not know. When I met my aunt in Boston, I asked her the story of the violin. In as far as she knows it, it was as he wrote that night. The name was André Proust. It had been pawned and he did die of starvation in Paris."

"Did you tell her first of the written message?"

"Neither before nor since. She does not know that I had been told the name before she gave it to me with her own lips."

"But," he cried eagerly, "think! Your aunt told it to you long ago, and you forgot it? It lay in your sub-conscious memory like some tiny seed, and sprang to life when some chance dream stirred it once more into existence?"

Lucy slowly shook her head.

"It is all true," she asserted solemnly, "true as I told it. André Proust still lives—in some way you men of science have not yet learned. He takes me, uses me, for his own purpose. If I had understood at first as I do now, I could have asserted my will against his. But I used to play mechanically—like one in a dream—half hypnotized by myself perhaps—and my will power went to sleep."

He laughed at last—shook his head.

"I know you think I am a little fool—but am I? Either the story of Christ is true or it isn't. And who is to say just what part to believe?"

"There is a lot I am going to say to you, Lucy, when you are stronger. You have lived too much alone, and your dear little head is filled with silly notions." He laughed more easily. "Such ideas bring madness, Lucy!"

"So does religion! So does love!" She looked at him plaintively.

"Fiddlesticks! Lucy, I should like to shake you!"

For two weeks Hewitt Webb had but one thought in life, and that was to save her from her own fancy. Everything that could be done was done. A circle of alienists, whose names stand for all that is eminent in success, in the field of mental pathology, were consulted by Webb, with Lucy's consent. She went with him and submitted to any and all tests and examinations suggested. These men were unanimous in their conclusions. The case was a simple one. It was traumatic hysteria from which Lucy Reeves suffered.

They persuaded Webb to take her out of herself as much as possible, to fill her life and mind with more graphic images—in other words, to crowd the error out of its possession of her ego by obtruding more vital issues. And Webb secretly hoped to accomplish this through the force of his love for her.

And Lucy Reeves listened and smiled and grew each day more ethereal in form and color, more wistful as to glance of violet eyes, more pitiful as to the droop of her childlike lower lip. For days she had not touched the violin, and each time she greeted Webb she said with a little air of hope: "I am Lucy to-day."

But one morning in March, a morning which held within it the first hint of spring, he called rather early upon her.

A famous man from Philadelphia was in town, and he had just seen and talked with him. Hope had been whipped into a new animation by the words of encouragement which had been spoken by the older man. Webb ran lightly up the stone steps and stood looking down the Avenue at the stream of vehicles. He held some violets in his hand, and, impatient at the fancied delay, rang the bell for the second time.

As he stood he heard from within the house the strain of Lucy's violin. The door opened and he entered, standing for a few minutes in the hall to listen before ascending to the drawing-room.

On the wings of a music of unearthly sweetness the story of a lamentable farewell to earth was borne.

It was the wail of a defeated dream—of starless nights—of a soul bereft of the Vision. And as Webb listened he felt that it was a death warrant. He rushed up the stairway and into the room. Lucy was standing near the window with the blue damask curtains. She had dressed to go out with him. Her furs, hat, veil, gloves, were lying huddled upon a chair by the door. She stood a fragile figure, clothed in black, face and hands as colorless as wax, her hair smoothed back from her brow into a simple knot at her neck. Bending, swaying like a blade of grass in the wind, her bow flew over the strings. It seemed to be an improvisation, and the distended pupils of her eyes were blind to earth. Sonorous notes breathed into being by a technique impossible to describe. Exquisite shadow songs of tone, plaintive with despair, yet of phantasmal beauty, came as if from an underworld of sense to voice the cry of a strong man's heart through the fingers of a dying girl.

There was a rush, a struggle, a discordant twang of strings, the snapping of vibrant bow; the crash of rending brittle wood, and then the crackling of leaping flames. Before the fireplace Webb stood, and the rage he felt as he looked at the wrecked violin was of a personal kind with which he would have regarded a rival.

During two weeks of utter prostration Lucy Reeves lay vacillating between the currents of life and death. She had not the least suffering of any kind, and lingered as if in a placid dream. It seemed as if her gentle soul reveled in a freedom which the rest failed to understand—a sort of ecstasy of peace.

No. 815

A Negligee Shirt Bargain

65c

Men's White Negligee Shirts, with pleated bosoms, neatly hemstitched. These shirts are guaranteed to fit. They are cut in the most improved patterns, have split cushion neck bands. Fastened with three pearl buttons. They are as good as any $1.00 shirt on the market. State the size of neck band when ordering. Order as many of these shirts as you want, they will be sent you with the full understanding and agreement that, if they are not the greatest shirt bargain you have ever seen, you can return them to us at our expense, and your money will be refunded. This is an opportunity to supply yourself with the most popular shirt to be worn this season at a price never before quoted on goods of equal value.

SIEGEL COOPER & CO.
NEW YORK CITY, N.Y.

BULLFROG BRAND

LAWN HOSE

Two Can Make a Perfect Hose of 50 feet or more in one of Lawn Hose by having the garden "BULLFROG" brand hose. The "BULLFROG" brand hose is made of the best material and is guaranteed to last as long as a good hose. It is made of all new hose material in the best of quality. The "BULLFROG" brand hose is made of all new hose material in the best of quality. The "BULLFROG" brand hose is made of all new hose material in the best of quality.

TELEPHONE RUBBER CO.
TOLEDO, OHIO.
Est. 1895. Rebuilding Any Kind of Tires.

PHOTO BROOCHES 10c.

Send us any photograph you want copied and we will return a 10c. photo of you in a photo brooch. The photo is made of the best material and is guaranteed to last as long as a good photo. It is made of all new photo material in the best of quality. The "BULLFROG" brand photo is made of all new photo material in the best of quality.

CORONA PHOTO CO., Box 1275, Boston, Mass.

STUDY LAW

Leading Law School in Correspondence Instruction

Established in 1892

Prepares for bar in any State. Careful theory and practice. Text books and are sent in used in leading law schools. Teacher live at your home. Three Courses—Regular College Course, Post Graduate, and Business Law Course. Approved by the bench and bar. Full particulars from CHICAGO CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL OF LAW, Reeper Block, Chicago.

LEARN TO WRITE

ADVERTISEMENTS

Page-Davis Co., Suite 19, 90 Wabash Ave., Chicago

$3 a Day.

Send us your address and we will show you how to earn $3 a day absolutely sure; we furnish the work and teach you free, you work in the locality where you live. Send us your address and we will explain the business fully; remember we guarantee that you can earn $3 for every day's work. Write at once.

ROYAL MANUFACTURING CO., Box 1104, Detroit, Mich.

BOND & LILLARD

WHISKEY

IS THE BEST

The Chicago

The Typewriter that sells at its real value

The Chicago sells for $35.00

and is guaranteed the equal of any typewriter at any price, and superior in many points. It is not made for less money than other machines but sold for less. Convincing facts for those who think, on request.

CHICAGO WRITING MACHINE CO.
95 Wendell Street Chicago, Ill.

DIAMONDS ON CREDIT

Value for Value
Quality for quality and weight for weight, our prices are lower than those of any other responsible dealer. Ask us to send you a 1/2 K. or 3/4 K. diamond C.O.D. and payment, subject to examination. Balance may be paid in 10 monthly payments. Our new catalog No. 541 sent free everywhere.
Herbert L. Joseph & Co.
Diamonds—Watchmen—Jewelry
145-51 State Street, Chicago

What Will Become

of your children and family after you are gone? And have you provided against your old age? Our free booklet "The How and the Why" tells how we make you and your children safe. We insure by mail.

PENN MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE CO.
621 Chestnut St., Philadelphia

Too Fat

Don't ruin your stomach with a lot of useless drugs. Our method is perfectly safe, natural and scientific. It strengthens the heart, allows you to breathe easily and takes off Double Chin, Big Stomach, Fat Hips, etc. Send your address and 4 cents to the Hall Chemical Co., 324 Hall Building, St. Louis, Mo., for Free Trial Treatment. No starving. No sickness. It reduces weight from 5 to 15 lbs. a month, and is perfectly harmless.

RHEUMATISM

Relieved
Through the Feet

New external remedy so successful that the makers send it FREE ON APPROVAL to anybody TRY IT

If 100,000 men and women, suffering with every kind of rheumatism, acute or chronic, have been relieved by a harmless draft on the foot, isn't it worth a trial? Send your name to the Magic Foot Draft Co. They have so much confidence in the merit of the drafts that they send them to every sufferer in the world they can hear of—without a cent in advance. You pay One Dollar when satisfied with the benefit you receive—otherwise you pay nothing—you decide.

The Drafts are worn on the soles of the feet because the entire circulatory and nervous systems are most easily reached through the extremely sensitive skin at this point; but they relieve rheumatism in every part of the body, to stay so, by drawing the acid poisons out of the blood through the foot pores. Write today to the Magic Foot Draft Co., RR7 Oliver Bldg., Jackson, Mich., for a pair of Drafts free on approval and valuable free booklet on rheumatism.

Lower and lower into those depths of that dream of hers she appeared to drift. The mystery of her life seemed resolving itself again into first principles. It was as if unrest, tears, and pain were evading the ultimate analysis of science and becoming a mere echo to which her soul listened at last undismayed.

"It was all true," she said to Webb one day. "There's more to it, but I can't tell you—there are no words—and I'm Lucy—and so glad. Don't worry!"

And, curiously enough, she spoke in the old voice of melody. The harshness of tone—the husky whisper—were no longer there.

And always there was upon her face that divine smile, her wide eyes shining like stars out of that placid face of hers, which was as white as the drift of linen amid which she lay. Webb will always remember that scene. The bed, the snow of its coverings, the waxen face and hands, the dark bronze of the tossed hair on the pillow, and the smile of those eyes and lips.

And the soul of her! It seemed about to exhale from her frail body as the perfume rises from a dying rose. Science could catch and hold neither. But in the realm of ideas both are immortal, and during those long days things which had seemed but fancies to Hewitt Webb came to be accepted by him as facts. It was as if he were brought so close to her, by the purity of his love, that a little of the light which shone for her was seen by him also, a new sense of things unseen overawed him, a hint came as to the existence, evasive, mysterious, of a something back of mere matter, as well as a quite new humility, and along with these things there was a dominant insistence upon the part of his own will that Lucy Reeves should live, and live for him. Constantly, hour by hour, he demanded for her a new vitality, asking it with a new understanding of the hitherto unknown. And little by little he won.

One day he leaned above her pillow and whispered her name: "Lucy!"

Slowly the waxen lids lifted, and the shining eyes met his. Slowly a question grew within them, and then a joy.

"It was true?"
Webb waited. Then he bowed his head and kissed her pale lips tenderly. "There was a something true about it," he said.

$5,000 for a Short Story

WITH a view to secure not only the finest work of already famous story-tellers, but to encourage and develop younger writers in the field of fiction, COLLIER'S WEEKLY offers the following prizes for original short stories by American writers:

- A First Prize of $5,000
- A Second Prize of $2,000
- A Third Prize of $1,000

There are absolutely no restrictions as to the kind or treatment of stories. Every manuscript will be judged upon its merits.
I. The author must be an American by nationality or residence. As the object of the Contest is especially to bring out American fiction, we have made this condition, using the word American in its broadest sense and to include anybody residing on this continent as well as American citizens residing abroad.

II. There is no limit to the number of stories any writer may submit. That is, it is quite possible for one author to submit a dozen stories, win all three prizes, and have the remaining nine stories accepted for publication in the Weekly at five cents a word.

III. Stories may be of any length whatever, from the very shortest up to 10,000 words. The preferable length for use in the Weekly is from 5,000 to 7,000 words, but this will have no bearing on the award of prizes.

IV. All manuscript must be typewritten, laid flat, or folded in its envelope—in other words it must not be rolled. It must not be signed, but accompanied by a plain sealed envelope inscribed with the title of the story and containing a card or slip of paper with the writer's full name and address written on it. Under no circumstances must there be any word or indication on this envelope or on the manuscript itself or any matter sent with the manuscript that would divulge its authorship. No one will know who are the authors of the prize-winning stories until the judges have selected the three best manuscripts. The envelopes with the corresponding titles will then be opened, but not until then.

V. As one of the objects of this competition is to secure as many good short stories as possible, the Editor reserves the right to purchase any of the manuscripts which have failed to win a prize, but which he considers suitable for publication in the Weekly. All such stories will be paid for at the rate of five cents a word, except in the cases of authors whose recognized rate is higher than this amount, in which instance the author's regular rate will be paid.

VI. The copyright of the three stories winning prizes is to vest absolutely in COLLIER'S WEEKLY. All other stories which fail to win a prize, but are acceptable for publication in the Weekly, will be paid for at the rate of five cents a word for the serial rights only.

VII. All MSS. must be mailed on or before June 1, 1904.

The following gentlemen have consented to act as judges: HENRY CABOT LODGE, United States Senator from Massachusetts; WILLIAM ALLEN WHITE, Author and Journalist; WALTER PAGE, Editor "World's Work."

All MSS. should be addressed,
SHORT STORY CONTEST, COLLIER'S
416 West 13th Street, New York City

Postage for their return should be inclosed in the envelope containing the author's name.

The Asiatic Crisis

One of the greatest struggles in history opens with the Russo-Japanese war. Its outcome may change the entire map of Asia, and perhaps, Europe. What likelihood is there of other nations becoming involved?

Will the "Concert of Europe" despoil the victor as at the close of the Chino-Japanese war?

Will the "Yankees of the East" establish a "Monroe Doctrine" for Asia?

A Few Slightly Rubbed Sets

Ridpath's History of the World

At Half Price

BUT YOU MUST WRITE TO-DAY

"The only World's History that reads like a story-book, yet is recognized as a standard authority"

A necessity at all times, and doubly so now

Sent on Seven Days' Approval

Great newspapers and periodicals will spend hundreds of thousands of dollars to give you the latest news of battles and movements of the armies and navies. To appreciate what the great struggle means you should go further back than the newspapers and magazines will take you. Read the records of the nations. You can't understand the news of the war unless you're reasonably familiar with the history and development of these countries. Nowhere can you find everything you want to know so succinctly and interestingly told as in Ridpath's History of the World.

A Saving of Fifty Per Cent.

In clearing up our stock we find a few slightly "rubbed" and mismatched sets—no torn or soiled pages. The difference would scarcely be noticeable to anyone outside the book trade. Rather than rebind such a small lot we will dispose of them at what they would be worth to us with the covers torn off, and on small monthly payments.

If you'd like to possess the only world's history that reads like a story-book—yet is recognized by such men as William McKinley, Benjamin Harrison, Grover Cleveland, Dr. Cuyler, Bishop Vincent, and thousands more, as a standard authority and the greatest historical reference work in existence,

Send for the free specimen book TO-DAY

That specimen book will tell you all about the history—HOW it came to be written, HOW it will interest and entertain you, WHY you need it, and HOW you can secure one of the slightly mismatched sets at much less than the subscription price.

MERRILL & BAKER

Publishers 11 East 16th St., New York

Inquiry Coupon

If you mention Collier's you needn't cut out coupon.

U. S. ARMY TENTS at $1.45

New is the time to buy your next Summer's

CAMPING OUTFIT

No. 999, Regulation U. S. Army Shelter Tents. These Tents are made in two parts, of light canvas, good quality, and will accommodate two persons. Are quickly put together. Size, 5 feet long, 4 feet high, 3 feet 6 inches wide, and cost U. S. Gov't $4 each. Have been slightly used by Government, but are in excellent serviceable condition. Price $1.45. Make seamless Lawn or Shore Shade and Playhouses for children. By using two of these Tents "over 1000 combination," which will cost $7.90, you make a tent 10 feet long, 4 feet high and 3 1/2 feet wide. Tents will be expressed charges collect upon receipt of full amount. If you are interested in Sporting Goods send 4 cents in stamps for our new 96-page Catalogue No. 3010 of Firearms, Fishing Tackle and Outing Goods, and 48-page Booklet of War Relics.

We will send FREE, on SPECIAL BASIS, BALL circular, offering many good incentives. Every boy should have it.
CHAS. J. GODFREY, 4 Warren St., New York

Do You Want to Know about the most delightful places in this country to spend the summer?

A region easy to get to, beautiful scenery, pure, bracing, cool air, plenty of attractive resorts, good hotels, good fishing, golf, something to do all the time—economical living, health, rest and comfort.

Write today (enclosing 5c stamp to pay postage) and mention this periodical and we will send you our 1904 edition of "MICHIGAN IN SUMMER" containing 64 pages, 100 pictures, maps, hotel rates, etc., and interesting information about this famous resort region reached by the

Grand Rapids & Indiana Railway

"The Fishing Line"

PETOSKEY, MICHIGAN
BARBON POINT
VENETIAN LAKES
MILLON LAKES
CHICKEN LAKE
MACKINAC ISLAND
TRAVERSE CITY
NORTPORT

A free train service, fast line, excellent dining cars, etc., from St. Louis, Louisville, Indianapolis, Cincinnati, Chicago.
C. L. LOCKWOOD, Gen'l Passenger Agent,
GRAND RAPIDS & INDIANA R.R., GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN

MOST PERFECT BLOCK SIGNALS ON THE NEW YORK CENTRAL

SUNDAY-SCHOOL STORIES

Tales of How John D. Rockefeller
Accumulated Some of His Money

I.—Mr. Rockefeller Buys a Horse

IN the city of Cleveland, Ohio, where John D. Rockefeller began his business career, the sign and symbol of the Standard Oil Company is the blue painted barrel, in which the company packs all its products, irreverently dubbed by the natives "The Holy Blue Barrel." Reminiscent inhabitants are apt to refer to events as happening before or after "the days of the Holy Blue Barrel." If you chance to come across an inhabitant whose memory extends to the days "before" you may get some interesting sidelights on the character of the man who started the greatest business enterprise of modern times. This is a yarn spun by an old-time Cleveland, who years ago plied some sort of trade in the vicinity of the old railway station before either Cleveland or Mr. Rockefeller had attained their present importance.

"Well, I reckon you know, don't you, that Rockefeller wasn't always in the oil business. In the days when I used to know him he was in the produce business, and used to drive his wagon down to the railway station himself. Puny-looking sort of a chap he was, and so I'd often lend him a hand a-loading up when I happened to be round. One day, while he was loading up his stuff, I drove up to the tracks with the niftiest little mare you ever laid eyes on. I'd just been out on the prairies on some business, and when I ran across that little mare she hit my fancy so hard that I parted with my gold watch to get her. You know those times a gold watch was a gold watch. When J. D. saw the mare spin into the station she caught his fancy too.

"Jim," says he, "that's a nice little mare you got there. What'll you take for her?"

"You just bet she's a nice mare," says I, "and I don't want to take anything for her."

"Oh, come, now, I'll give you fifty dollars; that's a good offer."

"Now, I didn't really want to sell the horse, but you know how a horse trade sort of gets into your blood, so I says, 'I don't want to sell the little mare, Mr. Rockefeller, but if you want her bad enough to pay seventy-five dollars for her, you can have her.' J. D. haggled some and then drove off. A few days afterward he pulled up at my house. He said he had come to buy the mare, and he pulled out a little cloth bag which was full of gold pieces, all small denominations. He sat down at the table and counted them out one by one, and as he laid each one down he'd stroke it like you've seen a woman stroke a pet cat. 'All good gold, Jim,' says he in an earnest, pious sort of way. 'All good gold, fifty-five dollars, and it's all yours for the little brown mare.' I put in a little more time trying to convince him that it was seventy-five or nothing, and he went off. Well, sir, he kept that game up for weeks. Next time he came he gave the performance all over again, except that this time he made it sixty dollars, counted it all out the same way, and says again, 'Sixty dollars, Jim, all good gold.'

"Now, see here, Mr. Rockefeller," says I, "I ain't got any kick coming about the quality of that gold, it's the quantity. There isn't enough of it to get that mare." You see J. D. was a long way off of owning the earth in those days, but he had a snug few hundred thousand laid by as a reward of industry, and could well afford to pay for his fancy. Well, sir, when he got up to sixty-five dollars, he began to feel he was getting reckless and must take precautions. So he came over and asked me to lend him the mare for a week.

"I let him have her, and at the end of the week he came back with the horse and the most remarkable document I ever read. I wish I'd kept that paper; I tell you it was a ripper. It whereased and wherebeyed every possible mischance that could befall a horse, hide or hoof. Why, according to that guarantee, that horse couldn't undergo a change in his chemical composition within a certain term of years without leaving me liable for it, and bound to restore the purchase money in full. I said I'd sign the paper all right, but seventy-five was my price. Finally one afternoon J. D. turned up with the little bag and gave the same old performance to the tune of seventy dollars. He was getting pretty close to the mark now, and I was plum worn out. J. D. talked and argued like he was pleading for a human life, but I stood firm. One more turn, thinks I, and I'll have him landed. Finally he reached down into his jeans and pulled up two dollars and fifty cents. The arguments had been getting longer and more earnest each time the bid was raised, and I felt I could afford to throw up the two fifty and make it a last call. So that's the way John D. Rockefeller came by two dollars and fifty cents of the greatest fortune on earth. And you can just bet your life, if he has toiled as long and as strenuously for the rest of it, he's worked harder for a living than I ever have."

II.—Mr. Rockefeller Loses a Golf Ball

IT IS no exaggeration to say that there is not a hod-carrier in this country, starting out in the early morning with his dinner-pail on his arm, who toils more assiduously or has longer hours than John D. Rockefeller, the man of millions. There is no eight-hour law for him; he has little pleasure outside of his business, and those who know him best say he devotes less time to recreation, though he has the world before him where to choose, than many a man who simply toils to fill his dinner-pail—and that he spends his small change with quite as much or more caution. Aside from the game of adding to and multiplying his enormous wealth, Mr. Rockefeller's one genuine pleasure is in his land. He owns a big place in the outskirts of Cleve-

Fisherman's Outfit

No. 9.
The Splendid High Grade Outfit consists of a bamboo three piece, split bamboo reel mounted rod, made of selected stock, six strips carefully glued and smoothly finished, very slowly with wrapped, solid metal reel seat. All mountings are built heavy nickel plated. Cork handle. Rod is 8 1/2 feet long, comes in a standard and varnished hollow wooden form and cloth bag. One fine quality Anchor Brand Multiplying Reel, full metal plated, nickel plated, back sliding click and drag, balance handle, built 60 yards of line, perfect balling. One soft Backing Ring, built 10 yards of extra quality line. Rod is 8 1/2 feet long, comes in a standard and varnished hollow wooden form and cloth bag. One fine quality Anchor Brand Multiplying Reel, full metal plated, nickel plated, back sliding click and drag, balance handle, built 60 yards of line, perfect balling. One soft Backing Ring, built 10 yards of extra quality line. Rod is 8 1/2 feet long, comes in a standard and varnished hollow wooden form and cloth bag. One fine quality Anchor Brand Multiplying Reel, full metal plated, nickel plated, back sliding click and drag, balance handle, built 60 yards of line, perfect balling. One soft Backing Ring, built 10 yards of extra quality line.

Our Special Price $2

SIEGEL & COOPER
NEW YORK CITY, N.Y.

STENOGRAPHERS WANTED

We are giving valuable premiums to stenographers who use Pilot Carbon and Ribbons. We deal direct from our factory with stenographers giving the agent's commission in premiums.

PILOT Carbon (non-smoke) and Ribbons

are absolutely the best—they last longer and do cleaner work than any other kind. Send to-day for booklet A, premium list and free samples.

PILOT CARBON AND RIBBON CO., Inc.
349 Powers Block, Rochester, N. Y.

RADIUM Amateur Photographers!! Mineral Collectors!!

See for yourself the wonders of radium. Take your own radiographs. For $1.00 I will send a piece of uranium ore (Pitchblende) containing radium and guarantee to make radiographs. Full printed directions. Valuable also to mineral collectors.

S. B. WELD, 1755 Arapahoe St., Denver, Colo.

The Apple AUTOMATIC

For Gas Engines, Launches, Automobiles, etc.

No more belt, battery and commutator troubles. Dirt and water proof. Easily attached, increases power and speed. Send for full particulars on our special apparatus.

The Dayton Electrical Manufacturing Co.
121 Belmont Bldg., Dayton, Ohio

BAD DREAMS

Indicate Improper Diet, Usually due to Coffee

One of the common symptoms of coffee poisoning is in the bad dreams that spoil what should be restful sleep. A man who found the reason says:

"Formerly I was a slave to coffee, I was like a morphia fiend, could not sleep at night, would roll and toss in my bed and when I did get to sleep was disturbed by dreams and hobgoblins, would wake up with headaches and feel bad all day, so nervous I could not attend to business. My writing looked like bird tracks, I had sour belchings from the stomach, indigestion, heartburn and palpitation of the heart, constipation, irregularity of the kidneys, etc.

"Indeed, I began to feel I had all the troubles that human flesh could suffer but when a friend advised me to leave off coffee I felt as if he had insulted me. I could not bear the idea, it had such a hold on me and I refused to believe it the cause.

"But it turned out that no advice was ever given at a more needed time for I finally consented to try Postum and with the going of coffee and the coming of Postum all my troubles have gone and health has returned. I eat and sleep well now, nerves steadied down and I write a fair hand (as you can see), can attend to business again and rejoice that I am free from the monster Coffee." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Ten days trial of Postum in place of coffee will bring sound, restful, refreshing sleep. There's a reason. Look in each pkg. for the famous little book, "The Road to Wellville."

Shaw Stocking
FOR MEN

ASK YOUR DEALER for the famous Shaw Stocking half hose; if he cannot supply you, WE WILL.

In which case please order direct from us. We are to-day manufacturing over a hundred different styles in Cottons, Lises, Worsted, Merinos, and Linens, and constantly adding new styles.

Our new Art Catalogue, showing actual colors, now ready, and is free to you for the asking.

Our New Dotted Stripe is of extra quality Egyptian Cotton, for Spring or Summer wear.

K-2 Black ground with dotted stripes of light blue and gold.
K-3 Black ground with dotted stripes of cardinal and gold.
K-4 Navy blue ground with dotted stripes of French blue and white.
K-5 Navy blue ground with dotted stripes of cardinal and white.

PRICES of either style, 22c. per pair; 6 pairs, neatly boxed, $1.32. Sizes, 10 to 12 1/2, inclusive, sent express or postpaid, upon receipt of price, to any address in U. S.

SHAW STOCKING CO.
142 Smith Street, LOWELL, MASS.

WE SHIP ON APPROVAL

without a cent deposit and allow 10 DAYS FREE TRIAL on every bicycle. Any wheel not satisfactory returned at our expense.

Highest grade 1904 Models $8.75 to $17
Coaster Brakes, Heliograph, puncture proof tires and best equipment. 1905 and 1906 Models, best value $7 to $12

ECO Second-hand Wheels
All makes and Models good as new. Great Factory Clearing Sale at half factory cost.

EARN A BICYCLE taking orders from people who are forbidden by us. Our agents make large profits. Write at once for catalogue and our Special Offer.

AUTOMOBILES, TIRES, Sewing Machines, Bicycles, etc., half retail prices.

Mead Cycle Co., Dept. 53-F, Chicago

WE CAN SAVE YOU 25 TO 75 %
on Typewriters of all makes

Send for samples of writing, prices, and catalogue. Machines shipped for inspection.

NEW YORK
114 Barclay St.

CHICAGO
104 La Salle St.

BOSTON
28 Devonfield St.

KANSAS CITY
617 Wyandotte St.

ST. LOUIS
909 North 9th St.

SAN FRANCISCO
520 California St.

THE TYPEWRITER EXCHANGE

THE BOOKLOVERS

The Largest Circulating Library in the World

BOTH for $5.00

One Year's Membership in The Booklovers Library giving you all the good new books published immediately upon publication—exchanging as often as you wish—wherever you wish - - - $5.00

One Year's Subscription to The Booklovers Magazine—one of the best illustrated monthly magazines published in the world - - - $3.00

Send $5.00 and begin at once. Club service can be arranged in small cities
Address: THE BOOKLOVERS LIBRARY, Dept. N., Philadelphia, Pa.

DEAF? Well Listen!

The deaf are immediately able to hear ordinary conversation by the Magnetic Otophone Sound Waves, which penetrate the deafest ear. A wonderful scientific invention, which restores hearing and banishes deafness. Guaranteed Invisible, Effective, Comfortable, and Harmless. Not an ear drum or trumpet. Compare it with other devices, and be guided by your intelligence. Deafness is no longer a hopeless condition. Book FREE.

OTOPHONE CO.
1602 Arch St., Dept. C, Philadelphia, Pa.

BIG BRASS BAND OFFER

We sell the celebrated IMPERIAL DUPONT and MARCEAU Band Instruments at about one-half the prices others ask for the same high grade goods.

For our Free Band Instrument Catalogue, also our Free Booklet, entitled, "How to Buy Band Instruments," for large illustrations and complete descriptions of our three large lines of brass instruments, also everything in Drums, Clarinets, Flutes, Saxophones, etc., etc., for the free catalogue, our guarantee and refund proposition, for the most liberal band instrument offer ever heard of, for the new method of selling instruments fully explained, for something new and interesting interesting in every handbook, cut this out and mail to us today.

SEARS, ROEBUCK & CO., CHICAGO, ILLINOIS

Be an Actor or Actress

Learn this noble profession AT HOME through the SCOTT MAIL COURSE, also Elocution, Oratory, Voice Culture and the Memory to retain volumes. "The Science of Acting," with handsome portraits of leading actors and actresses FREE to all sending their name and address to the

SCOTT SCHOOL OF DRAMATIC ART
Dept. A, St. Louis, Mo.

RADIUM

Special Illustrated edition on the discovery, manufacture, properties and possibilities of this marvelous mineral. Most complete magazine compilation ever published. Postpaid 10c. Mention this paper.

Western Miner & Financier, Denver, Colo.

ASTHMA Cured in six CURED. Health restored. BOOK & TALK. P. HAROLD HAYES, Buffalo, N. Y.

CAUTION

The following Manufacturers and Importers are licensed under the pioneer patent Number 549,160, granted to George B. Selden, dated November 5th, 1895, on

Gasolene Automobiles.

In view of their license agreement they and their agents will not sell, keep on hand or in any manner dispose of or deal in directly or indirectly any unlicensed new or second-hand gasolene vehicles, infringing said Selden patent.

MANUFACTURERS:

Electric Vehicle Co.
Winton Motor Carriage Co.
Packard Motor Car Co.
Olds Motor Works
Knox Automobile Co.
The Haynes-Apperson Co.
The Autocar Co.
The George M. Pierce Co.
Apperson Bros. Automobile Co.
Locomobile Co. of America

The Peerless Motor Car Co.
Standard Motor Construction Co.
Waltham Manufacturing Co.
J. Stevens Arms & Tool Co.
H. B. Franklin Mfg. Co.
Pope Motor Car Co.
Smith & Mabley, Inc.
The Commercial Motor Co.
Berg Automobile Co.
Cadillac Automobile Co.

Northern Manufacturing Co.
Pope-Robinson Co.
The Kirk Manufacturing Co.
Elmore Manufacturing Co.
E. R. Thomas Motor Co.
Buffalo Gasolene Motor Co.
The F. B. Stearns Co.
Pope Manufacturing Co.
Sandusky Automobile Co.
Crest Manufacturing Co.

IMPORTERS:

Smith & Mabley, Inc.
Central Automobile Co.
Alexander Fischer

Hollander & Tangeman
Standard Automobile Co.
E. B. Gallaher

Auto Import Co.
F. A. LaRoche Co.
Sidney B. Bowman Automobile Co.

Both the basic Selden patent and more than 400 other patents owned by members of this Association will be enforced against infringers. Manufacturers, Importers, Dealers and Agents, also Users of unlicensed machines are liable.

ASSOCIATION OF LICENSED AUTOMOBILE MANUFACTURERS
No. 7 EAST 42d STREET, NEW YORK

NOTES OF PROGRESS IN SCIENCE AND INVENTION

The redwood of California, having high resisting power, will be used in construction work

It is found that for certain construction work, wood, such as that of the California redwoods, has a much higher resisting power than steel. It is proposed now to line one of the huge hydraulic tunnels of a Niagara power plant with timbers from the big trees. When steel is used as a lining, the particles of sand and other erosive substances carried by the rushing water soon eat into it, and it is finally worn through. On the contrary, if the redwood is used, a slimy, soapy covering forms on the inside and protects the tube itself from wear, thus ensuring a long life.

If the report be true, that all the hydraulic electric stations of California intend to use the redwood timber for their tunnels, it is indeed time that every active step be taken for the preservation of those most wonderful forests which are the admiration of the world, for with such a demand for their timber they can not last long.

An invention is being perfected to stop steamships quickly, thus preventing collisions

THE Canadian Government has been investigating a method of stopping vessels, which is the invention of M. Louis Lacoste. In the ordinary ship, stopping is rather a slow process; the engine must be stopped and reversed, and meanwhile the ship is forging ahead, perhaps into another vessel. The invention of M. Lacoste consists in placing along the sides of the ship a large number of vanes, which, while the ship is in motion, lie flat along the sides. When it is desired to stop, these large vanes can be released, and they will stand out from the sides of the vessel, causing an enormous drag.

In some experiments, conducted in the St. Lawrence River, the boat on which the experiments were made was stopped in its own length, from a speed of eleven knots. It seems evident that, if this system is practicable, it should be an immense safeguard in case of imminent collision, for in nearly every such case the danger is sighted several ship-lengths ahead, but too late to stop with the present appliances.

Buildings, in order to be thoroughly fireproof, should be protected against outside fires

ALTHOUGH it is rather difficult to see any good to be derived from the Baltimore fire, one thing is certain: we know a great deal more about fireproof buildings than we did before. Careful examinations have been made of the amount of resistance furnished by the so-called fireproof buildings, which were in the path of the fire, and, without doubt, many valuable lessons have been learned. The most striking fact is the apparent lack of protection which the buildings possessed against fires originating outside themselves. They were apparently constructed with an eye to fires starting inside, and would have been found sufficiently protected in this respect. In order to secure buildings which are free from danger from outside fires, either the windows should be provided with iron shutters or else the windows themselves should be of wire glass. The latter method of protection, being slightly and always ready, will be preferred by most builders. If the internal steel construction be sufficiently heavy, well protected with terra cotta, and the outside be of plain brick, one of these large fireproof buildings may be relied upon to withstand any ordinary fire, and would most probably resist even such a fire as the disastrous one in Baltimore.

The Germans are experimenting with acetylene gas as an agent to raise submarine boats

A METHOD of raising submarine torpedo boats by acetylene is being experimented upon by the German naval authorities. Large tanks are built in the boat, with a sea connection; when these are filled with water the boat will sink, and to raise her again, these must be emptied, which process, done in the ordinary way, requires powerful pumps and complicated mechanism. It is evident that multiplication of machinery is particularly objectionable in a submarine craft, and the German method avoids all necessity for pumps. When it is desired to raise the boat, a charge of calcium carbide of the right size is placed in an acetylene generator, which is connected to the water tanks, an immense volume of gas is formed, and on opening a cock this rushes into the water tank, forcing out the water through the sea connection, and the boat rises.

By a slight change, this method could be used for the raising of sunken vessels. Tanks filled with water could be sunk in the ship's hold, and when the number was sufficient to float her when empty the water could be driven out by acetylene, and the ship would rise. A charge of carbide might be introduced into each tank and form the gas there, or a separate generator connected to the tanks might be used.

Style
Durability
Satisfaction

all three guaranteed by the name

Babcock

The name that stands for highest merit in vehicle making. We illustrate above one of our popular vehicles the

Park Phaeton

We make over 100 other vehicles. Send for large catalog showing complete line of vehicles for all purposes FREE.

H. H. BABCOCK COMPANY
Department W, Watertown, N. Y.
Branch at Baltimore, Md.

A Revelation

In size, magnificence and beauty, the St. Louis World's Fair will surpass any previous Exposition. To see it as it will be, get the Katy Album. Views of all principal buildings reproduced in colors in the photographer's highest art. The leaves, 6x10, are loosely bound and may be framed. Send 25c to "KATY," Box N 912, St. Louis, Mo.

THE KATY FLYER, the crack train of the St. L. & T. Ry.—between St. Louis, Chicago, Texas and Old Mexico.

KATY FLYER TO OKLAHOMA

1877 FOR 27 YEARS 1904
WE HAVE SUCCESSFULLY TREATED

Cancer

WITHOUT THE USE OF THE KNIFE
The Berkshire Hills Sanatorium is the only institution in the world where cancer and tumors (that are accessible) are permanently cured. Describe your case and we will give an opinion and complete information.
DRS. W. E. BROWN & SON, NORTH ADAMS, MASS.

Agents Earn
$75 to $250
a Month

Selling "NOVELTY KNIVES"

Your name, address, photo underneath handles; also embossed logos, societies, etc. Finely tempered razor steel blades. Big Profit. Good commission paid. Send 3c stamp for great special offer to agents.
NOVELTY CUTLERY CO., 40, Bar St., CANTON, O.

Le PAGE'S PHOTO PASTE

IN JARS AND TUBES
Dries quickly—never discolors the print. Very strong—corners will not curl up. Invaluable for photo or general use. Largest bottle now on the market for 5 cents. In bulk for large users, carton work, etc.

Russia Cement Co. Gloucester, Mass. Write for LE PAGE'S GLUE in the World

Song Writers and Composers

Publishers do not accept manuscripts unless properly arranged and harmonized. I arranged such hits as "Peaceful Henry" and "Southern Smiles," the two most popular pieces on the market today, and many others that are great successes. Send me your Song, Waltz, or Two Song and I will arrange it so it will be in acceptable form to submit to any publisher.
Chas. L. Johnson, 206 Grand Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

CUT DOWN GAS BILLS

from one-quarter to one-half usual cost by using this Little Joker Gas Governor Makes pressure uniform. Absolutely prevents back flow and re-ignition by motor. B. L. writes: "My meter used to register 200 feet. Now it only shows 100 feet. Anyone can attach. We send full instructions and guarantee. Quickly pays for itself. Price 50c postpaid. Money back if not satisfied.
Agents find it a good seller.

ELKHART NOVELTY CO., Box A, Elkhart, Ind.

BOOK-KEEPING

Stenography, etc., taught by mail. Positions for all graduates of complete commercial course. Outfit for Home Study, $2. Catalog free. C. C. GAIHER, Box 961, Poughkeepsie, N. Y., or 116 West 19th St., New York, N. Y.

COMBINED TOOTH BRUSH AND CASE

Handsome perforated case; bristles cannot be crushed and are tooth and sweet; has holder and shikil line. Size, one-fraction; price 5c. Kansas Mercantile Co., 11th St., San Francisco

Illinois Central R.R.

DAILY FAST TRAINS

Elegantly equipped and with Dining, Buffet, Library, Sleeping and Reclining Chair Cars, from its northern and southern terminals, connecting at its numerous gateways with trains from the EAST, SOUTH AND NORTH

Particulars of agents of the Illinois Central and connecting lines.

A. H. HANSON, Gen'l Pass'r Agent, CHICAGO

For Thin Skinned Men

who have tough, wiry beards, there is no comfort like a Curley Razor. The only scientific razor ever invented for safely shaving the face without pull or irritation.

The Curley Ideal Safety Razor

Takes off stubble as easily as down. Smooths the skin instead of roughing it and is absolutely safe. Shaves same as ordinary razor.

Price complete, $2.00. Sent by express, prepaid. Extra blades (interchangeable) 75c.

Unconditionally Guaranteed

Sold on 30 days' trial. If not entirely satisfactory, return the razor. We refund the price. Sold by responsible dealers.

Free Booklet No. 5, containing instructions on shaving.

J. Curley & Brother
6 Warren St., N. Y.

M & M PORTABLE HOUSES

Made by automatic machinery when the wood grows. Better built and better looking than you can have constructed at home and at much less cost. Wind and water tight. Accidents in design. Constructed on the Fast System. (Patent in process.) Houses shipped complete in every detail. Can be erected and ready for occupancy from 4 to 24 hours after arrival at destination, according to size of house.

No nails No carpenters
No strikes No worry

Everything fits. Anyone can erect them.

WE PAY THE FREIGHT

Write today for catalogue. Tell us what you want and we will give you a delivered price on it at once.

Summer Cottages, Automobile Houses, Children's Play Houses, Hunters' Cabins, Photograph Galleries, Etc. 638 Broadway Saginaw, Mich.

TO FAT PEOPLE

I know you want to reduce your weight, but probably you think it impossible or are afraid the remedy is worse than the disease. Now, let me tell you that not only can the obesity be reduced in a short time, but your face, form and complexion will be improved, and in health you will be wonderfully benefited. I am a regular practicing physician, having made a specialty of this subject. Here is what I will do for you: First, I send you a blank to fill out; when it comes, I forward a five weeks' treatment. You make no radical change in your food, but eat as much or as often as you please. No bandages or tight lacing. No harmful drugs nor sickening pills. The treatment can be taken privately. You will lose from 3 to 5 pounds weekly, according to age and condition of body. At the end of five weeks you are to report to me and I will send further treatment if necessary. When you have reduced your flesh to the desired weight, you can retain it. You will not become stout again. Your face and figure will be well shaped, your skin will be clear and handsome, you will feel years younger. Allment of the heart and other vital organs will be cured. Double chin, heavy abdomen, flabby cheeks and other disagreeable evidences of obesity are remedied speedily. All patients receive my personal attention, whether being treated by mail or in person; all correspondence is strictly confidential. Treatment for either sex. Plans sealed envelopes and packages sent. Distance makes no difference. Satisfaction guaranteed. Send for my new book on obesity; its cause and cure—it will convince you. Address

HENRY C. BRADFORD, M. D., 24 & 28 East 23d Street, NEW YORK

BATES ELECTRIC & WATER MOTOR FANS
ELECTRIC FOR CEILING & DESK.
DIRECT CURRENT, WATER FANS
FOR DESK & WALL.
HOSE ATTACHMENT. AGENTS WANTED.
Sold Direct at wholesale where we have no agents.
THE BATES FAN CO., DAYTON, O.
PRICES FROM $3.00 UP

WHY NOT LEARN SIGN PAINTING?
Show-card Writing or Lettering. Separate courses. Only field not over-worked. Thorough and comprehensive instruction by mail at your own home by a teacher with a national reputation. Easy to learn. Write today for large illustrated catalogue of past students.
THE DETROIT SCHOOL OF LETTERING
Dept. E, Detroit, Mich.
"Oldest and largest school of its kind."

Oldsmobile in the Hall of Fame

Delivery Wagon
$850

Touring Runabout
$750

Standard Runabout
$650

Light Tonneau Car
$950

Five years of unparalleled service have enshrined the Oldsmobile forever in the Hall of Fame; proclaimed it in every land — the best thing on wheels.

The superior merits of our line of cars are acknowledged by automobile experts. They are the standard by which others are tested. If you are interested and wish full particulars call on our nearest sales agent or write direct to Dept. R.

Olds Motor Works, Detroit, U. S. A.

Member of the Association of Licensed Automobile Manufacturers

Collier's

Household Number
for June

Purchasers of Fox Typewriters

are always surprised at the beautiful work of the machine, its extremely light touch, its short key depression, its easy carriage action and its general superiority.

We want to prove to you that the Fox Typewriter excels in every feature that makes a typewriter desirable. If this is so, you need it in your office. These days of keen competition will not allow you to use anything but the best.

Allow us to place one with you on free trial.

Other makes taken in part payment at liberal allowances.

FOX TYPEWRITER CO., Ltd.

Executive Office & Factory, 460-470 Front St., GRAND RAPIDS, MICHIGAN

Block 23 Liberal Arts Bldg., World's Fair.

This advertisement returned with 50c. will entitle you to a sample Fox typewriter ribbon, for any typewriter, regular price $1.00.

THIS VICTORIA is the most widely known and the most extensively used of any electric automobile. Its artistic lines, quiet elegance of finish, superb running qualities, and all-round reliability, have given complete satisfaction to hundreds of purchasers in this country and abroad. By reason of its simplicity of operation and general attractiveness it is admirably suited to ladies' use. The present model has radical improvements in the running and operating parts.

Equally desirable in its class is the new Columbia Electric Runabout, Mark LX, price $850. The lightest electric of equal battery power made, as well as the fastest, most efficient, and handsomest. It is rated at 40 miles on one charge of the battery, but has developed 47½ miles in actual tests. The battery, of the latest oxide type, is divided, distributing the weight evenly over both axles. The motor and all working parts are carried above the springs so that the vehicle can be run over rough surfaces at high speeds without injuring the mechanism. The speed is 15 miles per hour. A top is furnished at an extra charge of $75 or $100, according to quality.

Our artistic Catalogue of Columbia Electric Pleasure Vehicles and high and medium powered Gasoline Cars will be sent on request; also separate Catalogues of Electric Town Carriages of the coach class and Commercial Vehicles.

ELECTRIC VEHICLE CO HARTFORD CONN

NEW YORK: 134, 136, 138 West 39th St., opp. Metropolitan Opera House
BOSTON: 74, 76, 78 Stanhope St. CHICAGO: 1413 Michigan Ave.

Member Association Licensed Automobile Manufacturers.

Tonneau, $2550

Light Touring Car, $1450

HAYNES APPERSON MOBILES

Light Touring Car, with full equipment as shown, $1,450

"An automobile must be very good or it is NO good."—SIMEON FORD.

Many people think autos unreliable. Many makes contributed to this impression. The HAYNES CARS have supplied most of the official "evidence in rebuttal" by winning first honors in every one of seventeen contests.

Stock cars of every model we have sold have been submitted to these trials. All models share in this perfect record of reliability.

You buy most automobiles on faith. We ask you to buy the HAYNES on what it has proved. Examine the HAYNES CARS before you buy. Write for the catalogue now.

HAYNES-APPERSON CO., Kokomo, Ind., U. S. A.
Branch Store, 1420 Michigan Avenue, Chicago

The Oldest Makers of Motor Cars in America.

Members Assn. Licensed Auto. Mfrs.

NEW YORK: Brooklyn Auto. Co., 64 W. 45th St. BUFFALO: Buffalo Auto. Exchange
BROOKLYN: Brooklyn Auto. Co., 1229 Fulton St. TOLEDO: Toledo Motor Car Co.
BOSTON: G. M. Brown, 43 Columbus Ave. LOS ANGELES: J. A. Rosesteel

SEE OUR EXHIBIT AT ST. LOUIS FAIR

POPE MANUFACTURING COMPANY

Bicycle Innovations

TWO-SPEED GEAR AND NEW COASTER BRAKE
Greatest Improvements since the coming of the Chainless

POPE QUALITY IN EVERY WHEEL

Catalogues free at our 10,000 dealers' stores, or any one Catalogue mailed on receipt of a two-cent note.

Eighteen thousand TONS of "FORCE" eaten during the last twelve months!

I'm afraid to put in cold figures how much wealth I honestly think has been created by the human energy drawn from that vast amount of my sunny food.

Sunny Jim

A food is good for you to the extent of the real nourishment there is in it, less the amount of energy
it takes on your part to assimilate it.

That sounds very learned, but it simply means that "FORCE" has in it more good and is easier to digest than any other kind of food and this includes meat as well as "breakfast foods."

Best in all Branches
Quality Flavor and Appearance

Swift's Premium
Hams and Bacon
Silver Leaf Lard

Swift & Company
U. S. A.

Information

If you are coming to the St. Louis World's Fair—the greatest exposition in history—there are a few things you should know. If you live anywhere East, North or West of St. Louis, you will save much time and inconvenience if you get a ticket via the Wabash—the only line with its own tracks direct into its own individual station right at the Main Entrance to the World's Fair Grounds. Ticket agents of all lines will sell tickets to St. Louis at greatly reduced rates—via the Wabash if you ask them to; they will anyway if they want to do you a kindness.

Our complete guide to the Exposition contains full information with a splendid map of the grounds, and is beautifully illustrated. It will be sent free on request and, if you ask it, with full information about your best route and the reduced rates. Write C. S. CRANE, G. F. & T. A., Wabash Railroad, St. Louis.

WILLIAMS' SHAVING SOAP

KLONDYKE GOLD

is not more highly prized than Williams' Shaving Soap.

CAMP SEAGWAY, ALASKA.

I have used Williams' Shaving Soap with the greatest satisfaction and pleasure for years. Since coming to Alaska I have found it especially valuable, as it leaves the skin in the pink of condition to face the cutting winds of this climate. Were it impossible to secure Williams' Shaving Soap, I would go without shaving. ARTHUR D. CURTIS.

Summer or winter, in every climate, Williams' Shaving Soap keeps the face in the "pink of condition." "The only soap fit for the face."

Williams' Shaving Sticks, Shaving Tablets, Toilet Waters, Talcum Powder, etc., sold everywhere.

Write for Free Booklet, "How to Shave."

THE J. B. WILLIAMS CO., Glastonbury, Conn., U. S. A.

Digitized by Google

Dustless Homes

"Cleaning house" is needlessly toilsome where old-fashioned heating methods are used, which daily spread ashes, dirt and coal gases in the living rooms, damaging draperies, carpets and other furnishings.

AMERICAN & IDEAL RADIATORS & BOILERS

warm the building uniformly by hot water or steam and save their cost in household cleanliness. Their purchase is not an expense—it is an investment.

They make the house easier to rent or sell, if necessary—meanwhile they assist to protect the family health, giving sure home comfort, with marked fuel economy and least care.

They will wear as long as the house shall stand—no repairs. Put in now at out-of-rush-season prices, by best mechanics. Put in OLD cottages, houses and all OLD buildings as easily as in new. Ask for valuable booklet (FREE).

AMERICAN RADIATOR COMPANY

Dept. 31

CHICAGO

A Chance Courtship

is a story of an unconventional love match, well told and beautifully illustrated. The small picture above only suggests the real charm of these illustrations. As a bit of readable fiction the story is well worth writing for. It is contained in a handsomely bound book of 128 pages, a portion of which is devoted to the attractive mountain and lake resorts along the Lackawanna Railroad. It is a book you will like to see. It may be had by sending 10 cents in postage stamps to T. W. LEE, General Passenger Agent, Lackawanna Railroad, New York.

WASHBURN

Mandolins Guitars Banjos

Unequaled for Tone,
Durability
and Workmanship

We will gladly send free a beautiful Art Souvenir Catalogue and "Facts About the Mandolin" and "How to Play the Mandolin" if you will fill out this coupon and mail it to us.

Lyon & Healy

The World's Largest Music House

Makers of the WASHBURN

Sells "Everything Known in Music"

47 Please send me Art Souvenir Catalogue, "Facts About the Mandolin" and "How to Play the Mandolin."

Name _____

St. Address _____

City _____ State _____

WHITE GASOLINE MARINE ENGINES

SAFETY demands a marine engine that is absolutely reliable, certain and prompt in starting. White Gasoline Engines are guaranteed to start readily and run satisfactorily under all conditions of weather, and to be free from defects in material and construction. They are of the four cycle type and are designed for long and heavy service. Each engine is fitted with a sensitive ball governor, solid propeller with reversing gears held in engine bed, early and late spark, self cleaning igniters, glass gasoline feed cup showing supply and working of fuel. Distillate and cheap grades of oil may be successfully used. Minimum vibration and noise and no disagreeable odor.

Catalog sent upon request—also estimates on complete launches. Special Catalog of Stationary and Portable Engines for general ranch purposes.

GLOBE IRON WORKS CO.
P.O. BOX 143 MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

A Summer Day and a

CADILLAC

Model A Tourneau, $4800
Without Tourneau, $2150
Model B Touring Car, $3900
Without Tourneau, $2000

For a delightful spin in the country; for business or pleasure; for quick and pleasant transit over long distances or short, there's nothing equals a reliable automobile.

No reliable automobile is so easy to buy, to operate, or to maintain, as a Cadillac.

No automobile at double the money is so strongly constructed, so speedy on good roads, so dependable on bad, so capable in the matter of hill-climbing, as the Cadillac.

Model A Tourneau (shown above) will carry four people safely and comfortably at 30 miles per hour on the level stretches, and will go up a 45 per cent. grade.

Model B Touring car is identical in accomplishment, but has larger wheels, longer wheel-base, more roomy body. Both Models are equipped with Goodrich 3-inch detachable tires.

Full appreciation of Cadillac superiority in design, construction and performance is possible only by inspection and trial.

We'll be glad to send you booklet L for the asking. It explains and illustrates all Cadillac models in detail, and gives address of agency nearest you where they may be seen and tried.

CADILLAC AUTOMOBILE CO.,
Detroit, Mich.

Member Association of Licensed Automobile Manufacturers

HOW TO GROW TALL

Any Short Person Can Now Get Taller

In order to give every short person the benefit of the wonderful discovery of Mr. Leo Minges, whereby anyone can add from two to five inches to their height, we have prepared for free distribution, a limited edition of a book setting forth in detail the secrets of getting tall and telling how anyone can accomplish it without trouble, without pain, without injury, without loss of time, and almost without expense, in their own home.

In addition to getting increased height, Mr. Minges' discovery will also enable you to improve the symmetry of your figure, to make your body strong, and to greatly better your general appearance.

If you would like to add to your height, so as to be able to see in a crowd, walk without embarrassment with those who are tall, and enjoy the other advantages of proper height, you should write at once for this book. It will show you how to accomplish these results quickly, surely, and permanently. Nothing is left unexplained. After you read it, your only wonder will be, "Why did not some one think of it before?" Address to-day

The Cartilage Company, Dept. 3350D, Rochester, N. Y.

A STUDY IN HEIGHT.

RED TOP RYE

GOOD WHISKEY

It's up to YOU

FERDINAND WERTHEIMER & SONS
CINCINNATI, O.
ST. JOSEPH, MO. LOUISVILLE, KY.

Dyspepsia

and other stomach troubles quickly relieved and in most cases surely cured by the use of

"Glycozone"

This scientific germicide is absolutely harmless; it subdues the inflammation of the mucous membrane of the stomach, and by removing the cause, effects a cure.

Used and recommended by leading physicians. Take no substitute and see that each bottle bears my signature. Trial size, $1.00, at druggists or by mail, from

Prof. Charles H. Hirsch

59 H Prince St. New York
Send for Booklet How to Treat Dyspepsia.

NOW DEPOSITED IN THE BANK

$75,000.00

IN CASH GIVEN AWAY

To arouse interest in, and to advertise the GREAT ST. LOUIS WORLD'S FAIR, this enormous sum will be distributed. Full information will be sent you ABSOLUTELY FREE. Just send your name and address on a postal card and we will send you full particulars.

World's Fair Contest Co.
108 N. 8th Street
St. Louis, Mo.

Ivers & Pond Pianos.

Every part of the Ivers & Pond Piano, even the minutest detail, is as nearly perfect as intelligent effort, ingenuity and long experience can make it. The case designs are the daintiest pieces of piano architecture imaginable, and the finish is superlatively fine. But the pure, rich tone of surpassing sweetness and volume is the chief attraction of these superior instruments, and individualizes them from all other makes. They stand all climates.

HOW TO BUY.

If we have no dealer near you we will quote factory prices, sell on easy payments, ship pianos for trial in your own home, to be returned at our expense for railroad freight both ways if unsatisfactory, and make it just as easy for you to buy as if you lived in Boston. We take old pianos in exchange. Catalogue with pictures of our latest styles and a personal letter with valuable information mailed promptly if you will write us.

Ivers & Pond Piano Company,
137 Boylston Street, Boston, Mass.

THE RESULT OF USING

SMITH PREMIER TYPEWRITER

"THE WORLD'S BEST"
THE SMITH PREMIER TYPEWRITER CO.
Executive Office, 287 Broadway, New York.
Factory at Syracuse, N. Y.
Branches in all large cities

Faultless

Hunter Baltimore Rye

leads in universal popularity because there's nothing wanting. It has

Absolute Purity
Faultless Quality
Exquisite Flavor

Sold at all first-class cafes and by jobbers.
W. H. LANAHAN & SON, Baltimore, Md.

COLLIER'S WEEKLY

P. F. COLLIER & SON, PUBLISHERS

New York, 416-426 West 13th Street : London, 10 Norfolk Street, Strand, W. C., and
The International News Co., 5 Breems Buildings, Chancery Lane, E. C.

Copyright 1904 by P. F. Collier & Son. Entered at the New York Post-Office at Second-Class Matter

Vol. XXXIII No. 9

10 Cents per Copy

$5.20 per Year

New York, Saturday, May 28, 1904

CONTENTS

HOUSEHOLD NUMBER FOR JUNE

Cover Design	Drawn by Jessie Willcox Smith	Page
The Early Morning Train	Frontispiece Drawn by W. T. Smedley	7
Editorials		8-9
Marking Time in Tokio	Richard Harding Davis	10
	Special War Correspondence from Japan
With the First Japanese Army in Manchuria	Frederick Palmer	11
	Special Cable Despatches from Antung, Manchuria
Russia Honors her Jackies	Photographs	12
The Downfall of Russia's Favorites	J. C. O'Laughlin	13
	Special Correspondence from St. Petersburg
Five Little Men	Story W. A. Fraser	14
	Illustrated by B. Cory Kilvert
At the Great Release	Poem Bliss Carman	15
	Decorated by Charles A. Winter
At the Matinee	Double-Page Drawing by C. D. Gibson	16-17
Traveling with a Base Ball Team	Allen Sangree	18
	Illustrated by John C. Clay
How Old Craney-Crow Lost His Head	Story
	Illustrated by Frank Ver Beck
The Song o' the Bullet	Poem Alfred Damon Runyan	20
Books and Plays	Norman Hapgood	21
	Headpiece by Maxfield Parrish
A Wonderful Cloud World	Garrett P. Serviss	24
The Easy Mark	V.—The Accommodating Goldfish R. D. Paine	27
Notes of Progress in Science and Invention		30

THE EQUITABLE

J.W. ALEXANDER
PRESIDENT

HENRY B. HYDE
FOUNDER

J.H. HYDE
VICE PRESIDENT

LIKE A RAINBOW

in its assurance for the future is an adequate Endowment Policy in the Equitable.

It assures your own future—and the future of your family.

Opportunities for men of character to act as representatives
Apply to GAGE E. TARBELL, 2nd. Vice President

For full information fill out this coupon or write

The Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States, 120 BROADWAY, NEW YORK
Dept. No. 24

Please send me information regarding an Endowment for $.....

If issued at.....years of age.

Name.....

Address.....

Globe-Wernicke Elastic Bookcase

Has the following three vital points of superiority over any sectional bookcase made:

A PERFECT DOOR

Non-binding, simple construction, occupies least space, impossible to get out of order.

INTERLOCKING METAL STRIPS

No other sectional case has them. They are attractive, artistic, and absolutely essential to a perfect union of the sections.

LOWEST PRICES

Ask your local dealer who carries them in stock—there are over five hundred agencies in the United States—or write us for Catalog C—104

The Globe-Wernicke Co.
380 Broadway, NEW YORK, 224 Wabash St. CHICAGO.

Canadian Factory Stratford, Ont.

BOSTON 91-93 Federal St.
LONDON 44 Abchurch Lane E. C.

Fisherman's Outfit

$2

No. 9.

This Splendid High Grade Outfit consists of a long gun three joined, split bamboo nickel plated rod, made of selected stock, six strips carefully glued and nicely finished, very closely with wrapped, solid metal reel seat. All mountings are full heavy nickel plated. Cork handle. Rod is the best long, comes in a standard and varnished hollow wooden firm and cloth bag. One fine quality Anchor Brand Multiplying Reel, full nickel plated, nickel plated, back sliding click and drag, includes handle, holds 50 yards of line. Outfit also contains 25 yards of extra quality line. Baited with for trout or bass, 20 feet of water proof S. I. C. Trawl Line, No. 64. Two down split shot for Shiners. Three No. 7 Bladed Hooks for Bass fishing. 804 assorted wire line and trout flies. One six foot 50 lb. line. Eighteen single gun Stoddard Hooks, assorted for trout and bass. One split Bamboo Frog, perfect imitation. One No. 4 Fluted Trolling Spoon, nickel plated with steel index, nicely finished. One colored float. This outfit would ordinarily cost at retail at least $5.00. We will send it to you with the distinct understanding, that if you are not satisfied with it after you have examined it, you can return it to us at our expense and we will refund your money.

Our Special Price $2

Our Hardware, New Sporting Goods Catalog, containing everything for the Fisherman or Hunter, mailed free upon application.

THE BIG STORE 147 N. 4TH ST. SEVENTH FLOOR
SIEGEL COOPER & CO.
BATHING, BICYCLES, SPORTS
NEW YORK CITY, N. Y.

Earn a Bicycle

taking orders from sample wheel furnished by us. We want an Active Agent in each town. Large profits. Write for special offer.

Highest Grade 1004 Models $8.75 to $17

Center Brakes, Highpressure Pneumatic, good tires and best equipment. 1001 and 1002 Models, Best Make $7 to $12

500 Second-hand Wheels All Makes and Models $3 to $8

good as new Great Factory Clearing Sale at half factory cost.

We Ship on Approval without a cent down, and allow TEN DAYS FREE TRIAL on every bicycle. Any wheel not satisfactory returned at our expense. Write at once for catalog and our special offer.

AUTOMOBILES, TIRES, Sewing Machines, Stoves, etc., half retail prices.

Mend Cycle Co., Dept. 53-F, Chicago

Victor Dog in Pure Gold

"His Master's Voice"

at the St. Louis Exposition

Tiffany & Company, the greatest goldsmiths of America have made a gold model of the Victor trade-mark—the Victor Dog, with the original Victor Talking Machine,

Life-size in 24-Karat Gold

The work has been done in a manner worthy of the material and the subject, and can be seen all summer at the Victor exhibit at St. Louis.

The Victor Talking Machine is as good as gold. It is a musical instrument of the very highest order.

Victor Talking Machine Company Philadelphia

The original makers of the Gram-O-phone.

AUBUSSON WHOLE CARPETS

The above illustration shows one of our French Aubusson Carpets in a Drawing Room in one of New York's finest residences, furnished by us

THERE is no more appropriate or beautiful floor covering for a Drawing Room, Reception Room, Boudoir, or any delicately treated room, than a French Aubusson Carpet, made by hand, like a wall tapestry in exquisite colorings.

We make a specialty of designing and weaving these Carpets in one piece, and in any size, to suit any style of decoration.

W. & J. SLOANE

BROADWAY AND 19TH STREET, NEW YORK

NEW OCEAN HOUSE Swampscott Mass.

Finest Hotel on the North Shore

ONLY thirty minutes from Boston. Is delightfully situated on the famous Puritan Road, the oldest State Road in America (1629). The most elegantly appointed hotel on the New England coast. Spacious and beautiful public rooms, 240 sleeping-rooms, sixty private baths. Magnificent bathing beach, fine boating and fishing. Delightful carriage and auto roads. Golf, croquet, and tennis. Send for our handsome illustrated brochure. Address (until June 15)

AINSLIE & GRABOW
147 1 SUMMER STREET BOSTON, MASS.

KUPPENHEIMER'S Spring and Summer creations are the most perfect clothes that money and educated intelligence can produce. The advanced thought apparent in their construction will remove from the minds of sensible men whatever prejudice may exist against ready-to-wear attire. WE ASK nothing for the name—the cost is all in the clothes. Progressive retailers sell them.

Free upon request our handsome brochure, "Review of Spring and Summer Fashions," Vol. XX.

B. KUPPENHEIMER & CO.

AMERICA'S FOREMOST CLOTHES MAKERS
CHICAGO NEW YORK BOSTON

COLLIER'S

HOUSEHOLD NUMBER FOR JUNE

This is the fifth of a series of drawings in color by Mr. Smedley appearing in the Household Numbers depicting incidents of American home life.

THE EARLY MORNING TRAIN

DRAWN BY W. T. SMEDLEY

THE BUSINESS OF POLITICIANS in a Democracy is, on the whole, to calculate where the majority, at any given moment, stands, and take their position on that safe spot. They distinctly do not lead, but follow. Naturally, therefore, the platforms which they draw up are positive only when they imagine the forces behind them demand plain speaking. The New York Democratic platform is an able exemplar of the art of concealing thought. According to one of our correspondents, it is as easy to understand this platform as it would be to photograph a room full of smoke. On two subjects the parties, during this coming month, will have to decide whether to use their vocabularies to express or conceal their thoughts. BOURKE COCKRAN'S radical expressions about free trade, in his oratorical displays before Congress adjourned, have made it more likely that the Republicans will come out strongly for protection, in the document now being prepared by Senator LODGE. If the Democrats asked only reciprocity and the modification of the tariff against the trusts, the Republicans might be cautious, but since they can quote COCKRAN'S very emphatic free-trade utterances, they will probably put some ginger into their tariff plank. The issue of free trade against protection they do not fear, as they might fear the issue of tariff-sheltered monopolies against moderate revision. Another reason, also, for a fairly strong flourish about the glories of protection is the need of conciliating the great money interests. Since, driven by the President, the party is to take some stand against the trusts, an eloquent tariff plank is needed as a sop to the octopi, cephalopods, or devil-fish. "You are against us," the octopi might gloomily remark. "You have an anti-trust provision, a harpoon aimed specially at us." "Ay," say the Republicans, "but so have the Democrats. Now look at our nice tariff plank, and compare it with what prominent Democrats are threatening. Take the lesser evil." Writing a platform for either party at present is a hazardous amusement. Language is to be so manoeuvred as to please the gentry now blinded with special privilege; the large, sensible multitude who want only fair play; and, if possible, some of the cranks whose idea of cure is to smash things generally. Both platforms are likely, therefore, to be elaborate exercises in the art of "jolly" voters. Personally we shall peruse these documents carefully, consider well the candidates, and vote with the most profound deliberation; unless, indeed, the Democrats shall be foolish enough to leave reasonable men no possibility of choice.

ON SAYING SOMETHING

JUDGE PARKER IS SEVERELY TREATED by the BRYAN-HEARST people, because he does not explain his views. We may be sure, therefore, that Mr. HEARST, who, as Mr. BRISBANE puts it, is the only self-made candidate, will gladly tell where he stands on the question of aiding and abetting gambling. He believes in publicity, also, and will no doubt be glad to give the widest circulation to his views, now that a request for them is made. We notice in one of his papers that "the Western Union's criminality proves that a corporation and its directors set money above honesty," also that "it knew that it was dealing with a criminal element with no moral standing," and it asks, "Is not this a shameful revelation concerning a great corporation that makes millions out of the public?" It calls upon one Western Union director for his opinion of such doings, since he is "known throughout the country as a man of high moral principle, and he is said to have a detestation of gambling." Have we not been told that Mr. HEARST is a man of almost holy moral standing, whose very soul is torn by any crime, and, above all, by gambling? If each director in a corporation is responsible, how about the man who owns the whole paper? "Does any amount of money," he asks, "any question of dividends, outweigh, in his estimation, the common principles of honesty and decency?" This Western Union director is summoned to the bar of public conscience because his company "is in league with men that do more harm to this city in one day than is done by all the bank robbers, burglars, and sneak-thieves in a year." Reminding Mr. HEARST of these principles, we ask him publicly why he encourages this vice by printing racing "tips" in his papers every day; why he prints also advertisements which are gotten up for the express purpose of leading Mr. HEARST'S readers into gambling; why he devotes pages of his paper to making the races as attractive to his readers as he can. Surely, he would not allow "any amount of money to outweigh the common principles of honesty and decency." Mr. HEARST has the floor.

A REQUEST FOR LIGHT

WHEN THE WAR BEGAN, the best informed judges, including statesmen responsible for policies in the various powers, thought it would take the Japanese from two to three times as long to reach the Yalu as it actually did take. Of this strange miscalculation there are various explanations. One is general: the fallibility of the human mind and its tendency to overestimate the adequacy of what it knows. SOCRATES, we can hardly be often remember, was the wisest man because he alone understood the limitations of his knowledge. Count CASSINI, who represents Russia in our capital, was one of the leaders of the forward policy in Russia, perhaps the leader in the beginning of the present difficulty. He is undoubtedly a man equal in ability to our best readers and ourselves, and it was his especial province to have some knowledge of facts in Manchuria and Japan. Yet look at him, at what an unhappy figure he is cutting, explaining and explaining, and never covering the essential fact of the condition of the Russian army in Manchuria nor of the Japanese army in Japan. He, like the rest of us philosophers, public men, and private sages, expected hard fighting all along the line. The Japanese were to land lower and to meet resistance at every point. They landed higher than they were expected, walked rapidly to the river, and stepped across it. It is surprising how human confidence survives mistake. Some man who saw his prophecies shattered by revolving fact in Seventy, and again in Ninety-eight, and later still in Africa, will be sitting down to-day and telling his grandchildren what must come to pass in Asia. By readiness and efficiency, which result in speed, great wars are often settled, and these are conditions which a government well provided with experts and spies might be supposed to understand; yet no one has been more thoroughly surprised by the rate at which Japan has moved in Asia than those whose province it was to know.

SPEL
IN V.

CRUELTY IS THE WORST CHARGE made against the Oriental nature—worst because most likely to be true. Japanese and Chinese alike are described as

"Uncapable of pity, void and empty
From any dram of mercy."

Humanitarianism has apparently made little progress in the Orient. Kindliness and mercy are fruits, to a large extent, of a religion born in Asia, twenty centuries ago, but welcomed and made part of life in the Occident alone. Among broad-minded modern spirits, who care little whether the world is inherited by white skins or yellow, this aspect of the situation troubles most. They believe in compassion. With them benevolence and mercy are the essence of civilization and religion. They know it is excellent to have a giant's strength, provided you do not use it like a giant. In no Western poetry is there a more deeply accepted saying than this, that mercy is twice blessed; that "it blesseth him that gives, and him that takes." Many charges made against China and Japan are simply ignored by the impartial mind. They have another colored skin, another name for God, other views on worth and life and death, and we do not see, in any of these things, that they need be essentially inferior to us. But cruelty, which does seem to be an Oriental trait, is to us profoundly bad. Nothing that is cruel can be good. Of all crimes cruelty is the worst. Recent events have done a large amount to remove our prejudice in favor of the West against the East. What we most need, to complete this change, is some assurance that cruelty is not inseparable from the Oriental soul. Where cruelty is, whatever ability and intelligence go with it, morally there is barbarism.

WHEN WASHINGTON WAS PRESIDENT he took much interest in the appearance of the capital. Being a surveyor himself, his own ideas were sound, and, with his unfailing instinct for the wisest course, he drew, in building matters, upon the aesthetic views of what he used to call "professors of the art." He insisted upon appointing the architect for the Capitol, instead of leaving that selection to the commission which had to do with laying out Washington before the Congress moved from Philadelphia. JEFFERSON in his turn upheld this prerogative against the House of Representatives, as other Presidents did after him. Mr. ROOSEVELT is the first to yield the right, as, if he doubts, he may see by consulting Mr. GLEN BROWN'S exhaustive history of the Capitol. Uncle JOE CANNON, that great and good potentate of the House, was the head and front of the effort to turn the architectural control of the Capitol into patronage. He was chairman of a committee which called upon Mr. ROOSEVELT and contended that as the Representatives inhabited the Capitol they should appoint the architect in charge—a feeble argument which could not prevail against any preceding President. Uncle JOE, however, had his way, and picked out a clerk who happened to be a friend of his. This clerk was no architect at all, so there was a difficulty, which was solved by changing the name of the officer in charge to Superintendent of Public Buildings and Grounds, and so Uncle JOE's friend was put in a position where he was authorized to make certain alterations and to pay for them as much as was needed up to the amount in the Treasury. The amount in the Treasury at the time that resolution was passed was two million dollars.

CONGRESS HAS SHOWN RANCOR toward art from the beginning. It is opposed now to the movement toward establishing a permanent commission of artists to pass upon all national monuments, and this opposition is not founded upon the love of patronage alone. It is infused with a general, disinterested malignity—or perhaps we might more charitably say an honest suspicion of the world of art in general. One man who was appointed Minister to France was attacked in Congress on the ground that he could speak French, and that any person who spoke that tongue of sin could hardly be of spotless virtue. Mr. McKIM could not induce Congress to incorporate his American Academy at Rome. “No,” said Uncle JOE, “no money for you. If any young feller wants to go and live in Europe, he can pay his own way.”

“But we don't want any money,” it was explained, “we wish only the incorporation.” “I don't care,” said Mr. CANNON. “You won't get it.” These tales represent the general tenor of Congressional opinion, although there are exceptions, like the late Senator McMILLAN and the present Senator NEWLANDS, who work against this arrogant ignorance. With the Presidents, on the other hand, the spirit has been the other way. They have selected able artists and trusted them on questions concerning art. JEFFERSON saved the architect THORNTON's plans from serious change at the hands of a committee, “eager,” as Mr. CHARLES MOORE phrases it, “to magnify their office and put the impress of their incompetence on the designs.” Congress also tried to interfere with WALTER's later plans, but FILLMORE took and held a firm stand against it. Thanks to these earlier Presidents, the Capitol building is one of the artistic triumphs of the modern world. Mr. ROOSEVELT's yielding to Uncle JOSEPH is an entering wedge which is much to be regretted.

MR. ROOSEVELT'S APPOINTMENTS lately have raised in many minds the fear that politics were getting a little the better of his larger judgment. The trouble with the arguments from expediency is that if one forms the habit of using them they are somewhat likely to run amuck, as there is no definite line at which their application ceases. In a very imaginative, spiritual nature, like LINCOLN's, the practical politician was kept in his place by the idealist. Mr. ROOSEVELT, we are perfectly sure, wishes to do the very best he can. When he compromises, he does so, intrenched behind the purity of his motives. But he may be in danger, nevertheless, of deterioration. The politicians did not make him, and they could not unmake him. Compromise is not necessary to his success, and much of it will in the long run prove injurious to his fame. The politicians at first hoped very little from him. They looked upon his accidental accession to the Presidency as a contrivance of the devil. The more he gives them the more they will expect, the harder they will fight each inch of ground, the more plausible will the argument become that compromise is needed for harmony and accomplishment. When “Doc” JAMISON received an office created for his benefit recently, the President doubtless excused the deed on the ground that the office itself was harmless, but there is a good deal to be said about the example. Outsiders speak of the “LORIMER gang” of Chicago. People in the city itself are as likely to say “the LORIMER-JAMISON gang.” JAMISON, in fact, is sub-boss. Chicago was so indignant at the appointment that it rewarded JAMISON with a defeat in his own district. We have no desire to be captious with a first-rate President, whose desire is to do his best, but it may do no harm occasionally to remind him that the ability to argue in favor of certain compromises is no excuse for letting the habit grow upon him.

THE SENATE IS ATTACKED with unremitting ferocity throughout the country, and only occasionally defended. A learned historian of our land alleges that some day he intends to run for President on a platform containing a single plank—that plank demanding the abolition of the Senate. He would have to take radical ground about what the Constitution is between friends, since the clause guaranteeing to the States equal representation is not subject to amendment, and the provision for equal State representation would hardly be satisfied by no representation at all. A correspondent from Massachusetts writes us indignantly that on our seeming proposition that “area should be represented politically,” she can only rub her eyes in sheer bewilderment. “The composition of the Senate,” she observes, “was no more and no less a device to protect the small States, than that of the House was a device to protect the large ones. The men who made the Constitution represented two conflicting ideas, that of a nation and that of a federation; the Connecticut Compromise provided a means by which both could be satisfied. The Senate is much more than an upper house or second chamber, such as the countries of Western Europe have invented for themselves; it answers more to the Bundesrath of the German Empire; it is at once the outward and visible sign and the safeguard of the Federal nature of this Government.” Our editorial approval of shelving the bill bunching Arizona and New Mexico as one State, and Indian Territory and Oklahoma as another, was supported by the argument that territory, and hence opportunity, was of some importance in representation; that the House represents population solely, and that the Senate, therefore, ought not, in admitting new States, to omit all consideration of their size. Our correspondent, who has much State patriotism, remarks ironically “that perhaps no wonder should be caused by the fact that a creature who was born in Illinois, educated in Massachusetts, and residing in New York should have no instinctive repugnance to such ideas as you here set forth, but I do think it important that those who have the responsibility of educating the public should keep in mind the foundations of our constitutional history. There! This is to give notice that when your plan is put in practice, Massachusetts and I shall secede.” We think the Federal nature of the Government is now mainly historical, having practical utility principally as a device for local government. Of course, any essential change is not in question, for it is impossible. But in admitting new States we may nevertheless consider present-day utility as well as the conditions of a hundred years ago.

TOUCHING ON THE SENATE

THEY TOIL NOT, neither do they spin, and yet they are approved. They do not practice strenuousness, and are excused. This is June, when we are able to consider the lilies, and moralize thereon. With MILTON we may retire from popular noise and seek an “unfrequented place to find some ease.” President ELIOT, who speaks frequently and with wisdom, has been celebrating the joys of toil, but he meant quiet and steady work, not the nervous passion for being or seeming busy. His thought would have been satisfied by “ease and alternate labor,” by such contented work as ADAM did, for he himself goes into the country every summer and is active with his hands, while he thinks less of “the rage of nations, and the crush of States,” or even of the young idea and how it shoots, and more of how to prune a tree or sail a boat.

CONSIDER THE LILIES

“How various his employments, whom the world Calls idle.”

How weary do we sometimes get of the unremitting strenuous life. It is like walking under an elevated railway, with trolleys clanging by our side, thinking in a nervous crisis, and communicating in a scream. “Why so hot, little man?” To-morrow you shall be yourself with yesterday's seven thousand years. Let us not mistake our restlessness for work or mere commotion for accomplishment, or even volume of trade for the end of life. There is said to be a time for everything, but modern industry, dominating all things, gives much time to hustle and very little to the quieter thought. Inventiveness and science, calling nature slave, harnessing her to implements of work, have vastly accelerated the pace of existence, and nobody can see where this speed will stop. That side of life will provide amply for itself. The danger is to the other side.

A. Burt
London Express
B. H. Davis, Collier's

George Lynch (old row)
London Chronicle

Melton Prior
Illustrated News

M. Babel
Paris Journal

F. Whiting (old row)
Graphic

Sheldon Williams, Sphere
Richard Smith, London Standard

Frederic Villon, Nord et Son

THE BOTTLED-UP WAR CORRESPONDENTS WHO ARE MARKING TIME IN TOKIO

The Correspondents at the Shiba Palace, where a reception was recently given them by Viscount Tanaka, Minister of the Imperial Household, who represented the Mikado

MARKING TIME IN TOKIO: The Tea House of the Hundred and One Steps

By RICHARD HARDING DAVIS, Collier's Special War Correspondent in Japan

COPYRIGHT 1904 BY COLLIER'S WEEKLY

The Japanese War Office has issued a war correspondent's pass to Mr. Davis, and has assigned him to the Second Column. Until this takes the field, Mr. Davis will write of events in the Japanese Capital

TOKIO, April 25

WE PAID our first visit to the tea house of the Hundred and One Steps even before we had registered at the hotel. We had been in Japan no longer than it takes the rikisha boy to run up the Bund from the Custom House to the Grand Hotel. On the steps the Sailor Man, Manila-bound to take over a battleship, ordered us back into the rikisha and set our course for the tea house. It was just before luncheon, and seemed a difficult moment for tea. But to be vouched for at that particular tea house by an officer of our navy was a piece of luck too obvious to be neglected. It was like being introduced to "Kid" McCoy by Lionel Barrymore.

Of all the tea houses in Japan, the one best known to foreigners is the tea house of the Hundred and One Steps, at Yokohama.

It is owned by O Kin San, the sister of Tenabe, who once used to manage it, and who now keeps the silk shop on the Honchi Dori. The uncle of these equally charming sisters was one of the minor officials who received Commodore Perry. Some say he was not an official, but the head man of the village, and that he owned the house in which Perry lived during his visits ashore. In any event, the uncle once "was with Perry," once talked to Perry, after the strange American etiquette Perry had shaken hands with him, and in Japan that is enough to give distinction to any man, even to his ancestors. It also was enough to make the tea house presided over by his nieces the favorite meeting-place of the officers of our navy. When they were midshipmen they climbed the hundred steps, now that they are admirals they still climb them. Their loyalty has never slackened, and their reward is that when they visit the tea house they again grow young. There is something about the place which makes people young. It has kept Tenabe and O Kin San young for forty years. It stands on what remains of the ancestral acres, a patch of garden clinging to the edge of a cliff. The cliff overlooks Yokohama, the generous harbor, the great bay, and, when the fogs allow, the Pacific Ocean. Flat against the face of the cliff, like a sea-ladder on the side of a ship, rise the hundred and one steps. After twenty days at sea their ascent made the climbing of Pike's Peak seem less of an effort than stepping into a cab.

It is a tradition of the house that O Kin San never forgets the face of a guest, his rank, or the name of his ship, but as six years had passed since the Sailor Man had touched at Yokohama, he was afraid O Kin San might not live up to her reputation. But she did not forget him. When we stooped to enter the low veranda, we found her kneeling prostrate before the Commander, clapping her hands softly and touching the floor with her forehead. Around her little nezans in dove-colored kimonos fluttered excitedly, rubbing their knees with their open palms, giggling and gurgling and uttering soft, cooing cries of welcome. When they saw the American ladies, they in turn dropped upon their knees, and beat the mats with their hands. Had the Commander been a long-lost son and we those who had returned him from a watery grave, we could not have been received with more apparent confusion and delight. They made it seem that that house had been kept open only in the hope that he might revisit it. We tied soft slippers over our heathen boots, slid across the slippery matting, and squatted upon cushions in a little cigar-box of a room. Our coming was as though some one had flung a handful of corn into a dovecote. From each corner of the tiny house the patter of feet echoed like the scamper of mice behind a wainscot, giggles sounded from kitchen to garden, and on every side the paper screens that formed the room slid apart in unexpected places, admitted a tottering, tripping nezan with a tray, and shut again into what looked like a solid wall. They brought us tea and sake, and tiny pipes in boxes of hot ashes, strange sweet cakes, and stranger salt fish, and they served us as though never before had such a service been rendered. It was a delicious, stupendous joke, in which we all were equally guilty. That we should light a pipe and puff at it was an act the humor and novelty of which threw them into an ecstasy of laughter, that we approved of the sake shook them with shivers of delight, that we drank the tea and asked for more set them violently rocking at our condescension. When they were not beseeching us to eat and drink and clapping their hands, they were passing on their knees from one to the other of the American women, exclaiming in apparent awe and wonder over the unusual beauty of their boots. It was a pretty comedy extremely well played, and while it deceived no one, it hurt no one. It reminded you of the acting at Paquin's, when the head woman, surrounded by a sympathetic chorus of vendeuses, tells Madame that the new gown is "charmant, ravissant." At such a time the mere man feels sorry for them. He hopes that when closing hour comes they will fold away their smiles with the frocks, cease flattering and exclaiming, and become as slovenly-looking and as cross and disagreeable as they please. And so it is with the nezas, you hope when your back is turned that O Kin San and the little waitresses get up off their knees and yawn and stretch their tiny bodies, and say, "Well, thank goodness, they've gone!" and sit down to a real meal. For you can not believe that they eat seaweed and live fish, and use chopsticks, and drink tea from thimbles, and sit on the floor, for any other reason than that the tourist expects them to do so. You feel they are trying to live up to the idea of the Japanese tea house, which he has acquired from "The Geisha Girl" and "Madame Chrysanthème." I had the same feeling that it wasn't quite genuine when, in Edinburgh, I first saw a man in kilts. I was sure he wore them not because they were comfortable but because it was expected of him.

But no matter how much you may doubt its sincerity, whenever you visit the tea house on the cliff you will

Against the face of the cliff rise the hundred and one steps

O Kin San and O Yucha San in front of the tea house

ceive the same fluttered, excited welcome. There will be the same chorus of "Please, please," the same elight when you approve, the same anxiety over your lack of appetite, and the same rare appreciation of our rare wit. Also, in time you will find that O Kin San will take the cue you give her. And if you refer to sit overlooking the city where the paper lanterns glow, and watch the lights along the Bund and the lamps of the ships at anchor on the berth, and talk of things Japanese, and not to joke and laugh, you will find O Kin San a simple, direct, and rarely intelligent hostess. She is a truly remarkable woman, a woman who speaks several languages, who can call off all the names in our navy register, relate the history of the Ronins, explain the complexities of the Shinto and Buddhist religions, or relate with true humor the story of the middy who climbed the steps on horseback.

Among the things they laid before us during our first hour in Japan were the words of all the officers, of their sweethearts and wives, and of the tourists who had visited the tea house. They asked for our cards, and each of the ezans gave us one of hers. The one I received read "Miss O Yucha San." I tried to recollect where I had heard the name before, and then I remembered that at college there was a song that title which we used to sing, was set to the air of "Rosalie":

"I care not what others may say,
I'm in love with O Yucha San,
In Japan,
Ichiban,
I'm in love with O Yucha San."

The chorus brought back to me the one evenings when the glee club could sally forth to serenade the townspeople, and we freshmen abandoned our books and followed in its wake. And, instead of the tea house of the Hundred and One Steps and O Yucha San kneeling beside me, proffering a pair of chopsticks, I was conscious of the sleeping American town, its students grouped under the elms, the odor of their briar pipes, the beetles buzzing around the electric globes in the street, and the black shadows cross the professor's front lawn.

"When I was at college," I said, "I used to sing a song about a girl called O Yucha San." The Commander looked up in hurt surprise, and O Yucha San bent low in embarrassment. "But you know that this is the girl!" he said.

I protested that it could not be. I gallantly refrained from explaining why.

"Not at all," said the Commander. "F. M. Bostwick, who was a lieutenant then, wrote that song about there until we went back to the ship. But now she's a young lady, and there is a book about her with her picture in colors on the cover."

So I told O Yucha San that over all the States young men were announcing to the world that they were in love only with her, and that in every college town the name and fame of O Yucha San was intimate and familiar.

O Yucha San covered her blushes with two small hands, and bowed her thanks to her admirers across the sea.

On other days we returned to the tea house, and one soon grew to understand why to the wandering naval officer and the globe trotter it becomes a house of call, a club, and a home. There are many tea houses in Japan more rich, larger, set in elaborate, beautiful gardens, with golden geishas to dance and jugglers to confuse, but in none will you find a more friendly welcome or a kindlier hostess. To sit at the feet of O Kin San is to learn wisdom and courtesy, and to look out from her tea house is to bring yourself in touch with all the world. For, when the paper screens are pushed aside you see on one hand the gardens and trees of the Foreign Settlement; on the other, below you, the tile-roofed city, with its temples, parks of cherry trees, distant hills of pine, and Fujiyama, the illusive, the mysterious, the beautiful, raising snow-white shoulders out of a robe of green; while at your feet lies the roadstead of Yokohama Harbor choked with ships of war, with great liners, monster tramps, gondola-like sampans, and high-peaked, square-sailed junks. The murmurs of a city float up to you mixed with all the noises of the sea; the impatient signals of the darting launches, the puffing donkey engines answering the boatswain's whistle with creak of winch, chains, and cordage; the songs of the coolies knee-deep in the lighters, the ships' bells ringing brokenly across the water, and the melancholy piping of the harbor gulls.

Against the curtain of blue you watch the steamers come and go, carrying your heart with them to Hongkong and Shanghai, Rangoon and Singapore, to Colombo and Bombay, to Sydney and Melbourne, around Cape Horn, through the islands of the South Pacific, or straight away to that Golden Gate that waits to welcome the wanderer Home.

AMERICAN ADVERTISING METHODS IN JAPAN

The above photograph sent us by our special correspondent, Richard Harding Davis, bears striking witness to the march of Western civilization in Japan. Not content with the introduction of American-built locomotives and Pullman cars, the Japanese have adapted with considerable art the idea of display signs, advertising toilet preparations, medicines, etc., alongside their railroads.

O Yucha San when she was five years old. I remember her very well. She was just a little doll of a thing. She was only big enough to carry around the pipe boxes, and after she had filled the pipes she'd crawl into the lap of one of the officers and sleep curled up

WITH THE FIRST JAPANESE ARMY IN MANCHURIA

Special Cable Despatches from FREDERICK PALMER, Collier's Correspondent with the Japanese Army in Manchuria

The following cable despatches describe the situation at Antung after the passage of the Yalu by the Japanese army. It takes six weeks for mail matter to reach New York from Antung; the events treated in these cablegrams, together with the fighting along the Yalu, will all be set forth in detail in letters yet to arrive. The cable regulations imposed on the correspondents require that only a limited number of words be sent at one time, which accounts for the three parts into which the following correspondence is divided.

Antung, May 10, by Overland Messenger to Seoul, May 14

THE TWO DAYS' ACTION which resulted in the crossing of the Yalu by the Japanese and the occupation, on May 1, of Chiu-lien-Cheng, on the north bank of the river opposite Wiju, scarcely made any interruption in the machine-like movement of the Japanese force. Discipline was in no way relaxed, nor the onward march stayed. Deducting the killed and wounded, the army now proceeds with its customary automatic precision. The twenty Russian field-guns which the Japanese captured, together with twenty officers and four hundred men at Hoh-Mu-Tang during the pursuit of the fleeing Russians, have been brought back to Antung. Eight Maxims, fifty ammunition wagons, and many other munitions of war which were captured during the pursuit of the Russians have also been brought to Antung. They include heavy band instruments; heavy, lumbering equipment—fit, perhaps, for the Russian steppes, but totally unfit for the rough Manchurian roads for which the mobile, light Japanese equipment was especially prepared. The contrast between the Russian and the Japanese equipment is the contrast between a heavy truck and a light buggy.

The Russians apparently moved down to their position on the Yalu River as they might from one Siberian garrison to another, without taking thought of how they were to get away and without making any proper roads to their own position. The trenches which their infantry had to defend were without the support of artillery, and wholly unadapted for cover from the galling Japanese shell fire. In the crossing of the Yalu, garrison vegetation and easy-going overconfidence were forced to meet the preparedness of the specialist attacking his special task. The Cossack sabres taken in the engagement had all edges. Later we may meet a real Russian army equipped with St. Petersburg modernity and acumen. Thus far the clash has been between old-fashioned courage and sword-brandishing against scientific readiness. What is now real and most is the unprecedented mobility of the Japanese infantry.

The Japanese soldiers at the present moment are surprised at their own success. They have inflicted a crushing blow to Russian prestige, and demonstrated their ability to meet the soldiers of Europe on equal terms and defeat them. They can scarcely yet explain to themselves why the enemy were apparently so unprepared. Notwithstanding the elation of victory, there is little celebration by the Japanese. They proceed quietly about their work, keeping their own counsel. The kindness with which the Japanese treated the captured Russians, who were brought back to Antung, is noticeable and peculiarly interesting. I saw the guards yesterday talking and laughing with their prisoners, and little brown men teaching gymnastic exercises to big Russians head and shoulders taller than themselves.

Antung, May 10, by Overland Messenger to Seoul, May 14

From the stories told by Russian officers who were captured during the two days' engagement, it appears that the Russian force was of two minds, and that in the distribution of the force to meet the Japanese attack there was considerable indecision. The Russian general in command believed that the Japanese would cross the Yalu at Antung, and a number of the younger officers believed that the Japanese would cross the river (as they did cross it) somewhat above Wiju. The Russians planned to make their heaviest stand at Antung, building strong trenches along the water front and lining the base of the hills with emplacements. All of this preparation was wasted, and not a shot was fired from the trenches. On one little thing hung the Russian disaster. A tug going up the river with bridge materials landed at one of the lower islands opposite Antung. These materials were intended for a permanent bridge and not for the crossing above Wiju, where the Japanese actually forced their passage. The Russian general misinterpreted the mission of the tug, and made his preparations, therefore, in the wrong place. Russian prisoners captured by the Japanese complain that their staff officers fled from the field, and that two regiments of reserves, upon which they had relied, did not come up to their assistance.

The Yalu action needed only cavalry to have been an object lesson in the utility of every arm of the Japanese service. Japanese strategy was vividly shown in the manner in which the enemy was deceived in regard to the point of crossing, in the tactics by which reserves were used for pursuit, and by the skill with which the engineers built screens to hide the gun approaches. The efficient skill of the Japanese was demonstrated in the accuracy, power, and concentration of their artillery fire, the use of common shells and of shrapnel for specific purposes, and the ease with which the infantry changed and mobilized under fire, and in a mountainous country, where cavalry could not be used. Any branch of the service, in fact, except the cavalry, might claim the Yalu victory as their own.

Many of these Japanese soldiers have been in the field now for three months, and yet there is very little sickness. Their hardened spirit has been increased by the victory, but the victory has not interfered with their industry, nor the zeal with which they go about the drudgery of preparation for the new advance. Japanese stubbornness was shown by one company which lost half of its men and three out of four of its officers at Hamotan, and yet still stood up to the fight. Since the occupation of Antung by the Japanese there has been no lawlessness on the part of the Japanese soldiery. Officially and privately, the Japanese officers and soldiers are paying for everything in the way of food and supplies that they appropriate. The Chinese natives have not changed in any way with the change of conquerors.

Antung, May 7, by Overland Messenger to Seoul, May 14

With the Japanese in complete control of Antung, and perfect surface-quiet prevailing, it is hard to realize that the Russian force is, comparatively speaking, only a short distance away. There are no Americans or Europeans here, with the exception of the foreign correspondents. For the present we are not allowed to leave Antung; and as to what is going on at the front, now that the river has been crossed and the Russians are being pursued, we know nothing. When another battle is at hand we are to be informed at short notice and permitted to witness the action from the best viewpoint.

CHEMULPO JACKIES AT THE WINTER PALACE, ST. PETERSBURG

This picture gives an excellent idea of the typical Russian sailor. These men have just received their gifts from the Emperor, who granted an audience to the officers and men who had survived Chemulpo, and their war medals are pinned to their blouses. Before receiving these mementoes they had marched through the St. Petersburg streets and had been received with the most enthusiastic greetings by the Russian populace.

PRESENTATION OF MEMENTOES TO SURVIVORS OF CHEMULPO

This scene depicts the impressive ceremony held in the great Alexander Hall at St. Petersburg. At this ceremony the naval officers who served at Chemulpo were eulogized, and gifts and honors conferred upon them. General Durnowo is presiding at the middle of the long table on the platform and reading his address. Some of the gifts are shown on the smaller table in front of the platform. This was only one of the many ceremonies held in honor of the Chemulpo officers and crews. The Emperor, the nobility, and the Russian people at large united in showering them with honors and rewards.

RUSSIA DOES HONOR TO HER NAVAL HEROES

THE DOWNFALL OF RUSSIA'S FAVORITES

By JOHN CALLAN O'LAUGHLIN
Collier's Special Correspondent at St. Petersburg

VICE-ADMIRAL SKRYDLOFF
Commanding the Navy in the Far East

COUNT MURAVIEFF
Lamsdorff's predecessor as Foreign Minister

ST. PETERSBURG, May 1, 1904

IN the entourage of the Czar a struggle is in progress as intense as that which is under way in the Far East, and probably more bitter. The combatants are the men who, before the war, made a determined effort to preserve peace, and the men whose policy, being imposed upon the Emperor, precipitated Japanese action.

It is a game of see-saw in Russia—first you are out and then you are in. The arbiter is not a whole people, but a single man, who enjoys the title and dignity of Emperor. It is his act which makes you, his act which undoes you. He, therefore, is the target at which every one aims his arguments and his flattery. If he adopt your policy to-day and find it good, you will be the Man of the Moment; your enemies can be relegated to unofficialdom, and that usually means obscurity. But when your enemies triumph, then you may expect the punishment that you meted out to them.

I am giving this little homily on Russian politics because it enables better understanding of the various moves that have been made and are being made to-day by powerful men seeking to control—under the Czar, of course—the Government. The men who brought on the war are to-day in disfavor. Bezobrazoff, the friend of the Grandduke Constantine, and one of the chief instigators of the forward policy, is in practical exile at Cannes. Vice-Admiral Alexieff, the Viceroy of the Czar's Far Eastern possessions, is a figurehead that any day may be cut down. The Grand Committee, formed to advise the Emperor on the conduct of affairs in eastern Siberia and Manchuria, discharges merely perfunctory duties.

Where are the men of peace? De Witte, who was shelved as President of the Council of the Empire, is to-day the strongest man, outside of those holding official executive positions, in the Empire. Lamsdorff, the able Minister for Foreign Affairs, has retained his office, and immeasurably increased his influence with the Czar. Kuropatkin is in independent command of the armies of the Czar in Manchuria. Skrydloff is charged with the direction of the operations of the battered fleet at Port Arthur.

Both parties are united on one point: That the war must be fought out to the bitter end, and that that end shall be Russia's triumph. They are divided because the one seeks vindication and its reascendency in the councils of the Emperor, the other to hold the position it has attained and to strengthen itself so firmly that it can not be dislodged. A curious feature of the struggle is that neither can afford to have the Japanese gain a great initial success on land. That would reflect upon Kuropatkin and lead to the final downfall of Alexieff. But victory would benefit Kuropatkin far more than it would advantage Alexieff. Russia needs a military hero at this moment to take the place of Makaroff; for Skrydloff, whatever valor he may show, however seaworthy he may make his fleet, can not hope to bring it to a state of efficiency where he can gain command of the sea.

To understand to-day's situation in internal politics in Russia it is necessary to revert to the genesis of the Manchurian question. My investigation has firmly convinced me, I may say in passing, that when Count Cassini, the Russian Minister to China (now Ambassador to the United States), negotiated the lease of Port Arthur, he had no idea that his country would seek to acquire all of Manchuria. It was the natural consequence of the taking of Port Arthur that Russia should seek control of Masampo, Korea, thereby making a connection with Vladivostok. All this could have been avoided had Great Britain not opposed Russia's acquisition of Port Lazareff, on the Korean shore of the Sea of Japan, and the present war might have been avoided or at least postponed for some years. But the acquisition of Port Arthur and Dalny was the beginning of the struggle. Alexieff, desiring to be a second Muravieff, who forced Russia into Far Eastern Siberia, determined that the opportunity was impending when his country should be sovereign over the magnificent Manchurian region and enjoy the ice-free waters of the Yellow Sea. But Alexieff, thousands of miles from St. Petersburg, could not impose his will upon the Emperor. Here it was that he found an ally in Bezobrazoff, a man of intense purpose, an excellent talker, and already of considerable influence. "He is an individual," to quote a gentleman with whom I have discussed Russian politics, "who has to a high degree the marvelous faculty of impressing his personality upon you. He can make you look in his way through his spectacles when your own have already told you that the object to be examined is not good to touch. That is what he did with the Czar." Bezobrazoff was vigorously supported by Prince Uchtomsky, editor of the St. Petersburg "Viedomosti," who has expanded the Pan-Slavic Empire to include as much of the Far East as may be necessary for the greatness of that Empire. These men were supported by several ministers, among them Plehve, who would gain personally by the humiliation of the ministers in the peace party. The Boxer outbreak came, and then began the motion of the pendulum, first swinging to the policy of annexation and then to the policy of holding simply to what had been gained under the Cassini convention. It is interesting to read the Russian correspondence, and to find one day a telegram from a general, who has crossed into Manchuria and defeated the Chinese troops, announcing to the Emperor that more territory has been added to his dominions, and almost at the same time to discover a solemn notification to the powers, issued by Count Lamsdorff, in which it is positively stated that Russia has no ulterior designs upon Chinese territory. Count Lamsdorff should not be accused of bad faith in connection with the declarations he made. He based them upon what he believed to be the policy of the Government, and that policy was his policy and that of M. de Witte. It may be noted at this point that the Russian notes were issued always when the party which sought faithful observance of Russian declarations was in the ascendancy. When the Marquis Ito came to St. Petersburg, after passing through the United States, de Witte urged him to meet Russia half way in a settlement of the Manchurian and Korean questions, but Ito had been advised by the Japanese Minister in London that negotiations had been commenced for the now famous Anglo-Japanese Treaty of alliance. Consequently he was indisposed to accept de Witte's suggestion, especially as the then Minister for Finance was unable to say that any concessions, beyond such as had already been communicated to Japan, would be made.

The Anglo-Japanese Treaty was a terrible blow to the Alexieff-Bezobrazoff party. The response which Russia and France made was less effective than is generally known, for the simple reason that Manchuria was excluded from its scope—a fact that was not at the time apparent to the rest of the world. The Czar was advised of the danger of the forward policy of Alexieff and Bezobrazoff, and he instructed Count Lamsdorff to negotiate a treaty for the evacuation of Manchuria. He honestly carried out the first provision in relation to the evacuation of the southern portion of the region.

Alexieff and Bezobrazoff accepted the treaty without protest; any other course would have been folly. They were the first to recover from the effect of the Anglo-Japanese alliance. They were satisfied, they told the Czar, that Great Britain would not engage in another costly war, especially over the comparatively minor question of Manchuria, and their information convinced them that Japan was not financially in condition to undertake hostile operations such as would be necessary against Russia. It took them a year to impose their views again, and by that time the Czar's forces had retired from Mukden. Then again rumors began to circulate of more Russian demands upon China, which contemplated further concessions to the Muscovite power. Count Lamsdorff denied them. His denial was hardly uttered when the cause of the delay in the execution of the provisions of the evacuation treaty was explained by the Russian chargé d'affaires in Peking. He notified Prince Ching that the delay was due to the military party in Russia.

Having been long stationed in the East, Alexieff believed he knew Eastern people, and did not let Japan's indignation disturb him. His position was strengthened by the polite suggestion of Japan that Russia engage in new negotiations for the settlement of the questions pending between them. It looked as if Japan, in spite of her alliance with Great Britain, had determined to settle with Russia by negotiation. There was jubilation among the Alexieff-Bezobrazoff party when the news reached St. Petersburg. On August 12 the Czar created the Viceroyalty of the Far East, and appointed Alexieff to the post. He organized the committee to formulate policies in regard to this vast region. A terrific blow was administered to the anti-Alexieff-Bezobrazoff combination by the transfer on August 29 of de Witte from the position of Finance Minister to that of President of the Council of State. De Witte had held the purse-strings. In the Council of State he could do little damage to the ambitious projects of the favorites of the Emperor.

Count Lamsdorff participated in the negotiations, but their real conduct was intrusted to Alexieff, and Bezobrazoff co-operated with him. The result was that Japan gained substantial diplomatic victories, which might not have been achieved had a trained diplomatist like Count Lamsdorff managed the Russian side of the negotiations. When war became inevitable, Bezobrazoff began to lose influence, and suddenly high official society in St. Petersburg was startled by the announcement that he had retired to Cannes, and that that retirement, it was whispered, was by invitation of the Emperor.

Alexieff was still in the Far East, and as Viceroy in direct control of the operations of the army and navy. In command of the fleet at Port Arthur was Vice-Admiral Stark, his personal friend. As he had not prepared for war

COUNT CASSINI
Ambassador to the United States, formerly Minister to China

M. DE WITTE
President of the Council of the Empire

COUNT LAMSDORFF
Minister of Foreign Affairs

GENERAL KUROPATKIN
Commanding the Army in Manchuria

Illustrations by B. Cory Kilvert

FIVE LITTLE MEN

By W. A. FRASER

Aleck, Teddy, Cyril, Jimmie, and Stewart are five young Americans who live in the small town of Tona, and devote their entire attention to looking for trouble—in the quest of which they are peculiarly successful. The present tale concerns the smoking of their first cigarettes, an adventure attended with dire results. There are six stories in the series; they will appear consecutively in the Household Numbers during the summer, under the following titles: "A Shattered Apostle," "Tige, a Story with Atmosphere," "Patent Fog Signals," "The Awakening of Rastus," and "A Gaudy Combat"

I.—A LITTLE SMOKE AND MUCH FIRE

TONA was a quiet Canadian village. It never had been struck by lightning, because when thunderstorms came its way they fell asleep. The city of York, thirty miles away, knew nothing of Tona—not even of the five little citizens who rippled the quiet waters of its silent pool-like calm at times.

The five citizens spoken of were Aleck Graham, Teddy Rivers, Cyril Baker, Jimmie Maclean, and Stewart Drummond.

They were so evenly balanced in their divers abilities that no one of the lot could have been actually called the leader.

Aleck Graham was the eldest, aged ten; he was also the strongest.

Cyril Baker was nine, and had an inventive facility that offset Aleck's strength. He had been rechristened Brownie. His round chubby face, big, short-sighted eyes twinkling with mischief behind a pair of glasses, had early invited the name. Teddy Rivers was always a man of possessions. More portable things of desire attached themselves to him than came the way of the others. Teddy could be depended upon to furnish the sinews of war. Why he was called Stubs no one knew, not even himself; but Stubs he was to the boys.

Jimmie Maclean was diminutive, even for his age. He was perhaps the handiest man on the force; he was spring-steel, catgut little-giant-powder. His name condensed to "Tootsey" embodied the determination of the outfit. Many an undertaking, which really turned out fairly successful, would have been abandoned but for Stewart.

There never had been quite so suitable a place as Tona for five citizens such as these. There were barns, and stables, and hen-houses, and apple trees, and horse-chestnut trees; two fish ponds, with the glorious adjunct of prohibited fishing, and the West Branch, a small stream, loitering through clover-perfumed fields, and maple groves, and pine bush; and in its purple pools lurked gold-and-scarlet-spotted trout that darted from one eddy to another over shallows, sheets of rippling silver in the summer sunlight; there was a sawmill, express wagons, and just over the hill the railway station, parentally thought to be territory unexplored of the five.

Primarily and of intent, a town constable is not a functionary for the delight of small boys; but how can a small red-faced gentleman, known as "Goosefoot," put down sin? So "Goosefoot," the Tona guardian of the peace, must be included in the above inventory.

Aleck Graham's parents kept hens. This, on the face of it, seemed an innocuous if troublesome form of agriculture. Left to themselves, probably the hens would have gone no further on the way of their destructive destiny than the looting of neighbor Cameron's garden, with its tempting ripe tomatoes, or a pertinacious pilgrimage to the baker's back yard, which was on the other side of the Graham estate; but with Aleck and his four comrades pulling the strings of fate, one can see that anything was possible even with hens. And it was all caused by a cigarette, too.

It was Saturday, and Aleck had sat in the vacant lot opposite Cyril's house until, one by one, the other four had swarmed.

"What'll we do, fellers?" Aleck asked.

"Where's Blitz?" queried Cyril.

Blitz was a fox-terrier of the Graham household.

"He's home. Say, boys, he had a jim-dandy fight. You know Beaton's black dog. Well, he come in our yard, an' I sneaked Blitz out the door. Moses! didn't they go for it?"

"Who licked?" piped in little Jimmie.

"Blitz did; I helped, 'cause Beaton's dog's bigger an' part bull. What d' you want Blitz for, Brownie?"

"'Cause I got two cats shut up in the woods. Gee! they're dandies to fight, too. I seen 'em snarl about, an' throwed in some meat—say, maw'll be 'cause p'raps it was good meat—p'raps she'll make us go to the butcher's fer some more fer dinner."

"Did the toms go in?" asked Aleck.

"You bet; an' I biffed the door shut—an' we could sit on the wood-pile and see through the window, an' Blitz in—say, Jimmie, ain't you got a dog to your place?"

"He ain't no good fer to fight cats," declared Jimmie, "but he'll bite a man. I sicked him on that feller that looks like a tramp—"

"That cuts the wood?" queried Teddy.

"Yes—that's the old skeezicks."

"Say, ain't he an old crank—I hit him with an apple just this mornin', an' he chased me over into Pe Small's. Did he bite him?"

"He only tore his pants," Jimmie said regretfully.

"Dogs ain't no fun," grumbled Aleck.

"I got ten cents," declared Teddy.

He had been keeping this under pressure. His statement threw the meeting into parlous quietude. The others looked at him with reverence. Cyril's active mind discovered a hundred plans in a minute for investing the capital in schemes prolific of enjoyment.

No one spoke, and Teddy, to enhance the grandeur of his position, drew forth the money and held it gleaming silver in the palm of his brown hand.

"What you goin' to do with Tootsy?" hazarded Aleck tentatively.

"Dunno; p'raps I'll save it up."

"I'd buy all-day-suckers if I had it," declared Jimmie.

All-day-suckers were candy enticements that clung to sticks with pertinacious adhesiveness. At an apiece they were an investment that yielded a great deal of succulent enjoyment.

"I wouldn't," objected Tootsie; "I buy a ball, an' we could play Am Sally."

"That ain't no good 'thout prize," said Cyril.

"Say, fellers," began Teddy hesitatingly, "wouldn't you like to try smoke cigarettes same's Jack Woolley does?"

The others looked just a little frightened; it was a big jump. Instinctively they had individually thought of this essayment would come into their lives, but at some future time, some day a long, long way off. Now they were face to face with the great problem that every boy fronts soon or late—to smoke. To become a man was a great achievement; to be able to smoke was very much like having attained to that state of life. The glamorous seductiveness of smoke, same's Jack Woolley, given by Teddy's words, hung with solemnity on their young minds. It was Tootsie's cue; the occasion required determination one way or the other.

They were squeezed and kissed as though they had done a great thing in fact, he had essayed in his young life almost everything but the cigarette.

"Bet you I could smoke," he exclaimed decisively. "So could I," affirmed Cyril.

"You'd get sick," objected Aleck.

"Not if you didn't swallow the smoke," exclaimed Tootie. "Just blow it through your nose, that's the way Jack Woolley does."

"G'on!" said Aleck contemptuously, "there ain't no hole 'tween your mouth and your nose."

"I've seen Jack Woolley blow it through his nose," corroborated Jimmie.

"I've seen Sandy Miller do it, too," added Cyril.

"You don't get sick if you spit," Teddy contributed to the general law.

"Bet you I could smoke," reaffirmed Tootie; "Aleck's afraid, 'cause his daddy'd lick him."

Tootie could work any of them when it came down to seeing the thing through.

"'Fraid nothin'! Bet you I can smoke mor'n you an, Tootie."

"We mustn't tell. Hope I may die!" commanded Teddy. They all repeated the dismal oath, and Teddy, taving concocted a plan that he was buying the cigarettes for his big brother, marched off to the store, while the others waited for him in the Grahams' stable, or this place had been decided upon as likely to screen them from prying eyes while they made themselves men.

Now the hens were domiciled in the stable, and when Aleck opened the door they swirled forth like a wedge of wild geese.

"Gee whiz!" cried Cyril delightedly; "let's boost the hens over the fence where them tomatoes is, an' make old Cameron mad."

"Blamed old things," exclaimed Aleck disgustedly. "If mother sees the hens, she'll come down and spoil the fun. Come on, boys, and shut 'em in again."

But the hens didn't want to get shut up, and, with fierce cackle and erratic runs, they dodged the boys, until Aleck cried: "Say, fellers, let the derned old things stay out. Mother'll hear 'em sure. We'll go in the ice house—it's cool's anything there, too—and if mother comes down, she'll shut 'em up and not see us."

The ice house, that had originally been a shed, was a lean-to at the end of the stable.

Teddy turned up with the cigarettes, and soon the little men were puffing away behind closed doors in the luxuriously cool atmosphere, which was the natural environment of a ton of ice.

At the third whiff little Jimmie said, "I'd rather have all-day-suckers."

"Bet yer sick," offered Aleck.

"No I ain't, neither. I never said bet you I could smoke—it was Tootie. An' maw said I must be home sure at four o'clock."

"Well, you can't go out now," commanded Aleck, "'cause men don't go to have a smoke together an' jump up in' run away soon's they've lighted a cigar."

"Pretend it ain't a good one, Jimmie, an' you don't like this kind, an' chuck it through the door. I seen Jack Woolley do that when he'd got a lot of them."

"I like to smoke bully—bet you I could smoke two," boasted Tootie.

"Chuck it away, Jimmie," pleaded Cyril.

Jimmie got to his feet somewhat unsteadily, and in his face was the drawn hastiness of internal disquiet. With defiant swagger he took a big draw at the cigarette till it almost blazed, then he opened the door a little, and lung the white thing of depression brought the crack.

The hens had been hovering querulously about the ice house, wondering, so doubt, why Aleck didn't bring forth the food he ad gone there for. They were pampered hens; nobody ever visited the stable without feeding them.

As the cigarette soared into the yard there was a rush of gray and black and brown fowl, very much like the coming together of men on the football field. A cockerel won the prize. With a thrust his beak through the cigarette, and he was on the dead end. The others gave chase; old cock and pullet and patron all swarmed after the lucky youngster who ad come by this thing that looked like a fat white food-grub.

The cockerel headed for the stable and into it, outpacing the motley gang at his heels.

Jimmie, relieved of the tobacco fiend, sat down and maliciously watched the others, one by one, come into his arden of misery.

Little was being said; the exhilaration of the adventure was being vanquished by the depression of attainment. Cyril was the next to succumb. The cigarette dropped from his fingers while he sat in vacuous silence—he was afraid to move.

"Let's go home, Brownie," pleaded Jimmie, seeing that the former had finished his smoke.

Brownie shook his head mutely. Even that movement caused him to lurch and hiccough.

"Bet you I ain't sick," boasted Tootie; then he coughed huskily.

"Brownie didn't spit, that's why he's seasick," volunteered Teddy.

"Bet you I could smoke another," cried Aleck.

"Wisht I had a drink of water," said Teddy; "smoke makes my throat awful dry."

"Me, too," cried Aleck. "What's the matter with gettin' some ice?"

"I'll get it, Aleck," volunteered Cyril.

It was at this moment that Mrs. Graham, coming to the back window, saw smoke clouding from the stable. It was pouring forth in a thick volume—the stable was on fire.

She rushed through the hall, through the front door,

From the shoe-shop, the barber's, the tailor's, from the two hotels standing opposite each other, hurried the brawn and muscle of the village.

The cry and the meteor-white shirt of the grocer said all there was to be said on the subject for the time being; the business in hand had connection with the fire reel, and to get there promptly was a patent necessity. Like the roll of many billows the humans surged to the fire-hall.

"Where's the fire?" panted Captain Jack Drummond.

"Graham's!" gasped the grocer, as he ran out the rope of the reel.

"Clear the way—out with her, boys!" yelled the captain.

The wheels of the reel crunched at the gravel, the rope was spun out like a sinuous snake, the bell clanged. "Hi, hi, hi!" passed from man to man, and like an angry juggernaut car the reel tore through the village street, and with a swirling curve down the lane that led to the Grahams' stable.

Ahead of the firemen ran citizens, and at the first commotion in the lane, one of the boys in the ice house—they were in blissful ignorance of the fire and the coming of the reel—peeped through the door. Then with a gasp he closed it and sank in a trembling heap.

"It's your dad, Brownie," he whispered. "He's comin' down the lane. Some one's told about the smokin' an' we'll get an awful lickin'."

Then the boys heard other voices, next the grind of the hose reel.

"Gee!" whispered Aleck, "what's the gold-darn row?"

"P'raps it's a horse runned away," whispered Teddy.

"Keep mum," pleaded Cyril, for the dread of his father was strong upon him.

Without daring to look, wild-eyed and sick, the boys sat huddled up listening to a turmoil that filled the yard. Presently a bright idea flashed through Aleck's mind. He leaned over and said: "It's fire practice, fellers; they're 'tendin' our stable's afire."

"I knowed they was goin' to have it to-day, I saw paw takin' his trumpet with him to the shop."

By the time the hose had been unreeled, flames were bursting through the roof.

In the first wild excitement of the fire cry, no one had thought of the boys; not till a man came pushing his way up to Mrs. Graham and asked: "Where's Aleck? Where's my boy Teddy?"

The woman's eyes opened wide in horror—she had forgotten.

"Why—oh, my God!" she gasped, and sprang forward as though she would rush into the burning building.

The man clutched her with a strong hand, and asked short and sharp, "Have they been in the house?"

Her eyes answered him.

"Here, Dick!" he yelled, "hold her. Here, man! the boys are in that stable. They've set it afire. I saw them coming down the lane an hour ago."

With a rush a dozen men dashed at the open door; the flames and smoke belching forth drove them back with scorched faces and choked lungs.

"Oh, God, my boy! Help me, men. For God's sake, help me!" pleaded Rivers, as he reeled for a second in the open air, then again plunging into the crackling furnace. Just inside, the suffocating smoke of burning straw drove into his lungs and he fell.

On hands and knees he started forward, weakly, half unconscious. A strong pair of hands seized him by the feet and mercifully drew him forth from the mouth of death.

"No man can live a second in there," said Drummond, in a choked voice. "If the boys are there, they're dead."

"Here's a door," called a fireman, indicating the ice house; "play the hose in there on me, an' I'll break through the wall and get in that way."

With a shout, as the door was thrown open, the river of water was sent into the ice house, and on its back ebb floated out the five who were supposed to be cremating in the other compartment.

For a minute it looked as though the stable would be allowed to burn. The hose was actually dropped, while strong hands gathered up the dragged rats, and they were squeezed and kissed as though they had done a great thing, instead of having set fire to a stable.

The fire, however, was mastered after it had gutted the building, and during this time a woman sat on the ground, huddled against the brick wall of the house, rocking her body to and fro, and kissing a very much drenched boy that was clasped in her arms, while she repeated: "Thank God! Thank God! Oh, my boy!"

AT THE GREAT RELEASE

By BLISS CARMAN

PHIAON TO SAPPHO

WHEN the black horses from the house of Dis
Stop at my door and the dead charioteer Knocks at my portal, summoning me to go
On the far solitary unknown way
Where all the race of men fare and are lost,
Fleeting and numerous as the autumnal leaves
Before the wind in Lesbos of the Isles;

Though a chill draft of fear may quell my soul
And dim my spirit like a flickering lamp
In the great gusty hall of some old king,
Only one mordant unassuaged regret,
One passionate eternal human grief,
Would wring my heart with bitterness and tears
And set the mask of sorrow on my face.

Not youth, nor early fame, nor pleasant days,
Nor flutes, nor roses, nor the taste of wine,
Nor sweet companions of the idle hour
Who brought me tender joys, nor the glad sound
Of children's voices playing in the dusk;
All these I could forget and bid good-by
And pass to my oblivion, nor repine.

Not the green woods that I so dearly love,
Nor Summer hills in their serenity,
Nor the great sea mystic and musical,
Nor drone of insects, nor the call of birds,
Nor soft Spring flowers, nor the wintry stars;
To all the lovely earth that was my home
Smiling and valiant I could say farewell.

But not, O not to one strong little hand,
To one droll mouth brimming with witty words,
Nor ever to the unevasive eyes
Where dwell the light and sweetness of the world
With all the sapphire sparkle of the sea!
Ah, Destiny, against whose knees we kneel
With prayer at evening, spare me this one woe!

and in the village street stood screaming, "Fire! fire! fire!"

Then again, "Fire! God help me—Fire! The stable is on fire!"

On the opposite corner the storekeeper was carrying a basket of eggs in from a farm wagon that stood at his door. When the shrill, half-maniacal scream of a frightened woman's voice smote on his ear, he started and let the basket drop. The eggs clutched at each other on the walk and lapsed into a little ochre-colored lake.

"Bless me!" he exclaimed, and in the next breath sent a roaring bass, "Fire!" up the main street of Tona.

Leaving the eggs just where they had settled down so comfortably, without coat and hatless, he followed his own cry of warning over the sounding board-walk on a run for the fire hall, for he was one of the fire brigade.

COPYRIGHT 1904 BY COLLIER'S WEEKLY

AT THE

DRAWN BY C.

ATINÉE

IA GIBSON

TRAVELING WITH A BASE BALL TEAM

ANECDOTES OF THE LIFE AND CHARACTERISTICS OF PROFESSIONAL BASEBALL PLAYERS, AS OBSERVED DURING A SEASON'S TRAVEL WITH A LEAGUE TEAM

By ALLEN SANGREE : With Illustrations by JOHN C. CLAY

THE baseball spectator has often noticed a desire for seclusion on the part of the professional player, and wondered thereat, for it is characteristic of no other athlete. Even newspaper men are little favored with his confidence, and my own reception in the dressing-room of the New York National League Team, when I started out to "cover" baseball for a New York evening paper, will long be remembered. Putting it mildly, I felt embarrassed.

My assignment was to follow the Giants during the season, report every game, travel in their special car, eat at their table, stop at their hotel, never leave their company, and write everything that I thought would interest half a million readers. But neither the sporting editor nor the city editor, who was the past grand master of all the baseball cranks I ever met, gave me precise instructions as to the line of thought I was to disburse.

A Herculean Task

"Fill up a couple of columns every day," said the one; "anything you can think of, for the public just eats this stuff alive. That's all I know."

"Give us something original, funny," demanded the city editor, growing excited over the mere prospect of seeing a game: "tell incidents of the men; play no favorites, and—and—well, I tell you," he concluded, with a flash of inspiration, "get a laugh out of me once a week and you'll make a hit." Knowing the city editor, it occurred to me that Hercules had a cinch.

The last bit of advice came from the youngest sporting writer, who said, "Don't be too friendly with the players." And that I had no trouble in heeding, for when I announced my assignment in the dressing-room, as the men were preparing to play Chicago, and ten thousand people had already bundled through the gates, I evoked nothing but scowls, leers, and audible displeasure. Instead of being under obligations to me for doing the Boswell act, the team evidently regarded me as an intruder. Even Manager McGraw, to whom I had been introduced, met me with an icy stare. If you think the Grand Lama's Council Chamber an exclusive place, try breaking into a professional ball team's dressing-room.

After the season had advanced and I was on more intimate terms with the players, the inestimable value and the definite reason for this exclusiveness plainly revealed itself. I saw then that the whole success of a team depended upon a certain isolation, because that engenders enthusiasm, and enthusiasm is the keynote of a team's progress. It is written in letters of gold a mile high.

Whatever difference there may be in the game now and ten years ago is ascribed to this element, joined with an almost military sternness. The League player of to-day should combine the alert precision of a German army officer and the ardor of a Comanche Indian on the warpath. It is a fact that the nine men on a champion team represent more impetuous, mad, relentless spirit than the yells of thirty thousand rooters. Concealed beneath those hard faces, within those rigid muscular bodies seethes and burns an unquenchable fire. The moment it languishes, the team has a "slump." The best player on the diamond, when his spirit drags, deteriorates in value. If it will not revive, he should quickly make a long contract with a minor league; or, better still, retire to some business. A "has been," they call him.

The Fostering of Enthusiasm

Now the place to coddle, nourish, promulgate, and foster this essential commodity is in the dressing-room, just as a theatrical company is rounded into shape behind the scenes, where outsiders are excluded as much as possible. But a difference is, that while the audience is a great stimulant to an actor, spectators very little influence a baseball player. He is working for love of the game, commendation of manager, increased salary, and success of team. Before the first inning is over he is speculating, not on what the people or papers may say, but what the boys will say in the dressing-room, and it is there the team—if it be enthusiastic—will rush lickety split when the last man is out and the mob fighting its way to the street.

Picture to yourself a long, narrow room, flanked on all sides with opened lockers, the floor covered with benches, bats, masks, protectors, and uniforms, a shower bath turned full on, rubbers and attendants waiting for a call, and every player trying to get undressed first. Backward and forward the naked heroes dodge—and it would surprise a rooter to see the apparent lack of physical development in many a great player, bunches of muscle not being coveted in this kind of athletics—some gay, others gloomy, but all thinking.

For the space of about five minutes there is a conscious silence that the veteran is slow to disturb. Usually, therefore, it is a younger man who, no longer able to contain himself, finally blurts out with the narrative of his one-handed catch against the right-field fence, a catch that blocked three runs and saved the game, only that instead of being, as it impressed the rooter, an evidence of superlative skill, to him it was the "darndest lucky grab I ever made; didn't know the ball was in my hand."

In the Dressing-room after the Game

Moved by this outbreak, Jones, the third baseman, shoves aside the massage pugilist, who has been beating him with a covert grin, and triumphantly describes the ruse he worked along with pitcher and shortstop, to nail a dangerous runner on his way from second.

"I knowed Baily would bunt, so I told Charley [shortstop] to play way up and cover this," while I came in. Well, Joe [pitcher] gave him a fast ball and she rolled right at me. Hey, Charley, you covered some ground there! That's a stunt you can always work with Chicago." The three conspirators laugh uproariously at this and conversation becomes general.

So long as the discussion treats on clever plays everything is pleasant, but when that feature has been thoroughly canvassed there happens another lull, this time shattered by an ominous snarl, when, like a flash, the room flickers luridly with reprimand, abuse, and malediction. Slamming his elastic ankle bandages into the locker, centre field turns to demand angrily of left fielder: "Say, mister, why didn't you shift with me when you saw McFadden [a left-hand batter] was trying to pull it over, hey?" Whereupon the other springs from under the shower, scattering water and profanity, returning in kind, "Because, you lobster, they were feedin' him a fast ball, that's why. Tell me, I played the game when you were cutting teeth."

Meanwhile, the second baseman has rounded on the shortstop to know why he banged that pick-up at him so hard that he dropped it and got an error on the official score. "You had enough time," says he, "to carry it over. What ye trying to do, knock me?"

"Back up," returns the shortstop; "it was right in your hands. You couldn't get away from it. Now, don't do the baby act."

Cheerful Recriminations

Then the catcher assails third baseman for not being on the bag when he feinted at a throw to second, and the room jangles with menacing clamor, a discord that to the outsider would suggest complete demoralization.

On the contrary, that team is then in the very meridian of its progress, and the lynx-eyed captain in the corner, you will notice, is barely able to suppress a smile. Instead of squelching the blaze, he adds fuel with well-timed sarcasm or rebuke. He is enjoying the scene "down to the ground," for he knows that his team has not "lost heart in the game."

To sustain this enthusiasm during a season is the aim of every manager, and the professional that responds promptly at all times will hold his position even with a modicum of skill. This explains why grizzled men with "Charley Horse" and grown-up children draw bigger salaries each year and accomplish exceptional plays. It is these men who become so interested in a town-lot game that they forget to report at the club house. They are youngsters again, and have more ardor than the lads that play "hookey" or steal away from work at home to take part in a game that has been the talk of the nine for weeks. Any one who has had that delicious but tragic experience can appreciate what it means.

Personally I recall life in a Pennsylvania hamlet where my father was a clergyman, and tried to complement a meagre salary by cultivating a garden that in the Stone Age had perhaps been fertile. You may have noticed that the country parson generally draws the poorest lot in town, and then the parishioners wonder why he can not "make things grow."

At any rate, my brother and I pulled enough weeds out of that garden to choke the Bottomless Pit, and especially did we labor on Saturdays, that day of days when the Back Street Boys played the Main Street Nine, when half the town gathered on the green between our house and the Presbyterian Church, when the welkin—whatever that is—rang with yells of "Home, Skinner, home," "Slide, slide, s-l-i-d-e," "He's goin' t' third, put it on him, sporty," "Hey, Skinner, Home, Home, HOME, wow, yea, ch-e-e-e, WOW-O-W-O-W"; and, mind you, we were pulling weeds in the garden.

Very plain is the recollection of a certain morning, after the congregation had brought us a donation: an annual calamity that made father hustle to replenish food stores, the merry parishioners having devoured all their gifts and a great deal more. Unfortunately, on that occasion they chose for their attack a Friday night preceding the village championship game, and ten o'clock found my brother and me breaking clods, pulling weeds, hauling fertilizer, and otherwise fighting the stubborn earth like two drunken moles.

The Game on the Town Green

"Spooky" Dean, who could not play ball, but made water wheels and afterward became a contractor, pulled himself up the fence from time to time and reported the game's pace, taking pity on our bondage. Inning after inning went by, with even break until the seventh, when "Spooky" showed up pale, and from the roars of Main Street's gang we suspected the truth. "Oh, gosh," cried the future contractor, "Piggy Estep knocked a homer and brought in three runs. Come on, come on," he begged with tears, "the boys are yellin' for you. Your dad isn't lookin'. Come on, oh, we'll lose sure; they'll beat us to death; come on, come on."

By that time we had suffered the limit of mental torture, and our bark of mutiny was slipping on the ways. Father appeared to have entirely shovelled himself into that part of the garden where a railroad company years afterward exploded fifty pounds of giant powder to make a notch for ties, and, taking advantage, we "skinned" the fence.

The wild acclaim that greeted us, who could ever forget! When Back Street joined in a mighty chorus of "Here come the boys," pride gushed as though to throttle, for my brother was a heavy hitter, and I "took 'em off the bat."

"Kangaroo," said our captain with dignity, that being my brother's intimate title, "go on first. Lizard, you ketch"; and then, gentle reader, what counted the positive knowledge that even at the very moment a lusty old apple tree over the fence was shedding one of its veteran branches, my father grimly whittling it to a virile symmetry! Our eyes were bright, our veins throbbled with the red blood of youth, our hands twitched with the kiss of the white ball—a real League ball—and we were heroes in our native town.

Enthusiasm is something that must be conserved. It is precious, not to be wasted. A League catcher, who came to our town and ignored the honors we tried to thrust upon him, doubtless ate, drank, and talked baseball just the same as we lads, but only with his comrades. The same restrictions obtain now, especially on the road, where it is a great temptation to beguile the idle moments in

"fanning" with those who lie in wait for that privilege. The hotel lobby in particular is a Scylla or Charybdis. There, of an evening, the traveling team is beset with every sort of rooster from bank president to bootblack, whose blandishments take in the entire gamut of beverage. But 'ware ship, Mr. League Player, and do not uncork that bottle of enthusiasm. The manager is keeping tabs, and he would rather see you drink five glasses of beer with your pal on the team than one bottle of mineral water with an outsider.

Thus it is that professional ball players appear uncommunicative and surly, and it also explains why nearly all of them are married. Once that explosion in the dressing-room has died away, glowing from their cold shower, and proud of their natty clothes, these high-priced athletes emerge from the gate, elbow through five hundred boys who have been waiting to have a near look, and meet with indifference any attempt to engage them in discussion. In so much, however, as they are but human, there must be some one to sympathize and rejoice. And that one is the ball player's wife.

Only that she is a transcendently important feature of the game, I would not have the temerity to even speak of her, for a ball player holds his wife in a peculiar regard, does not want her name associated with the game, and observes toward her a devotion and faithfulness amounting to sanctity. The locket on his watch chain shelters "her" picture, and when you have gained his confidence, one of those "awful ball players" sitting in the Pullman, to all intents immersed in thinking of his batting average, will open the clasp and diffidently confess: "Old boy, I've got the sweetest little woman on earth; she's an ace if there ever was one"; or "Say, young fellow, when I'm down and out, everybody knockin' me, there's a pal that will stand by to the finish." It is usual for him to return from a trip with jewelry, souvenirs, and valuable gifts—something that "she" will appreciate.

The wife, on the other hand, has tremendous interest in her husband's work, and that interest naturally breeds jealousy. If Mrs. Jones, wife of the first baseman, places herself in a higher social sphere than Mrs. Smith, second baseman's wife; if she nods patronizingly after viewing the game from a box, Mrs. Smith having been on the grand-stand, bitterness transpires in the dressing-room.

Just as those enterprising society women at Washington foment or quell disturbance in diplomatic life, so do ball players' wives injure or help a club. There are other things that demoralize, among them gossip, and any or all may be combated only with enthusiasm. Next to skill it ranks second in the four essentials in a championship nine, the other two being team work and "scrappiness."

Skill, of course, is acquired from a lifetime practice on the diamond. But the other three are developed largely in the dressing-room, and one supplements the other. By that I mean a crack player must have intense eagerness to hit well, run bases, and excel in his position; he must be on good terms with his fellows, and be just as eager for the team's unit success, and, thirdly, he should never lose that chip from his shoulder until it is knocked off.

How old Craney-Crow

An Uncle Remus Story

By JOEL CHANDLER HARRIS

Lost His Head

Illustrated by

FRANK VER BECK

"Mr. Coon rack by an' laugh at 'im" upward at the bird. "Laws-a-mussy!" he exclaimed; "is dey anybody yever see de beat er dat!" He knew well that the bird was a blue heron going to join its kindred in Florida, but he affected great surprise at sight of the bird, and continued to gaze at it as long as it remained in sight. He drew a long breath when it could no longer be seen, and shook his head sadly. "Ef she ain't got no mo' sense dan what her great-granddaddy had, I'm mighty sorry fer her," he declared.

"What kind of a bird is it, Uncle Remus?" the child inquired.

"Folks useter call um Craney-Crows, honey, but now dey ain't got no name but des plain blue crane—an' I dunner whedder dey er wuff sech a big name. Yit I ain't got nothin' ag'in um dat I knows un. Mo' dan dat, when I ermembers 'bout de ol' granddaddy crane what drifted inter dese parts, many's de long time ago, 'twouldn't take much fer ter make me feel right sorry fer de whole kit an' bilin' un um—dey er sech start natchul fools."

"But what is there to be sorry about, Uncle Remus?" the little boy asked. He was rapidly learning to ask questions at the proper time.

"'Bout dey havin' sech a little grain er sense, honey. Ef you know'd what I does, I dunner ef you'd be tickled, er ef you'd feel sorry, an' it's de same way wid me. When I think er dat ol' Great-Granddaddy Crane, I dunner whedder ter laugh er cry."

This was small satisfaction to the little boy, and he was compelled to inquire about it. As this was precisely what the old negro wanted him to do, he lost nothing by being inquisitive. "Dey wuz one time—dunner de day, an' I dunno de year, but 'twuz one time—dey come a big storm. De win' blow'd a har-rycane, an' de rain rained like all de sky an' de clouds in it done been turn ter water. De win' blow'd so hard dat it lifted ol' Craney-Crow fum his roost in de lagoons way down yan' whar dey live at, an' fotch 'im up in dese parts, an' when he come, he come a-whirlin'. De win' tuck 'im up, it did, an' turn 'im roun' an' roun', an' when he lit whar he did, he stagger des like he wuz drunk—you know how you feel when you been turnin' roun' an' roun'? Well, dat wuz de way wid him; he wuz so drunk dat he hatter lean up ag'in a tree.

"But 'twan't long 'fo' he 'gun ter feel all right, an' he look roun' fer ter see whar he at. He look an' he look, but he ain't fin' out, kaze he wuz a mighty fur ways fum home. Yit he feel de water half-way up his legs, an' ef ol' Craney-Crow is in a place whar he kin do a little wadin', he kinder has de home-feelin'—you know how dat is yo'se'f. Well, dar he wuz, a mighty fur ways fum home, an' yit up ter his knees in water, an' he des stood dar, he did, an' tuck his case, hopin' fer better times bimeby. Now, de place whar he wuz blow'd ter wuz Long Cane Swamp, an' I wish I had time fer ter take you over dar an' show you right whar he wuz at when he lit, an' I wish I had time fer ter take you all thoo de Swamp an' let you see fer yo'se'f what kinder Thing it is. 'Tain't only des a Swamp; it's sump'n wuss 'n dat. You kin stan' in de middle un it, an' mos' hear it ketch its breff, an' dat what make I say dat 'tain't no Swamp, fer all it look like one.

"Well, dar wuz ol' Craney-Crow, an' dar wuz de Thing you call de Swamp, an' bimeby de sun riz an' let his lamp shine in dar in places; an' den ol' Craney-Crow had time fer ter look roun' an' see whar he wuz at. But when he fin' out, he ain't know no mo' dan what he know at fus'. Now, you kin say what you please, an' you kin laugh ef you want, but I'm a-gwine ter tell you dat de Swamp know'd dat dey wuz somebody dar what ain't b'long dar. Ef you ax me how de Swamp know'd, I'll shake my head an' shet my eyes; an' ef you ax me how I know it know'd, I'll des laugh at you. You'll hatter take my word er leave it, I don't keer which. But dar 'twuz. De Swamp know'd dat somebody wuz dar what ain't b'long dar, an' it went ter sleep an' had bad dreams, an' it keep on havin' dem dreams all day long."

The little boy had accepted Uncle Remus's statements up to this point, but when he said that the Swamp went to sleep and had bad dreams, the child fairly gasped with doubtful astonishment. "Why, Uncle Remus, how could a swamp go to sleep?"

"It's des like I tell you, honey; you kin take my word er you kin leave it. One way er de yuther, you won't be no better off dan what you is right now. All I know is dis, dat you can't tell no tale ter dem what don't b'lieve it."

"Do you believe it, Uncle Remus? Mother says the stories are fables." Thus the little boy was imbued, without knowing it, with the modern spirit of scientific doubt.

"Does you speck I'd tell you a tale dat I don't b'lieve? Why, I dunner how I'd put de words one atter de yuther. Whensomever you ain't b'lievin' what I'm a-tellin', honey, des le' me know, an' I won't take de time an' trouble fer ter tell it."

"Well, tell me about the Swamp and old Craney Crow," said the little boy, placing his small hand on Uncle Remus's knee coaxingly.

"Well, suh, ef so be, I must, den I shill. Whar wuz I? Yasser! de Swamp, bein' wide awake all night long, is bleeze ter sleep endurin' er de day, an' so, wid ol' Craney-Crow stannin' in de water, when de sun rise up, de Swamp know dat sump'n wuz wrong, an' it went ter sleep an' had mighty bad dreams. De sun riz an' riz; it come up on one side er de Swamp, an' atter so long a time stood over it an' look down fer ter see what de matter. But bright ez de lamp er de sun wuz, it can't light up de Swamp, an' so it went on over an' went down on t'er side.

"De day wuz in about like dese days is, an' whiles de sun wuz s'archin' roun' tryin' fer ter fin' out what de trouble is in de Swamp, ol' Craney-Crow wuz wadin' 'bout in de water tryin' ter fin' some frog steak fer his dinner, er maybe a fish fer ter whet his appetite on. But dey wa'n't nary frog ner nary fish, kaze de Swamp done gone ter sleep. De mo' ol' Craney-Crow waded de mo' shaller de water got, twel bimeby dey wan't nuff fer ter mo' dan wet his foots. He say, 'Hey! how come dis?' But he ain't got no answer, kaze de Swamp, wid all its bad dreams, wuz soun' asleep. Dey wuz pools er water roun' an' about, an' ol' Craney-Crow went fum one ter de yuther, an' fum yuther ter t'other, but 'tain't do him no good. He went an' stood by um, he did, but whiles he stannin' dar, dey wa'n't a ruffle on top un um. Bimeby he got tired er walkin' about, an' he stood on one leg fer ter res' hisse'f—dough ef anybody'll tell me how you gwintet res' yo'se'f wid stannin' on one leg, I'll set up an' tell um tales fum now tell Chris'mus, kaze ef I git tired I kin stan' on one leg an' do my restin' dat-a-way."

"Well, den, dar wuz ol' Craney-Crow, an' dar wuz de Swamp. Ol' Craney-Crow wuz wide awake, but de Swamp wuz fast asleep an' dreamin' bad dreams like a wil' hoss an' waggin' gwine down hill. But de Swamp wa'n't no stiller dan ol' Craney-Crow, stannin' on one leg wid one eye lookin' in de tops er de trees, an' de yuther one lookin' down in de grass. But in de Swamp er out'n de Swamp, time goes on an' night draps down, an' dat's de way it done dis time. An' when night drapped down, de Swamp kinder stretch itse'f an' 'gun ter wake up. Ol' Brer Mud Turkle opened his eyes an' sneeze so hard dat he roll off de bank inter de water—kersplash—an' he so close ter ol' Craney-Crow dat he fetched a hop sideways, an' come mighty nigh steppin' on Mr. Billy Black Snake. Dis skeer'd 'im so dat he fetched an'er hop, an' mighty nigh lit on de frog what he been huntin' fer. De frog he say 'hey!' an' dove down in de mud-puddle."

"Atter dat, when ol' Craney-Crow move 'bout, he lif' his foots high, an' he done like de ladies does when dey walk in a wet place. De whole caboodle wuz bran' new ter ol' Craney-Crow, an' he look wid all his eyes, an' lissen wid all his years. Dey wuz sump'n n'er gwine on, but he can't make out what 'twuz. He ain't never is been in no swamp befo', mo' speshually a Swamp what got life in it. He been useter ma'shy places, whar dey ain't nothin' but water an' high grass, but dar whar he fin' hisse'f atter de harrycane, dey wa'n't no big sight er water, an' what grass dey wuz, wa'n't longer'n yo' finger. Stidder grass an' water, dey wuz vines, an' reeds, an' trees wid moss on um dat made um look like Gran'suh Graybeard, an' de vines an' creepers look like dey wuz reachin' out fer 'im."

"He walked about, he did, like de groun' wuz hot, an' when he walk he look like he wuz on stilts, his legs wuz so long. He hunt roun' fer a place fer ter sleep, an' whiles he wuz doin' dat he tuck notice dat dey wuz sump'n n'er gwine on dat he ain't never is see de like un. De jacky-ma-lantuns, dey lit up an' went sallin' roun' des like dey wuz huntin' fer 'im an' de frogs, dey hol-ler at 'im wid, 'What you doin' here? What you doin' here?' Mr. Coon rack by an' laugh at 'im; Mr. Billy Gray Fox peep out'n de bushes an' bark at 'im; Mr. Mink show 'im de green eyes, an' Mr. Whipperrill scoll 'im."

"He move 'bout, he did, an' atter so long a time dey let 'im lone, an' den when dey wa'n't nobody ner nothin' pesterin' 'im, he 'gun ter look roun'

"Mr. Craney-Crow, dis is Mr. Dock Wolf"

Colleges and Schools

The Catharine Aiken School
FOR GIRLS. Stamford, Conn. Near New York
General and college preparatory courses. Address
Mrs. Harriet Beecher Seville Devan, A. B. (Wellesley).

THE MISSES ELY'S SCHOOL
For Girls. General and College Preparatory
Courses. Large recreation grounds.
Riverside Drive, 30th and 34th Sts., New York City

Ward Seminary For Young Ladies
Nashville, Tenn.

6th year. Faculty 30. Secondary and Special Courses. College preparation. Reading pupils limited to 150. An ideal Christian home. Complete appointments. Excellent location. Mild, agreeable climate. For catalogue address J. D. BLANTON, L.L.D., Pres.

MISS SAYWARD'S SCHOOL
for girls, in charming, beautiful suburb of Philadelphia. Delightful home, modern building, recently enlarged, college preparatory and special courses, medical department, out-door sports. Develop character, mind and body.
Miss S. J. SAYWARD, Prin.

Virginia Female Institute
STANTON, VA. College Preparatory School for Girls.
Music, Art, and Education. Gymnasium. Ample grounds for athletics. The first year begins Sept. 15, 1904. For catalogue address Miss Maria Pendleton Duval, Principal, Successor to Mrs. J. E. B. Stuart.

Armitage School: For Girls
Half hour from Philadelphia. College Preparatory and Finishing Courses. $250-$300 per year. Address THE SECRETARY, Wayne, Pennsylvania.

WASHINGTON COLLEGE
For Young Ladies. Located within the National capital.
Charming park of 10 acres. Preparatory, certificate, college courses. Music, art, elocution. Send for catalogue. F.
MENEFFEE, President, 31 & T Sts., N.E., Washington, D.C.

Waban School A home school for boys.
Summer Camp J. H. PILLSBURY, Principal
Waban, Mass.

Michigan College of Mines
F. W. McNAIR, President
Regular Summer term opens June 5th. For Year Book, giving list of graduates and their occupations, apply to President or Secretary.
HOUGHTON, MICHIGAN

Ohio Military Institute
3 College Hill, Cincinnati, O. Ideal preparatory school and home. Improvement in vigor and manliness specially marked. Illustrated catalogue. G. E. Perry (Naval Acad.), Headmaster. Rev. John E. Ely, A.M., Regent.

Rumsey Hall, Preparatory School
For Young Boys Only
Equips pupils for entrance to Secondary Schools. Best mental and physical training. A thorough home school.
Number limited.

Haverford College
In a suburb of Philadelphia. Admission by examination only. Expense, $400 to $600. For information, address
THE SECRETARY, Haverford, Pa.

WOODYCLIFF SCHOOL For Boys
South Orange, New Jersey. 14 miles from New York.
Superior home and preparatory school. Number limited.
Individual attention to health, social training and scholarship.
Metropolitan advantages. Field club sports.
Wm. J. Eckel, (Ph. D., Columbia; Ph. D., N. Y. Univ.).

Williamsport Dickinson Seminary
Not sectarian but distinctly Christian. Co-educational.
Low tuition. Music, Art, and Elocution are specialties.
Athletics. Catalogue free.
Rev. Edward J. Gray, D.D., Pres., Williamsport, Pa.

CAMP TALOFA White Mountains
New Hampshire
BOYS' CAMP. Day's drive from Mt. Washington. Ten days' coaching tour through White Mountains. Mountain climbing, canoeing, fishing, golf, etc. Best advantages for training. Catalogue. Address
W. J. Burke, D.D., Wayne, Pa. F. B. Rogers, A.B., Terrytown, N.Y.

HAMILTON INSTITUTE Opposite
the White House
School for Girls and Young Ladies
WHITE HOUSE CATALOGUE
MRS. PHOEBE HAMILTON BRADDOCK, Principal

Clinton Preparatory School 15 Boys
6 Teachers
Prepares for any college. Boys 10 to 14 years at time of entrance preferred. References: Bishop Huntington, Bishop Whitehead, 4 College Presidents. J.B. Wheeler, A.M., Pres.

KINGSLEY SCHOOL for Boys
ESSEX FELLS, NEW JERSEY
College preparation. Knowledge of boys and study of the boy underlie our methods. J. R. CAMPBELL. Summer Camp affords every facility for outdoor life for boys ten to fifteen.

Valmora Ranch for Boys, New Mexico
Training in all studies. No specified term. Splendid summer climate and all year round. $1000 worth includes schooling, medical attention, laundry and food. No entrance fee required. Address Avelley Park, Va., Valmora Ranch, or DR. ANDERSON, Director of Yale Gymnasium, New Haven, Conn.

BLISS ELECTRICAL SCHOOL
225 G Street, N.W., Washington, D.C.
Offers a theoretical and practical course in ELECTRICITY, complete in one year. Students actually construct Dynamo, Motors, etc., and are trained for good positions. 12th year opens Sept. 28. Send for Catalogue.

STAMMER
THE REED SCHOOL stands alone in offering: Complete courses beginning at specified dates. Course without drawing, time-saving or time-consuming. Instruction without payment in advance. Free booklet sent by FRANK A. REED, 375 Hubbard Avenue, DETROIT, MICH.
20

fer hisse't. Peepin' fust in one bush an' den in an'er, he tuck notice dat all de birds what fly by day had done gone ter bed widout der heads. Look whar he mought, ol' Craney-Crow ain't see na'er bird but what had done tuck his head off 'fo' he went ter bed. Look close es he kin, he ain't see no bird wid a head on. Dis make 'im wonder, an' he ax hisse't how come dis, an' de onliest answer what he kin think un is dat gwine ter bed wid der heads on wuz done gone out er fashion in dat part er de country.

"Now, you kin say what you please 'bout de crecturs an' der kin—'bout de fowls dat fly, an' de feathery crecturs what run on de ground—you kin say what you please 'bout um, but dey got pride; dey don't want er out'n de fashion. When it come ter dat, deyer purty much like folks, an' dat 'uz de way wid ol' Craney-Crow; he don't want er out er fashion. He 'shame' fer ter go ter bed like he allers been doin', kaze he ain't want de yuthers fer ter laugh an' say he 'uz fum de country deestrick, whar dey dunno much.
Yit, study ez he mought, he dunner which-away ter do fer ter git his head off. De yuthers had der heads on 'der wing.
But he ain't know dat.

"He look roun', he did,
fer ter see ef dey ain't some un he kin ax 'bout it, an' he ain't hatter look long nudder, fer dar, settin' right at
'im, wuz ol' Brer Pop-Eye."

"But, Uncle Remus, who wuz ol' Brer Pop-Eye?"
inquired de little boy.

"Nobody in all de roun' worl', honey, but Brer Rabbit. He had one name fer de uplan' an' an'er name fer de bottom lan'—de swamps an' de dreens. Wharsoever dar wuz any mischievousness gwine on, righ' dar wuz Brer Rabbit ez big ez life an' 'twice ez natchul.
He wuz so close ter ol'
Craney-Crow dat he hatter jump when he seed 'im.
Brer Pop-Eye say: 'No needs
fer ter be skeer'd, frien'
Craney-Crow. You may be mo' dan sho dat
I'm a well-wisher.' Ol' Craney-Crow 'low:
'It do me good fer ter hear you sesso, Mr.
Pop-Eye, an' seein' dat it's you an' not some un else, I don't min' axin' you how all de flyin' birds takes der heads off when dey go ter bed. It sho stumps me.' Brer Pop-Eye say, 'An' no wonder, frien' Craney-Crow, kaze youer stranger in dese parts. Dey ain't nothin' ter hide 'bout it. De skeeters is been so bad in dis swamp sence de year one, an' endurin' er de time what's gone by, dat dem what live here done got in de habits er takin' off der heads an' puttin' um in a safe place.'

"De Craney-Crow 'low: 'But how in de name er goodness does dey do it, Brer Pop-Eye?' Mr. Pop-Eye laugh ter hisse't 'way down in his gizzard. He say: 'Dey don't do it by deysse't, kaze dat 'ud be axin' too much.
Oh, no! dey got some un bired fer ter do dat kin' er work.' 'An' what kin I fin' 'im, Brer
Pop-Eye?' sez ol' Craney-Crow, sezee. Brer Pop-Eye 'low: 'He'll be roun' terreckly; he allers hatter go roun' fer ter see ain't dat he miss none un um.' Ol' Craney-Crow sorter study, he did, an' den he 'low: 'How does dey git der heads back on, Brer Pop-Eye?'

Brer Pop-Eye shuck his head. He say: 'I'd tell you ef I know'd, but I hatter stay up so much at night, dat 'long 'bout de time when dey gits der heads put on, I'm soun' asleep an' sno'in' right along. Ef you sesso, I'll hunt up de doctor what does de business, an' I speck he'll 'commerdate you—I kin promus you dat much, sence you been so perlitte.'
Ol' Craney-Crow laugh an' say: 'I done fin' out in my time dat dey don't nothin' pay like perlitte, speshually ef she's gannywine.'

"Wid dat, Brer Pop-Eye put out, he did, fer ter fin' Brer Wolf. Knowin' purty well whar he wuz, 'twan't long 'fo' here dey come gallopin' back. Brer Pop-Eye say: 'Mr.
Craney-Crow, dis is Mr. Dock Wolf; Mr.
Dock Wolf, dis is Mr. Craney-Crow; glad fer ter make you 'quainted, gents.' At this point, Uncle Remus paused and glanced at de little boy, who was listening to de story with almost breathless interest. "You ain't got yo' hanker wid you, is you?" de old man inquired gently.

"Mother always makes me carry a handkerchief," de child replied, "and it makes de pocket of my jacket stick out. Why did you ask, Uncle Remus?"

"Kaze we er comin' ter
de place whar you'll need it," said de old man. "You better take it out an' hol' it in yo' han'. If you got any tears inside er you, dey'll come ter de top now."

The child took out his handkerchief, and held it in his hand obediently. "Well, suh," Uncle Remus went on, "atter dey been made
'quainted, ol' Craney-Crow tell Dock Wolf 'bout his troubles, an' how he want er do like de rest er de flyin' crecturs, an' Dock Wolf rub his chin an' put his thumb in his wescut pocket fer all de wool' like a sho nuff doctor. He say ter ol' Craney-Crow dat he ain't so mighty certain an' sho dat he kin he'p 'im much. He say dat in all his born days he ain't never see no flyin' crectur wid sech a long neck, an' dat he'll hatter be mighty intickler how he fool wid it. He went close, he did, an' feel un it an' fumble wid it, an' all de time his mouf wuz waterin' des like yone do when you see a piece er lemon pie."

"He say: 'You'll hatter hol' yo' head lower, Mr. Craney-Crow,' an' wid dat he snap down on it, an' dat wuz de last er dat Craney-Crow. He ain't never see 'his home no mo', an' mo' dan dat, ol' Dock Wolf slung
'im 'cross his back an' cantered off home.
An' dat's de reason dat de Craney-Crows all fly so fas' when dey come thoo dis part er de country."

"But why did you ask me to take out my handkerchief, Uncle Remus?"
"Kaze I want er be on de safe side," remarked de old man with much solemnity.
"Ef you got a hanker when you cry, you kin wipe off de weeps, an' you kin hide de puckers in yo' face."

"He hatter jump when he seed 'im"

THE SONG O' THE BULLET

By ALFRED DAMON RUNYAN

LAYIN' out in th' rice fields, th' mud half to th' knees;

Hearin' th' lizards croakin' up in th' bamboo trees,

An' all around th' bushes are cloaked in th' white
o' th' mist—

Wot is that noise that breaks th' spell? Sh-h there!
Hiss!

"Pang! Zing! oo-oo-oo-zip!"

That's th' cry o' th' rifle ball,

That's th' song it sings ter all—

"Pang! Zing! oo-oo-oo-zip!"

Hark to th' song o' th' bullet!

A flash o' light in th' darkness an' all is quiet again,

'Ceptin' th' lap o' th' water—"Stop whisperin' there,
you men!"

Only a stray shot out o' th' night—"Lay quiet there, you all!"

Hark! again th' voice wells out in th' song o' th'
rifle ball—

"Ps-ut! Bing! z-z-z-z-z-zip!"

That's th' tune th' rifle sings,

Speedin' a note on Death's black wings—

"Ps-ut! Bing! z-z-z-z-z-zip!"

Bow low to th' song o' th' bullet!

Th' gray dawn slowly shoves its way out o' th' eastern sky—

"Load magazines! Gd ready, men! Now keep them pieces dry!

Hold that line there! Steady, all!" Nerves drawn tensely tight—

An' out ahead th' chorus starts as th' dawn breaks inter light—

"P-ow! P-ow! c-a-ck-c-a-ck-P-ow!"

That's th' song th' rifle ball

Sings in chorus—singin' all—

"P-ow! P-ow! c-a-ck-c-a-ck-P-ow!"

Oh, hark to th' bullet chorus!

Chargin' acrost th' rice fields, th' water splashin' high,
"Stop dodgin' there! Don't mind th' song o' them
wot has gone by!

Keep clost ter cover, but go ahead! 'Tis ain't no fancy drill!

Aim low! Fire fast, you shavetails! An' fire at yer own sweet will!"

"Z-z-z-z-z-z! Pang! Bap! Ps-ut!"

That's th' key o' th' bullet song,

That's th' tune, "Here! Move along!"

"Z-z-z-z-z-z! Pang! Bap! Ps-ut!"

Don't mind th' song o' th' bullet!

Some one down there, stretcher men; take him to th' rear!

"Go on! Go on! Keep firin', men, there ain't no stoppin' here—

Swing around with th' left o' that line, an' make fer that trench ahead—

There's time enough in th' after while ter count up them wot's dead!"

"Ps-ut! Bing! z-z-z-z-z-zip!"

That's th' dirge o' th' rifle ball,

That's th' way it moans fer all—

"Ps-ut! Bing! z-z-z-z-z-zip!"

Oh, 'ware th' song o' th' bullet!

Colleges and Schools

ST. MARY'S ACADEMY, NOTRE DAME, INDIANA
One Mile West of Notre Dame University. Conducted by The Sisters of the Holy Cross. Chartered 1855. Ideal location.
National patronage. Thorough English, Classical,
Scientific and Commercial Course. Modern Languages.
Regular College Degree. Students prepared for Collegiate and Special Courses. Conservatory of Music and Art School. Physical Culture. Young women trained for lives of usefulness. Moderate cost. School year begins September 15th, 1904. For catalogue and special information, apply to The Directress, St. Mary's Academy, Box 50, Notre Dame, Ind.

Tudor Hall School for Girls
INDIANAPOLIS, INDIANA
College Preparatory; General and Special Courses.
Send for Year Book.
FREDONIA ALLEN, Ph.B., PRINCIPAL.
REV. J. CUMMINS SMITH, D.D., DEAN.

Armour Institute of Technology
CHICAGO, ILLINOIS
SUMMER COURSES
TERM, JUNE 27 TO AUGUST 8, 1904
Courses are offered in Mechanical, Electrical, Civil, Chemical and Telephone Engineering; Mechanical, Friction, and Architectural Drawing; Descriptive Geometry, Kinematics and Machine
Design; Machine Shop Practice, Fitting, Steam Fitting, Carpentry, Turning, Pattern Making and Foundry Practice; Mathematics, Physics, French and German.
Descriptive circular will be sent on application

Winthrop College
ROCK HILL, S. C.
Fourteen Courses: Normal (5), General Literary (3), Stenography, Dressmaking, Millinery, Book-keeping,
Music, Kindergarten, Industrial Studies, Manual Training. Degrees, B. A., L. L. B. A. 45 offcings, teachers and assistants, 400 students. Expenses of session of nine months $30.00 to $144.00. Session begins in September. For Catalogue, address
President D. B. JOHNSON, Rock Hill, S. C.

ST. JOHN'S Military Academy
DELAFIELD, WISCONSIN
Prepares for College and for Business
For Catalogue, etc., address
Dr. S.T. Smythe, President, Delafield, Waukesha Co., Wis.

BOYS' SUMMER CAMP
"Wildmere" in the Maine Woods
The kind of vacation that does good. Ten weeks in the Sebago Lake Region. Mountain climbing, canoeing, fishing, all the sports that boys love. Coaching trip through the White Mountains. Supervision and companionship of college bred leaders and masters. Special tutoring if desired. Fifth session begins June 30th. Write for booklet.
IRVING L. WOODMAN, Ph. B.
Lawrenceville School, Lawrenceville, N. J.

School of Music
NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY
EVANSTON-CHICAGO
A higher music school with university aims and privileges. Complete courses including literary studies in College of Liberal Arts or Academy. Full information upon request.
P. C. LUTKIN, Dean. Music Hall, Evanston, Ill.

AMERICAN KIMBALL HALL CONSERVATORY
Chicago, Illinois
The leading School of Music
and Dramatic Art in the West. Unsurpassed course of study. MANY FREE ADVANTAGES. Special
Teachers Training Department. Fall Term begins
September 12th, 1904. Send for catalogue.
JOHN J. HATTSTAEDT, President

SUMMER SCHOOL IN MECHANIC ARTS
SEATE COLLEGE OF KY., JAS. K. PATTERSON, PRES.
For College and Highschool students, Locomotive and Stationary Engineers and Firemen, Mechanics, Artisans, Draftsmen, and all those desiring to acquire a knowledge of mechanical drawing, shop-work, etc. Elective courses provided in all subjects pertaining to Mechanical and Electrical Engineering. June 8 to August 15, 1904.
JOHN T. FAHO, Registrar, Lexington, Ky.

Detroit College of Law
Twenty instructors. Diploma admits to the Bar. Library of over 25,000 volumes. Detroit is an ideal place in which to study law.
Our students enjoy the best relation to the law school, the courts, the law office, and the law library. Our Bureau of help-helps our students who are obliged to support themselves. Illustrated catalogue mailed FREE. Write for it to-day. Address
M. P. MCGREGOR, Secretary, DETROIT, MICH.

ROCKLAND MILITARY ACADEMY
In the beautiful Connecticut River Valley near Dartmouth College. Modern equipment. 10 instructors. 15 states represented. A safe school for your boy. 5 Books free. Summer Camp.
ELMER ELLSWORTH FRENCH, A.B., Supt.
West Lebanon, N. H.

CARTOONIST ILLUSTRATORS
made by our unrivalled system by mail. No charge for selling students' drawings. Graduates ranked in positions. Original, ingen and cheap school.
Also complete courses in LAW, PHARMACY, AD-
WRITING, CIVIL SERVICE, MORAL, ME-CHANICAL AND ARCHITECTURAL DRAWING,
TURNING, ETC., by mail. Special services offer now open. Write for details. State professor wanted
NATIONAL CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOLS
22 North Penn St., Indianapolis, U. S. A.

Colleges and Schools

ATTEND THE BISSELL COLLEGE OF PHOTO ENGRAVING

We can teach you to make Engravings like the illustrations presented in this magazine, and they command high prices. The man who produces this kind of work never has any difficulty in securing salaries at from $15 to $30 per week. We have the only college of Photo Engraving in America. Terms easy and living expenses.

WRITE FOR OUR ILLUSTRATED CATALOG

Bissell College of Photo Engraving
835 Webster Avenue
Effingham, Illinois
In connection with the Illinois College of Photography

Make MONEY! Make SHOW CARDS! I'LL MAKE YOU

The making of show cards is an easy and lucrative business. My mail instructions are complete, instructive and easy to follow. Lessons, illustrated by "Fresh from the brush" reproductions. Requires little talent or previous training. Almost any bright man or woman can learn this fascinating, profitable art. Every merchant must have show cards, or a show card writer. Ladies! learn this refined, money-making business. Complete outfit free to students. Tutor for hire, terms easy. Send for our complete circular, testimonials, etc. We assist graduates taking our course to obtain good positions.

G. W. Miller College (Inc.), 11-12 Journal Bldg., Boston

LEARN TO WRITE ADVERTISEMENTS

"The Original Advertising School you hear so much about."

You Can Double Your Salary

If you learn to write advertisements. We are glad to have you ask us what our students are doing, and what we can do for you through correspondence instruction. We will answer completely. If you write for our prospectus, mailed free.

PAGE-DAVIS COMPANY
Address: Editor Office
Suite 19, 90 Webster Ave., Chicago
Suite 19, 150 Nassau Street
New York

LEARN SHORTHAND

By Correspondence from Court Reporters. We do the largest court reporting business in the world and teach the same standard system we use. We make no false claims; we teach no false shorthand. Write for "Success Shorthand" and copy of guaranty, sent free.

WALTON, JAMES & FORD
Suite 26, 77-79 Clark Street
Chicago, Ill.

JOURNALISM

Practical, paying newspaper work, writing short stories, etc.

TAUGHT BY MAIL

by our successful system in personal charge of Mr. Henry Lichfield West, formerly managing editor of Washington Post. Successful students everywhere. Write for illustrated booklet. NATIONAL CORRESPONDENCE INSTITUTE, 15-14 Second National Bank Building, Washington, D. C.

Show Your Loyalty by Wearing the Class Pin or Badge

(HUNDREDS OF DESIGNS FREE)

of your college, school, class, club, society, Order, etc. Order straight from the factory. Either of the two styles shown. In any two colors of enamel, with any three letters and any two figures.

In Silver Plate $1.00 a doz. Sample 10.
In Sterling Silver $2.50 a doz. Sample 20.

Beautiful enamel wearing hundreds of designs free. Satisfaction guaranteed. Will gladly make a special design and estimate free.

BASTIAN BROS., 21 V. South Avenue, ROCHESTER, N. Y.

CIVIL SERVICE

Instructions preparing thoroughly for these examinations. Complete Home Study course, including Shorthand, Penmanship, etc., $3. Catalog Free.

C. C. GAINES, Box 961, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

Wheatcroft Dramatic School

31 West 31st Street, New York

Summer Courses now open. Regular instructors. Public Matinees. Engagements. Winter term begins October 10. Write for prospectus. ADRIENNE S. WHEATCROFT, Director.

TELEGRAPHY

Long established. Can't get demand for operators. Established 1874. Taught by officials. Western Union Telegraph Co. Total cost: Tuition, telegraphy and typewriting, board and room, 6 mos. course, $97. This can be reduced. Catalog free.

DOUGHERTY INSTITUTE - VALPARAISO, IND.

Uncle Sam Needs You

Do you know that our Government is in constant straits for Stenographers? It's a fact. Civil Service Commissioner will tell you so. Our splendid course (Mail lessons) in Shorthand & Typewriting qualifies you for appointment. Salaries $600 to $1400. Graduates fully prepared and instructed just how to obtain appointments.

MERCANTILE, Inc., 188 Canal, Chicago 111.

By NORMAN HAPGOOD

The Hazards of Reading

BUSY Americans read by chance. We read the newspapers with regularity, but the number is small of those whose intimacy with great books lasts into active middle life. Familiar intercourse with masterpieces often ends in college. Many professional critics, even, turn over the volumes which fate, embodied in the publishers, dumps upon their desk, and sometimes find a charming one, usually a reprint. Once in a long, long time a day entirely vacant beckons a poet or philosopher from the shelf. Friendship includes an intercourse of thought, and so our friends occasionally introduce us to some new master from the present or the past, and this is perhaps the warmest of all our reading pleasures, as celebrated in Omar's always quoted stanza, those lines which are shadowed forth in Mr. Parrish's headpiece to this stroll across the world of books and plays.

By one of these chances a novel has recently given me several hours of pleasure. I dare say Dmitri Merejkowski is famous, but I had never heard of him. There are so many able and famous writers in the world to-day. Merejkowski makes one more Russian who thinks and feels on a plane of high intelligence. There is not genius, as in Tolstoi, Turgeneff, Dostoevski, and others of the mighty Slavic race now on the threshold of its history. There is, however, enough to give rare satisfaction to one who likes to think.

Of the three periods most inspired in art, linked conveniently with Pericles, the Medici, and Elizabeth, the one which most readily takes the enchantment of romance is the Italian. "The Resurrection of the Gods," which was translated some months ago as "The Romance of Leonardo da Vinci," is filled with the spirit of enjoyment, filled with the love of living, even as the Renaissance itself. The novel seems true to fifteenth century Italian life, partly because it is so true to life here and now and any time. The keynote of it is that song favored by Lorenzo the Magnificent:

"Quant e bella giovinezza
Ma si fugge tutta via,
Chi vuol esser lieto, sia,
Di doman non c'è certezza."

"How fair is youth, but how swift to leave.
Who wishes happiness must take it. To-morrow may never be."

Youth, I sometimes think, increases, as we age, if only we love the world;—youth, that is to say, as enjoyment, as sensitiveness and in his own collected writings, this novel brings him nearer. Machiavelli, Savonarola, Michelangelo, Raphael, and the rest are also living portrayed, and the lady of the mystic smile breathes as a woman honest, grave, and sweet, in whom that expression of eternal sceptic comprehension was less her own than a reflection from the master through whom we know her. Her commonplace marriage was undisturbed, and death drew the curtain when a reserve between the sinner and the painter had become too difficult to last. The novel seems to me so inferior a form, so lawless and verbose, usually so long and dull, that I am filled with childlike gratitude when one leaves me something worth remembering. We are a more educated people than the Russians, yet what a chasm between the Russian novels and our own. Sometimes, like Selma White in "Unleavened Bread," the novel of the day gives us a real creation, but more often we have a million circulation, signifying nothing. However, I never sympathize over-strongly, with others or myself, for finding current volumes more often commonplace than inspired, since a selection from the best of every time and country is ours for the request.

Our Few Good Plays

IN the drama, our plight is different, for one who loves the theatre actually can not find enough good plays to satisfy his taste. Looking back over this season, I pick the following plays in English as having an intelligent interest.

First, "Everyman," one of the noblest dramas in the world, little known, and acted beautifully.

We have had numerous revivals of the masters, mainly Shakespeare, with a touch of Sheridan and Goldsmith: Ada Rehan and Otis Skinner in their repertory; the Greet players; Nat Goodwin's charming presentation of "A Midsummer-Night's Dream," Forbes Robertson's "Hamlet," and Viola Allen's "Twelfth Night."

Ibsen has been favorably shown by Mrs. Fiske, and incompetently by Wilton Lackaye and Sidney Rosenfeld.

In contemporary comedy we have had "Candida," "The Man of Destiny," "The Admirable Crichton," "Little Mary," "The Man from Blankley's," and some fairly good American plays not the equal of these.

The contemporary poetic drama was represented by "Ulysses."

Many of the good plays were badly acted, and in poorer plays we frequently are con-

Joseph M. Weber

Lou M. Fields

to life. This author's Leonardo, living as fully as man could live, sees the world more rich in meaning and in interest than in charm. He loves the mystic lady known to us as Mona Lisa, and never tells her of his love. His life is one of restraint and abnegation. His mind is open to every truth. He listens to the impassioned Savonarola and sketches the expression of his face. He would lift a worm to save its life, but he would study the death wrinkles on his mother's brow. He would measure, with perfect understanding, the body of an Aphrodite. Love with him is the daughter of knowledge; the closer the knowledge the greater the love. "For whole days he stood on the desolate shore of Piombino, watching the falling of the waves; and, while all around him the laws of human justice were being broken, mused on the invariability of nature."

A horrid crime was committed, and universally attributed to the Prince for whom Leonardo worked, but on that day Leonardo noted: "In Romagna four-wheeled carts are used, the front wheels small, the back large; the construction is faulty, for all the weight rests on the front."

Although I had known Leonardo in history soled by some good acting, as in "Dante" and "Ivan the Terrible." Including only what was significant as drama and adequately treated by the actors, it makes no great showing for the greatest city in America, although the showing is better than in an ordinary year. There are a great many people who want to see good plays, and see them frequently; so we may presume their demand will some time be met with a supply. A less cheerful view, however, is put forth by a correspondent who writes, apropos of my praise of the Irving Place Theatre, thus:

"I thought it would interest you to learn that there is at least one other theatre in this country which is conducted on an equally high plane as the Irving Place stage. That is the German Theatre at Milwaukee, under the management of Mr. Leon Wachsmann. Almost every word you say in praise of the work in New York may be applied to the Milwaukee performances. Among other things I might say that I saw Maeterlinck's 'Mona Vanna' played there, and played well, in October last, that being its first performance in the United States. Mr. Wachsmann's aim has been for a long series of years to have about one-third of the plays presented con-

Colleges and Schools

The Michigan Military Academy

Prepares for West Point Annapolis and all American Colleges and Scientific Schools

Insures excellent physical development; together with superior academic and military training. Unusual religious, musical and social advantages. Ideal location, 26 miles from Detroit. Readily accessible, but removed from city dangers. Beautiful lake region; ample grounds; fine buildings. Six-year course: eighth grammar grade, high school, graduate.

28th Year Begins Sept. 15th, 1904.

THE AIM OF THE ACADEMY:
Development of Body, Mind and Heart.

For information apply to
GEN. H. A. WHEELER, President,
Orchard Lake, Mich., or, Old Colony Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

WORCESTER ACADEMY

A Preparatory School that has realized high ideals. The aim is not simply to get boys into the Universities, but prepare them to do profitable work in college, scientific school, and business. Manual training. Gymnasium and out-of-door sports, year year begins Sept. 15th, 1904. Write for illustrated catalogue, showing some of the distinctive advantages of Worcester Academy.

D. W. ABERCROMBIE, LL.D., Prin., Worcester, Mass.

STAUNTON MILITARY ACADEMY

An Ideal Home School for Manly Boys

130 boys from 25 States last session. Largest Private School in State of Virginia. Boys from 10 to 18 years old prepared for Universities, Government Academies, or Business.

1,000 feet above sea-level. Pure, dry, bracing, mountain-air of the famous, proverbially healthful and beautiful Valley of the Shenandoah. High moral tone. Parental discipline. Daily drills and exercises in open air. Academy charges, $500.00. Handsome catalogue free. Address:

Captain Wm. H. Kable, A. M., Principal, Staunton, Va.

ROGERS HALL SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

Lowell, Mass.

Faces Rogers Fort Hill Park. Beautiful grounds devoted to outdoor sports. Golf, Tennis, Basket Ball, Field Hockey, Horseback Riding.

Certificate admits to Smith, Vassar, Wellesley, Wells and Mt. Holyoke. Advanced General Course for graduates of other schools. For catalogue address

MRS. E. P. UNDERHILL, M. A., Principal

The Young Idea

Heavily illustrated by numerous young authors. At the Boston-Milwaukee Military Academy every cadet is urged to lead a boy to form habits of right living which shall be the foundation of an upright and noble manhood. Every boy is urged to aim at a definite goal and to work hard for success. These volumes are offered—SCIENTIFIC, CLASSICAL, ENGLISH, GOLF AND PREPARATORY.

Catalogue free on request.
Rev. T. H. Landon, LL.M., Principal
Maj. T. B. Landon, Commandant, Boston-Milwaukee, N.Y.
We do not tolerate idleness, laziness or loafing.

STOP FORGETTING!

You can by taking the Dickson Method by Mail.

Simple, inexpensive, easily acquired. Increases business capacity and prestige by giving an alert, ready memory for names, faces, and details of business and study. Develops will, capacity for thought, concentration. Personally conducted by Prof. Dickson, of Chicago Auditorium Conservatory and University of Notre Dame. FREE booklet and trial copy—right lesson.

THE DICKSON SCHOOL OF MEMORY
111 The Auditorium, Chicago, Illinois.

EDISON GOLD MOULDED RECORDS

The fleeting pleasures of the concert are the permanent joys of the Edison Phonograph with Edison Gold Moulded Records. Without these none but trained musicians can hear the music they like, played as they like it, as often as they like.

TRADE MARK
Thomas A. Edison
MARK

New Records every month—send for latest catalogue.
I. C. S. Language courses taught by EDISON PHONOGRAPHS.

THE EDISON PHONOGRAPH
NATIONAL PHONOGRAPH COMPANY, ORANGE, N. J.
NEW YORK, CHICAGO, SAN FRANCISCO, LONDON

BRIGHTON FLAT CLASP GARTERS

Trim and Neat Above the Feet

are the legs that wear

BRIGHTON FLAT CLASP GARTERS FOR MEN

The garters that FIT—that WEAR—that PLEASE. The famous Brighton flat clasp can't possibly catch or fray the clothing—makes the garter simple, secure and absolutely comfortable. Made of one piece pure silk web with nicked trimmings that cannot rust or rub. Price only 25c at store or by mail. Get the "BRIGHTON."

PIONEER SUSPENDER CO.
715 Market Street, Philadelphia
Makers of Pioneer Suspenders

A Home Worth Having Build for Yourself

New, original, and artistic designs of modern, colonial, suburban, and city houses.

Our $1.25 book—120 pages—for 25c postpaid. This to interest every possible home builder in the country.

We send free full descriptions and estimates; also cost of builders' plans. We develop and perfect your own ideas.

Free to June brides—One of our books of 16 designs to any bride who is planning a home and who sends 5c for mailing.

J. H. DAVERMAN & SON
503 Smith Building
Grand Rapids Mich.

WHY STRUGGLE with small wages and unpleasant surroundings when

You can earn $1000.00 to $2000.00 a year FITTING GLASSES

It costs you nothing to investigate this opportunity and will establish your future. Thousands of successful students established in practice in all parts of the world. A comfortable income is assured with comparatively little effort. We teach you thoroughly by mail how to fit glasses accurately and scientifically and make you an Optician in a very short time. No time is lost from present occupation while learning. We start every graduate in business and supply their Optical Goods at lowest wholesale prices if desired. Why not look into the matter? It will pay you. Write to-day for our FREE EYE BOOK. Tells all about it.

JACKSONIAN OPTICAL COLLEGE (Chartered), C 28 College Building, Jackson, Mich.

Illinois Central R.R.

UNIVERSAL EXPOSITION
Chicago
St. Louis
New Orleans
1904

DAILY FAST TRAINS
Elegantly equipped and with Dining, Buffet, Library, Sleeping and Reclining Chair Cars, from its northern and southern terminals, connecting at its numerous gateways with trains from the EAST, SOUTH AND NORTH

Particulars of agents of the Illinois Central and connecting lines.
A. H. HANSON, Gen'l Pass'r Agent, CHICAGO

Kneipp Linen-Mesh Underwear

Should be worn in preference to all other fabrics. Your body perspires freely; if colds and rheumatism are to be avoided, the perspiration must be promptly absorbed, the skin kept dry and at an even temperature. Will wool do it? Do you use a woolen towel? Furthermore—when you buy linen-mesh be sure it's pure linen.

FOR SALE BY
Leading Haberdashers and drygoods stores.
Write to "Kneipp" Publicity Dept. B, 66 Leonard Street, New York, for instructive booklet.

list of new ones. Years ago Ibsen's plays were seen in his theatre, before they were dreamed of on the English-speaking stage. Almost all successful German plays have been seen in Milwaukee within a short time after their production in Europe, including such elaborate works as Wildenbruch's 'Kaiser Heinrich IV.'

"I wish I could feel as hopeful as you do about the future of the American stage. But I am afraid that literature and art are still exotics on American soil, cared for by a small minority only, patronized by the many as a matter of fashion, but not forming a real, vital element in the activities of the people."

Gleanings of a Month

I MAKE no apology for writing about things of no popularity. That is partly the excuse for this department. Journalism, as far as it represents the nation, must keep up with the world's great doings, and can spare less space for celebrating that branch of truth which is one with beauty. The news is everything, and plays and books are of news value only as they interest many. I like to meet the great world and its controlling interests in other places, and to devote this monthly monologue to tracing the story of more private preferences. Of the two pleasant theatre visits of the month just past, one was in far-off Brooklyn, to see a play by Sudermann, called in English "The Battle of the Butterflies," excellently translated, but still Sudermann, and hence pleasure and relief. It was the last gasp of the ill-starred Rosenfeld adventure. Florence Kahn showed in this her ability to play comedy as remarkably as tragedy, and of the rest of the company half or thereabouts were good. But until some English company can play Sudermann as he is played in Irving Place, Americans can form no idea of his dramatic qualities. They know "Hemmat" as "Magda," and a few of them know "Es Lebe das Leben" as "The Joy of Living," but the mass of his work remains unknown. I have just reread "Die Ehre," that splendidly simple and dramatic tale of "honor" in its contrasting forms, and have been reminded again that this one German has written more really brilliant dramas than all America has produced since October 12, 1492.

The second pleasant episode, for me, of the season's closing month, was "The Merchant of Venice." Of Mr. Ben Greet's Shylock I have no desire to speak, as it is the effort of a worthy man, but were I offered the Carnegie millions on condition that I should share the good Andrew's views about the superiority of Greet to Irving, I should violently decline. A Frenchman has just written merrily about criticism as practiced by American men of action, hunching Carnegie and the President, which is severe on Mr. Roosevelt. Passing charitably over the quaint and amiable Shylock, and admitting that, as a whole, the company was unfathomably incompetent, we have left the words, which are enough to console one for even sinful acting, and the noble voice and gracious presence of Edith Wynne Matthison, which complete the consolation. By remaining with this incompetent though virtuous troupe, Miss Matthison spends her years as Everyman, as Viola, Juliet, Rosalind, and Portia, instead of enjoying runs of two years or more in "Janice Meredith," "The Christian," "Captain Jinks," or "When Knighthood Was in Flower." If there were better companies with poetic repertoires, Miss Matthison would take a high place in the best of them. Her Portia lacks splendor in the trial scene, but outside of that is as adequate and valid as it is fresh and full of charm.

In Memoriam

WEBER AND FIELDS is no more. The most popular playhouse in America has gone the way of all flesh. The building remains, but not as Weber and Fields'. Joe Weber remains, and Lou Fields, but gone forever is the combination. Mr. Weber as a private citizen has long abhorred his partner, who has returned the distaste in equal volume, but business, or the cohesive power of the public's money, has kept them one. Had they been less successful, they might still have found separation too expensive—something as the luxury of divorce is a specialty of the rich. Each may make enough to ride in cabs, or even private traps, and to eat and drink too much, but something will have passed away.

"Out of the day and night
A joy has taken flight."

Theirs was a cheery place to go. It was small and full of talent, "vis comica," and pretty girls. Never again is so much broad comic exuberance likely to be found in any one vaudeville rendezvous. Here's to Joe Weber, and the future that is his, and to Lou Fields, and his success also; but above all here's to what was, and is now forever silent, a certain spirit that is dead.

SHAKESPEARE'S RARE AUTOGRAPHS

THE rarest autographs in the world are probably Shakespeare's. Only seven are claimed to exist: Three signatures to his will (two of which are doubtful), two to conveyances of property, one in the folio edition of his plays (doubtful), and one in a translation of Montaigne; this last is in the British Museum, and cost over three hundred guineas. This total absence of record is as marvellous as his genius itself. He must have written many thousands of words, yet all have vanished. What would one give, not for a play, but even for a letter of his, no matter what the subject, written incontestably by himself?

It Fills the Bill

This is the business man's verdict concerning the

New Remington Billing Typewriter

It writes neat, compact, legible bills, with twice the speed of the pen. Adaptable to all billing systems.

REMINGTON TYPEWRITER COMPANY,
227 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

HALL'S VEGETABLE SICILIAN HAIR RENEWER

Here are three of the secrets you may easily find in each bottle: Gray hair is always restored to its original color, always. Falling hair is checked. And the hair grows long and heavy.

If your druggist cannot supply you, send $1 to R. F. HALL & Co., Nashua, N. H.

4 for 50 cents LINETTE HANDKERCHIEFS

For men. Like the finest linen. Soft as silk. Pure white. Hemstitched, 1/4 and 1 inch hem. Usually sold at retail for twice the price. Mailed postpaid on receipt of price. Satisfaction assured.

GEO. B. TRIFLER, Fetter Bldg., Dept. B, New York City

Underwood's Little Red Devil Brand

As unlike others as chalk is unlike cheese. Is made only of sugar cured hams and pure spices. Send Postal for 45 prize receipts.

Look on the can for the Little Red Devil.

WM. UNDERWOOD CO., BOSTON.

STREET RAILWAY INVESTMENT

A small cash outlay will handle a first class street railway in a first class interior city. Perpetual franchise for lighting city and for railway. A postal brings particulars.

J. H. LIPSCOMB
306 Fidelity Trust Bldg. Kansas City, Mo.

Kitchen Utensils
HAVING THIS TRADE MARK

AGATE
MFG. CO.
ARE SAFE

BURNED IN THE ENAMEL

WE MAKE 1500 KINDS

"The Blue Label Proves It"

JELL-O

"When Mama Comes Home

I will have the dessert all ready. I often prepare JELL-O for my parties and it's just as good as Mama makes. She makes it in about a million different ways, it seems to me, and it's like a new dessert every time. Why don't you try it? It's fine! Every one says so." JELL-O is sold everywhere, 10 cts. per package. Takes only two minutes to prepare.

Send for New Book of Recipes with colored illustrations mailed FREE. Address

THE GENESSEE PURE FOOD CO., Le Roy, N. Y.

THE DOWNFALL OF RUSSIA'S FAVORITES

(Continued from page 13)

on land, so Alexieff had not prepared for war on sea. At least this is what his enemies say. Four armored cruisers were at Vladivostok; the Varyag and Korietz were lying in Chemulpo Harbor, and the remainder of the Pacific fleet were lying in the exterior roadway at Port Arthur, without adequate lookout, when the Japanese descended upon them like a thunderbolt. The Varyag and Korietz were destroyed, the battleships Rurik and Czarevitch and cruiser Pallada were badly damaged. Alexieff and Stark had no excuse for this fatal negligence. Vice-Admiral Makaroff, drawing from his own experience, had telegraphed urging that the ships be withdrawn to the interior roadway, where they would be safe from torpedo attack.

Though Alexieff could not be held directly responsible for the disaster at Port Arthur, his prestige suffered, nevertheless, and soon all Petersburg was whispering at the strategic blunder consequent upon the division of the fleet. Stark was immediately relieved, and Alexieff recommended to the Emperor that either Vice-Admiral Makaroff or Vice-Admiral Dubassoff be named as his successor. The Emperor sent for Makaroff, told him, in spite of his objection, he must go to Port Arthur, and then added: "You will have independent command of the fleet." This was his Majesty's first expression of dissatisfaction with the policy of Alexieff.

Alexieff was a sailor, not a soldier, and it was necessary to assign an able officer to command the powerful army to be massed in Manchuria. General Kuropatkin, ex-Minister of War, was selected for the important duty. That this could not be acceptable to Alexieff was generally known in St. Petersburg. Kuropatkin had spoken for peace in preference to military adventure; he had declared to friends and to acquaintances that Alexieff was responsible for the mess into which Russia had gotten, and that if he went to the Far East it should be as the commander-in-chief of the army. The Emperor, having confidence in Kuropatkin's ability, appointed him. A ukase was issued giving him "independent" control of forces in the field. "It would have been manifestly improper to place an ex-minister under a naval officer," was the official explanation of the independence of Kuropatkin.

Alexieff Gradually Superseded

At first Makaroff and Kuropatkin sent despatches to Alexieff, who transmitted them to the Czar, but this was inconvenient and a loss of time, and the Emperor determined to receive despatches direct from his officers. So another rope which bound Alexieff in his viceregal throne was torn away. Manchuria was placed under martial law, and consequently under the government of Kuropatkin. Alexieff's duties were of a civil character, but there was little civil administration to be conducted. Alexieff is not a man to give up, however, and he held on. Though he was not responsible for, he indirectly suffered by, the blowing up of the Petropavlovsk and the death of Vice-Admiral Makaroff. As the only available high naval commander on the ground, the Emperor telegraphed him to proceed to Port Arthur and assume command of the fleet. Then the Emperor announced that he had selected Vice-Admiral Skrydloff to succeed Makaroff, and that Alexieff's appointment was temporary only.

No appointment could have dissatisfied Alexieff more. "Skrydloff wouldn't shake hands with Alexieff if he were to meet him," said a friend of the former officer. Inquiry established that Skrydloff has sharply criticized Alexieff; that he not only holds him responsible for the war but for the disasters following it. His feelings are not improved by the knowledge that he will assume command of a crippled fleet, which is greatly inferior to its confident enemy, but which must be conserved and put in condition to fight at sea as soon as the Baltic squadron shall arrive. It is a task that a good many men would decline to accept. Skrydloff is the kind who is prepared to take desperate chances. But he does not forget his prejudices, and the Emperor knows thoroughly his feelings toward Alexieff. The Viceroy may be at Port Arthur when the new commander-in-chief shall reach that point, but Skrydloff's relations with him will be chillingly official, and Alexieff will understand that it is time for him to move on.

Alexieff will eventually come to St. Petersburg. He will be decorated, and he will be made a member of the Council of the Empire. This means that he will be shelved for a time, as de Witte has been, but he is too active a man to be idle when effort may haul his feet out of the quagmire in which he stands. De Witte's star is in the ascendant. Powerful as he was in the position of Finance Minister, he was relieved of his post, and Alexieff may feel that what has happened once may happen again.

Burnett's Vanilla Extract

is the best. The grocers know it. Insist on having Burnett's. It is for your food. Pure and wholesome.—Adc.

If You Want

a perfect cream, preserved without sugar, order Borden's Peerless Brand Evaporated Cream. It has a delightful, natural flavor and is superior to the richest raw cream you can buy, with the added assurance of being sterilized. Prepared by Borden's Condensed Milk Co.—Adc.

For Over Sixty Years

An Old and Well-Tried Remedy. Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup has been used for over Sixty Years by Millions of Mothers for their Children while Teething, with Perfect Success. It soothes the child, softens the Gums, allays all Pain; cures Wind Colic, and is the best remedy for Diarrhoea. Sold by druggists in every part of the world. Be sure and ask for Mrs. Winslow's Soothing Syrup, and take no other kind.

Twenty-Five Cents a Bottle. —Adc.

Roof/Leak?

applied on an old leaky shingle, tin or felt roof will make it absolutely waterproof. Stops the rusting process in tin or iron, and stops warping or rotting of shingles. Will add ten years to the life of a new or old roof.

¶ ROOF LEAK is the most durable sun or winter proof paint or coating possible to make. Does not crack in winter or soften in summer. Easily applied. Imparts no taste to water.

¶ ROOF LEAK SHINGLE DIP renders the wood absolutely waterproof, and when the shingles are nailed on the roof they become cemented together so tightly that warping which causes cracked shingles and loose nails is positively prevented.

¶ ROOF LEAK is shipped in the heavy liquid cement form, and is applied as received on worn and leaky surfaces. It is reduced with one quart of boiled linseed-oil to each gallon if used as a durable paint on surfaces in good condition. Shingle Dip is shipped ready for dipping.

¶ ROOF LEAK COATING AND ROOF LEAK SHINGLE DIP are made in Black, Maroon and Dark Green. Five gallons up to any quantity 75c. per gallon, freight paid east of Denver. Returnable at our expense if not approved.

¶ ROOF LEAK is sold by up-to-date paint and hardware dealers. Those who try to sell you something else are not doing you justice, because "there is nothing else like ROOF LEAK."

¶ Liquid samples, together with an interesting booklet showing its various uses, will be sent on request, or to enable you to give it a practical test, we will send you for $1.00, delivered free to your door, one gallon, which is sufficient for cementing 100 square feet of leaky surface, or painting 200 square feet. One gallon of Shingle Dip covers about 400 square feet, shingles both sides.

ELLIOTT VARNISH CO., 149 Fulton St., CHICAGO

279 Pearl St., NEW YORK

Manufacturers of Fine Varnishes and Inventors of

Roof/Leak?

Mothers! Your Babies Are Safe

In our accident proof cribs. They have high sliding sides, closely spaced spindles, high grade woven wire springs and are handsomely finished in white enamel or colors. Little ones cannot fall out, climb over, stick their heads through or harm themselves in any way. Safety for the child, no worry for you. Your dealer has our illustrated booklet, "A Mother's Investment," mailed free. It's interesting. All our goods bear this trade mark.

FOSTER BROS. MFG. CO., 99 Broad St., Utica, N. Y. 1401 North 16th St., St. Louis, Mo. Manufacturers of Foster's Ideal Spring Beds and Mattresses and the "Ideal" Line of Iron Beds, Cribs, Drawers, etc.

Used by the Royal Families and Smart Hotels Throughout Europe

EREBOS TABLE SALT NOURISHES

The daintiest, driest salt ever made. Its use on the table and in the kitchen replaces the phosphates lost from your food in cooking.

NEVER CAKES

Send for sample, enough for the family, naming your grocer

"CEREBOS," 78 Hudson St., NEW YORK

MEN'S Flexo Garter

Flexo Garters fit perfectly, hug the limb comfortably without binding, never let go of the hose, never tear them, last longest, look neatest—are best garters.

Sold by all dealers. Insist on Flexo, and if the dealer hasn't them, send us his name and age and we will see that you are supplied. Flexo Garters are fine heavy ribbed silk elastic. Price, 50c.

A. STEIN & CO., 268 Fifth Ave., Chicago

Put Your Money in Upper Peninsula Land

$10.00 down and $10.00 per month will buy you 40 acres of good farming land in the Upper Peninsula of Michigan. This land is close to markets, good towns and railroads. Hundreds of settlers will go to this country this Spring and land values will increase. NOW is your time to make a safe, permanent, profitable investment. No it's or an's about it. Write to us to-day—now.

Upper Peninsula Land Co., Ltd., 916 Washington Arcade, DETROIT, MICH. F. J. MERRIAM, Gen. Mgr.

REFERENCES—STANDARD TRUST & SAVINGS BANK, Chicago, Illinois; COLONIAL TRUST COMPANY, New York, N. Y.; CLEVELAND CLIFFS IRON COMPANY, Cleveland, Ohio.

Woodbury's Facial Soap

agrees with the tenderest skin. Special antiseptic qualities, so valuable in preventing eruptions, cleanse and refine, but do not hurt the delicate texture. Complexions that know its everyday use are pure and smooth. The skin soap.

Twenty-five cents everywhere

Woodbury's Facial Cream for a sun-burned skin

Write for beauty booklet (FREE) or send 10c. in stamps for handsome brochure, 32 pages 9x12 inches, containing large photographic portraits of leading actresses and actors.

THE ANDREW JERGENS CO.
Sole Owners Cincinnati, O.

No More Bald Heads

The Evans Vacuum Cap is the only logical method by which baldness is prevented. It is not an experiment but has been in use for two years and the satisfaction derived from it is sufficient proof of its merit.

STIMULATION without IRRITATION

as produced by the VACUUM method, gives new life to the scalp, prevents hair from falling and makes new hair grow on bald spots where the roots still possess life. The exhilarating effects of the Cap, if used merely as a massage, make it almost indispensable after being once tried. Our patrons write us that the Cap, while producing the good effects of hand massage, is devoid of the irritating results of rubbing. We guarantee the Cap and would ask those interested to write for our free booklet.

EVANS VACUUM CAP CO.
Fullerton Building, St. Louis
Chicago Office, 119 Dearborn New York Office, 1309 B'way

To Get There Quicker—Surer—Easier—Ride a

MERKEL MOTOR CYCLE

Whenever—wherever you go let the Merkel take you. It's the quickest and most convenient vehicle made. You don't work while you ride—simply steer. Strong, simple, economical. Write for booklet, etc. WRITE TO-DAY.

THE B. MERKEL MFG. CO.
FACTORY, LAYTON PARK MILWAUKEE, WIS.

A Wonderful Cloud World

By GARRETT P. SERVISS

ASTRONOMICAL literature has recently been enriched, after its brief and pointed manner, by accounts of the observations of several diligent students of the planet Jupiter. These gentlemen of the telescope, unseduced by the fascinations of war, politics, and society, continue steadfastly to find their most exciting moments in the darkness and chill of the observatory, where visions are seen so strange and unearthly that the outside world, immersed in the glare and noise of terrestrial affairs, can not comprehend them. Yet these things are irresistibly interesting to contemplative minds, and they have a broader bearing on human destiny than does either recorded or contemporary history, because they relate to the origin, the development, and the end of worlds. As comparative anatomy throws important light on the structure and functions of man's body, so comparative geology, or the study of related planets, may increase our knowledge of the nature and fate of the earth.

One of the best and latest contributions to knowledge concerning the chief member of our planetary family is a brief summary by Mr. W. F. Denning of England of his observations of Jupiter during the year just past. These observations were concluded in February of this year, when Jupiter approached too near the sun to be longer studied.

Wonderful Appearance of Jupiter

Jupiter is not only by far the largest planet in the solar system, but his telescopic aspect is both unique and unrepresentative. Astronomical photography, wonderful though many of its achievements have been, is not yet sufficiently delicate in its operation to picture Jupiter as a powerful telescope shows him. The innumerable and continually shifting details of his great oval disk are blurred and lost in the best photographs. Yet his is without exception the most animated and expressive planetary "face" within our ken. It seems to tell its story in a most graphic fashion, but with looks, hints, and glances which change and vanish and reappear with bewildering rapidity and variety, withholding their meaning, while repeating over and over again the same apparent pantomime.

The explanation of this animated Sphinx face of Jupiter is evidently to be found in the constitution of the huge planet. Instead of seeing something solid and definite when we look at him, like the mountains of the moon or the streaked and spotted surface of Mars, we behold only a vast cloud sphere whose belts and zones, according to Mr. Denning, "represent vapors spun into parallels of latitude by the rapid rotatory motion of the globe beneath."

It is this hint of a hidden world beneath the clouds of Jupiter that becomes a magnet for the imagination. What kind of a planet can it be which, exceeding this earth more than a thousand times in magnitude, yet whirls upon its axis so swiftly that its giant body makes a complete turn in less than ten hours by our clocks? Behind that concealing curtain, whose contortions plainly indicate the tremendous activity of the energies at work, what new creation is in progress? As the astronomer gazes, he longs to reach out and strip off the mask. His eagerness and his disappointment are like those of a spectator who, from a commanding height, looks over a battlefield buried in smoke, where gleams of fire, driving vapors, and glimpses of dim moving shadows fascinate his eyes and torment his imagination, but yield no logical deduction to his reason. It is the spectacle of a new world coming into being that the astronomer faces, but he will need a telescopic X-ray to penetrate the drop curtain behind which the demiurges labor at their gigantic scene-shifting.

Jupiter's Great Red Spot

Yet there is at least one apparent peephole. In the southern hemisphere of Jupiter, in the midst of vast belts of dark, of light, and of tinted clouds, appears an oblong shape, red as a blown ember at times, then fading to an ashy hue, or disappearing. No name has been found for it but the Great Red Spot. It is even more enigmatical than the canals of Mars, because a rational explanation of them, based on human conceptions and human experience of natural phenomena, can be, and has been, offered. But only the wildest guesses have ever been made concerning the nature of Jupiter's Great Red Spot. Is it really an opening in his cloudy curtains, or is it something afloat, balloon-like, in his atmosphere—something exceeding our globe many times in volume? The birth of a new satellite, perhaps, as the moon is said to have been wrenched from the body of the earth while it was yet molten with heat.

Whatever it may be, or may mean, the significant thing about the Great Red Spot at present is its brightening. Mr. Denning during his latest series of observations found that it was a little plainer than it had been for several previous oppositions. It may reach again a state resembling that in which it appeared in 1879, when astronomers were not prepared to study it as they are to-day, and when, it is hardly an exaggeration to say,

The Florsheim SHOE

Style No. 1795

Bench Made

The "Florsheim" bench made, hand finished Oxford is as easy to wear as a sandal—a point of interest to you. Made over foot form lasts. Most styles sell for $5.00.

"A shoe just like your custom shoemaker used to make."

FREE—Send today for our booklet, "The Florsheim Way of Foot Fitting." Shows facts of interest to every shoe wearer. Also full information where you can buy the "Florsheim" Bench Made Shoe.

FLORSHEIM & COMPANY
Chicago, U. S. A.

Established 1823

Chickering PIANOS

Illustrated Catalogue sent upon application

CHICKERING & SONS
794 Tremont St. Boston, Mass.

Increase Your Income

Learn profitable poultry raising. Our course is teaching it has been pronounced. The faculty are practical poultrymen and experienced teachers. Tremendous opportunities for those who begin NOW. No other investment brings larger and sure returns. Write today for this special booklet fully describing various courses.

COLUMBIA SCHOOL OF POULTRY CULTURE, Box 618, Waterville, N.Y.

WHAT THE KING EATS

What's Fit for Him

A Mass. lady who has been through the mill with the trials of the usual house-keeper and mother relates an interesting incident that occurred not long ago. She says:

"I can with all truthfulness say that Grape-Nuts is the most beneficial of all cereal foods in my family, young as well as old. It is food and medicine both to us. A few mornings ago at breakfast my little boy said:

"Mama, does the King eat Grape-Nuts every morning?"

"I smiled and told him I did not know but that I thought Grape-Nuts certainly made a delicious dish, fit for a King." (It's a fact that the King of England and the German Emperor both eat Grape-Nuts.)

"I find that by the constant use of Grape-Nuts not only as a morning cereal but also in puddings, salads, etc. made after the delicious recipes found in the little book in each package it is proving to be a great nerve food for me, besides having completely cured a long standing case of indigestion." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

There is no doubt Grape-Nuts is the most scientific food in the world.

Ten days trial of this proper food in place of improper food will show its steady, stronger nerves, sharper intellect and the power to "go" longer and further and accomplish more. There's a reason.

Look in each pkg. for the famous little book, "The Road to Wellville."

This is the Blade that Requires No Honing; No Grinding

It is Always Ready for Instant Use

because it is electrically tempered and hollow ground in its own peculiar way. It costs $2.50 and is worth it. Double concave, for extra heavy beards, $3.00. Will close-shave the hardest beard and leave no smarting.

Buy of your dealer. He has (or can get) the Carbo-Magnetic. Show him this advertisement—don't take any other razor. If he won't get one—we will mail, postpaid, on receipt of price. Money back if desired.

Send for Free Book "Hints to Shavers"

It illustrates the correct razor position for every part of the face; it tells how to select and care for a razor; it also explains the "why" of the "Carbo-Magnetic" and proves how, with ordinary careful use, it will keep an edge for years.

Firm of A. L. SILBERSTEIN, Makers of Carbo-Magnetic Razors, 449-450 Broadway, New York.

"Carbo-Magnetic" Elastic Cushion Strip, $1.00 each, at dealers or by mail, postpaid.

THE Carbo Magnetic RAZOR

Send NO Money $10 DRESSES ANY MAN FROM HEAD TO FOOT

FREE SAMPLES AND MEASUREMENT BLANKS

We make an up-to-date suit strictly to your measure in latest English Back Style for only $10, and give the following complete outfit FREE and you don't pay for it until you receive the suit and Free Outfit, and find it just as represented. Send to your P. O. address and we will send you FREE SAMPLES of cloth, tape measure and measurement blanks, for size of Suit, Shoes, Hat, etc. FREE

A Suit of Clothes Made to Measure from any of the samples sent you for which before would ask from $30 to $40.00

A Double Breasted, any shape Hat. . . $2.50

A pair Stylish Lisle or Congress Shoes. . . $2.50

A most Versatile Shirt. . . $1.25

A most four-to-hand Bow or Puff Tie. . . .50

A pair of good web Suspenders. . . .50

A top Headband. . . .50

A pair extra quality Lisle Thread Socks. . . .50

Many Dealers ask for this Outfit $30.00

Send No Money. SAMPLES FREE. Address CHICAGO MFG. & MDR. CO., Dept. 334 87-89-91 Washington St., CHICAGO

Ref. Metropolitan Trust and Savings Bank, Capital $750,000.00, or any Express Company in Chicago.

"THE GRAND RAPIDS" KITCHEN CABINET

The Busy Women's Friend.

$3.00 Built on honest—of hard wood—body of beautiful white maple—natural finish—the top of closely grained white wood—size top 36x48 in.—16 compartments—double sanitary metal floor lin.—Card index drawer for recipes.—Drawer for sugar, Cupboard in top for cereals and dry foods.—In bottom for vinegar, dusters, etc. Hand made poultry board and meat board of white wood with maple and pine. The best kitchen cabinet on the market. $3.00 down and $1.00 per month for 9 months. Shipped on receipt of first payment. Write for our Illustrated Catalog showing the Grand Rapids Kitchen Cabinet. Send today.

FREE A handsome hard maple rolling pin for pastry to any one who suggests any accepted additions to this cabinet.

GRAND RAPIDS KITCHEN CABINET CO.
1602 Marshall Street Grand Rapids, Mich.

Vose

PIANOS

Established in Eighteen Hundred and Fifty-One

Built on scientific principles by skilled craftsmen in the most thoroughly equipped piano factory in the world, the Vose represents The Acme of Piano Quality—the most modern achievement in the production of musical tone.

By our easy payment plan, every family in moderate circumstances can own a Vose piano. We allow a liberal price for old instruments in exchange, and deliver the piano in your house free of expense. You can deal with us at a distant point the same as in Boston.

Send for Catalogue and full information.

VOSE & SONS PIANO CO.
160 Boylston Street, Boston

Examine your own eyes—adjust your own glasses with our Oculoscope. We send it free. We sell single pairs at Wholesale Prices by mail order only. Read this letter.

Forrest, La., March 20th, 1904.
Grand Rapids Wholesale Opticians, Grand Rapids, Mich.
Dear Sirs—I received my glasses all right, and they fit me just fine. I never had a better fit in glasses. Wishing you success in business, I am, very truly, (Signed) M. T. SLATER.

SEND FOR CATALOGUE TODAY
Grand Rapids Wholesale Opticians
418 Houseman Bldg. Grand Rapids, Mich.

Hastings Tables

Tyden Lock

are guaranteed never to spread at top or bottom (locks INSIDE the pedestal—to lock at top ONLY is useless). 20,000 sold by us in last three years—all giving satisfaction.

Our "Book of Designs"

showing the very latest patterns of pedestal dining tables sent free on request. Hastings Tables are sold by leading furniture dealers.

HASTINGS TABLE CO.
Dept. D Hastings, Michigan.

Colt Acetylene Gas

CARBIDE-FEED GENERATOR
CHEAPEST AND BEST
Complete Gas Plants from $48 to $5,000
More brilliant than gas or electricity. Costs less than kerosene. Suited for any building anywhere.

Write for booklet W1
J. B. COLT CO.
21 Barclay St. New York

BRANCHES
Philadelphia
Chicago
Los Angeles

"IDEAL" STEAM COOKER FREE

To introduce our new 1904 pattern in every home in America, we will send a free, prepaid absolutely free, under the very conditions of our Plan No. 11, "Ideals" are the only cookers, both steam and electric, that are absolutely steam and electric tight and that have whistles to warn of low water in low; with drains, automatic, stainless copper tank bottoms. Fuel bills reduced one-half. 36 page book and free offer if you write today. Agents make $100 to $200 a month.

TOLEDO COOKER CO.
Desk 2 Toledo, O.

400 Babies Mailed Free!
We have just issued a handsome cabinet containing the photos of 400 beautiful babies. We want you to have it free. With it we send particulars about the ideal soap for toilet and bath. Spim Ointment also is described—$500 in prizes for pretty children—Spim Soap 25c; Spim Ointment 20c. Either will be mailed postpaid.

SPIM SOAP

The Spim Co., C.R. Knox, Pres. 14 Knox Av. Johnstown, N.Y.

STARK TREES best by Test—78 Years
LARGEST N. Y. FRUIT B-OR FREE. We WANT MORE SALESMEN PAY Weekly
STARK BROS., Louisiana, Mo.; Danville, N.Y.; Etc

The Easy Mark

Stories of the "shrewd Yankee" who is perhaps more often duped and fooled than any of his fellow-men

By RALPH D. PAINE

V.—The Accommodating Goldfish

THIS is the tale of a swindling game that sounds gorgeously impossible, but the details are a part of prosaic police records, and at Headquarters experience has taught that no scheme to take wealth from the "easy mark" is so ridiculously obvious that it may not snare a victim somewhere in the rich and fertile American field. It is necessary only to find new methods when the old become threadbare. Several years ago an uncommonly successful operator deluded thousands of investors by his alleged discovery of a method for extracting gold from sea water. This able manipulator of other people's money made a fine flurry for a considerable time, exhibited his machinery, and the convincing gold, with all the genius of the Keely motor fake "demonstrations," and when he vanished left in his wake a horde of victims whose gold had been extracted without the use of anesthetics.

The public outcry was soon forgotten, but one astute student of affairs saved many newspaper clippings of that day, selecting those which told of the startling results achieved by the discovery, but omitting to file away for future use any references to the exposure and the fiasco. The years passed, and business became dull in the "gold brick" and other standardized confidence games. The "green-goods" industry was languishing from an overdose of publicity, and the comic paragrapher had made "bunco steering" almost a lost art in the large cities.

A Business Opportunity

While studying over the problem of reviving his splendidly paying business, built up by the industry and talent of twenty years of active service, one of the ablest swindlers of the country happened to look over the data he had collected with respect to the process of extracting gold from sea water. He had an inspiration, and at once set to work to capitalize it. Two weeks later the following advertisement appeared in several New York newspapers:

"Inventor who has patented vastly profitable process wishes capital for erecting larger plant and developing operations. Working demonstration and fullest investigation offered to interested persons willing to consider purchase of partnership rights. This is a business opportunity, and only solid and intelligent men can appreciate the value of it. $5,000 is required to enlarge the plant, and no offers below this amount will be considered. Inventor will be pleased to make an appointment at his laboratory with responsible parties."

The "inventor" was a busy man during the two weeks in which he worked out the campaign. He read books on metallurgy, and he acquired a most deceptive smattering of mining and chemical technique. He picked up as an assistant a college graduate with a police record, who fitted up the laboratory until the rooms were such a complicated snarl of apparatus that they were guaranteed to befog the intellect of a layman on sight. There were rehearsals and "demonstrations" each day; for the "inventor" was a painstaking artist in his line, and he never scamped the setting of his plots. He had no intention of using old schemes, and the programme he had outlined was so glaringly "faked," and so audacious in conception, that even his case-hardened nerve was a bit excited before the curtain-raiser.

The Difficulty and Cost

The advertisement brought several nibbles and fruitless interviews before the scheme was set fairly in motion, and it was not until a victim was in the toils that the real history of the operation began, as unfolded and officially chronicled by the complainant and the police. The "easy mark" was ripe for plucking. He knew nothing about chemistry and not much more about the snares laid by clever men for the undoing of his kind, although he was rated a shrewd man of business in his own town. He met the "inventor" at a Broadway hotel, and became sufficiently interested to make an appointment for a demonstration of the merits of the invention and discovery in the afternoon of the same day. They were seated in a little office opening from the laboratory and workshop when the "inventor" outlined the proposition in detail, and this was the way he talked:

"As we were saying this morning, there are millions in this possibility of extracting the gold there is in sea water, and these newspaper clippings we were looking over satisfy me that the process has been discovered; but the cost is so great that to operate it successfully is still more or less uncertain. It was this discovery, however, that set me working along another line, and after several years I was able to prove that there is as much gold held in fresh lake or spring water as there is in the same quantity of ocean water. But the difficulty and cost

Are You a Cog?

A workman in a shop, a clerk in a store or office, a "hand" on a farm, all are like cogs in a wheel, moving continually but making no progress.

If you are in such a position, we can fit you for promotion or for work of more congenial nature, through our system of training by mail.

You can take our instruction in your spare hours, without losing any time from your present work. Our courses are low in cost—from $10 up. Textbooks are furnished free. ($100 forfeit to anyone failing in our Drawing Courses that studies as directed.) Our book

"1001 Stories of Success"

gives accounts of the advancement in position and salary of hundreds of I. C. S. students. This booklet will be sent free to all who fill in and mail to us this coupon.

International Correspondence Schools
Box 1198, SCRANTON, PA.

Please send me your booklet, "1001 Stories of Success," and explain how I can qualify for the position before which I have marked X.

Advertising	Stenographer
Show Card Writing	Steam Engineer
Window Trimming	Electrical Engineer
Mechanical Drawing	Mech. Engineer
Architectural	Civil Engineer
Illustrating	Surveyor
Current Designing	Mining Engineer
Wall Paper	Architect
Bookbinder	Building Contractor
Civil Service Exam.	Sanitary Engineer
Chemist	French
Textile Mfg.	German
Bookkeeper	Spanish
	Photograph

Name _____
Street and No. _____
City _____ State _____

I. W. Harper Rye.

"On Every Tongue."

For gentlemen who appreciate quality; for the weak who need to be strengthened; for the careful physician who requires purity; for everybody who knows a good thing. Sold by leading dealers everywhere.

BERNHEIM DISTILLING CO., Louisville, Ky.

W. L. DOUGLAS

Union Made $3.50 SHOES Worth $5.00.

$10,000.00 will be paid to any one who can prove that W. L. Douglas does not make and sell more men's $3.50 shoes than any other manufacturer in the world.

REWARD
The reason W. L. Douglas $3.50 shoes are worn by more men in all stations of life than any other make is because they hold their shape, fit better, wear longer and are of greater value than any other $3.50 shoe.

2,473,464 PAIRS OF FINE SHOES WERE MADE AND SOLD BY W. L. DOUGLAS IN 1903.

"For years I have worn Douglas $3.50 shoes exclusively. They have given me better wear and more comfort than any other shoe I formerly paid $5.00 and $6.00 for. I consider Douglas $3.50 shoes the best I have ever worn."

W. L. Douglas High-Grade Boys' Shoes, $2.00 and $1.75.
Douglas uses Corona Calfskin in his $3.50 shoes. Corona Calf is conceded everywhere to be the finest patent leather yet produced. PANT COLOR EYELETS USED EXCLUSIVELY.

W. L. Douglas $3.50 shoes are sold through his own retail stores in the principal cities, and shoe dealers everywhere. No matter where you live, Douglas shoes are within your reach. No trouble to get a fit by mail. 25c. extra postage delivery. Write for Illustrated Catalogue of Spring Styles.

W. L. DOUGLAS, 154 Spark Street, Brockton, Massachusetts.

America Leads the Shoe Fashions of the World and Douglas Shoes Lead America

LOS ANGELES—Four Days from New York or Boston—By New York Central

All over the civilized world
THE IMPROVED

BOSTON GARTER

IS KNOWN and WORN
Every Pair Warranted

The Name is stamped on every loop

The Velvet Grip

CUSHION BUTTON

CLASP

Lies flat to the leg—never Slips.
Tears not Unfastens

ALWAYS EASY

Geo. Frost Co., Makers,
Boston, Mass., U. S. A.

Send 30c. for 50c. pair, for Corset, Sample Pair.

REFUSE ALL SUBSTITUTES

"KUNSTADTER"

Heavy Gold Plate Link Button 50c

(Illustrated Three Years)

"THE DE BEERS LINK" is a unique gold, with three sparkling settings, which cannot be distinguished from the genuine diamond, except by experts. The settings are drilled in like the genuine diamond settings. Made of fine gold plate, with handsome raised beaded edge. "Kunstader" stamped on the back.

We are advertising the merits of the Kunstader Buttons in the leading publications of this country, and are making a Special Offer on a sample pair to anyone who cannot secure the Kunstader brand from his clothing or dry goods dealer.

Every "Kunstader" button is guaranteed. Our guarantee means that if the button does not last three years in perfect condition we will give a new pair FREE. We have 72 different designs. Lever back, turn other designs, which prevents breaking and allows slipping through cuffs with out injuring button holes. We will send illustration of 72 styles on request.

Send name of your dealer and enclose 10 cents (stamp will do). Be sure to mention Style 1821, shown above in this lined case. We ship postpaid.

KUNSTADTER BROS.
234-238 Adams Street CHICAGO

of extraction were obstacles that could not be successfully overcome. I set the problem aside and busied myself with my profession until I stumbled upon this extraordinary discovery, which seemed unbelievable at first. No wonder you laughed at me when I tried to give you an idea of what I was prepared to demonstrate. My assistant will have the apparatus ready in a few moments, and if you will pardon me I will join him. Meantime you may be interested in looking over some more reports of the discovery regarding sea water which led up to my experiments.

The "inventor" bowed himself out, and in a little while asked the visitor to step into the workshop, saying:

"You must bear in mind that the almost universal distribution of gold is not so surprising when its presence in water is considered. Sonstadt has shown that there is nearly one grain to each ton of sea water, and that it can be separated so as to be recognized from a quantity of water so small as one hundred and fifty to two hundred cubic centimetres of water; and as regards distribution in the soil, it is known, for example, that the ordinary brick-clay which underlies the city of Philadelphia contains gold. Please come to the side of this tank."

The Fish of Gold

In a large glass-walled tank were swimming scores of Chinese goldfish, of the varieties common in aquaria. From the metal frame of the tank ran many insulated wires, connecting with a maze of induction coils. Electrical machines adorned the tables, and there was an impressive buzzing and humming from all corners of the room. The assistant was busy in one corner with a furnace, crucible, and a battery of blowpipes. The "inventor" explained with easy confidence as he noticed the astonishment of his guest at sight of the tankful of goldfish:

"You think I have an assortment of wheels in my head, don't you? No, I am not keeping goldfish for pets, and they do play an important part in my discoveries. I said nothing about the details beyond trying to impress you with the fact that I had found a way of getting gold from water by a novel process, capable of convincing demonstration. Let us take it a step at a time. Mr. Simpson," turning to his assistant, "please turn off the current so that this gentleman can examine the tank without risk of shock."

The visitor looked as if he thought he had been made the victim of a practical joke, as he leaned over the edge of the tank and blinked at the flashing goldfish. He was about to make some sort of protest when the "inventor" headed him off by bursting into another flight of argument:

"It is as true as it is amazing that these fish have the property of absorbing the gold held in water, and that their color is caused by this absorption. I, too, laughed at the notion when it first came to me. But nature did not give the goldfish this brilliant coloring for purposes of protection against its foes, and, as I have worked out the theory, some peculiar organization has been given it for reasons I do not pretend to fathom. Yet here are the proofs before your eyes. This Carassius auratus, or golden carp, as it receives and expels water continuously through its gills, holds and absorbs minute particles of gold, and these are in sufficient quantities to color its scales. This was my first discovery; but whether or not the quantity was sufficient to be measurable, and whether it could be extracted, was the great problem. It is well known that one grain of gold can be spread over a surface of fifty-two square inches, in a layer no more than one two-hundred-and-fifty-four-thousandth of an inch thick, so that the amount of the precious metal needed to give a small fish its golden mail might be almost infinitesimally small."

The visitor was a trifle bewildered, but he was "beginning to sit up and take notice," as the "inventor" continued:

"It was electro-metallurgy in which the electric current is utilized for the reduction of ores, or the separation of metals, that finally brought my labors to success. In brief, by charging the water with a certain electric force, controlled by one of my inventions, so as to be delicately adjusted to the exact needs of the experiment, it became possible to increase the absorbing power of the goldfish, and the goal was in sight. A continuous stream of water flows in and out of the tank, and in twenty-four hours each fish has been steadily absorbing the gold particles from tons of water, working without cost, and with absolute fidelity to his employer's interests."

The Treatment

At a signal, Mr. Simpson, the assistant, made a commotion among his instruments and then came to the tank. He rolled up his sleeves as the "inventor" said to the visitor:

"You will notice that several of the goldfish are resting almost motionless on the bottom of the tank. These are ready for treatment, and will be taken out by my assistant. They were put in here only three days ago, and have in this time absorbed enough gold to increase their weight sufficiently to sink them to the bottom of the tank. The electric apparatus has been storing them full of the precious particles and rushing the absorption a hundredfold faster than nature's process. You are aware that the specific gravity of gold is from fifteen to nineteen, so that a small quantity is enough to ballast the fish. As the value of the pure metal is $206.67 per troy ounce, it does not require much of a nugget to make the goldfish a profitable source of revenue. All right, Mr. Simpson."

The assistant dipped into the tank with a

Emmerich Feather Pillows

Have the above trade mark tag attached to every pillow. Every "Emmerich" Pillow is guaranteed. Every "Emmerich" Pillow contains feathers only, no "shoddy," no bits of cloth, no foreign substances whatever, just clean feathers. Every pillow bearing our label is clean. It is unsuitable to sleep on pillows made of cheap feathers, which are not properly cleaned. You have no guarantee what you are getting in a pillow unless you rely on our label. Many a night's rest is destroyed by an unsuitable pillow. The dealer doesn't know what is in the pillow when he buys the product of unscrupulous makers. We must insist on the C. E. & Co., tag on every pillow if you want clean, comfortable, elastic, soft pillows.

"FINE FEATHERS MAKE FINE PILLOWS"

is the title of our book which is full of information about feathers and down pillows and cushions. You ought to read it before buying pillows or cushions.

Write for it—It is Free

It will also tell you how to secure FREE a beautiful feathered sofa cushion cover, which we are giving to our customers. A postal will bring our booklet. Please give your dealer's name. Address your request to CHAS. EMMERICH & CO., 192 5th Avenue, Chicago.

CORLISS COON & CO.

JENNICO 2 1/2" BASIL 2 1/2"

WINDSOR 2 1/2" RICHMOND 2 1/2"

STYLE

In Corliiss-Coon Collars Style and Good Taste are synonymous. They are never freakish, but are cut from carefully designed patterns, devised to unite elegance with comfort, dignity with correct style. We bother with the science of it; you have, in consequence, the satisfaction of wearing perfect collars.

Sold by leading dealers, 2 for 25 cents, or from us by mail if unable to find them. Write for booklet of leading shapes and information on correct dress.

CORLISS, COON & CO. Dept. R TROY, N. Y.

DIAMONDS ON CREDIT

1/4 Carat $32. 1/2 Carat $65.
$5 Cash & $5 Per Month. $10 Cash & $5 Per Month.

Value for Value

Quality for quality and weight for weight, and prices are lower than those of other responsible dealers doing business on our plan. In fact there's only 10% difference between our credit prices and acknowledged standard cash prices. Give us an opportunity to show our goods before you order elsewhere. We pay expressage whether you buy or not.

Don't hesitate to send in first payment with your order, or if it suits you better, ask us to send your selection C. O. D. first payment, subject to examination. Balance may be paid in 9 or 10 equal monthly payments.

Our new catalog No. 23 beautifully illustrated in colors, sent free everywhere.

HERBERT L. JOSEPH & CO.
Diamonds, Watches, Jewelry.
Individual Responsibility
$250,000.
148 E. State St., Chicago

WONDERFUL PIANO OFFER

THE CELEBRATED BECKWITH PIANO CO.'S UPRIGHT GRAND 25-YEAR GUARANTEED PIANOS.

$89.00
115.00
138.00
and 165.00

For the most beautiful piano offer ever heard of, write for our Free Piano Catalogue, and you will receive by return mail, free, postpaid, the handsomest, most interesting and most complete Special Piano Catalogue ever published. We will send you a facsimile of our celebrated 25-year guarantee, our one year's free trial, plus will be fully explained, how we furnish pianos on trial, without one cent of money being sent to us will be made very clear. You will receive handsome letters from the largest Chicago banks endorsing our proposition and we will explain just what the freight will be to your town. In the special catalogue we show large, hand, sizes, half-size illustrations and complete descriptions of all the different parts, the manner of construction (interior and exterior views), our color tone sample plates of the different woods, including French beamed walnut, English quarter sawn oak, best Domestic figured mahogany, etc. Each piano is shown in very large half-tone, full plate illustrations, every detail is fully and accurately described. Why the highest grade Beckwith Piano made, the Acme Cabinet Grand Concert Piano at $165.00, is in every essential point the equal of any piano made, regardless of price, is made very clear. Write for our Free Piano Catalogue and get all this free by return mail, postpaid; our latest and most astonishing offer, the greatest piano proposition ever heard of. If you have any use for a piano at any price, don't fail to write for our Free Piano Catalogue and Offers. Address:

SEARS, ROEBUCK & CO., CHICAGO

$48.75 Buys an $85.00 Union Runabout with 3/4 in. rubber tires, best hickory wheels, high arch, long distance axle, oil tempered springs, piano finish body. This is a beautiful job of first quality fully guaranteed, and worth nearly double our special factory price. We ship it to you for examination without a cent in advance, if desired, and allow 30 DAYS FREE TRIAL. If not satisfactory we agree to refund your money. You save dealers' profits. We make 136 other styles, from $26.50 to $150. Harness $5 to $60. Write today for our 100-page illustrated free catalogue and special offer.

UNION BUGGY COMPANY, C28 Saginaw Street, Pontiac, Mich.

MOVING PICTURE MACHINES

Stereopticons You can make BIG MONEY Entertaining the Public. Nothing affords better opportunity for men with small capital. We start you, furnishing complete outfit and explicit instructions at a surprisingly low cost. The field is large comprising the regular theater and lecture circuit, also local fields in Churches, Public Schools, Lodges and General Public Gatherings. Our Entertainment Supply Catalogue and special offer fully explains everything. Sent Free.

CHICAGO PROJECTING CO., 325 Dearborn Street, CHICAGO, ILL. Dept. 166.

It Costs Less

to-day than it will next year to make sure that your family will always have enough for comfort and education. Next year it may be impossible. Send for "The How and the Why." We insure by mail.

PENN MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE CO.
921 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia

Vudor Porch Shades

are made of Linden Film in different colors to match the wood-work of your house, and in various sizes to fit your porch. They shut out the sun and at the same time let in the air, making the porch a cool, airy and comfortable place on warm summer days. They screen the porch from the glare of summer sun, while allowing you an unobstructed view. The cost is very inexpensive. Write today for our booklet, "Vudor Shades." Hough Shade Corporation, 100 Key Street, Jamaica, N.Y.

THEY HANG ON

WASHBURN'S FASTENERS

Patent Improved The Fastener with a BULL-DOG GRIP. Men find comfort and utility in their use.

Applied to:
Key Chains and Rings, 25c. Cuff Holders, 20c. Dresser Supporters, 20c. Shirt Holders, 10c. Little but Never Let Go.

Sent Postpaid. Catalogue Free.

AMERICAN RING COMPANY, Dept. 75, Waterbury, Conn.

Sold Everywhere.

CUT DOWN GAS BILLS

from one-quarter to one-half usual cost by using the Little Joker Gas Governor. Makes pressure uniform. Absolutely prevents bill for over and re-regulation by meter. It is a small device and is installed in 10 minutes. Saved 1000 feet gas last week. Anyone can attach. We send full instructions 50c. postpaid. Money back if not satisfied. Agents find it a good seller.

ELKHART NOVELTY CO., Box A, Elkhart, Ind.

The hygienic influence and correction of carpal required through wearing O'Sullivan's Rubber Heels receives the recognition of the medical fraternity. When you need a lift on your heels ask your dealer to put O'Sullivan Rubber Heels on. 2 cents and small sum for attaching. All dealers of O'SULLIVAN RUBBER CO., LOWELL, MASS.

PATENTS

NEW BOOK MAILED FREE

Tell us about Patents and how to obtain them. Tell us how to secure the best of Mechanical Inventions. Send for our book. O'NEALA & SHUCK, Pat. Attys., 610 E. 12th St., Omaha.

$3 a Day.

Send us your address and we will show you how to earn $3 a day absolutely sure; we furnish the work and teach you free, you work in the locality where you live. Send us your address and we will explain the business fully; remember we guarantee that you will earn $3 for every day's work. Write at once.

ROYAL MANUFACTURING CO., Box 1106, Detroit, Mich.

GINSENG

Great opportunity offered. Booklet explaining about Ginseng sent free. Agents wanted. F. B. MILLS, Box 250, Rose Hill, N.Y.

ROYALTY PAID

and Musical Composers We arrange and popularize PIONEER PUB. CO. 523 Baltimore Building CHICAGO, ILL.

TO INTRODUCE OUR LESSON

BOOKS. A QUANTITY OF ROYAL MANU-SCRIPTS, BIBLES, BOOKS FREE. If you wish to get a copy, send $1.00 for the lesson, agree to take $1.00 worth of work (or more) as the result of your instruction, and we will send you a copy of the lesson. THE ROYAL MUSIC CO., DEPT. "M," CLEVELAND, O.

ASTHMA

Cured to stay CURED. Health with BOOK & Free. F. HAMMOND HAYES, D. D., N.Y.

No. 815

A Negligee Shirt Bargain

65c

Men's White Negligee Shirts, with pleated bosoms, neatly hemstitched. These shirts are guaranteed to fit. They are cut in the most improved pattern, have split cushion neck bands. Fastened with three pearl buttons. They are as good as any $1.00 shirt on the market. State the size of neck band when ordering. Order as many of these shirts as you want. They will be sent you with the full understanding and agreement that, if they are not the greatest shirt bargain you have ever seen, you can return them to us at our expense, and your money will be refunded. This is an opportunity to supply yourself with the most popular shirt to be worn this season at a price never before quoted on goods of equal value.

65c

Give size of neck when ordering.

THE BIG STORE BY AUTHORITY

SIEGEL & COOPER

333 N. 4TH ST. PHILADELPHIA

NEW YORK CITY, N.Y.

Blasius

Piano Buyers

everywhere we are asked to write for our plan to place the piano in their homes (free of charge), so that they may have the superb tone and satisfy themselves of its superiority before completing the actual purchase.

We will send photographic pictures, with detailed description of the new styles, giving a comprehensive idea of the piano; and look of letters of commendation from owners of the Blasius.

Payment to suit purchaser's convenience—a small sum when it is desired to keep the piano, and regular installments thereafter.

1008 Chestnut St. BLASIUS Philadelphia Pa.

"P. S." Tooth Brush

Has a flexible handle.

Ask for the "P. S." (Prophylactic Special)

—an improvement on the best.

You can't realize its comfort without trial.

Sizes—Adult's, Youth's, Child's—at all dealers by mail. Always sold in the yellow box. Leaflets mailed free, describing "The Prophylactic Family"—tooth, hair and nail brushes.

FLORENCE MFG. CO., 178 Pine Street, Florence, Mass.

MENNEN'S BORATED TALCUM TOILET POWDER

A Positive Relief For PRICKLY HEAT, CHAFING, and SUNBURN, and all other skin eruptions. Removes all odor of perspiration. Deodorizes the body after shaving. Sold everywhere, or on receipt of 5c. Get Mennen's (the original). Sample Free. GERRARD TUCKER COMPANY, Newark, N.J.

SQUABS

will for $1.50 to $5.00 a dozen; bottles and red wax seals charge 75 cents to $1.50 in an order (serving one quart). There is no pay for the first order; a free money order. If you pay for the first order, you are paid by ONE MONTH. A woman can do all the work. No mixing feed, no right labor, no going back to attend to the birds do they. Send for our FREE BOOK, "How to Make Money with Squabs," and learn this rich industry. Plymouth Rock Pigeon Company, 299 Atlantic Avenue, Boston, Mass.

DO YOU SHAVE YOURSELF? If so send $1.00 for the wonderful new RADIUM RAZOR SHOP (The Strip That Shaves). Sold under the name of Radium. Makes shaving a joy and a comfort. Doubles the value of your razor. Agents wanted for the territory. W. P. McCLARK & CO., Fort Jones, Calif.

little hand-net and carried eight flapping goldfish to his table, where the crucible and blowpipe were ready for action. The visitor followed, and he was undeniably excited, although he had gasped over the astounding news that goldfish were gold mines. The "inventor" picked up one of the squirming little victims, while the big victim looked on, and said with an air of tender solicitude:

"It seems a pity to torture the poor creatures. Mr. Simpson, see that they are killed at once. It will put them out of their misery, and you can not handle them in the crucible while they are alive, you know." Mr. Simpson did as he was told, hitting each fish a smart blow on the head. Then he took the one nearest to hand and slipped it in the crucible.

Before this, however, the visitor was urged to examine all the apparatus, while the "inventor" explained its workings. This move was designed to allay all possible suspicion that any gold was concealed in the receptacles, and to give opportunity for more plausible talk.

"Of course, the gold is in particles distributed throughout the body of the fish," said the "inventor," "and the crucible and blowpipe reduce all the animal matter to a powdery ash, which practically disappears, leaving whatever gold there is in the form of a small button as it is melted and cools in the bottom of the crucible."

The visitor nodded and looked wise. Mr. Simpson became furiously busy. There was a strong odor of frying fish, and in a few moments, after the crucible had been allowed to cool, the assistant allowed the two on-lookers to peer into it. There at the bottom was a little shining nugget. It was removed and tested with acids.

Profit per Goldfish

There was no mistake in the calculation. It was, indeed, a button of pure gold, and the visitor made his own test, and he knew there was no error. True, it would require twenty of them to make a cubic inch of gold, but even the scant half ounce was worth ten dollars of any man's money. The next goldfish in order of sacrifice the visitor was allowed to reduce to powder, and this time he flourished the blowpipe with an air of victory when the gold nugget was found, weighed, and tested. It was not so heavy as the first, but its value was slightly over seven dollars, and this yielded pleasing dividends on the goldfish as an investment. The six fish remaining were put through the process, and they netted a total valuation of sixty-seven dollars in gold averaging ninety-six per cent of purity.

Then the "inventor" wiped his heated brow, pulled out a pencil, and figured as follows:

"I have found that the profit per goldfish will average between six and ten dollars—say six, to be conservative. To undertake the process on a big scale we must have tanks to hold ten thousand fish, and we will breed them ourselves, making the cost of the fish not more than five cents each as soon as they begin to multiply. Until they get their growth, we must buy them, but on a whole-sale basis I can get all the fish we need for twenty-five cents each, and if we corner the visible supply in this country, we can import them from China by the thousand. The mechanical plant big enough to employ the process to the best advantage will cost not more than ten thousand dollars, and the total outlay, including interest on the investment, pay-roll, and running expenses, will not amount to more than twenty-five cents per fish, until we are able to raise our own stock to maturity, and then the cost of production will be cut in two.

"That makes us sure of a clear profit of more than one thousand per cent from the start, and millions in sight. I can peg along here, making a handsome living on this limited scale, but I am eager to make a fortune, and it is in sight, and that is why I am willing to sell an interest in the invention for enough to give me a working capital. I can put five thousand in the proposition to build a plant, but I need five thousand more to complete it and another five thousand to buy stock, and that is why I am willing to let you have a third interest as a partner for the amount named. I will be content with my share of the profits, for neither I nor my children will live long enough to spend half of them."

Profit per Sucker

The visitor was thinking so hard that he had a headache. It seemed too good to be true, yet there was no getting away from the marvelous profits his dazzled vision had beheld. The serious objection to these "easy mark" stories is that they all end after the same fashion, and the endings are not happy ones. The victim of this sad history followed the monotonous example of all the rest of the "easy marks" and invested five thousand dollars in the invention for extracting gold from goldfishes. Not long after he remarked at police headquarters:

"The invention worked beautifully, but there was a mistake in the name he called it by, a mistake of one word. It was not a system for extracting gold from goldfish, but of extracting gold from suckers, a difference in the variety of fish."

One detail in the artistic work of the laboratory may need explanation. When the goldfish were taken alive from the tank they did not go into the crucible. When Mr. Simpson picked them up, one at a time, to subject them to cremation, he made a lightning shift by neat sleight-of-hand work and substituted a prepared dead fish, in whose body had been inserted the little gold nugget. And it was the stuffed goldfish that vanished in ashes and left in the crucible the dazzling argument which caused a fool and his money to part company.

W. M. OSTRANDER, Suite 162, North American Building, Philadelphia

Please send, without cost to me, a plan for finding a cash buyer for my property which consists of.....

Town.....County.....State.....

IF You Could

Following is a brief description.....

Lowest cash price.....

Name.....

Address.....

Call at my office, see my equipment, and have me explain to you personally how I do business. I believe that you would be absolutely satisfied that I am better equipped to make a quick cash sale of your property than any other real estate broker in the country. I would like to explain to you how I find buyers for all kinds of property in all parts of the country through advertising, through my branch offices, and through the hundreds of real estate men with whom I co-operate. I would like to explain to you how a buyer is found in Maine, and sent to California, or how a buyer is found in Chicago, and sent to Texas or Florida, and taken care of until he finds a property that suits him. I would like to explain to you personally scores of other things concerning my business which cannot be satisfactorily explained in my advertisements or by letter. I don't want you to simply take my word for the assertion that I am doing the largest real estate business in the world, and that I have more efficient methods than any other broker. I will tell you how to find this out for yourself, if you have not already done so, and will give you indisputable evidence of the wonderful results I have accomplished. I will tell you how I sell all kinds of property in all parts of the country every day, and how I turn properties into cash after other brokers fail. If I did not have the ability and facilities to sell your property, I certainly could not afford to pay for this advertisement. This ad. [like all my other ads.] is practically sure to place on my list a number of new properties, and I am just as sure to sell these properties, and make enough money in commissions to pay for the cost of the ad., and make a good profit besides. Why not put your property among the number that will be sold as a result of this ad.? It doesn't matter whether you have a farm, a home without land, or a business; it doesn't matter where it is located, or what it is worth. If you will fill in, and mail to me, the blank on the upper portion of this page, I will outline a plan for quickly converting your property into cash, and will send you (free) my interesting and instructive booklet. You will be glad to get the information, even if you decide not to sell. Do it right now before you forget it.

If you want to buy any kind of a property in any part of the country, fill in, and mail to me, the blank on the lower portion of this page. I will guarantee to fill your requirements promptly and satisfactorily.

Remember, that while you are filling out one of the blanks on this page, it is quite probable that somebody will be filling out one of the hundreds of thousands of blanks that appear in this and other leading publications, to correspond exactly with your requirements.

Town or City.....

County.....State.....

Price between $.....and $.....

I will pay $.....down, and the bal.....

Remarks.....

Name.....

Address.....

If you want to sell, fill in, cut out, and mail this blank to-day

If you want to buy, fill in, cut out, and mail this blank to-day

W. M. OSTRANDER Suite 162, North American Building Philadelphia

I desire to buy a property corresponding approximately with the following specifications:

PENDLETON INDIAN ROBES

$4 to $15 Express Prepaid

Made of the finest Eastern Oregon Wool, in absolutely fast colors, in the latest, most attractive Indian patterns, these popular robes have become a necessity in the well-ordered home.

The color combinations and designs are thoroughly Indian and are furnished us by the tribes themselves. The Indian is the best judge of a blanket, always buys the best. That is why we ship thousands to the Reservations every year. They are used in homes everywhere for slumber robes, veranda wraps, church covers, trunk and box throws. Their bright, striking colors will be a welcome addition to every corner, "rude" and college room, while their satisfying warmth is a boon to the invalid, the convalescent, the traveler, the camper.

Send for FREE catalogue "C," with illustrations of the various patterns and the robes in actual use. Robes returnable if not perfectly satisfactory.

PENDLETON WOOLEN MILLS, Pendleton, Oregon.

Dealers, write us for discounts.

Learn the Truth

Do you know that the main cause of unhappiness, ill-health, sickly children, and divorce is admitted by physicians and shown by court records to be ignorance of the laws of self and sex?

Sexology

ILLUSTRATED

Contains in one volume

Knowledge a Young Man Should Have.

Knowledge a Young Husband Should Have.

Knowledge a Father Should Have.

Knowledge a Father Should Impart to His Son.

Medical Knowledge a Husband Should Have.

Knowledge a Young Woman Should Have.

Knowledge a Young Wife Should Have.

Knowledge a Mother Should Have.

Knowledge a Mother Should Impart to Her Daughter.

Medical Knowledge a Wife Should Have.

By WILLIAM H. WALLING, A.M., M.D.

New Edition. Enlarged and Illustrated. Rich Cloth Binding. Full gold stamp. $2.00.

Write for "Other People's Opinions" and Table of Contents, also 100-page illustrated catalogue of books of merit—FREE.

FULTON PUB. CO., Dept. W, Philadelphia

Buy from Our Factory SAVE A THIRD

Our plan of selling direct to user cuts out two profits and saves a third on retail prices. Our assortment of carriages and harness is larger than any dealer can show you. We guarantee all our goods. We are honest, reliable, manufacturers—not a commission house. Send for our free illustrated catalogue.

THE COLUMBUS CARRIAGE AND HARNESS CO., Columbus, Ohio

EVERLASTING Writing
The Writing of a
Dixon's Eterno Pencil

As the writing on the obelisk is a part of the stone, so the writing of the new indeleble copying pencil—Dixon's Eterno—becomes a part of the paper, and wears as long as there's a scrap of the paper left. For all business purposes.

Writes Black Copies Purple

Sold by stationers, with or without nickel-plated protectors. A copy of Dixon's Pencil Guide, indexed by notations, will bring you pencil satisfaction—it's free if you'll write for it.

Dept. AQ
JOSEPH DIXON CRUCIBLE CO.
Jersey City, N. J.

A match—a second—two cents

A HOT BATH
Instantly. Anytime. Anywhere.

Always ready—day or night

By the use of the
Humphrey Crescent Water Heater

No Ashes, Soot or Trouble.

Greatest economy. Used with gas. Will last a lifetime. More than 50,000 in use daily. Prices $16.00 to $45.00. Shipped anywhere on 30 DAYS' TRIAL. Send today for interesting, illustrated descriptive booklet

"The Luxury of a Bath." It's FREE.
Humphrey Co., Dept. K, Kalamazoo, Mich.

NOTES OF PROGRESS IN SCIENCE AND INVENTION

Research shows that the elephant was developed from an animal resembling the tapir

DR. CHARLES W. ANDREWS has now published the results obtained by him in his studies on the ancestral forms of the elephant. His researches have been carried on in Egypt, and as a result he is able to show that the elephants originated in Africa, and that the ancestors of the extinct mastodon and the modern elephant were small herbivorous animals about the size of a tapir. Three series of evolutionary changes are noticeable: a progressive elongation of the legs, a progressive shortening of the neck, and a gradual elongation of the snout into a muscular prehensile organ, which finds its highest development in the trunk of the elephant. Coincident with these changes in structure came changes in the habits of feeding, until the animals were no longer capable of grazing like ordinary herbivorous animals, but must convey all their food to their mouths by means of the flexible, muscular snout.

The Economy of Jap-a-Lac

JAP-A-LAC will put a beautiful, glossy, durable finish on any kind of furniture, woodwork, metal-work, floors, etc. It makes and maintains a fine operation and follows the line of the finish. It comes in twelve colors, and clear. For any finish desired—Oak, Cherry, Mahogany, Walnut, White, etc. If you have never used JAP-A-LAC, mention this periodical and send us ten cents to cover the exact cost of mailing, and we will send you free a sample can of any color JAP-A-LAC you desire. The request we will send from booklet, colored and sample of wood, showing model floor finishes.

THE GLIDDEN VARNISH CO.
Makers of High-Grade Finishes, Dept. F,
1942 Williamson Bldg., Cleveland, Ohio

Are You Chained To The Wash Tub

We can sever the chain

FREE TRIAL

Whether a housekeeper does her own washing or not the worry and work connected with "Rinse Monday" literally chains her to the wash-tub. Let us send you

The "1900"
BALL-BEARING
FAMILY WASHER

Freight prepaid. No money or promise of any kind required. Use it for 30 days; then if you do not wish to purchase, return it at our expense. We pay the freight both ways. Unlike all other washers, the "1900" sends the water through the clothes and washes them absolutely clean in six minutes with no wear or tear on the garments or the operator. Perfectly adjusted ball-bearings do the same for it as for the bicycle—make it work with little effort. IT IS ABSOLUTELY FREE TO YOU FOR 30 DAYS. Write today for full information and catalogue.

"1900" WASHER CO., 125 E. Henry Street, BINGHAMTON, N. Y.

New method of locating fractures in bones by listening to the vibrations of a tuning-fork

A VERY simple method of locating fractures in bones, particularly in long ones, by the aid of a tuning-fork, is proposed by a Chicago surgeon. A stethoscope is placed over the bone as near as possible to the point of suspected fracture and on the side where the skin is thinnest. Then a vibrating tuning-fork is placed against the flesh near the bone, but on the other side of the fracture if possible. If the bone is continuous, a distinct clear sound will be heard in the stethoscope, but if the break is between the two, this sound will be faint and irregular, as the vibrations will not be transmitted past the break. Of course, this method depends upon the fact that hard bone is an excellent conductor of vibration, while tissue is not. Perhaps even a more valuable application of this idea would be in finding out when a break has knitted properly, for when the joining is again perfect the sound will be as clear as that of an unbroken bone.

ALLEN'S FOOT-EASE

Shake Into Your Shoes

Allen's Foot-Ease, a powder for the feet. It cures painful, swollen, aching, burning feet, and instantly makes the most worn and broken shoes comfortable. It's the greatest comfort discovery of the age. Allen's Foot-Ease makes tight-fitting shoes feel easy. It is a certain cure for ingrowing nails, sweating, calluses and hot, itchy feet. We have over 200 testimonials. TRY IT TO-DAY. At Druggists and Shoe Stores, 25c. Do not accept an imitation. Sent by mail for 50c. in stamps.

FREE TRIAL PACKAGE sent by mail.
MOTHER GRAY'S SWEET POWDERS the best medicine for Feverish, Teething Children. Sold by Druggists everywhere. Trial Package FREE. Address:
ALLEN S. OLSTED, Le Roy, N. Y.

Office Men

Work Easier
Keep Cooler

Feel Freer

"Lightweight" President SUSPENDERS

are the lightest and smartest for Summer wear—a oz. Guaranteed—Satisfaction, a new pair or your money back. 50c and $1.00 any store, or by mail.

THE C. A. EDGARTON MFG. CO.
Box 546 Shirley, Mass.

The trade-mark of Quality.

$47.00
for June

A diamond bought in the ordinary way reaches you through several middlemen, each taking his profit.

Either ring we offer for June has been selected from our own immense stock and mounted in our own factory. We guarantee them to be fine white diamonds, free from flaws and imperfections. The price is lower than has ever before been made for diamonds of equal weight and brilliancy, and we recommend an early purchase as we can not long continue to offer them for such a low figure. Safe delivery guaranteed at our expense. If not delighted with purchase, return it, and receive full price paid.

This price is for June only

Free Our latest 336-page Catalogue. An indispensable guide to good values.

Mermod & Jaccard Jewelry Company
Dept. G, St. Louis

"Lowest price house in America for fine goods."

Device for utilizing the buzzing in a telephone in place of the pilot in harbor navigation

EVERYONE who has used the telephone is familiar with the very annoying buzzing in the receiver caused by the proximity of wires carrying alternating current for lighting or power. This buzzing is caused by a very small current induced in the telephone circuit through the intervening space, by the alternating current in the other wire. It is proposed by Professor Owens, of McGill University, to turn this phenomenon to account in navigation, so that it will be possible for the captain of a ship to take his vessel into an unknown harbor without the aid of a pilot. A well-insulated and protected cable is laid in the middle of the channel, and through it an alternating current is passed. On the bottom of the vessel are two short wires, forming part of two telephone circuits, the receivers being on the bridge. When in close proximity and in line with the cable a loud and clear buzzing will be produced in the receivers, while if the ship moves out of the channel the sound will gradually die away. Thus by listening to the receivers it is possible to keep the ship right in her course, though totally ignorant of the geography of the harbor.

DON'T SHOUT!

The "Morley"

makes low sounds and whispers plainly heard. A miniature Telephone for the Ear—invisible, easily adjusted, and entirely comfortable. Over fifty thousand sold, giving instant relief from deafness and head noises. No case of deafness that cannot be benefited.

Write for booklet and testimonials.
The Morley Company, Dept. 66
19 South 14th St., Philadelphia

BARRETT'S

COMPLETE COURSE IN
HEALTHFUL EXERCISE

Thoroughly demonstrates by numerous illustrations the best and quickest method of obtaining physical development and expert health. No apparatus or medicine necessary. A complete, inexpensive system everybody should have. Teaches same course for which personal instruction charges $25.00. Only $1.00 prepaid. Send at once. Money back if not satisfied.

WALTER G. KRAFT, 123 LaSalle Street, Chicago

WEBSTER DICTIONARY

For 18c.

10,000 WORDS and Definitions. A Wonderful Offer!

Besides being a complete and accurate Dictionary this volume contains weights and measures, spelling, punctuation, use of capitals, value of coins, holidays, parliamentary law, postal information, population, etc. Send for this wonderful bargain today. 18 cents in stamps will bring this Dictionary to you.

C. W. WEBSTER, Dept. 201, ITACA, N. Y.

This is the Limit

A Hot Water, Self-Regulating, 100 Egg Incubator $4.50. $1.00 and up in Brooders. All on 30 DAYS' TRIAL. No agents. You pay no middleman profits. See catalogue for "100% Hatches." Write
BUCKEYE INCUBATOR COMPANY, Box 27, Springfield, Ohio

Be Your Own Boss!

MANY MAKE $2,000.00 A YEAR You have the same chance. Start a Mail Order Business at home. We tell you how. Money comes daily. Enormous profits. Everything furnished. Write at once for our "Starter" and FREE particulars.

C. W. KRUEGER CO., 125 Washington Street, Chicago

PATENT SECURED

Or Fee Returned

Free opinion as to patentability. Send for Guide Book and 1000 to invent, find publications issued for free distribution. Patent secured by an inventor free in Patent. Success Case Book.

EVANS, WILKINS & CO., 885 F St., Washington, D. C.

PARKER'S HAIR BALM

Cleaves and beautifies the hair. Promotes luxuriant growth. Never Falls Out. Give Hair to Its Youthful Color. Get only genuine and hair falling.

50c and $1.00 at Druggists.

CROOKED SPINES MADE STRAIGHT

If you are suffering from any form of spinal trouble, you can be cured in your own home without pain or discomfort. A wonderful anatomical appliance has been invented by a man who cured himself of spinal curvature. Its results are marvelous. It is nature's own method. It has never yet failed. The old methods of torture are doomed forever. The scientific and medical world is amazed at the cures being effected. Physicians in hospitals and in private practice are endorsing it. The new discovery relieves the pressure at the affected parts of the spine, the spinal cord is invigorated and strengthened, the cartilage between the vertebrae expands and the spine is straightened.

There is bright hope for all, no matter how long you have suffered. We have strong testimonials from every state in the Union. The appliances are being sent all over the world. Each one is made from individual measurements and fits perfectly. There is positively no inconvenience in wearing. We guarantee satisfaction or refund your money at the end of thirty days trial. Write for free booklet giving full information and list of references.

PHILO BURT MFG. CO., 401 Sixth St., Jamestown, N. Y.

DWIGGINS

Invincible

Twice the life of any other fence. Double galvanized steel wire; weather and rust-proof. Never loses its rigidity. Trim, clever designs for parks, lawns, cemeteries, etc. Catalogue FREE, shows variety of styles 20c. to 50c. a ft.

Dwiggins Wire Fence Co., 52 Dwiggins Ave., Anderson, Ind.

U. S. A. Liquid Pistol

Will stop the most vicious dog (or man) without permanent injury. Perfectly safe to carry without danger of leakage. Fires and recharges by pulling the trigger. Loads from any liquid. No cartridges required. Over 30 shots in one loading. All dealers, or by mail, 50c. Rubber covered holster 5c. extra.

PARKER, STRAINS & SUTTON, 284 South St., New York, U. S. A.

COLLIER'S

SATURDAY, JUNE 4, 1904

P. F. COLLIER & SON, PUBLISHERS, 415-425 WEST THIRTEENTH ST., NEW YORK; 10 NORFOLK ST., STRAND, LONDON, W. C. 1. COPYRIGHT 1904 BY P. F. COLLIER & SON. ENTERED AT THE NEW YORK POST-OFFICE AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

RUSSIAN COSSACKS ON THE MARCH ACROSS LAKE BAIKAL

PHOTOGRAPH BY VICTOR K. BULLA, COLLIER'S SPECIAL WAR PHOTOGRAPHER WITH THE RUSSIAN FORCES IN MANCHURIA. COPYRIGHT 1904 BY COLLIER'S WEEKLY

During the first two months of the war all reinforcements and supplies had to be taken across the frozen surface of Lake Baikal, forty miles wide, as the Trans-Siberian Railroad was not completed at this point and the ice-breaking ferries were unable to keep a channel open. Rest houses were built at frequent intervals, but, despite all precautions, the sufferings of the troops were very severe. Crevices and windrows of broken ice made marching and sledging dangerous and exhausting. One regiment, losing the trail in a storm, wandered into such treacherous ice that six hundred men were drowned and frozen. A large number of soldiers were disabled by frostbite. During this period it was impossible to move more than two thousand troops a day across Lake Baikal. The ice broke up in May, and the ferries are now being used for the transportation of men and supplies. The Cossacks shown in this picture are from the Ural region, and are a part of the cavalry force who harassed the Japanese advance on Liaoyang and Haicheng.

LET US DISTINGUISH. Some souls affect to be lacerated because Mr. ROOSEVELT evidently intends to run his own campaign. If Mr. CORTELYOU is Chairman of the Republican National Committee, he will be a mere spokesman for the President. Such an arrangement seems to us proper and even admirable. It is one thing to make appointments under the influence of a wish for nomination and election. That, obviously, is to be regretted. It is another thing to dictate the strategy and principles of the campaign, and that the President has a perfect right to do, for it in no way interferes with his independence, but rather increases it, because the issues are more likely to be what he wishes them to be, and the money is more likely to be raised in ways which are not distasteful to his conscience. Mr. HANNA made an admirable manager for Mr. McKINLEY; he would not make a good manager for Mr. ROOSEVELT. The campaign, conducted by the President by proxy, will be purer than if it were conducted by the usual brand of chairman. The opponents of Mr. ROOSEVELT are overdoing the personality issue. The President's temperament and character must be discussed, in connection with what he has done and what he is likely to do, but you might select the most egotistic extracts from "The Rough

THE PRESIDENT'S CAMPAIGN

Riders," or, as Mr. DOOLEY put it, "Alone in Cuba," and get the attention of every voter in the United States without costing Mr. ROOSEVELT a thousand votes.

Indeed, that personal obstreperousness which offends some individuals endowed with taste is a part of his popularity throughout the country. If Judge PARKER is nominated, the contrast between silence and commotion will naturally be eloquently depicted by the Democrats, but the ordinary hard-headed voter is not to be convinced on such æsthetic grounds. He does not object to the President's running his campaign, or talking on as many topics as the Emperor WILLIAM, or as volubly as Mr. BRYAN. His answer will be, "Well, what then?" The task will be to explain what the President has done that is wrong, and explain away all that he has done that is good, and no easy task it is likely to prove. We imagine that if Mr. ROOSEVELT takes Mr. CORTELYOU out of the Department of Commerce, replacing him with some strong man like Governor CRANE, and uses the Chairman of the National Committee as a mere lieutenant of his own, he will be taking a course that is not only good politics, but entirely justifiable from the standpoint of the public welfare. There is no reason why the President should not make use of his skill as a politician by assuming the legitimate campaign leadership.

ST. LOUIS ON JULY 6 promises to be a lively spot. As Judge PARKER's friends apparently can not go there with the nomination assured, every Democratic candidate, known or obscure, will have some shadow of a hope. PARKER may be nominated on the second ballot, or he may fall off immediately after the conservative votes have been cast for him in the opening show of strength. The extremists still hope some compromise—a few of them hope even victory—when the confused situation paves the way for Mr. BRYAN's eloquent appeal in favor of somebody, perhaps HEARST, more likely, perhaps, some Western man, with HEARST possibly in second place. We do not look upon such a result as possible, but the number is considerable who hold the view. Among the Western men, HARRISON is apparently out of the possibilities, and as FOLK is the kind of man who has never yet said what he did not mean, we believe that if he were nominated he would step upon the platform and refuse to run. Among dark horses, few, if any, stand a better chance than McCLELLAN, even with the REMSEN gas bill as material against him.

POSSIBILITIES

OLNEY is by no means dead, since, although the idea of him lacks interest, he is looked upon with approval by the conservative wing and with endurance bordering upon gratitude by the Bryanites. GORMAN is a mere politician whose only chance would lie in the hazards of political intrigue. Mr. CLEVELAND, old and unambitious as he is, probably could, unlike FOLK, be forced to take the nomination if a rush of feeling came his way. Should the objections to a Southerner melt in a long-continued strain, we might have in WILLIAMS the most attractive candidate of all. COLLIER's is neither Democratic nor Republican, nor does it urge any single candidate for the St. Louis nomination, but we are willing to confess that if Mr. WILLIAMS were the candidate the campaign would suddenly increase in interest, and various leaders on the other side would sit up nights.

WHAT MR. HAY SAYS is likely to be important, not only for its intrinsic thought, but for its significance in present history. His documents and addresses are seldom the mere expression of his temperament, as the words of some of our statesmen are, even though Mr. HAY is a poet and they are not. On a historic theme, like the event now being celebrated at St. Louis, the Secretary of State would be especially careful in what he said. His words about American expansion, therefore, are a pondered and definite expression of what the guardian of our foreign destiny believes. And his acceptance of destiny, as a factor in human history, is not vague excitement, but the recognition of the frequent powerlessness of individual principle in the face of general tendency. One of the most tenacious dreams of NAPOLEON, as Mr. HAY points out, was to establish on the right bank of the Mississippi a Latin empire, reaching from the Gulf to the Pacific Ocean. The principle closest to the heart of THOMAS JEFFERSON was strict construction of our Constitution, forbidding to the National Government all power not expressly granted by the States. Yet these two statesmen carried out a transaction which most radically contradicted the one's conviction and the other's dream.

MR. HAY
ON DESTINY

"More important," concludes Mr. Hay, "than the immense material increase in the extent and resources of the new Republic was this establishment of the principle thus early in its career, that it was to assume no inferior position to other nations in its power to acquire territory, to extend its influence—in short, to do all that any independent, self-respecting power might do which was in accord with public morals, conducive to the general welfare, and not prohibited by the Constitution. Though the Federalists failed to embrace this great opportunity, and thereby brought upon their party an Iliad of woes, the precedent had been set for all time for their successors." He is for peace, and he makes it a glory that Louisiana was acquired without a shot; but on the question of expansion he speaks in no uncertain tones. Mr. BRYAN, Mr. WILLIAMS, Mr. CLEVELAND, and all other anti-imperialists, will recognize in Mr. HAY their most redoubtable opponent.

THE PRICE OF RUSSIAN BONDS, compared to those of Japan, has somewhat surprised the general world. People in general have been inclined to see in the favorable terms obtained by Russia an argument that she was expected to win ultimately, and that her resources were much superior to those of her opponent. Some have explained the Japanese loan on the ground that her statesmen, who have shown themselves so keenly alive to the value of public opinion, wish terms which would make foreigners eager to buy. We need not undervalue these factors in believing that they are not the main cause for the favorable terms given to Russia. Public opinion, as Secretary HAY is the latest prominent man to say, rules the world. "We are all aware that the days of personal government are gone forever; that behind us [the diplomats], and behind the rulers we represent, there stands the vast, irresistible power of public opinion, which in the last resort must decide all the questions we discuss, and whose judgment is final." A wish to conciliate this force was probably one, and much the least, of three influences which determined the relative rates of the Japanese and Russian loans. Second in importance was the belief of conservative men that a fundamental calamity is less likely for Russia than for Japan. Even if defeated, Russia in this view may not suffer profoundly. Had the loans been made after the Hatsue and the Yoshino met a fate which cast some doubt upon the future sea control, the rates would probably have been about what they were. The principal reason is independent of both these considerations, and is simply the amount of money which Russia already owes. Her creditors were compelled to treat her well, not because they wished to lend her more, but because it was necessary for them to give all possible stability to the huge sums which they had already loaned her. As an American banker puts it: "In France there is little enthusiasm for either country at war, but there is a general feeling of danger for the French money invested in Russian securities."

RUSSIAN
CREDIT

ADVICE TO RUSSIA AND JAPAN continues in unabated volume, no check being caused by the ignorance of the scribes bestowing it. Some people write only what they know and think, but others are compelled by tradition or by temperament to display always a comic omniscience. "Do you think Russia will win eventually, or Japan?" is a question which is fired daily at us with confidence that the answer will reek with conviction and with amused contempt for those who think otherwise. If Generals KUROKI and KUROPATKIN could receive the admonitions breathed out to them from all over the world, they would not omit to remember the rainy season, the position of the enemy, NAPOLEON's trip to Moscow, the importance of prestige, or the desirability of keeping a line of communication and supply. Count CASSINI, although he had been Minister to Peking, apparently knew nothing of real conditions in Manchuria and Japan. It is a little strange that what an intelligent diplomat upon the spot entirely failed to comprehend seems clear to a bank clerk and an editorial writer some thousand miles away. This lack of intellectual modesty almost reminds us of the American critic and historian, who, being asked for the birthplace of our Lord and Saviour, made reply, "I do not remember. I was born in Quincy."

ADVICE TO THE CONTESTANTS

OF ALL ASIATICS none seem more characterless and without color than the Koreans. The world sees them ignored and thinks that perhaps a better fate would not become them. Koreans are as distinct in type from Japanese as Moors from Germans. The Korean spends all of his time in the street, always dresses in white, whether he is handling coal or digging a ditch, never washes his body, and his clothes only rarely, and he looks at anything out of his monotonous routine with dull, preoccupied curiosity, sauntering along the street's length and back again, with the dignity of emptiness. Giving way to a masterful race, the Korean, not making even the feint of resistance, still retains that stupidly impassive dignity. "Let the Japanese come! We will still wear our white and do our hair up in knots on top of our heads, and thus, you see, we shall lose nothing." They are as noncommittal about the coming of the Japanese as the average American or Englishman about the tribal differences of the Fijians. Men and women dressing much alike, in their muddy-colored white clothes, with women's faces that are not feminine, and men's faces that are not masculine, they seem to lack sex as well as all other attributes. They are a race asleep, that gives no promise of ever waking up. There is every difference in the world between modernity and civilization. The ancient Greeks are supposed by many competent judges to have been the most civilized people that have yet walked upon the globe. The Chinese are civilized without being modern. The Japanese are both. The Koreans are neither. They can be reckoned only as a cipher.

KOREAN CHARACTER

SENATOR CLARK OF MONTANA is a rich man, now engaged in making wealth ridiculous. Plutocrats have built absurd edifices before, but they are doing it less. They are becoming more educated themselves, and they are learning to trust architects. Senator CLARK has not been bitten with this modern tendency. No sudden millionaire of thirty years ago could have produced a thing more awful than the New York residence into which he is putting millions. A diplomat, asked by Senator CLARK his opinion of this palace, is reported to have answered that it was one of the three most remarkable residences in the world. We have heard artists, who, compelled to pass it every day, declare it the most meretricious piece of architecture in America. The pretence crowded into this enormity marks the record in the metropolis. Probably, even after reading this editorial, Senator CLARK will refuse to tear his horror down. We therefore add the only happy aspect. A vacant lot now enables the new structure to be seen for blocks down Fifth Avenue. Some day that lot will be occupied, and then only a fraction as many persons will be stricken with the CLARK façade. It is hard to write so cruelly. If rich men were not surrounded by a wall of flattery, perhaps Mr. CLARK would have been set right long ago.

TO SENATOR CLARK

NEGROES SHOULD BE ENCOURAGED when they get upon the right track. Their problem is a difficult one, and we heartily praised a negro journalist the other day for facing it with pride and not with demands upon the whites. Pride of the right sort is good for any race. The negro preacher who, since we wrote before, has advised his hearers not to sing "Wash me and I shall be whiter than snow," was on the right track. The negro needs songs, literature, shops, society of his own; and this same preacher admitted that wherever the negro tries genuinely to rise the white man is willing to help. This gentleman's theory of creation may not be convincing, but it is wholesome none the less. "God never made a white man. In the beginning all men were black, but in their wanderings on the earth many of them have become bleached. And in their unnatural pallor many of these bleached men, all of whom were made black at the beginning, now look with contempt and indifference—often with prejudice and hate—upon their brothers, the negroes, who have retained the color that God gave them." That hostility diminishes, as our friend admits, when the unbleached brother proves that worthiness toward which so high an origin should be an impulse. The attitude taken by Mr. BLANCHARD, the new Governor of Louisiana, is the one taken by the most intelligent whites in the South and by the few wisest blacks themselves. Governor BLANCHARD, accepting phraseology made notorious by the President, is against closing the door of hope against any one of any color, and is therefore a champion of education and an opponent of illegal punishment, but at the same time a believer in separate social life. The South understands more fully every day the need of practical opportunity and help for the negro, and the North is coming to understand the need of social lines. Negro pride is a necessary foundation on which to work.

NEGRO PRIDE

MEN WHO ARE MERELY LITERARY are not much honored in America. A friend of ours, returning from Great Britain, remarked that some of the literary men in London were a cross between Amherst College and the Authors' Club. The mere author, being more respected on the other side, is more often found there. Here the line is slight between authorship and journalism, and journalism means contact with the world. Our friend's comment was applied to those petty authors who swell with their profession, advertising it in every way from vocabulary to hair. They are part of the unending Dunciad. Dr. JOHNSON gave some good advice:

MERELY AUTHORS

"Deign on the passing world to turn thine eyes,
And pause awhile from letters to be wise."

It was BYRON, himself so infinitely removed from the anæmic pose of letters, who put into familiar form the eternal spur when he observed that

"'Tis pleasant, sure, to see one's name in print;
A book's a book, although there's nothing in't."

Author's vanity is decreasing, even in what is left of Grub Street. If this change tends to make authors human and manly, to give them the virtues which come from living in the world, may it not also dim the interest in form which is a necessity of art? Journalism, which is most of American authorship, is direct and spirited, but poor in that finish without which there is no permanence. We nowadays put great stress upon the man behind the book, and sometimes forget that, as the lines of GOETHE say, although activity in the world develops character, retirement is good for talent. Once the author was too much a man apart. Now, perhaps, he is too subject to the pressure of the market and the distracting ambitions of the world.

IS MARCONI A BENEFACTOR? Doomed is that cheery and honorable jest which we bestow upon one another in midocean: "Have you seen the morning paper?" The contrast between the noisy, newsy turmoil of the land and the noble isolation of the sea gave significance to the daily pleasantries. Only the imaginative among travelers know the full enjoyment of the ocean—the imaginative and the firm of stomach. The delicate are wretched and the prosaic are bored, and sometimes those who are neither prosaic nor ill are restive because habit has enslaved them with the thirst for a thousand small diversions. The imagination which is free to know the ocean is lifted by it to a larger life. The very movement of the waves is in two lines, which a great English poet translated from a still greater German:

"Strongly it bears us along in swelling and limitless billows, Nothing before and nothing behind but the sky and the ocean."

These emotions of the deep we are to have no longer unmixed with the madding life of every day. MARCONI having solved the problem of constant intercourse between ocean steamers and the sea, all the big liners will hereafter be compelled to meet the nervous demand for news, even although the passengers believe in their hearts it would be better for them to spend in the old, impressive way the few and ever lessening days which modern ingenuity allows us in passing from one continent to another. We have long been accustomed to speak of communication as universal, but it is likely that to 1950 the communication of 1900 will seem antiquated and slight. After the telegraph and the telephone it looked as if the end was almost reached. The general public thought only of airships as the next big step, until MARCONI came along with his epoch-marking step forward in the great work of reducing our globe to a ball so small that a few moments are sufficient to make its circuit. In these great matters we have no choice. "Progress" will have its way. But if we were personally to be consulted about the evolution of the world, we should meditate profoundly before allowing MARCONI newspapers to invade the vast privacy of the sea.

A DAILY PAPER ON THE OCEAN

Hitachiyama, the champion wrestler of Tokio, is shown here posed for the tournament ceremony with his sword bearer, salt thrower, and umpire. Hitachiyama weighs 430 pounds.

Three famous Japanese wrestlers with their umpire and announcer. The aprons worn are of heavy gold braid, and velvet; the white squares are emblems of Shinto worship.

MARKING TIME IN TOKIO: THE WRESTLERS OF JAPAN

By RICHARD HARDING DAVIS, Collier's Special War Correspondent in Japan

The Japanese War Office has issued a war correspondent's pass to Mr. Davis, and has assigned him to the Second Column. Until this takes the field, Mr. Davis will write of events in the Japanese Capital.

TOKIO, JAPAN, April 30, 1904

TWICE a year the Japanese wrestlers meet in tournaments which last for ten days. This week a team from Osaka came here to wrestle with the men of the Tokio team. They met in a huge square tent made of matting hung from masts. In the centre was a tiny circus ring about ten feet in diameter. The spectators, who were very like the people you meet on the bleaching boards at home, sat close around the ring on the bare ground, or further away on raised scaffoldings tied together with ropes. The wind stirred the mats, and the sun shone between them in long slanting rays. The picture was that of a country circus. But though the appointments were primitive, the contests were weighed down with the trappings of ceremony and tradition. The preliminaries for each bout continued three minutes, the actual wrestling seldom lasted longer than five seconds.

In Japan, the wrestlers form a class by themselves. Theirs is one of the closest unions in the world. It has its champions, its past masters, its rules, penalties, and religious rites. Bull-fighting is the only other sport I have seen that is conducted with such gravity and regard for etiquette. A wrestler does not become a wrestler by accident. He does not stumble into it as, with us, a boy who is quick with his fists fights his way into the prize ring. You do not hear them speak of a wrestler as "the Sailor," "the Puddler," "the Blacksmith." He never begins as an "Unknown" from the stockyards or the rolling mill. Either his father before him was a wrestler, or at an early age he was adopted into the profession. Poor people who find among their children a boy of unusual stature, fat, and muscle are only too pleased to sell him to a wrestler, who adopts him as his own son. From the day of his adoption his only serious purpose in life is to eat, drink, and wrestle. In eating and drinking he is a glutton, for with him weight seems to count for more than muscle. Some Japanese wrestlers are of superb physique, giants in size, and with muscles as hard as those of the young men at home who in the magazines offer to tell you how to get strong; but there are just as many wrestlers who are gross masses of fat. They drip with fat. It rolls over them in lumpy hillocks. It shakes upon them in huge pillows, the creases are deep valleys. But when one of these prize oxen and one of the athletes of muscle meet, fat just as often wins as muscle. Of training for "condition" and "wind" the Japanese wrestler seems to know or care nothing. The longest of the bouts I saw did not continue over two minutes. But in every event at the end of the first fifteen seconds each contestant was forced to stop for lack of breath and lean heavily against the other until he had recovered.

In Japanese wrestling a man is "out" when even so little of him as his big toe reaches beyond the ring, when both his feet leave the ground, when he is thrown bodily from the ring. "There are forty-eight falls, twelve throws, twelve lifts, twelve twists, and twelve throws over the back." Just outside the ring sit four stately old gentlemen as motionless as idols. They are the referees, and, as a rule, are retired wrestlers. Inside the ring is an official who acts as umpire, judge, backer, bottle-holder, and claque all in one. His duty is to encourage, impartially, both contestants. His badge of office is a fan.

The sixth official of the ceremony is the young man who announces the events. With us at an athletic meeting or a prize fight this duty generally falls to the one possessing the loudest voice. Sometimes he uses a megaphone. His object is to permit no one within a halftriloquist after he has locked him in a box. Also, lest any one should by any chance understand what he is saying, the young man holds the handle of his fan to his teeth, and hides his face behind its sticks. At first you think he is going to swallow the fan. Why he is so confidential no one knows. When you ask, they make the Englishman's reply, "It has always been done that way."

The wrestlers come into the ring wearing only a breech-clout of heavy silk. It is wound around the waist, or where the waist should be, carried between the legs, and up again to the belt, where it is tied. The wrestler salutes the audience by raising his leg and pressing it down with his hand on his knee. Sometimes, when his foot strikes the earth, the earth shakes. After he has made the salute with each leg he becomes dimly conscious of the presence of his adversary, but makes no sign of recognition other than to squat on his haunches. His adversary does the same. For a minute each sits on his heels within two feet of the other, gazing stolidly or haughtily at the roof, the audience, the empty air, at nothing, at everything except the opponent. Then one of them leans forward, closes his fist, and rests his knuckles on the ground. The other, still scornful to look at his adversary, does the same. When each has pressed both fists on the ground they are ready to begin. But neither can start without the consent of the other, and so when one throws himself upon his opponent like a falling oak or a leaping tiger, his adversary merely sniffs and rises ponderously. This means that he has declined the challenge. Once more they stand gazing stolidly at nothing, "serene, indifferent to fate"; and then, still without seeing each other, each walks to a separate corner and sips a cupful of water. People say this is done merely to refresh them, but as sometimes they drink four cups of water in two minutes it is more easy to believe it is, as others say it is, a ceremony of purification. Especially, as when after they have spat out the water they each pick up a few grains of salt and throw it in the air. This is an offering to the gods, and is meant to purify the wrestler and to protect him from death or injury. After this prayer the men face each other as before and remain on their haunches until both are ready to spring to the attack. The struggle lasts seldom more than ten seconds. It is far too scientific and too technical for one to comprehend its finer points, but while it lasts it is a struggle of giants. The great hands slap the bare flesh with the crack of a whip, the men snort and puff like elephants, the rolls of muscle and fat rise under the clean brown skin in knots as round as hawsers. And then, from no apparent cause, with a velocity that seems born of a force more than human, one of the great unwieldy giants flies through the air as though

A wrestler preparing to enter the ring

he were made of straw, and the other squats on his heels in answer to the applause. One of the photographs I am sending herewith I took of the wrestlers as they were making their toilet in the dressing tent. Only one of them objected to being photographed. He was the champion of Tokio and weighed four hundred and twenty pounds, and when he objected I did not insist. Another picture shows the men in their full dress, which consists of a gold apron, posed for the ceremony with which they open each tournament. In this the champion is the central figure. He is accompanied by the second and third best men

The Japanese making preparations to raise and repair the Russian cruiser "Varyag," sunk in Chemulpo Harbor February 9 of his team. The second best man carries the sword, and the office of the other is to scatter the salt. The ceremonies are short, but very impressive. They consist of thanks in dumb show to the gods and to the audience, and petitions that no harm will come to themselves and that they may not harm their adversaries. It is difficult to imagine Mr. Sharkey or Mr.

Corbett in the prize ring throwing salt in the air in order that he may be purified, or offering prayer before a mocking mob of sports that he may not hurt his adversary.

THE OCCUPATION OF CHENAMPO BY THE JAPANESE

By FREDERICK PALMER, Collier's Special War Correspondent attached to the Japanese General Staff in Manchuria

CHENAMPO, KOREA, April 10, 1904

THE small islands, for the most part barren and rocky, which pepper the sea near the Korean coast line, have been a blessing to the Japanese in this war. They provide cover from storms for the numerous fleet of small transports, which three months ago were doing merchant service. Our own transport and our experience were typical. The Sumi-noye Maru, of a thousand tons burden, is thirty-three years old. She was bought in England when she was already past the age-limit of Lloyds. Ever since she has been running out of Hokkaido. She is as shipshape as she is patched. Her Japanese skipper, who speaks English excellently, and with more than English politeness, served his apprenticeship before the mast on a sailing vessel out of Glasgow. He cares for his ancient charge with the niceness of a family physician; he woos ten knots out of her rheumatic engine.

When a nor'wester came up, soon after we left Chemulpo, he ran her behind one of the accommodating islands and dropped anchor. When the sea calmed he went out again, and this morning he brought us to Chenampo, that first port where the correspondent blessed with an official pass issued in Tokio is permitted to land. Chenampo has been, and is, so far as we know, the main point of landing both for troops and supplies north of Chemulpo. The settlement that looks out upon the harbor is Japanese and well isolated from the two nearby Korean villages by more than distance. It is the outpost which the Japanese flag is following. From a trading and fishing hamlet the few rows of Japanese houses have risen to the dignity of officers' quarters for an army of invasion. Until the correspondents came there was one foreigner who spoke some English—the German collector of customs. For weeks supplies and soldiers have been forwarded into the interior with no other spectator except the Japanese and the Koreans. The arriving foreigner is as much at a loss for details of fact as a Hungarian just arrived in New York as to the intrigues of Fourth Ward politics.

From the steamer we could see the new unpainted barracks and storehouses which rose with the magic that forethought and preparedness command soon after the first transports dropped anchor. Beyond the piled stores, beyond the artillerymen scattered in the streets or taking their horses for exercise, there is nothing of the commotion to be expected of a great point of military debarkation.

In an hour in Chenampo you get an impression of the coming and passing race, clearer perhaps than you will have weeks hence. Here the little men are of the future and the big men of the past. The two races are as distinct in type as Germans and Moors. Wherever you see a blue figure on the landscape it is Japanese, where-one little Japanese infantryman, and the natives look at him with a kind of stupid preoccupied curiosity. The smart little Japanese in uniform came only yesterday, clearing the seas first of a European enemy. He could almost walk under the arm of one of the big Koreans who saunter the street's length and back again, pipe in hand, with the dignity of impassiveness. Yet the little Japanese in uniform could clear the town by lifting his finger. Giving way to the masterful race, the Korean, not making even the feint of resistance, still retains that stupidly impassive dignity.

"Let the Japanese come! We still wear white and do our hair up in knots on top of our heads, and thus you will see we lose nothing."

The Koreans are as noncommittal about the coming of the Japanese as the average American about the tribal differences of the Fijians. Men and women dressing much alike, in their muddy-colored white clothes, with feminine faces unfeminine and masculine faces unmasculine, the Koreans seem a sexless people, begetting wonder that the race has not long ago ceased reproduction.

Some few—the few who understand—may realize the benefits which will result from Japanese occupation. The foreigner who lacks conviction need only go from the orderly and cleanly Japanese to the filthy Korean village. The officer commanding, who received us at his headquarters in a house more modest than that which with true Japanese politeness he placed at our command, was Oriental in his depreciation of how little he could do for us and Teutonic in the exactness of his arrangements.

The arrival of the foreign correspondents is more interesting to the Koreans than the arrival of the Japanese. There were Japanese here before. As for the big noses, there was the Collector of Customs, and now there are many others equally strange. The song of the typewriter has awakened the interest of the lady of the house where we live. She has opened the sliding door, and, dropping on her knees with a courtesy to the correspondent (sitting on a blanket roll with a provision box for a table), has pointed at the machine and said "Shimbun" (newspaper). I told her she was right, and courtesied with the type spool in turn. It is a pleasure to find such a hostess and such a clean house in Korea. It is blessed, after many weeks of waiting in a peaceful capital, to be even as far as Chenampo, where patches of official blue enliven the muddy white of native monotony.

PREPARING TO RECEIVE THE JAPANESE AT NEWCHWANG

